
Class No... 340 ...

The book should be returned on or before the date last stamped below.

[illegible]

JOINT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

[SESSION 1932-33]

VOLUME IIC

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE given before the Joint Committee on

INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

[Questions 8681—11,209
,, 12,055—12,720
,, 13,549—13,691
,, 14,400—15,362
,, 15,777—17,339]

and before Sub-Committees A, B, C and D of the Joint Committee together with Appendix D

Ordered by The House of Lords to be Printed 9th May, 1933

Ordered by The House of Commons to be Printed 9th May, 31st July, 1933, and subsequent dates

LONDON

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE

To be purchased directly from H.M. STATIONERY OFFICE at the following addresses
Adastral House, Kingsway, London, W.C.2, 120, George Street, Edinburgh 2
York Street, Manchester 1; 1, St. Andrew's Crescent, Cardiff 80, Chichester Street, Belfast or through any Bookseller

1934

Price £1 10s. od. Net

H.L. 79(IIC)
H.C. 112(IIC)

	£	s.	d.
The cost of printing and publishing this Volume is estimated by the Stationery Office at ...	1,550	0	0
The cost of printing and publishing Volumes II ^A , II ^B , II ^P and III, and the preparation of the Index is estimated by the Stationery Office at	2,890	0	0
The cost of preparing for publication the Short- hand Minutes of Evidence and Discussions taken by the Committee was	1,485	8	11
The cost of duplicating Memoranda, Circulars, etc., is estimated by the Stationery Office at ...	42	0	0
The cost of other incidental typing, etc., was ...	77	12	1
The cost of repayment of Delegates, Witnesses and other incidental expenses was	18,752	0	0
	<hr/>
Total	£24,797	1	0
	<hr/>

JOINT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

VOLUME II^c (Evidence)

LIST OF WITNESSES.

PAGE

Die Lunae, 31° Julii, 1933.

Dr. B. S. Moonje.	Rai Saheb Meherchand
Mr. B. C. Chatterjee	Khanna.
Mr. J. L. Bannerjee (see also	Mr. R. M. Deshmukh.
p. 1551).	Mr. Bhai Parmanand.
Mr. G. A. Gavai.	Pandit Nanak Chand.
on behalf of the Hindu Mahasabha	1362

Die Martis, 1° Augusti, 1933.

Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali,	Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin,
C.B.E.	LL.D.
Sir Mohammed Yakub, Kt.,	Khan Sahib Haji Rashid
M.L.A.	Ahmad.
Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy, M.L.C.
on behalf of the All-India Muslim Conference and the All-India Muslim League	1475

Die Mercurii, 2° Augusti, 1933.

Mr. M. K. Acharya.	Mr. J. L. Bannerjee (see
Mr. L. M. Deshpande (see also	also p. 1362). Sub-Committee A, p. 2119).
on behalf of the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha ...	1551

Mrs. P. K. Sen.	Mrs. L. Mukerji.
on behalf of the Mahila Samiti Ladies' Association (see also
Sub-Committee C, p. 2324)	1612

Rajkumari Amrit Kaur and	Dr. Muthulakshmi Reddi.
Mrs. Hamid Ali (see also Sub-Committee C, p. 2288).
on behalf of the All-India Women's Conference, Women's Indian Association, and the National Council of Women in India	1617

Die Jovis, 3° Augusti, 1933.

Mr. J. Bhandari.	Mr. Ghulam Mohammed.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T.
Vijayargahavacharya, K.B.E.
on behalf of the Indian Officers' Association	1623

Die Martis, 3° Octobris, 1933.

Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)

Die Mercurii, 4° Octobris, 1933.

Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)

Die Jovis, 5° Octobris, 1933.

Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)

Sir Alan Garrett Anderson, K.B.E.	Mr. W. M. Watt.
Mr. R. B. Dunwoody, C.B.E.	Mr P Maurice Hill.
on behalf of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, Federation of British Industries and Ship-owners Parliamentary Committee	1654

Die Veneris, 6° Octobris, 1933.

Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce, C.S.I.,	Mr. F. F. Lyall, C.I.E.
C.I.E., C.B.E.	Mr Waris Ameer Ali, I.C.S.
Lieut. - General Sir George	Mr. O. C. G. Hayter.
MacMunn, K.C.B., K.C.S.I.,	Hon. Mr. Justice W. A. Le
D.S.O.	Rossignol.
on behalf of the Indian Empire Society	1686

Die Lunae, 9° Octobris, 1933.

Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce, C.S.I.,	Mr. F. F. Lyall, C.I.E.
C.I.E., C.B.E.	Mr. Waris Ameer Ali, I.C.S.
Lieut. - General Sir George	Mr. O. C. G. Hayter.
MacMunn, K.C.B., K.C.S.I.,	Hon. Mr. Justice W. A. Le
D.S.O.	Rossignol
on behalf of the Indian Empire Society	1728

*Die Martis, 10° Octobris, 1933.*Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)*Die Jovis, 12° Octobris, 1933.*Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)*Die Martis, 17° Octobris, 1933.*Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)Miss Eleanor F. Rathbone, M.P. (re-called, see also Volume II^A, p. 343) 1749*Die Mercurii, 18° Octobris, 1933.*Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)*Die Jovis, 19° Octobris, 1933.*Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)*Die Veneris, 20° Octobris, 1933.*Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)Die Lunae, 23° Octobris, 1933.

The Right Hon. Winston Spencer Churchill, C.H., M.P. ... 1775

Die Martis, 24° Octobris, 1933.

The Right Hon. Winston Spencer Churchill, C.H., M.P. ... 1801

Die Mercurii, 25° Octobris, 1933.

The Right Hon. Winston Spencer Churchill, C.H., M.P. ... 1851

Die Veneris, 3° Novembris, 1933.

Mr. J. Harold Rodier.

Mr. John Grey.

Mr. T. D. Barlow.

Mr. Arthur R. Knowles.

Mr. W. H. Catterall.

on behalf of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce ... 1873

*Die Lunae, 6° Novembris, 1933.*Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II^B)

	PAGE
Die Martis, 7° Novembris, 1933.
Evidence of the Secretary of State for India (see Volume II ^B)
Mr. Douglas Dewar, I.C.S. 	1900
Die Veneris, 10° Novembris, 1933
Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney, Kt., M.L.A., I.M.S. (Retired)
(see also Appendix D)	1944
Die Lunae, 13° Novembris, 1933
Mr. J. C. French. Mr. S. H. ^d H. Mills.	2016
Die Martis, 14° Novembris, 1933.
Colonel R. F. Baird. Lieut.-Colonel C. L. Dunn,
Lieut.-Colonel H. A. Broome. C.I.E.	2044

APPENDIX D.

Statement by Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Gidney, Kt., M.L.A.,
I.M.S. (Retired) (see Question 16,111) 	2395

LIST OF WITNESSES WHO GAVE EVIDENCE BEFORE SUB-COMMITTEES.

SUB-COMMITTEE A.

Die Lunae, 17° Julii, 1933.

	PAGE
Mr. H. L. Chablani. Rai Bahadur Hiranand Khemsing. on behalf of the Sind Hindu Conference 	2080

Die Mercurii, 19° Julii, 1933.

Sardar M. V. Kibe. Mr. L. M. Deshpande (see also p. 1551 of evidence before whole Com- mittee).
on behalf of the Sardars and Inamdars Central Association of the Bombay Presidency 	2119

SUB-COMMITTEE B.

Die Lunae, 17° Julii, 1933.

Mr. B. N. Chopra. Mr. R. P. Bagla. Mr. K. L. Mehta.
on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of the United Provinces 	2166

Mr. S. M. Bashir. Mr. K. M. Purkayastha. on behalf of the Merchants' Chamber of United Provinces, Cawnpore 	2177
--	------

Rai Bahadur P. Mukerjee. on behalf of the Punjab Chamber of Commerce, Delhi, and the Northern India Chamber of Commerce, Lahore ...	2194
--	------

Die Mercurii, 19° Julii, 1933.

Mr. A. Ghose. on behalf of the Bengal Mahajan Sabha 	2199
---	------

Mr. B. Shiva Rao. Mr. K. C. Roy Chowdhury. Mr. Aftab Ali. Mr. N. M. Joshi.
on behalf of the National Trades Union Federation, and the Bengal Trades Union Federation 	2212

SUB-COMMITTEE C.

PAGE

Die Mercurii, 26° Julii, 1933.

Lady Layton.	Mrs. O. Strachey.
Sir Philip Hartog, K.B.E., C.I.E
on behalf of the British Committee for Indian Women's
Franchise	2258

Die Sabbati, 29° Julii, 1933.

Rajkumari Amrit Kaur.	Mrs. Hamid Ali.
on behalf of the All-India Women's Conference, Women's Indian Association, and the National Council of Women in India (see also p. 1617 of evidence before whole Committee)									2288
Mrs. P. K. Sen.	Mrs. L. Mukerji.
on behalf of the Mahila Samiti Ladies' Association (see also
p. 1612 of evidence before whole Committee)	2324

SUB-COMMITTEE D.

Die Lunae, 16° Octobris, 1933.

Wing Commander A. W. H. James, M.P.	} 2362
Dr. J. H. Hutton, C.I.E., I.C.S.

DIE LUNAE, 31^o JULII, 1933.

Present:

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.	Major Attlee.
Marquess of Salisbury.	Mr. Butler.
Marquess of Zetland.	Major Cadogan.
Marquess of Linlithgow.	Sir Austen Chamberlain.
Marquess of Reading.	Mr. Cocks.
Earl Peel	Sir Reginald Craddock.
Lord Ker (Marquess of Lothian).	Mr. Davidson.
Lord Irwin	Mr. Isaac Foot.
Lord Rankellour.	Lord Eustace Percy.
Lord Hutchison of Montrose.	Miss Pickford

The following Indian Delegates were also present.—

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Rao Bahadur Sir Krishnama Chari.	Sir Mirza Ismail.
Nawab Sir Liaqat Hayat-Khan.	Sir Manubhai N Mehta.
Sir Akbar Hydari.	Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

His Highness the Aga Khan.	Sir A. P. Patro.
Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.	Sir Abdur Rahim.
Sir Hubert Carr.	Sir Phiroze Sethna.
Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.	Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.
Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.	Sardar Buta Singh.
Sir Hari Singh Gour.	Sir N. N. Sircar.
Mr. M. R. Jayaker.	Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.
Mr. N. M. Joshi.	Mr. Zafrulla Khan.
Begum Shah Nawaz.

The MARQUESS of LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

Chairman.] My Lords and gentlemen, I apologise for the few minutes' delay, but one of the Witnesses has handed in a Memorandum at the last moment, and, unfortunately, there are not sufficient copies to go round the Committee and the Delegates. It is numbered 71. I would decline to take it at this stage, if I did not feel perfectly certain that the only effect of that refusal would be to have it read at length. Before we proceed to hear the Witnesses this morning, I should like the Committee and the Delegates to know that my Noble friend,

Lord Zetland, was good enough to hand me in this written question: "To ask the Lord Chairman if, in view of the representations on the subject of the Communal Award contained in the Memorandum of evidence put in on behalf of the Hindu Mahasabha and other organisations, questions to the Witnesses upon that subject will be in order"? As I informed the Noble Lord privately, I am bound to rule that such questions would be in order.

Earl Peel.] My Lord Chairman, does that mean, that we are at liberty to open up the whole of the question of the Communal Award?

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Chairman.] It does.

Marquess of Reading.] That means not restricted in any way to the Poona Pact, but the whole of the Communal question, including the Government's Award.

Chairman.] Lord Reading will appreciate that I am dealing with a point of order, not of expediency.

Marquess of Reading.] Quite.

Marquess of Zetland.] May I say with regard to that, that I have not the slightest desire to open up the whole of the Communal Award, but there are certain question which, in view of the evidence which has been put in by these witnesses, I should desire to ask with regard to the position in Bengal only. I do not want to go beyond Bengal at all.

Sir A. P. Patro.] If it is referred to in the case of Bengal, it will refer to all the other Provinces generally.

Marquess of Salisbury.] My Lord Chairman, I feel strongly of opinion that whatever may be the expediency of the matter, it is quite out of the question that, if we are asked to come to a decision as a Joint Select Committee upon this whole issue, we should exclude the Communal Award. That, evidently, is impossible. The point really arose a little earlier in our Proceedings, and I think the same opinion was expressed. I certainly earnestly hope that Lord Zetland will do what he thinks is right in the matter of the Communal Award.

Mr. Butler.] If we are to have a discussion on the Communal Award, perhaps, I ought to say that the position of the Government is no different from what has been expressed by the Secretary of State before.

Mr. Zafrrulla Khan] My Lord Chairman, we have naturally neither the right nor any desire to make a submission to the Committee as to what they shall do, and what they shall not do; of course, it is their right to put any questions they like; nor do I assume, merely from the fact that on the Procedure such questions are permissible, that the Committee necessarily wish to re-open the Communal Award; but I do wish to say this, at this stage, for the Committee's consideration, that, as the Committee is fully aware, at one stage the business of the Round Table Conference came absolutely to a standstill, owing to these Communal questions not being settled; subsequently an Award was given. It may be, that the Award has not fully satisfied any section; perhaps, it could not have satisfied any section completely; but some of us desired to proceed with the consideration of the further stages of Constitutional advance, because an award had been given, and we thought the best course was to proceed on the basis of it, and we merely wish to say this at the present stage That whatever the Constitutional position may be, and whatever the rights of the Committee may be, our association in these further stages is clearly based upon the Award being taken as a final pronouncement upon the matter.

Sir N. N. Sircar.] May I make a short statement which probably will shorten matters? I claim the right to put questions, if the Committee will allow it, on the Communal decision, but, as a matter of fact, I do not intend to put in any questions relating to the dispute between the Hindus and Muslims, because that does not depend upon any facts that are going to be proved by any Witness; but I do want to ask the Witnesses to give your Lordships the facts relating to the Poona Pact. There are two more observations I may be permitted to make as regards Sir Annepu Patro's statement as to its being mixed up, and so on, that the decision itself makes it quite clear that the result of one Province is not connected with the result in any other Province. The decision itself says that any change can be made in one Province as distinct from any other Province. As regards my friend, Mr. Zafrrulla Khan's statement, I only venture to submit this: At the Round Table Conference we were trying to find out what was the greatest measure of agreement. It was open to us to say. Unless I get 100 per cent seats for Hindus, I will not take any further part. It is no good taking up that attitude. I beg of the Committee to enter into the merits of the question.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] My Lord Chairman, may I say one word about this? I have come here, not strictly speaking as a Member of the Muslim Delegation, but when I received the offer from His Majesty's Government to come and join the deliberations of the Joint Select Committee, the one great inducement was that this controversial question was out of the way. As a matter of fact, for some time I have not been taking any part at all in these Communal disputes, and I would not have thought of coming here and joining the deliberations, but for the fact that this question was out of the way, as I thought. Therefore, my position would be the same as that of Chaudri Zafrulla Khan, who has been speaking on behalf of the Muslim Delegation. But for the fact that I thought that this Communal question had been put out of the way once for all, so far as this proposed Constitution Act is concerned, I would not have come to this deliberation.

31° Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.] May I say just a word? I am glad that this wrangle, if I may use that expression, on this side is going to be confined only to the Poona Pact, and that Sir Nripendra Sircar does not propose to re-open the question of the distribution of seats between Hindus and Muslims; but might I say that the sentiments expressed by Chaudri Zafrulla Khan with regard to the attitude of the Muslims were exactly the sentiments that I have been expressing from the very beginning when I commenced to take part in the Round Table Conference, and that I, too, consented to join in the deliberations on the understanding that the Poona Pact was an accepted proposition? I do not object, of course, to Sir Nripendra Sircar putting the facts before the Committee, because I know I will also get an opportunity to rectify any errors; but, so far as my own position is concerned, I do not think that it would be possible for me to take any further part in the Proceedings of the Committee, if, for instance, the whole question was re-opened with regard to the representation of the Depressed Classes.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] As the sole representative of the Hindu community from the Central Legislature, I wish to make my position perfectly clear. The Secretary of State stated the other day that, so far as His Majesty's Government are concerned, they felt bound by the Communal Award, but that it was open to the Joint Select Committee, as such, to go into the whole question, and that their discretion need not necessarily be fettered by the decision of His Majesty's Government on the subject. Taking that view, as a Member of the Indian Delegation co-operating with the Joint Select Committee, I should be guilty of a dereliction of duty if I felt constrained to preserve silence during the deliberative stage of discussions between the Joint Select Committee and the Indian Delegation on the whole question of the future Constitution of India, including the repercussion the Communal Award would have upon that Constitution, but, as no new facts can be elucidated at this stage from the Witnesses representative of the two Organisations of the Hindu and Muslim communities, I have decided to take no further part at this stage, reserving to myself the right of giving expression to such views as I consider necessary, at a future stage, when the consultation between the Joint Select Committee and the Indian Delegates will begin.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] May I say a few words? I just wish to state that on this side myself and a few of my friends do not propose to ask any questions relating to the Hindu-Muslim side of the Communal Award. We feel that if we were to go into that question, it would take hours and hours of questioning and cross-questioning, and I am anxious to save the time of the Committee. I have no desire to dictate to the Committee what they should do, because I know they have the power of going into the whole question. I am only speaking for the attitude of myself and a few friends on this side.

Sir A. P. Patro.] As one connected with the settlement of this Communal question for a long time, I will beg, and most earnestly appeal, to the Honourable Members of the Committee not to allow this question to be brought up again. After a great many struggles, trials and attempts, we failed, and we submitted our case to His Majesty's Government. The Award is passed, and the Award is generally accepted in India, and on the basis of that Award, we have all been arguing, and advocating, and placing our claims. It will be a great misfortune to the country if again an opportunity is given to re-open the whole matter; I, therefore, venture to appeal to the Members of the Committee to bear that in mind in the interests of peace, harmony and contentment in India. On behalf of all the agricultural population whom I represent. I beg to place this view of the matter before you for very very serious consideration.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.] My Lord Chairman, I associate myself with what Sir Anapu Patro has said.

Sir Henry Gidney.] I associate myself whole-heartedly with what Chaudri Zafrulla Khan has said. At the Round Table Conference we came to an amicable pact amongst certain of our communities, and other communities had the opportunity to join that settlement, but we have taken as final the settlement of the Government in the Communal Award.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Sir N. N. Sircar.] I beg your Lordship's permission to hand in at this stage the following letter from myself to the Prime Minister and a cablegram from Sir Rabindranath Tagore dated 27th July, 1933:—

LETTER FROM SIR N. N. SIRCAR TO THE PRIME MINISTER.

St. James Court,
Buckingham Gate,
London,
S.W.1.

14th December, 1932

MY DEAR PRIME MINISTER,

I am forwarding to you as requested, certain telegrams. The first telegram from 25 members of Bengal Legislative Council reads as follows:—

"Representation from 25 members of Bengal, Legislative Council Poona Depressed Classes Pact made without consulting Bengal Hindus. No Depressed Classes problem in Bengal as elsewhere in India, as found on careful examination by Lothian Committee. Ambedkar and others had no direct knowledge of Bengal conditions, where alleged depressed classes suffer no political disability. Poona Pact introduces revolutionary change, cutting at root of normal progress of Hindu society in Bengal. Earnestly urge necessity for modifying Poona Pact as affecting Bengal, as Lothian Committee Scheme meets Bengal situation fairly. Show this Premier.

"B. C. Chatterji, S. M. Bose, Maharaja Dinajpur, Maharaja Cosimbazar, Rajabahadur Nashipur, Narendra Kumar Bau, Syamaprosad Mukerji, Rai Bahadur Kamini Kumar Das, Satyendrakumar Das, Keshabchandra Banerji, Haridhan Dutt, Satishchandra Mukerji, Saratchandra Mitra, Anandamohan Poddar, Satishchandra, Roychowdhury, Hanumanprosod Poddar, Kishorimohan Chowdhury, Satyakinkar Sahana, Khetramohan Roy, Debrai Mohashai, Santisekhareswar Roy, Saratkumar Roy, P. Banerji, Surendranath Law, Saileswar Singhroy."

2. I showed the above telegram to Dr. Ambedkar, who in his turn received a telegram, copy of which reads as follows:—

"Regarding Bengal, Hindu friends cable for revision Poona Pact for Bengal. They defaulted twice, once before Lothian Committee when they failed to give list of depressed classes. Second when invited to Bombay September Conference nobody responded. Now they raise false cry, besides they are unjustifiably afraid of Namasudras appropriating all seats. Further Bengal Government depressed population figure is 103 Lacs, vide Lothian Volume II, page 263, while we assumed for calculation of seats 75 lacs, vide Lothian. Poona Pact follows closely Lothian recommendations. Refer Mullicks note—Lothian Volume II, page 251. In Calcutta Thakkar found general Hindu feeling in favour of Pact. Hence Pact approved by Cabinet can't be revised."

"BIRLA & THAKKAR."

3. I have received two further telegrams, viz.:—

"Birlas cable to Ambedkar. Birla not acquainted with conditions in Bengal and has absolutely no representative character there. Poona Pact in allowing 30 seats to depressed classes in Bengal, number being equal to seats allowed to Madras, cannot be justified. Question of depressed classes in Bengal is certainly not at all acute and is absolutely different from that in other Provinces. Premier's Award on this question is utmost that Bengal can accept."

"Satishchandra Sen, Bijoykumar Basu, Satyendrachandra Ghosh Maulik, Amarnath Dutt, Satyendrachandra Mitra, Satyacharan Mukherjee, Satyendranath Sen, Jagadishchandra Banerjee, Naba Kumar Singh Dudhuria, Bengal Non-Mahomedan Representatives present in Central Legislature."

"AMARNATH DUTT."

"Bengal M.L.C.s who wired previously state Birla Thakkar cabled misrepresentations. Bengal Representative not invited to Conference leading to Poona Pact. Its terms astonished Bengal. Not being agreed, according Premiers formula, settlement cannot bind Bengal. Lothian Committee made enquiries which castes are untouchable and unapproachable in Bengal. Provincial Franchise Committee consisting Hindus Mahomedans correctly answered. Report Volume 2, page 230. Mullicks Note not placed before Committee, but prepared secretly. Mullicks classification of Bengal depressed different from other Provinces covering Subarnobaniks Sahas Mahishyas admittedly outside depressed category. Also England-returned Indians, Brahmo Samaj people, even Baidyas, Kayasthas contrasted against Brahmans. Bengal Public life free from caste consideration. High caste Hindus elected a Namasudra against Chatterjee 1923 at Madaripur. Deshbandhu disregarded orthodoxy marrying Brahman's daughter, but his following included all High caste people. Distribution of Namasudras vide Calcutta Gazette fourteenth July ensures their securing 20 reserved seats. Non-Namasudras alarmed at prospect. Namasudras Rajbansis rigidly exclude other depressed castes from social communion, and have less right to represent them, than high caste people who have worked for generation for their uplift. Poona Pact introduces political division Hindu Bengal, where none hitherto existed. Show Premier."

31° Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

"CHATTERJEE AND OTHERS."

4. As I left India in August last, I have no personal knowledge relating to the Poona Pact.

5. In your "Communal decision" it was stated, "His Majesty's Government wish it to be most clearly understood that they themselves can be no parties to any negotiations which may be initiated with a view to revision of their decision and will not be prepared to give consideration to any representation aimed at securing modification of it which is not supported by all the parties affected."

6. Under your decision, the Hindus (including all alleged depressed classes) have been given 80 seats whereas Mahomedans get 119 seats, i.e., 50 per cent. more than Hindus. The European interests get 25 seats, viz., 10 per cent. of the total seats, while they do not form any appreciable fraction of even one per cent. of the population. Factors of position, influence, education, etc., have apparently been considered, and legitimately considered in case of Europeans—but apparently no principle beyond the counting of heads has been considered between Hindus and Mahomedans. The latter claim to constitute 54 per cent. by inclusion of infants below 21 years, for, if adults are counted, Mahomedans have no appreciable majority, if at all.

7. Even if Mahomedans form 54 per cent. of the population, their getting 50 per cent. more than Hindus is explained by the fact of carving out of the special seats, 51 in number, in disproportionately large share from the Hindus.

8. The nature of the Special Seats, which include 25 for Europeans, 4 for Anglo-Indians, 8 for Labour, clearly does not lend itself to the suggestion that Hindus can make up their proper share in the total, from these seats.

9. I fully realise that having regard to the wording of your decision, arguments, however forcible, cannot be listened to, by you, but with the best of intentions, the decision operates very unfairly on Hindus—and that is all the greater reason why Bengal Hindus other than the Depressed Classes object to the whittling down of what has been given to them by your decision. I may be permitted to add that if for the sake of argument it is assumed that one community has got nearly 50 per cent. more than its share, it is idle to expect that it will give up its unjustified gain from any abstract considerations of justice.

10. The matter involved relates solely to a question of fact, viz., did the people now complaining agree to the modification of your decision? The laboured argument about agreement by alleged "defaults," it is submitted, has no force. In any case, it remains to be determined whether there has been any such default, from which it can be concluded that Bengal non-depressed classes have agreed to alter your Award.

11. It is submitted that the matter is too important to be dealt with on the footing, that the telegram of Birla and Thakkar represent facts correctly—facts which have been disputed. Nor does any agreement follow, even if these facts are taken to be substantially correct.

12. In the interest of the party aggrieved, an enquiry as to the fact of the non-depressed classes in Bengal being parties to, or being bound by the Poona Pact, should be made—whether through the Government of India or Bengal, or any other responsible and neutral Agency, is a matter of detail.

31st July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

I am forwarding a copy of this letter to Dr. Ambedkar for information. As I have to leave England very soon, any acknowledgment of, or reply to this representation may be kindly directed to be forwarded to:—

MR. NARENDRA KUMAR BASU, M.L.C.

Bar Association,
High Court, Calcutta.

Yours truly,
(Sd.) N. N. SIRCAR,

Member, Indian Round
Table Conference.

EXTRACT FROM CABLEGRAM FROM SIR RABINDRANATH TAGORE TO SIR N. N. SIRCAR DATED 27th JULY, 1933.

I remember to have sent a cable to the Prime Minister requesting him not to delay in accepting the proposal about Communal Awards submitted to him by Mahatmaji. At that moment a situation had been created which was extremely painful not affording us the least time or peace of mind to enable us to think quietly about the possible consequences of the Poona Pact which had been effected before my arrival when Sapru and Jayakar had already left with the help of members among whom there was not a single responsible representative from Bengal. Upon the immediate settlement of this question Mahatmaji's life depended and the intolerable anxiety caused by such a crisis drove me precipitately to a commitment which I now realise as a wrong done against our country's permanent interest. Never having experience in political dealings while entertaining a great love for Mahatmaji and a complete faith in his wisdom in Indian politics I dared not wait for further consideration not heeding that justice had been sacrificed in case of Bengal. I have not the least doubt now that such an injustice will continue to cause mischief for all parties concerned keeping alive the spirit of communal conflict in our Province in an intense form making peaceful government perpetually difficult.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE.

LETTER AND ENCLOSURES FROM DR. AMBEDKAR TO THE PRIME MINISTER.

Imperial Hotel,
Russell Square,
London, W.C.1.
5th January, 1933.

MY DEAR PRIME MINISTER,

Sir N. N. Sirkar has been good enough to send me a copy of the letter dated 19th December, 1932, which he addressed to you just before his departure for India, in which he has laid before you for your consideration certain telegrams received by him from the Caste Hindus of Bengal protesting against the application of the terms of the Poona Settlement between the Caste Hindus and the Depressed Classes to Bengal on the ground that the Bengal Caste Hindus were not represented at that Settlement.

I had also received telegrams on behalf of the other side. Of these I had shown to Sir N. N. Sirkar one which had come from Messrs. Thakkar and Birla, who had acted on behalf of Mr. Gandhi in the course of the negotiations that resulted in the Poona Settlement and the text of which has been quoted by him in his letter. I did not, however, like to trouble you with them, firstly because His Majesty's Government, having accepted the Poona Settlement, the matter, in my opinion, was closed, and secondly because I was assured by Sir N. N. Sirkar that he would do nothing more than forward the telegrams received by him for your information. But as Sir N. N. Sirkar has not contented himself merely with forwarding the telegrams, but has urged that "the laboured argument about argument by alleged default" used by Messrs. Thakkar and Birla in their telegram has no force and has ended with a plea "that any enquiry as to the fact of the non-depressed classes in Bengal being parties to, or being bound by the Poona Pact, should be made . . . through the Government of India, or Bengal, or any other responsible and neutral agency," I feel called upon to place my views on the question raised by him.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

My first submission is that assuming that the Bengal Hindus were not represented at the Poona Settlement it cannot for that reason alone make it inapplicable to Bengal. Paragraph 4 of the Communal Decision of His Majesty's Government under which they had provided for an agreed settlement to supersede the terms of their award did not, in my opinion, stipulate that in respect of an alternative scheme for the whole of British India—and the Poona Settlement, it must be remembered, was for the whole of British India—mutual concurrence of the two sections of the Hindu—Caste and Depressed—province for province was a necessary condition for its acceptance. Indeed, I go further and say that such a stipulation is not postulated in the Communal Decision even for a settlement in respect of a single province. According to my reading of paragraph 4 all that is stipulated is that His Majesty's Government should be satisfied that the communities who are concerned are mutually agreed upon a practicable alternative scheme. Taking my stand on this interpretation of paragraph 4, I venture to say that the absence of the representatives of Bengal Caste Hindus cannot derogate from the applicability of the Poona Settlement to Bengal. If the contrary interpretation were true it would then be open to the Depressed classes of Punjab, U P and Bihar and Orissa to repudiate the Poona Settlement, for they were not represented at all.

My second submission is that it is really not necessary to proceed on the assumption that the Bengal caste Hindus were not represented as is alleged by the signatories to the telegram forwarded to you by Sir N. N. Sirkar. I know for a fact they were represented and the statement of Messrs. Thakkar and Birla in their telegram that the Bengal Hindus did not respond to the invitation sent to them—a statement on the basis of which Sir N. N. Sirkar has founded his plea for an inquiry is incorrect. What is more important to bear in mind is that these representatives of Bengal were not merely present as silent spectators, they were active participants in the negotiations. I very well remember one of them came to me in Bombay accompanied by a Bengal Depressed Class youth of the Raja Party and had a private conference with me for nearly an hour and a half in the course of which he urged me to come to terms with the Caste Hindus on the basis of joint electorates. It is, therefore, quite untrue to say that the Bengal Caste Hindus were not represented, and the inaccuracy in the statement of Messrs Thakkar and Birla must be attributed to the impossibility of keeping in touch with all the details of the negotiations which, having regard to the momentous character of issues involved, is quite excusable. I am sorry I am not in a position to give you the name of the Bengal Caste Hindu gentleman who had this conference with me. But I will let you have his name immediately after my return to India.

There is therefore no case for reopening the Poona Settlement on behalf of the Caste Hindus of Bengal. As for the Depressed Classes, their spokesman, Mr M. B. Mullick, has cabled to me that they accept the Poona Pact. His telegram and the telegram of Messrs. Thakkar and Birla are enclosed herewith in original for your information. I am leaving for India next week. Any further communication which you may wish to have with me in connection with this matter may be sent to my address in Bombay, which I give below for ready reference.

Yours truly,

(Signed) B. R. AMBEDKAR.

Address. Damodar Hall,

Parel,

Bombay, 12, India.

COPY OF TELEGRAM.

Dated 1 Dec. 1932.

L774. Delhi. 118.29.2020.

DLT Doctor Ambedkar, India Office,
London.

Regarding Bengal Hindu friends cable for revision Poona Pact for Bengal they defaulted twice one before Lothian Committee when they failed to give list of Depressed Castes second when invited to Bombay September Conference nobody responded now they raise false cry besides they are unjustifiably afraid of Namsudras appropriating all seats further Bengal Govt. depressed population figure is 103 lacs vide Lothian volume two page 263 while we assumed for calculation of seats 75 lacs vide Lothian Poona Pact follows closely Lothian recommendations refer Mullicks note Lothian volume two page 251 in Calcutta Thakkar found general Hindu feeling in favour Pact hence Pact approved by Cabinet cant be revised — BIRLA and THAKKAR.

31^o July, 1933]

[Continued.]

COPY OF TELEGRAM.

Dated 26 Dec 1932

WLT Ambedkar, Indian Conference, London.

Bengal Depressed Classes accept Poona settlement so do Hindus Council Hindus representation malafide perverse.—MULLICK

Dr B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA, Mr R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND, are called in, and examined as follows —

Chairman.

8681 Gentlemen, you are good enough to appear this morning. Mr. Deshmukh, you have handed in Memoranda 58 and 59. Mr. Gavai is here. RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA hands in Memorandum 71. Mr. Bannerjee is here, and hands in Memorandum 68. Mr. Chatterjee is present and puts in Nos. 61 and 62. Dr. Moonje supplies us with 57. Pandit Nanak Chand puts in No. 60, and Mr. Parmanand is responsible for No. 63. Is that correct?—(Dr. Moonje) Yes. They are as follows:—

MEMORANDUM 57 BY THE (ALL INDIA) HINDU MAHASABHA

1. The attention of the Joint Parliamentary Committee is respectfully drawn to the several statements of Dr. B. S. Moonje and Raja Narendra Nath both Members of the Round Table Conferences, which are published as appendices to the Reports of the Minorities Sub-Committee of the first and second Round Table Conferences. These statements contain all what the Mahasabha has to say on the minorities problem generally.

In this connection particular attention is drawn to the facts:

(a) That since 1916 an agreement, of mutual consent in brotherly friendship between Hindus and Moslems known as the Lucknow Pact, is in actual operation through the present Government of India Act.

(b) That it is the Moslems who are now repudiating this pact of mutual agreement. The Hindus object to such unilateral repudiation.

(c) That even the Simon Commission have practically supported this very reasonable opposition of the Hindus in their recommendations in respect of the Lucknow Pact and hold the view that until a new pact of mutual agreement is arrived at, the old pact, called the Lucknow Pact, must stand.

Under the circumstances the British Government should say, as did the Right Honourable Mr. Thomas, Secretary for the Dominions, in his speech on the Irish question for similar reasons, in the House of Commons on the 4th of July, 1932:—

“But we will not be a party and cannot be a party to allowing a question of this kind which is a solemn obligation made between two people to be treated simply as if it were a scrap of paper.”

Neither party has a moral right to repudiate the pact and if solemn pacts pledging the honour and word of peoples are allowed to be repudiated and treated as a scrap of paper in easy conscience, peaceful and ordered conditions of life will vanish and civilized life itself, as has been so truly said by the Right Honourable Mr. Thomas, will be made impossible.

2. DECISION OF THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT ON THE COMMUNAL PROBLEM.

This decision is most unjust to the Hindus generally and to the Hindu minorities particularly for the following reasons:—

(a) That in provinces where the Moslems form minority communities, weightages sanctioned under the present Government of India Act have not only been generally maintained but in the provinces of U.P., Bihar and C.P., there is even slight increase in those weightages.

31° Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(b) That while maintaining these weightages for the Moslem minorities, the representation which was given to the Hindu minorities of the Punjab and Bengal under the present Government of India Act has been very much reduced; and not only no weightage is given but the representation that is now provided by the White Paper for the Hindu Minorities in Punjab and Bengal is even below what they are entitled to on the population basis in their respective provinces.

(c) That in the Punjab and Bengal where the Moslems form the majority communities, provision has been made for guaranteeing majority by statute, though indirectly to the Moslems majority in Punjab and for guaranteeing a large majority by statute to the Moslem majority in Bengal over the Hindu minority who have been thus deprived of all possible constitutional means of converting their minority into political majority.

(d) In Bengal the Moslems form 54.8 per cent of the population and the Hindus and others, that is, Budhists, Jains, Jews, Sikhs, Animists form 44.8 per cent of the population. The Hindus have not been given representation even in proportion to their population. Educationally and culturally they are most advanced. Their contribution to Public Revenues is the largest. They play a much more important part in the field of commerce and industry than the Mohommadans. According to the calculation of Sir N. N. Sircar, Member, Joint Parliamentary Committee, out of 34 seats assigned to special constituencies, no more than 11 seats will come to the Hindus, nine are likely to go to the Mohommadans and 14 to Europeans and Anglo-Indians. So out of a House of 250 Hindus get only 91 seats, that is to say, 36.4 per cent., Christians, including Europeans and Anglo-Indians, who form .36 per cent. of the population and should get only one seat on the basis of their population, get 31 seats, which means a weightage of 3100 per cent. Such a weightage is out of all proportion to whatever considerations they may be entitled to for their share in Commerce, but all these considerations are entirely ignored where the Hindus are concerned. Over and above all this comes the Poona Pact which is based on the figures given in column 6, page 119, of the Indian Franchise Committee's Report. These figures, as shown in the Report, are under revision. If test of untouchability, which ought to be the only test as prescribed by the Indian Franchise Committee is employed, the population of the Depressed Classes might be found to be .07 million only. Therefore the number of seats for the Depressed Classes should be fixed after a fresh enquiry to determine exact number of untouchables is ordered and its results are known.

(e) That on the contrary in the Central Legislature the All India Hindu majority has been reduced to an absolute minority, as will be evident from the following —

(1) The Simon Commission allocated 150 seats to the Hindus including the depressed classes out of a total of 250 in the Central Legislature, that is, 60 per cent.

(2) The Government of India Despatch provides for 80 seats for Hindus including depressed classes out of 150 seats to be returned by general territorial constituencies in a House of 200, that is 53 per cent. Besides, out of the remaining 50 seats, the Hindus could expect to get about 25 seats. Thus the proportion of the Hindus would have been about 60 per cent.

(3) The White Paper provides for only 105 seats for Hindus including depressed classes out of 250 seats reserved for the British India side of the Federal Assembly, that is, only 42 per cent. This percentage may rise to 45 per cent., if the Hindus likely to be returned from special constituencies are to be added.

(f) That Sindh has been separated ignoring the unanimous and determined opposition of the Hindu minority of Sindh, who were not given a chance to send any representative to any of the three Round Table Conferences and also the British Indian Delegation to the Joint Parliamentary Committee to present their case, though the Sindh Moslems were given two, if not three, representatives on the Round Table Conference. Thus the decision of separating Sindh is an ex-parte judgment in its pure and naked form.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(g) That separated Sindh being pronounced officially to be a deficit province with yearly deficit of not less than Rs. eighty lacs, it will be another piece of injustice if the deficit be made good by a subvention from the revenues of the Central Government to which the largest contribution is made by the Hindus of India, who are opposed to separation equally with the Hindus of Sindh.

N.B.—

If Sindh must be separated, then the following proposals are made in the interest of justice to the Hindu minority:—

(a) That after a lapse of five years after separation an enquiry should be made on the following lines:—

(1) Has the efficiency of administration been maintained at the same level at which it was when Sindh formed a part of Bombay Presidency.

(2) Has there been the same progress in nation-building departments as there is in Bombay.

(3) Does the minority community enjoy the same degree of security of life and property as it did when Sindh formed part of Bombay.

(4) Is the province financially solvent and sound.

(b) That the constitution should provide inter alia for the re-amalgamation of Sindh with Bombay if the results of the enquiry mentioned above are not satisfactory.

(c) That proposals for taxation should not be such as to throw a disproportionately heavy burden on the minority.

(d) That the majority community should get no preferential treatment for

(1) Recruitment to Services.

(2) Admission to Educational institutions.

(3) Acquisition of property

(e) That discriminatory laws like the Land Alienation Act should be interdicted.

(h) That similarly ex parte decisions have been taken in respect of the N.W.F. Province without giving any chance to the Hindu minority of the province to represent their case at the Round Table Conference. The Moslem majority of province was represented on the conference by a powerful and influential representative, the Hon. Sir Abdul Quayum and the Hindu majority was not given any representative at all.

In view of special Imperial conditions for which the N.W.F. Province was separated from Punjab, special safeguards should be provided for the protection of the Hindu minority and the maintenance of Law and Order (Please see statement about N.W.F.P.)

4. SEPARATE VERSUS JOINT ELECTORATES.

The Mahasabha has a fundamental objection to separate electorates but desires it to be particularly noted that the scheme of separate electorate was devised for the protection of a minority community. A community which is in majority in any province is not, therefore, legitimately entitled to demand separate electorates. A minority community should be given the right to demand joint electorates with the majority community, should it consider it needful for its protection, irrespective of the consent thereto of the majority community. In such circumstances, the seats for the minority community may be reserved in Joint electorates on the basis of their proportion in the population of the province and the community should be given the right to contest additional seats.

5. FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS.

(a) The Hindu Mahasabha stands for making provision in the constitution for full protection of the different cultures, religions, languages, scripts and personal laws of the different minorities.

(b) As for civic and economic rights, none shall be prejudiced by reason of his caste or creed in acquiring or enjoying those rights which should expressly include the rights of owning, purchasing, or disposing of landed properties in the open market without any restrictions of any kind whatsoever and the freedom of choice of any profession or calling. All laws existing at present in India based on caste discriminations and acting prejudicially to the enjoyment of these rights should automatically lapse.

(c) That no person shall be under any disability for admission to any branch of public service merely by reason of his religion or caste.

(d) Membership of any community or caste or creed should not prejudice any person for purposes of recruitment to public services or be a ground for non-admission, promotion or supersession in any public service or to any public institution.

31^o Juli, 1933.]

[Continued.]

6. PUBLIC SERVICES.

There should be no communal representation in the Public services which must be open to all communities on the basis of merit and competency ascertained through open competitive tests. Recruitment to Services should be made on considerations of highest efficiency and qualifications necessary and available for any particular service by open competition, thereby securing the twofold object of maintaining the services on a high level of efficiency and leaving open a fair field of competition to all communities to secure fair representation on the basis of merit and efficiency. The public services constitute the soul of self-Government. It will not be safe to have less efficiency in administration, than at least what prevails under British responsibility. Considerations, therefore, of maintaining efficiency in administration at the highest possible standard make it obligatory to demand the highest necessary qualifications requisite for any particular service from those who offer themselves for recruitment to public services, irrespective of cast and creed.

7. PROBLEM OF DEPRESSED CLASSES.

It is purely a domestic question of the Hindu Society based, as it is, on the Hindu custom of untouchability and unapproachability. Of late there has come upon the Hindus mind a vast change which is striking at the very root of the custom by throwing open temples to the so-called depressed classes.

The best solution of the problem which is also least offensive to constitutional purity in reservation of seats for them is Joint Electorates with the Hindus on the basis of their proportion in the population.

What is needed is fixation of the definition of the term depressed classes to untouchability and unapproachability and then to ascertain in each province as to which of the caste should be included in the depressed classes.

8. THE POONA PACT AND THE PUNJAB HINDUS.

The Hindus of Punjab have always contended that there is no depressed classes problem in the Punjab on account of several factors operating against the custom of untouchability, such as the Arya Samaj movement, the Sikh movement and Reform movements amongst the Hindus. This contention of the Hindus was supported by the Local Government and the Government of India. The Communal decision accordingly on the support of the Government of India refused to create depressed classes question in Punjab but, unfortunately, owing to the fast of Mahatma Gandhi and the natural anxiety of the people to save his life, the Poona Pact was hurried through. The Poona Pact should, therefore, be amended so far as the Punjab question is concerned to restore the status quo ante.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF THE HINDU MINORITY OF THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE, SUBMITTED TO THE JOINT PARLIAMENTARY SELECT COMMITTEE, LONDON.

The minority community—the Hindus—of the North West Frontier Province are in general agreement with the statement of the All India Hindu Mahasabha on the constitutional problem already posted by the last air mail. But they wish to supplement it by submitting a special statement concerning the special needs of the province which is as follows:—

FRONTIER HINDUS ARE THE REAL GATE-KEEPERS OF INDIA.

The Hindus and the Sikhs in the settled Districts of the Frontier Province are 185,487 out of a total population of 2,425,076, thus forming a little less than 8 per cent. of the entire population. But their importance in the province cannot be measured by their mere numbers. By culture, civilisation, race and religion, the Hindus and the Sikhs of the North West Frontier Province, are the kinsmen of the rest of the Hindus in India, who form 75 per cent. of the total population of this vast country. Pathans on the other hand who form the majority community in the province are allied in their race, culture, language, tradition and religion with the Pathans of the Tribal Territory and of Afghanistan beyond it.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Comparing between these two peoples, the Hindus and the Pathans of the province, the balance is heavy in favour of the Hindus in respect of all what counts in estimating the political worth of a people, such as, character, education, wealth, enterprise and above all its innate sense of racial affinity which invariably arises supreme and becomes uncontrollable during times of real emergencies.

In deciding the details of the constitution of this province the fact that should count most is—what will be the natural political reaction of these two different peoples? It is all the more important to bear this in mind because the province forms the gateway to possible foreign invasions. On emergencies like these, who will be the real gate-keepers of India?

It is the Hindus and Sikhs of the province who in their kinship with the Hindus and Sikhs of this vast country, called the Hindustan, the land of the Hindus, are the real and most reliable gate-keepers of India. Pathans, on the other hand, are the most unreliable in this respect. History gives ample proofs of this fact. It is not very long ago when this fact again came vividly to the notice of the people and the Government in 1919, i.e., hardly fourteen years ago, when King Amanulla of Afghanistan invaded India, the Pathan Tribal Militia, in maintaining which in contentment vast sums of money were spent by the Government, immediately and unceremoniously went over to the side of the enemy and the British Indian troops were compelled to evacuate military posts and stations in the Tribal territory which at once joined hands with Afghanistan in invading India. Consequently it is the Hindus and the Sikhs of the North West Frontier who are the real gate-keepers of India. Imperial interests, therefore, require that the Hindu-Sikhs minority of the province should not be weakened and suppressed. On the other hand, the more their political worth is cultivated, the more will be assured the closing of the gates against foreign invasions and their ultimate invulnerability.

THE HINDUS HAVE HEAVY STAKES IN THE FRONTIER PROVINCE.

It must be realised that the Hindus and the Sikhs, though small in numbers, have very large investments in the province. They hold vast and valuable properties, both in towns as well as in the rural areas. They have invested very large amounts of money in advances as loans to the agriculturists who are predominantly Moslems. They have also invested very large amounts of money in the Public Debt of the country. Besides, in the future public loans of the province, it is they who have the means to contribute most. Along with the Moslems they are also co-partners in owning the National Assets of the province, such as, Agricultural Lands, Irrigation Canals and Forests. The Hindus and Sikhs contribute to the State more than 80 per cent. of the taxes on incomes, and it is they who contribute mostly towards the Stamps, Excise and Registration Revenues. As cultivators and land owners they are also interested in the agricultural development of the country. But trade and commerce of the province are almost entirely in their hands. With all these stakes it is evident that the Hindus and the Sikhs living in this province and deeply interested in its financial stability, being a richer community, and being engaged in the peaceful occupation of trade and commerce it is the Hindus and Sikhs that are more often the victims of raids and dacoities by the Pathans. They are consequently more vitally interested in the maintenance of Law and Order in the province. It is in their vital interest that there should be in the province an efficient Police and a strong and impartial Judiciary.

It is true, under the New Constitution, the Governor will be a more effective member of the Cabinet in the Frontier Province, than he would be in any other province. It is true that the Governor as member and President of the Provincial Cabinet with the powers vested in him will be able to look after and safeguard all India and Imperial interests. But imagine a situation, when the Cabinet has to deal with a Pan-Islamic problem, or a problem which touches the interests of tribal or Afghan Pathans, and when in the solution of this problem the interests of the Empire and India on one hand and Pathans as a people on the other hand come into conflict. The Governor will undoubtedly be able to over-rule the Cabinet, and act independently in the exercise of his reserved and special powers, but it cannot be denied that he will be entirely isolated. It is not always right for the Governor to act against the united wishes of his own Cabinet. It would land him into serious political and constitutional difficulties with his Legislature. It is therefore essential that the Governor should have by his side a Minister on whom he should be able to count for support whenever any question Pan-Islamic, International or Imperial problems comes up for discussion in the Cabinet. Who else could he be but a Hindu or a Sikh?

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

It is suggested that there should be three Ministers in the Cabinet of the Province, viz :—

1. A Finance Minister in charge of the Departments of Land Revenue, Irrigation, Forests, Income Tax, Excise, Stamps and Registration which are all revenue-producing Departments

2. A home Minister in charge of the protective Departments, such as Police, Jails, Justice and General Administration, and

- 3 A Development Minister for the remaining Departments which constitute the beneficent Departments.

Such an arrangement is essentially necessary in the interest of efficient administration of the Province. It is not good policy, as is the practice at present, to put the Finance Member in charge of Police, Jails and Justice, etc.

Taking all these facts of the situation into consideration, the particular demands of the Hindu and Sikh minority of the Province —

1. That there should be a statutory provision in the constitution, or a provision in the Instrument of Instructions to the Governor of the North West Frontier Province, as is proposed to be done in connection with the provincial subvention, to the effect that he should so constitute his Provincial Cabinet, as to contain one member from the Minority Community of the Province, the Hindus and Sikhs.

The inclusion of a Hindu in the Cabinet of the North West Frontier Province is absolutely necessary, for the following reasons —

- (a) The Imperial interests of the Government require that the Governor in this Province should have for advice and support in the Cabinet one non-Moslem Minister.

- (b) The financial stake of the Hindus and Sikhs in this Province, who own extensive and very valuable properties in this Province, and who have invested huge sums of money in loan advances to the agriculturists of this Province who are almost entirely Moslems, require that one Hindu should be in the inner councils of the Frontier Government, that is, in the Cabinet

- (c) The Hindus are invariably made the victims of raids and dacoities by the Moslems as if by choice or intentional discrimination and as such they are therefore more vitally concerned in the maintenance of peace and tranquility and efficient administration of the Police, Jails and Justice Departments.

- (d) The Commercial and Trade interests of the Hindus who are still the pioneers and leaders in commerce and trade of the Province require that communications in the Province are well kept and amplified. The maintenance of the provincial roads in proper condition and their amplification are thus a vital concern with the Hindus.

- 2 That in view of the manner of recruitment to Public Services which has affected the Hindu-Sikh minority most prejudicially though they are far more advanced in education than the Moslem majority, appointment of a Public Service Commission for the Province is an absolute and immediate necessity.

If however the finances of the Province do not permit the establishment of a separate Public Service Commission the recruitment to public Services in this Province should be handed to the Public Service Commission of the Central Government and the necessary financial adjustments be made as may be needed

- 3 That seats should be reserved for the Hindus and Sikhs in District Boards.

It is the Hindus and Sikhs who make the largest contribution to the finances of the district boards in proportion to their numbers. Being mostly traders and merchants, they are scattered all over the Province in the rural areas and as such they are vitally interested in the maintenance of District Board Roads in proper condition.

- 4 That a Special Officer Commanding the confidence of the minority community of Hindus and Sikhs and responsible to the Governor should be appointed as early as possible to look after the interests of the minority communities.

This officer should have authority to receive and investigate into complaints received by him. He may have no executive authority but he should have a right of audience with Heads of districts, Heads of the Departments and Ministers and the Governor, and his function should be to bring to their notice the legitimate grievances of the Minorities. Such an arrangement would lighten the work in this matter of the Governor and would also provide a quiet but effective method for removing communal troubles in the administration.

31^o Juhī, 1933.]

[Continued.]

5. That in view of the fact that the Central Government will be no longer be responsible for the administration of the province, though it will have to give a substantial subvention to supplement the revenues of the province for the carrying on of even day-to-day administration of the province, the following proposals are made in the interest of justice to the Hindu-Sikh minority.

(i) That a provision be made for the appointment of a Commission of Enquiry after a lapse of five years for ascertaining the condition of the minority community on the following lines:—

(a) Has the efficiency of administration been maintained at least at the same level at which it was when the Central Government was directly responsible for the administration of the Province?

(b) Has there been the same progress in nation-building departments, and

(c) Does the minority community enjoy the same degree of security of life and property as was the case when the Central Government was directly responsible for the administration of the Province?

(ii) That a provision should be made inter alia for the retransfer of the administration of the Province to the Central Government or for its re-amalgamation with Punjab, if the results of the enquiry mentioned above are not satisfactory.

(iii) That proposals for taxation should not be such as to throw a disproportionately heavy burden on the minority.

(iv) That the majority community should get no preferential treatment for

(1) Recruitment to Services.

(2) Admission to Educational institutions.

(3) Acquisition of property.

(v) That discriminatory laws like the Land-Alienation Act should be interdicted.

STATEMENT OF THE HINDU MAHASABHA ON THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROBLEM.

1. The unrest in India is entirely political. Other causes, such as the economic depression, Hindu-Moslem tension, etc., have merely added to the miseries arising from the political struggle. People have set their heart on full Responsible Government with Dominion Status, and until this is achieved there will be no peace and contentment in the country. They believe that with the attainment of their freedom will disappear the Hindu-Moslem tension and a new era of prosperity and contentment will dawn, bringing in its train complete metamorphosis of their entire economic life in which chronic economic depression and unemployment will soon vanish.

2. Great hopes were raised in this direction. The Mahasabha expects that the Government will redeem the often repeated pledges and declarations made to the people of India that the objects of the Constitutional Reforms is Responsible Self-Government and Dominion Status, subject to safeguards for a period of transition, demonstrably in the interest of India. These pledges and declarations are conveyed to the people in the speeches and statements made by responsible officials, on behalf of His Majesty's Government as the following quotations from them will show:—

(a) Viceroy Lord Irwin says in his statement, issued on 31st October, 1929:—

“But in view of the doubts which have been expressed both in Great Britain and India regarding the interpretation to be placed on the intentions of the British Government in enacting the Status of 1919, I am authorised on behalf of His Majesty's Government to state clearly that in their judgment it is implicit in the declaration of 1917 that the natural issue of Indian Constitutional progress, as therein contemplated, is the attainment of Dominion Status."

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(b) The right Honourable the Prime Minister, in his statement made in the House of Commons on behalf of the present Government, to which the present Parliament also is committed, says:—

"The view of His Majesty's Government is that responsibility for the Government of India should be placed upon Legislatures, Central and Provincial, with such provision as may be necessary to guarantee during a period of transition the observance of certain obligations and to meet other special circumstances and also with such guarantees as are required by minorities to protect their political liberties and rights."

"With regard to the Central Government I made it plain that subject to defined conditions, His Majesty's late Government were prepared to recognise the principle of responsibility of the Executive to the Legislature, if both were constituted on an All-India Federation basis. The principle of responsibility was to be subject to the qualification that in existing circumstances, defence and external affairs must be reserved to the Governor-General and that in regard to the finance such conditions must apply as will ensure the fulfilment of the obligations incurred under the authority of the Secretary of State and the maintenance unimpaired of the financial stability and credit of India."

Thus the concrete points that stand out from the statements to which His Majesty's last and present Governments and the present Parliament are committed are as follows:—

(a) That the Central and Provincial Legislatures will become responsible for the future Government of India, that is, the Executive will be responsible to the Legislatures, if both were constituted on an All-India Federal basis, subject to the following reservations:—

(1) That there should be a period of transition

(2) That during the period of transition—

(i) Defence and external affairs should be reserved to the Governor-General; and

(ii) In regard to Finance such conditions must apply as would ensure the fulfilment of the obligations incurred under the authority of the Secretary of State and the maintenance unimpaired of the financial stability and credit of India.

(3) That there should be guarantees to protect the political liberties and rights of the minorities.

3. There is general agreement on these points subject to the following:—

(a) That the application of the principle of responsibility of the Executive to the Legislature should not be made to depend irrevocably on an All-India Federation.

Such Federation is warmly and sincerely welcomed and the various advantages accruing from it are fully appreciated. But who knows what influences may be working to delay, if not actually prevent, its early realisation? Let, therefore, the scheme of responsibility of the Executive to the Legislature be made applicable to start with, to British India, leaving ample room in the Constitution for the Princes to come in and occupy their places with whatever adjustments that may be needed for mutual benefit and accommodation. This will save time and prevent delay and the people will be assured of observance of British pledges.

(b) That the period of transition should not be left undefined. It should not be of more than 10 years.

(c) That in the meantime an impartial arbitration be appointed to investigate into the obligations incurred under the authority of the Secretary of State for India which India is called upon to discharge.

(d) That after 10 years' experience of responsible Government people could be safely trusted to carry on the administration of the country in such a way as to ensure the maintenance unimpaired of the financial stability and credit of their own motherland.

(e) That it should be provided that Ministers in charge of the reserved subjects, during the period of transition, though responsible only to the Governor-General, should be selected from amongst the elected Indian members of the Legislature, so that the period of transition be utilised by the people for learning the art of control and administration of these departments.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(f) That in accordance with the decision of the Defence Sub-Committee "With the development of the new structure in India, the defence of India must to an increasing extent be the concern of the Indian people and not of the British Government alone."

(1) Provision be made for complete Indianisation of the Indian Army within 30 years at the most, and

(ii) The yearly intake of cadets for the Military College established in India should not be limited to only 60 as has been fixed by the Government of India.

In this connection it should be noted, as has been said more in detail in the note of dissent of Dr B. S. Moonje on the Report of the Indian Military College Committee that a scheme was prepared and considered feasible, it is said, by the Government of India, of complete Indianisation of the Indian Army in 30 years. Thus no higher authority could be quoted in support of limiting the period of Indianisation to not more than 30 years.

The general principle should be accepted that all yearly recruitment to the commissioned ranks of the Army, Navy and Air Force of the Indian Army be made by open competition in India from amongst the Indians, subject always to the standard of fitness and efficiency as is applicable to British cadets, provided that it shall be open to the Government to make recruitment in England to fill up such of the vacancies as could not be filled up in India and to regularise it in accordance with the schemes of complete Indianisation in 30 years as mentioned above.

(g) That provision should be made for the immediate removal of the bar that exists against recruitment as rank and file in the Army of certain classes and castes based on the artificial distinction as belonging to the so-called martial and non-martial classes thus throwing open the ranks of the army to all classes and castes, subject always to the prescribed tests of efficiency, so that the army be made truly national.

4. When the White Paper is studied and analysed in this light, certain points stand out which enable the people to visualise that there is no improvement in their constitutional status and that what is provided in the proposals of the White Paper is mere increased association of the people with the Government of the country for which, in its essence, it is the British Crown through its Agents and not the people are responsible. Some of the most important of these points are pieced together briefly in the resolution adopted at the Joint Conference of the Members of the Working Committee of the Hindu Mahasabha and the Hindu Members of the Central Legislature with which the Hindu Mahasabha is in entire agreement.

The resolution is as follows:—

This Conference puts on record its deliberate opinion that the constitution of India as foreshadowed in the White Paper will not allay but increase discontent as being most disappointing and inadequate and even retrogressive for the following reasons —

(a) That there is no advance in the constitutional status of India, and the whole of the conception of the constitution is based on the assumption that India is a conquered territory belonging to the Crown of England and is to be administered, not in the interest of India, by the agents of the Crown.

(b) That the constitution does not even remotely or in any sense approximate to a Dominion Constitution which the Government is pledged to grant by Parliamentary declarations.

(c) That though it was agreed that the introduction of Central Responsibility leading to Dominion Status should be accompanied during a period of transition by safeguards which should be demonstrably in the interest of India the period of transition is not provided nor is it fixed and the safeguards are not conceived in the interest of India.

(d) That the Central Responsibility is made dependent on the one hand, ultimately on the will of the Princes and on the other, on the World economic conditions making the establishment of the Reserved Bank possible and on its successful working and also more particularly on the will of the Houses of Parliament to present an address, if and when they so choose to His Majesty praying for His Majesty's proclamation announcing the establishment of the Federation.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(e) That provision has been made for endowing the Governor-General with extraordinary powers described under the categories called: (a) Reserved Departments, (b) Special Responsibilities, (c) Discretionary Powers, (d) Special powers, and (e) Legislative powers by which the Governor-General can make acts without the consent of or even reference to Legislatures and can obtain funds at his own individual judgment and will.

(f) That the authority of the Governor-General to appoint Counsellors for the administration of Reserved Departments of Defence and Foreign Affairs is not limited to choice of his Counsellors only from amongst the elected Indian members of the Legislatures.

(g) That the Federal Legislatures has been denied the power of constituting a Railway Board by a Statute of its own for the administration of the Federal Railways.

(h) That the responsibility of the Finance Minister already circumscribed as it is by making more than 80 per cent. of the revenues non-votable has been further seriously crippled by the appointment of a Financial Adviser to the Viceroy.

(i) That no provision has been made for complete Indianisation of the Army within a reasonable period.

(j) That powers are still retained in regard to the recruitment and control of Public Service, the Police Service and other Services, by the Secretary of State for India, which being the steel frame of the constitution are incapable of automatic adjustment compatible with automatic constitutional growth.

(k) That no provision has been made for automatic growth to Dominion Constitution.

(l) That fundamental rights have not been defined and no provision has been made for the inclusion of those rights in Constitution Act, and that in view of the fact that these rights alone comprise the true and legitimate protection of a minority, this omission coupled with practically autocratic powers of the Governor-General is bound to lead to differential treatment of minorities in different Provinces.

(m) That the Government reserves to itself the right to reconsider the whole position in respect of Reforms under certain possible but undefined financial, economic and political conditions, even though all other requirements for the inauguration of the Federation shall have been satisfied.

(n) That the Communal Award which forms the basis of the Constitution is predominantly pro-Moslem and highly unjust to the Hindus. It is unacceptable to the Hindus as it provides for separate electorates and undue weightages in representation in Legislatures to the Moslems at the cost of the Hindus and gives statutory majority in effect to the Moslems in Punjab.

To the above the Mahasabha would add that a Constitution based on the Communal decision of the British Government cannot be one of Dominion Status, nor can it ever lead to it. It would always be an unsurmountable obstacle to redeem their pledges thereof.

The Mahasabha has therefore to criticise the Communal decision also apart from its adverse effects on the interests of the Hindu community.

MEMORANDUM 58.—(ALL-INDIA) HINDU MAHASABHA (BERAR SECTION).

Descriptive.—Berar is situated right in the heart of India about 300 miles to the north-east of Bombay. It is the largest cotton producing unit in India, with an area of 17,767 square miles and a population of 3.5 millions. It is described in old literature as the first centre of Anyan settlement in the Deccan and has existed as a separate entity throughout the period being described as the great "Vidarbha". Politically it has had a very chequered career. It passed into the hands of Pathan Kings of Delhi after the Jadhav Dynasty was destroyed, then into the hands of Bahamani Kings, after a short spell of independence it passed into the hands of the Moguls, then into the Maratha hands; in 1803 it was given to the Nizam by the British; by the Treaties of 1853 and 1860 it passed into British hands again and finally by the Treaty of 1902 it was given to the British by perpetual lease in which position it finds itself to-day.

31^o July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Berar is thus a territory held by the British on lease from an Indian State, constitutionally it is not British India although it is administered by the British. This position has made what is known as the Berar problem.

The Problem.—Berar has always been treated as a separate unit, the problem, therefore, is not, as is commonly supposed, to make it a separate unit. It has all along been separate; the problem is to give it a satisfactory status in the coming constitution.

Financial Position.—Up to the year 1902 Berar had a separate administration. It maintained that administration and always left over a substantial surplus after defraying the heavy and rather an unnecessary military expenditure of about Rs. 4,000,000 annually.

Following figures will show this position —

Year	Revenue (Lakhs)	Expenditure (Lakhs)
1872—1873	80.40	65.66
1899—1900 (Famine)	84.96	99.98
1901—1902	124.42	93.24

After the year 1903 the Province was amalgamated with Central Provinces. This arrangement has been most iniquitous and unsatisfactory and has failed to give protection to the people of Berar. The surplus, which properly speaking should have been utilised for the growing needs of the people of Berar has all been appropriated towards the Backward tracts of Central Provinces. Berar, so to say, has been paying a considerable subvention to C.P. A reasonable amount after satisfying Berar needs would not have been grudged for the uplift of the Backward tract, but the arrangement has resulted in starving the most essential requirements of Berar.

Just how large the surplus is will be apparent from the following figures —

Year	Revenue (Lakhs)	Expenditure (Lakhs)	Surplus
1902—03	1,10,39,382	68,10,953	42,28,400
1904—05	1,27,57,982	66,13,816	61,43,800
1909—10	1,40,53,179	51,75,076	88,78,100
1912—13	1,63,79,598	60,31,001	1,03,48,500
1915—16	1,62,68,922	68,00,588	94,68,400
Average of 1926—27 to 1929—30 Central and Pro- vincial.	2,54,71,050	1,86,88,750	67,82,300

The following points in the figures for the 1926-30 may be noted —

(1) That the expenditure includes Rs. 25 lakhs paid annually to the Nizam on account of the lease.

(ii) That full share of overhead charges on account of Heads of Departments and Executive Heads of Government is also included at 25 per cent. of the total expenditure.

It may also be noted that Berar has been progressively taxed since 1872; and further that the years 1926-30 were specially favourable to Berar, those being the years when largest amounts under "Sim" Rule were allotted. The position has since changed to Berar's disadvantage.

This position has been very irksome, has led to ever growing friction in the Central Provinces Council and has to a considerable extent hampered the growth of democratic spirit in the province.

The position was visualised by the makers of the constitution of 1919, when Provincial Finance came to be separated from the Central Finance, and a safeguard in the interest of Berar was imposed by Devolution Rule 14 (2) by which Revenues of Berar were placed at the disposal of the C.P. Government and Government of India retained the right to decrease or cancel this arrangement if it deemed it necessary.

This fact once again established that Berar was a separate entity and that its revenues formed distinct and extraordinary source separate from the ordinary source of a revenue from one of the Districts within the Central Province. That it was so to say a subvention to C.P. from Central Government. Once again the position, that Berar has been separate and distinct and that the problem is not the question of its separation afresh, is asserted.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Sim Rule. In pursuance of this Devolution Rule the Legislative Council passed a resolution in March, 1921, that a reasonable share of Berar Revenues should be spent for the benefit of Berar. Government agreed to this and what subsequently came to be known as the "Sim" rule was adopted. Neither party has found satisfaction in this and it has never been given effect to in full. According to this rule, after satisfying the demands of a single Government and certain exceptional items, which absorb the lion's share of the Budget, Berar was to get 40 per cent. of new expenditure. The nearest approach to this figure was 38 per cent. in 1927. But the Rule applies to budget allotments only and there is no check on actual expenditure, and the allotments made originally have subsequently been withdrawn.

The following admission by C.P. Government in this behalf in its report to the statutory Commission is useful: (Page 101, para. 251).

"Before this settlement the C.P. enjoyed far greater share of the divisible expenditure than the 60 per cent. now allotted to it."

Unsatisfactory as these arrangements were Government could carry out its promise of minimum expenditure for the benefit of Berar with the help of "Nominated block" and Berar members. For obvious reasons no fully responsible Government could carry on such an arrangement without courting a disaster. Statutory safeguard could be no better remedy to keep on such an arrangement as that straightaway lead to a deadlock.

There is, therefore, no effective remedy except to have a separate Budget to be dealt with by the people to whom the money belongs and has always belonged. This I submit can only be done by giving Berar a Council with a power over its purse. Berar could never exercise that power within the Central Provinces Council. And the conferral of the right in those circumstances would be to give no power of purse to the people of Berar.

DOUBLE TAXATION OF BERAR FOR SUBVENTION.

I have already pointed out that the surplus of Berar absorbed towards C.P. is in the nature of a subvention. In addition there are other Provinces contemplated towards the subvention of which, Berar will have to bear its proportionate share in future. There is no reason why the people of Berar should be required to pay more than the rest of British India on this account. Reasonable burden for the benefit of backward tracts in India, Berar has not grudged. But the arrangement contemplated, if Berar remains in its present position, is highly unfair to the people of Berar. The remedy lies in its separation from C.P. and in giving Berar its rightful position of a Federating unit. The money belongs to the people of Berar, they are a distinct entity and they should have the power of disposal over it, to the same extent as people in any other province in British India.

Homogeneous Tract.—Berar is a homogeneous tract very much in advance of the others in C.P. This has been admitted by Local Government in its administration reports from time to time; the latest admission being in the Local Government's report to the Franchise Committee. Referring to Berar that report says:—

"Every shade of variation will be found between Marathi-speaking population of the South-West" (i.e. Berar) "one of the most advanced in India and the aboriginal tribes who are amongst the most backward."

There is no doubt that this state of affairs has checked the progress of Berar which might have been faster than at present.

The Statutory Commission has made the following remarks which apply very fittingly to the case of Berar; viz. "If those who speak the same language, form a compact and self-contained area, so situated and endowed as to be able to support its existence as a separate province, there is no doubt that the use of a common speech is a strong and natural basis for individuality." (Para. 38, Vol. I.) By each one of these tests Berar could be effectively proved to be entitled to form a separate unit.

Popular Opinion.—Further test suggested by the statutory commission is:—

"Most important of all perhaps is the largest possible measure of general agreement to changes proposed, both on the side of the area that is gaining and on the side of the area that is losing territory." (Para. 38, Vol. I.)

31^o July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

It might have been supposed that such bilateral test would be difficult to be satisfied. But so great is the feeling of dissatisfaction on either side at the present ill-fitting incongruous arrangement that neither Berar nor C.P. Hindi sections desire now to remain together.

C.P. Hindi Party have already voiced their demand through various provincial conferences, they made similar demand before the Nehru Committee and as a result of this demand the Committee conceded that it must be made into a province separate from Berar. It may be noted here that there was no such demand made on behalf of Berar before that Committee.

As recently as January, 1933, the Central Provinces Legislative Council passed a resolution, with a overwhelming majority of members from both parts, that Berar should be separated from C.P. and made into an autonomous Federating Unit. It is noteworthy that an amendment was specifically moved in the Council at the instance of a C.P. Member which resulted into rejecting the idea of forming Berar into a Sub-Province.

On the other side there is a long list of the support that this demand has from Berar, only the important items of which are enumerated (vide Appendix A); besides several cablegrams recently sent to the President of the Joint Parliamentary Committee from various places in Berar.

If the desire of the people is the real test of the arrangements to be made for the future governance of Berar, I submit that the opinions on either side have most unequivocally and emphatically been expressed, and there is no alternative except to separate Berar from C.P. and be made into a Federating Unit.

Legislative Aspect.—Laws in Berar are promulgated by Government of India acting in its Foreign Jurisdiction. Properly speaking the Government of India Act of 1919 or the previous Acts have not conferred the commonest constitutional right on the people of Berar, viz.: to pass their own Laws. Of all the British Dominion in India curiously Berar alone has been singled out for such invidious distinction. The position is rendered still more curious by the fact that the members from Berar to the C.P. Council have the full right to Legislate for C.P. but no such right to legislate for themselves. Such a position has given rise to a perfectly natural and justifiable resentment amongst the C.P.

members of the Council. Such a position has been no less intolerable and disagreeable to the members from Berar also. An attempt has been made to give a certain amount of Legislative voice to Berar, since Government set up what is known as the "Berar Legislative Committee." The powers of this committee are described best in the report of the Local Government to the Statutory Commission (vide Part ix, paras. 212/213 and 215, pp. 74 and 75). This is what it says —

Para. 212.—"The committee is advisory in character and may deal with only such legislation affecting Berar as the Governor-General in Council may authorize being placed before it."

Para. 213—"The report" (i.e., laws passed by the committee) "is in no way binding on the Governor-General in Council who reserves full power to legislate for Berar as he thinks fit."

Para. 215—"The Committee serves a useful purpose in eliciting informed opinion on legislation affecting Berar."

Comment is needless. It would take more than a common measure of boldness to say that these are constitutional powers. Yet Berar has no more powers than those described. No powers to legislate for Berar on one hand and equal powers of legislation for C.P. on the other is the greatest incentive there could exist for the growth of irresponsibility under the constitution. If it has not grown the fault certainly does not lie with the constitution.

What Berar seeks is a way out of this position. The powers of legislation for Berar cannot be conferred on anyone except the people of Berar and the unwanted powers over legislation in C.P. are disagreeable to the people of Berar. The remedy again is the same, viz.: to have council for Berar with full Legislative powers.

LAND REVENUE SYSTEMS.

The difference in the Land Revenue systems of the two Provinces again is very great. Excepting a few villages, Berar is a Rayotwari, where the villagers hold lands directly from Government, whereas in C.P. the Malgujari system prevails and the villagers hold lands from their landlords. This makes a difference to their respective contributions to the Revenues of the province which is contributed in the proportion 2:3 although

31^o July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Berar is only four Districts as against (until recently) 18 Districts of C.P.

The spirit of the people of the two provinces is entirely different, Rayotwari being conducive to the spirit of Democracy. In the present arrangement the Democratic growth in Berar needs necessarily suffer a severe handicap, besides making a smooth running of the Government difficult.

Incidence of Taxation.—The difference in the spirit is clearly disclosed by the incidence of Local Taxation. Nation-building activities have been partially entrusted to Local Bodies in the Province. Berar, besides making its contribution to the Provincial Treasury, has again had to tax itself for Local activities. The incidence in Berar is more than Rs. 0/8/0 per head whereas nowhere in C.P. it exceeds Rs. 0/2/0 per head of the population.

Under the grant-in-aid system no district in Berar gets more than 25 per cent. of its approved expenditure whereas there is no district in C.P. which gets less than 60 per cent. This figure runs into more than 90 per cent. in individual cases. Thus what Berar pays for Local needs out of its pocket is all an additional Taxation. The unfairness of the Grants System can well be characterised as penalisation of extra efforts made by Berar.

Every Provincial Tax falls more heavily on Berar, and every need for retrenchment results in the application of the Axe to the allotments made for the Nation-building activities in Berar in the first instance.

Berar question, therefore, looked at from every point of view affords only one satisfactory solution; viz., to constitute it into a separate Federating Unit with full Legislative and Financial powers on the same lines as any other province in British India.

Treaty obligations.—The people of Berar do not believe that such a position is in any way inconsistent with the Treaty obligations of His Majesty's Government. On the other hand they believe that consistently with those obligations the solution suggested above is the only one that is logical, legal and satisfactory to all concerned. There is no defect which would obstruct the devolution of powers now vested in the British Crown, from the Crown to the people of Berar in the same manner and to the same extent as other subjects of His Majesty in British India. Berar ought to be taken out of the Paramountcy relations in the sense that it ought not to remain a part of the permanent Reserved subject of Paramountcy in India.

In the end I might say—

(i) That I hope to have shown to the Committee that Berar has always been treated as a distinct and separate entity by Government.

(ii) That it has been treated in the same way by the Congress also.

(iii) That the necessity of its separation and the temporary character of amalgamation with C.P. has always been recognised. The following observation in the Montague-Chelmsford Report on the constitutional reform in India would make this clear (vide para. 246) "In Orissa and Berar, at all events it seems to us that the possibility of instituting Sub-Province need not be excluded from consideration at a very early date."

(iv) That neither Berar nor C.P. wish now to remain amalgamated and that C.P. rejects the idea of a Sub-Province.

(v) That the problem is not to take it away from C.P. but give the people of Berar the common rights under the constitution.

(vi) That there is no satisfactory, logical and legal way of doing it except by the formation of Berar into a separate Federating Unit with full powers of a Province like any other Province in British India.

Lord Salisbury, then Secretary of State for India, wrote in 1878 about Berar "The matter in controversy here is not dignity, revenue, or any matter of personal enjoyment, it is the control over the lives and properties of two millions of men."

Since then it has become a matter of the lives and properties of three and a half million men. With the necessary changes this great sentiment of that great British statesman still holds good. It is now a matter of the Legislative and Financial liberty of these men and of the acquisition by them of their legal and constitutional rights, to which they are by history, tradition and material advancement rightfully entitled with the rest of their Countrymen. It is a question of liberation from bondage and freedom from exploitation. It is imperative that this should be done while there is yet time and while the goodwill of the people of Berar is not yet undermined.

31^o Juli, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Judged from every conceivable point of view the only solution, I submit, is to constitute Berar into a full province directly finding a place in its own right and not a place, as at present, by the grace or by the sufferance of the people who do not like the association any more than it is liked in Berar.

I submit, that any attempt to build a constitution on unsecure foundations in Berar will be foredoomed to failure. Let us therefore proceed to build it secure and true by conceding to the people their legitimate constitutional rights on the same lines as the rest of India. Berar demands the same treatment as the rest of the British India. Berar demands that justice be done to her. no more and no less

APPENDIX A.

List of Supporters to Berar demand

1. The Berar All-Parties Conferences and the Committee appointed by that Conference. The original conference was convened by the President of the congress for Berar on 21st June, 1931. This conference appointed a committee which includes representatives and members from all Political Parties and classes in Berar, viz. Congress, Liberals, Responsionists, Nationalists, Non-Brahmins, Muslim, Depressed Class and Labour from Berar and includes all the prominent men in Berar. The Committee had sent a representation to the Second and Third Round Table Conferences, it represented its Financial case to the Federal Finance Committee.

It has fully supported the demand throughout the last two years. (President: Mr. M. S. Aney, and now Mr. S. B. Tambe, Ex-Governor of C.P.)

2. The Liberal Party at its meeting held at Akola in May, 1933, has also supported this demand (President: R. B. Bramha a well-known Liberal).

3.—(a) The Non-Brahmin party at its meeting held at Nandura in Buldana District on 1st January, 1933, supported the demand in essential aspect and urged formation of a Sub-Province. It is to be especially noted that this conference was held under the Presidentialship of the Honourable Minister of Education to the C.P. Government.

The Nandura conference was held before the Legislative Council rejected the idea of a Sub-Province.

(b) Subsequently the Non-Brahmin Party held another conference at Akola on 14th May, 1933, at which they adopted a resolution supporting the demand for complete separation. This conference was presided over by the President of the Party for C.P. and Berar.

4. The Nationalist Party of Berar has fully supported the demand throughout and instructed its President to bring the question to the notice of H.E. the Viceroy twice during the last two years, (1) in May, 1931, (2) in January, 1933, which the President did by means of letters to the Viceroy. (President: Mr. R. M. Deshmukh Ex-Minister).

5. Other important conferences held are as follows:—

(a) Conference of all the Berar Village Panchayats at Pusad in Yeotmal District. 26/11/32.

(b) Conference of Nationalists held at Loni in Akola District. 28/11/32.

(c) Mangrul Taluq Agriculturists, conference held at Giroli in Akola District. 18/12/32

(d) Telhara Circle Agriculturists, conference held at Telhara in Akot Taluq. 24/12/32.

(e) Kalamb Circle Agriculturists, conference in Yeotmal District (presided over by an Ex-Minister from C.P.) to the C.P. Government. 25/12/32.

(f) Berar Landlords, conference held at Surji-Anjangaon (presided over by a prominent Liberal from Berar). 25/12/32.

(g) Yeotmal Taluq Agriculturists, conference at Babulgaon in Yeotmal District (President: An Ex-Minister to C.P. Government). 8/1/33.

(h) Amraoti District Nationalist Agriculturist Conference held at Ner-Pinglai, Amraoti District. (President: Member of C.P. Council). 15/1/33.

(i) Amraoti Taluq Agriculturist, conference held at Kothoda in Amraoti Taluq. (President: Well known journalist in Berar). 18/2/23.

Note.—The list is not exhaustive. There have been various other conferences held at which the demand has received support. The list given above is, however, sufficiently representative to show that on this point of Berar demand all the differences of party, class or creed have been merged. And the demand is the unequivocal and unanimous demand of the people of Berar.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

MEMORANDUM 59. (ALL INDIA) HINDU MAHASABHA (BERAR SECTION SUPPLEMENT).

1. The fact that the attainment of full Dominion status by India is implicit in the declaration of August, 1917, should find a place in the preamble to the Constitution Act.

2. The Committee is opposed to the inauguration of the Federation being made contingent upon—

(a) Setting up and successful operation of a reserve bank.

(b) The execution of instruments of accession by the Rulers of States representing not less than half the population of States and of States entitled to half the number of seats in the Council of State.

(c) The voting of an address to the Crown by both the Houses of Parliament

And therefore the Committee desires that the Constitution Act should contain provision enabling Provinces to join the Federation of India as their instruments of accession are executed.

The application of the Act should be a matter of mere executive action.

3. The Constitution Act should contain a provision to terminate the personal charge of the Governor-General in respect of the reserved departments automatically by

(a) efflux of a definite period of time, or

(b) Fulfilment of conditions specifying stages to be laid down in the Act.

4. The Ecclesiastical Department should be excluded from the personal charge of the Governor-General.

5. The Committee is opposed to the declaration of special responsibilities of the Governor and the Governor-General as laid down in paras. 70 and 18 of the proposals since they impede the growth of real responsibility amongst the Ministers. Therefore the Committee proposes that provision for rules on the lines of the present rules framed under 52 (3) of the Government of India Act, should be made to enable the Governor and the Governor-General to meet all such emergencies and all the machinery contemplated to give effect to the special responsibilities together with the proposal for a financial adviser (proposal 17) will therefore automatically disappear.

6. In order to make a real Federation the Committee proposes that the members to be appointed by the Rulers of States to the Federal Assembly shall be elected according to rules to be framed in this behalf by the States concerned.

7. With reference to para 18 of the Introduction, the Committee considers that no clog on election by method of the single transferable vote is desirable and necessary.

8 With reference to paras. 27 and 30 of the proposals, the Committee considers that 35 should be the minimum age limit for members of the Council of State and 30 for those of House of Assembly.

9. The Committee is opposed to the proposals in paras. 42, 43, 92 and 93 contemplating powers of the Governor-General and the Governors to promulgate Acts on their own responsibility as the Committee considers that an Act should always mean an Act of the Legislature, and any law that is not an Act ought to be an Ordinance.

10. Ordinances in the departments in which responsibility is transferred either at the centre or in the Provinces shall invariably be issued on the advice of the Ministers subject to the conditions laid down in this behalf.

11. The power to promulgate ordinances in reserved departments as contemplated in para. 53 of the proposals is to remain unaffected subject to the condition that the power of renewal shall not be assumed unless the federal legislature fails to pass the required legislation.

12. In proposals 14 and 67 the Committee desires that the directions to the Governor-General and the Governor contained in brackets shall be dropped

13 The description of Provinces given in proposals 5 and 61 shall be modified as follows:—

Berar should be excluded from C.P. and described as a separate Governor's Province. Some members of the Committee consider that the ports declared to be major ports including Aden should become separate federating units under a Governor or a Chief Commissioner according to importance. Berar should be a separate federating unit.

The possibility of forming Governor's Provinces on linguistic basis immediately should be kept in view.

14. With reference to proposal 106 the Committee considers that there should be no excluded area in C.P. or Berar.

15. The Secretary of State in Council should have control over services only up to the period of inauguration of the new constitution and should function only in respect of servants appointed by him up to that time.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

16. With reference to para. 73 (Introduction) the Government of India should continue to carry the responsibility for payments arising out of the family pensions fund. No attempt to build up a separate sterling fund for the purpose should be made.

17. With reference to proposal about borrowing contained in proposals in paras. 146 and 147 the Committee considers that no loan outside India should be raised without consulting the Federal Legislature.

18. The Constitution of a Railway Board (para. 74 Introduction) should be subject to Federal Legislation. The Committee agrees that it should be framed with a view to perform its duties upon business principles.

MEMORANDUM 60. SUBMITTED BY PANDIT NANAK CHAND, M.A. (OXON.).

BRIEF SUMMARY OF PROPOSALS

I have been nominated to appear as a witness and to give evidence before the Joint Select Committee, by the following bodies:—

(1) The Punjab, Sind and North-West Frontier Conference of Hindus. (Held at Multan, May, 1933.)

(2) The Hindu, or National Reform Party of the Punjab Legislative Council.

(3) The Punjab Democratic League

(4) The Mahajan or Non-Agriculturist Association (Hissar).

(5) Instructed by Dr. Nand Singh, Secretary of the Non-Agricultural Conference of Hindus, Moslems and Sikhs. (Jullendhar, May, 1933.)

to represent their case.

On behalf of the Punjab Hindus and Non-Agricultural Tribes, therefore, as represented by these associations, I desire to give evidence before the Committee on the following matters:—

(1) The protection of minorities by means of the clause in paragraph 122 of the White Paper, without the provisos or exceptions now contained therein.

(2) The position of the Agricultural and Non-Agricultural Tribes on the electoral roll of the Punjab.

(3) The present arbitrary division into rural and urban constituencies of the Punjab Province.

(4) The introduction into the central district of the Punjab of a modified system of joint electorates, while maintaining the system of separate electorates of the Eastern and Western Punjab; the modification of the terms of revision of the Communal Award.

(5) The constitution of an All-India Minorities Protection Board.

(6) The early appointment of a Boundaries Commission, with an impartial chairman, as recommended by the Simon Commission. (See pages 15-16 and 26, of Vol. II of the Simon Report.)

(7) The transfer of the Police to the control of the popular Minister, and the appointment of a statutory committee to assist him in the discharge of his duties.

(8) Recruitment for the Services to be on the grounds of efficiency, fitness, and merit alone.

(9) Increase to 600 of the membership of the House of Assembly.

(10) The centralisation of the High Courts as recommended by the Simon Commission, the Nehru Report, and the Note of Sir Claude Schuster and Sir M. Gwyer printed in the proceedings of the Third Round Table Conference.

(11) Abolition of the arbitrary distinction between the martial and non-martial races and the institution of an Indian Military Advisory Council.

SPECIFIC PROPOSALS.

I. My first proposal relates to paragraph 122, page 70, of the White Paper which runs as follows:—

“The Federal Legislature and the Provincial Legislatures will have no power to make laws subjecting in British India any British subject (including companies, partnerships or associations constituted by or under any Federal or Provincial law) in respect of taxation, the holding of property of any kind, the carrying on of any profession, trade, business or occupation, or the employment of any servants or agents, or in respect of residence or travel within the boundaries of the Federation, to any disability or discrimination based upon his religion, descent, caste, colour or place of birth; but no law will be deemed to be discriminatory for this purpose on the ground only that it prohibits either absolutely or with exceptions, the sale or mortgage of agricultural land in any area to any person not belonging to some class recognised as being a class of persons engaged in, or connected with, agriculture in that area, or which recognises the existence of some right, privilege or disability attaching to the members of a community by virtue of some privilege, law or custom having the force of law.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

"A Federal or Provincial law, however, which might otherwise be void on the ground of its discriminatory character will be valid if previously declared by the Governor-General or the Governor, as the case may be, in his discretion, to be necessary in the interests of the peace and tranquility of India or any part thereof."

* Without a qualification of this kind, legislation such as, e.g., the Indian Criminal Tribes' Act, would be invalidated by the provisions of this paragraph.

My proposal is that the words beginning "but no law" and concluding "or any part thereof", should be deleted altogether.

The paragraph deals with two matters:—

1. The clause deals with the Fundamental Rights of the citizens of the State and interdicts discriminatory legislation and is meant for the protection of the minorities. The words which begin with 'The Federal Legislature' and conclude with 'religion, descent, caste, colour or place of birth' are meant as the protective clause.

2. The latter portion deals with the exceptions to the rule framed in the earlier part of the paragraph.

It is interesting to go into the history of the recommendations contained in paragraph 122. The minorities all over India, whether European, Mohammedan or Hindu, insisted upon a provision of the kind mentioned in the earlier part of paragraph 122. A clause of the nature was first proposed for the protection of minorities (whether of religion, descent, caste, colour or place of birth) by the Nehru Report. Then when the Simon Commission was about to go out to India, Dr. Shaffat Ahmad Khan insisted upon a clause of this kind for the protection of the Moslem minorities in his book, 'What are the Rights of Moslem minorities?' The learned Doctor, who was a member of the three Round Table Conferences and is at present a member of the Indian wing of the Joint Select Committee, quoted with approval certain clauses from the Constitution of Poland and Austria, in support of his proposals for the protection of Moslem minorities. These clauses insisted upon equality before the law of all nationals and laid down the following principle:—

"Differences of religion, creed or confession shall not prejudice any Polish national in matters relating to the enjoyment of civic or political rights, as, for instance, admission to public employments, functions, and honours, or the exercise of profession and industries."

The European Association likewise laid emphasis upon a protection of this kind. The Hindu minority of the Punjab, whose case was represented to the Simon Commission by Rajah Narendra Nath in a long memorandum, and by me by means of another memorandum and oral evidence, also emphasised the importance of a clause of the nature demanded by the Moslem and European minorities, and, in order to illustrate the injustice which was likely to be inflicted upon minorities if a clause of this kind was not inserted in the Constitution, the Punjab Land Alienation Act was cited as an instance of what would occur later on.

In the first two Round Table Conferences emphasis was laid over and over again upon the necessity for protection of this nature by representatives of various communities, and it is very important to note that the Prime Minister on behalf of the Government gave a definite promise to the second Round Table Conference that a protection of this nature would be granted. This is what the Prime Minister said:—

"In framing the Constitution His Majesty's Government considers it will be its duty to insert provisions guaranteeing to the various minorities, in addition to political representation, that differences of religion, race, sect or caste shall not themselves constitute civic disabilities."

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

In the Third Round Table Conference the matter was again thoroughly discussed and, though some of the Indian delegates presented a long list of fundamental rights, and though it was considered impracticable to give this list a statutory sanction, yet it was recognised that a clause of the kind incorporated in the first part of paragraph 122 of the White Paper was an absolute necessity. Unfortunately, however, the Punjab Land Alienation Act was brought into prominence in all the discussions of all the Round Table Conferences.

Sir Hubert Carr, representing the British-European community, insisted that a clause of the kind should be inserted. He said in his last speech printed on page 133 of the Third Round Table Conference Report:—

"In consideration of the position in India to-day, we think not only is special protection required for the British-European community, but that for all minorities a general omnibus clause is required in the Constitution for protection against discriminatory treatment."

During the discussions of the Third Round Table Conference a memorandum was submitted signed by eight of the delegates, one of whom was a Parsee gentleman, regarding discriminatory legislation. (See pages 196 and 197 of the Round Table Conference Report.)

When discussing proposals for a clause of this kind the Punjab Land Alienation Act also came up for discussion again and again. Dr. Ambedkar and I particularly drew the attention of the Conference to the necessity of a clause prohibiting discriminatory legislation and treatment; and this subject has been treated by me in some detail in my last speech to the Round Table Conference (see pages 118-122 of the Report of the Conference). The Punjab Land Alienation Act is also discussed therein.

There was a unanimous decision that a clause of the kind was absolutely essential for the proper protection of minorities, i.e., the clause to prohibit completely discriminatory legislation and treatment of the minorities, whether of religion, descent, caste, colour or place of birth. Thus we find that paragraph 122 of the White Paper contains in its earlier passages this very healthy, legitimate and sound recommendation for the protection of minorities.

It would seem, however, that the learned draughtsman who is responsible for paragraph 122 could not forget the discussions which took place in the Conference and the Committees, and sought to save the discriminatory provisions of the Punjab Land Alienation Act and, incidentally, of the Indian Criminal Tribes' Act, by the inclusion of the exceptions which I respectfully urge the Committee to delete

These exceptions, if incorporated in the Constitution as a part of the law, will not only nullify the effect of the fundamental rights clause, but will prove a source of terrible oppression in the hands of the majorities in the legislatures. These provisos or exceptions are unjust, because they take away the right of acquiring property from certain individuals, classes or communities, merely on the ground of their birth in a particular caste and thus strike at the root of the fundamental right of a citizen to obtain the main and chief qualification for acquiring the vote and thus taking part in the government of the State. These exceptions are, in my humble judgment, dangerous, unjust, impracticable and, if I may say so, destructive of all democratic ideals of government. As I have said above, the effect of the provisos will be to nullify completely the effect of the previous part of the paragraph.

I wish the Joint Select Committee to consider dispassionately these exceptions. If they are enacted into law the majorities in the Federal and provincial legislatures will have the power:—

(a) To prohibit the sale or mortgage of agricultural land to any person, to any class, or to any tribe, and thus destroy one of the main and chief means of acquiring qualifications for becoming voters and taking part in the government of the State.

(b) To sanctify existing privileges or disabilities based on birth, custom or law thus preventing further progress for the minorities, and further maintaining disabilities for all time to come.

(c) to prevent women, depressed classes, untouchables and others not only from acquiring property but from acquiring sites for houses in rural areas, and to restrain the depressed classes from exercising elementary rights of citizenship, such as, free access to public roads, schools, village tanks and wells.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(d) Lastly, these exceptions will arm the majorities with the power of declaring any class, tribe or caste a criminal tribe

Well may the minorities cry, "We wanted bread and you give us a stone!"

But it will naturally be asked, what about the Punjab Land Alienation Act? Nobody has any dispute with proposals for giving protection to the cultivator or the soil or to agriculturists, but the definition of an agriculturist should be based upon occupation, not on birth as is done by the Punjab Land Alienation Act, in Section III of that Act. I maintain that:—

(a) It is no protection to the poor proprietor of land who has to part with his property under necessity. He does not get a fair price as competition is limited. He practically has to sell his land at half the price.

(b) That gives the moneylenders, lawyers and wealthy members of agricultural tribes or castes a charter to rob the poor agriculturists: see Darling's book; The Punjab Peasant.

(c) That it is possible to remedy these defects and find suitable definition of the agriculturist based not upon birth or caste but on occupation.

The position of the members of non-agricultural tribes and agricultural tribes must be thoroughly grasped in order to understand what mischief and havoc the Act is playing in the public life of the Punjab and how the privileged castes called the agricultural tribes are clamouring for more and more privileges. They seek to rule the Punjab to their own exclusive advantage, hence the activities of their members to bar the door on all others who would seek to improve their status.

Though less than 50 per cent of the population of the Punjab, the agricultural tribes have got more than 70 per cent. of the elected seats in the Punjab Council and the result is that, during the last five or six years, they have become extremely unreasonable and wish to secure privileges on the basis of birth which no one would dream of suggesting in a democratic government. As a matter of fact privilege based upon caste or tribe is entirely inconsistent with the ideal of a democratic state. The debates of the Legislative Council of the Punjab will show that these tribes want:—

(1) That the sources of revenue of the Punjab Government from land tax and water rates should be very substantially cut down.

(2) That posts should be given to the statutory agriculturists to the extent of 60 per cent. to 80 per cent.—and the Punjab Government is yielding to this pressure.

(3) That admissions to the various professional colleges should be regulated on the basis of birth or caste, and that these tribes should have the lion's share.

(4) That electricity from the hydro-electric plants of the Punjab Government should be given free to these agriculturists.

These demands have been resisted because of the existence of the official bloc and a few members of non-agricultural tribes. Therefore my submission is that it is absolutely essential that these exceptions to paragraph 122 embodied in the White Paper should be deleted and that only the clause beginning with, "The Federal Legislature" and concluding with "religion, descent, caste, colour or place of birth" should be retained.

II. My second proposal relates to the question of the representation of non-agricultural tribes on the electoral roll of the House of Assembly and the Punjab Assembly. My proposal is that, as the non-agricultural tribes are over 50 per cent. in the Punjab, their population strength should be reflected on the electoral roll. This question was raised by me before the Indian Franchise Committee and the recommendations of that Committee are contained in paragraph 170, Vol. I, of their Report. The gist of their recommendations was that the proposals of the Punjab Government for the franchise would leave the non-agricultural tribes under represented. They realised that the Punjab Land Alienation Act conferred great advantages, both social and economic, on the members of agricultural tribes, and it would not be right to give them in addition the political predominance they would gain if they formed three-quarters of the electorate, which would be the case if the Punjab Government's scheme were accepted. They were in favour of removing the disparity between the representation of the agricultural and the non-agricultural tribes.

The question was raised by me at the third Round Table Conference and the Secretary of State's reply was sympathetic, but he maintained that the representation of the agricultural tribes would be 60 per cent. of the electorate and not 75 per cent. This estimate, I submit, is conjectural and, even if correct, leaves a big gap of 20 per cent. to be righted if the non-agricultural tribes are to get their proper representation.

31^o Julai, 1933.]

[Continued.]

I submit that the Punjab Government should be charged with the duty of removing any disparity that may exist in the representation of the two classes of agricultural and non-agricultural tribes on the electoral roll of the House of Assembly, by means of instructions contained in the Instrument of Instructions to the Governor.

The following qualifications, however, should be added to the proposals contained in the White Paper with regard to the franchise qualifications for the House of Assembly and the Punjab Assembly:—

House of Assembly. (See White Paper, page 99, re Punjab.)

1. In qualification (a), rupees 2,000 should be substituted in place of rupees 4,000 in the second line.

2 In qualification (b) the following should be added after the word "over"—

"and payment of the Hisiyat or Professional Tax at its minimum rate of rupees 2, or in districts in which no such tax exists, of any other direct tax imposed under the District Board tax and not below rupees 2."

Punjab Assembly.

3. The following should be added to qualification (d) in the qualifications of the electors in constituencies other than special constituencies:—

"ownership of immovable property not being property in land assessed to land revenue of a value of not less than rupees 2,000 in urban areas and of the value of rupees 1,000 in rural areas"

This recommendation was unanimously made by the Provincial Franchise Committee. The Punjab Government also took the view that it should be included. On my return to India after attending the third Round Table Conference, I approached the then Punjab Governor, Sir Geoffrey de Montmorency, and he was of opinion that this was an accidental omission. It does not stand to reason that those who already have the right to vote under the house property qualification should lose it under the new Constitution. Moreover, it is unjust that a person who owns a house of the value of rupees 4,000, or, say, even of rupees 50,000, should have no right of vote, while a person who pays a small amount of rent is enfranchised.

4. Another qualification should be added to confer the right of vote on persons who have deposited rupees 1,000 in Government-owned banks, or in postal certificates, or in Government securities, for a period of one year prior to the preparation of the electoral roll. This proposal would not add a very large number of people to the electoral roll, but it would be one method of enfranchising such people who wish to qualify for the vote. At the same time it would add to the financial stability of the State.

III. My third proposal refers to the arbitrary division of the constituencies into urban and rural on no principle whatsoever. In the Punjab, villages with a population of 7,500, or of 10,000, are described as urban. This delimitation is made with the object of pleasing the politically dominant members of the agricultural tribes. It is really a scheme of jerrymandering constituencies for the benefit of the members of agricultural tribes, who dominate the district boards and who want to exclude as large a number of the members of non-agricultural tribes as possible out of rural areas, though the members of the non-agricultural tribes also follow agricultural occupations or professions dependent upon agriculture. It must not be forgotten that there are very few large towns in the Punjab and excepting Lahore and Amritsar there are no industrial centres.

It is submitted that the district towns should form part of the rural constituencies. The rural areas find their full expression of public life in these towns. It is there that the District Boards and the Municipalities meet. It is wrong to cut off these places from the public and political life of the rural areas. The result is that candidates for election find it difficult to keep in touch with their constituents both in rural and urban areas. It is submitted, respectfully, that the Punjab should be treated in the same manner as the people in the United Provinces, for example, where towns of a large population only are included in urban areas.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

IV. The result of the Communal Award on the position of the Sikhs and the Hindus in the Punjab has been most disastrous. The Sikh community has been so stung by the injustice involved in the Communal Award that they have decided not to participate in the Joint Parliamentary proceedings and not to send any witnesses before them.

It is regretted that a community which made great sacrifices for the British in the dark days of the Mutiny in 1857 and during the recent Great War, should be kept in a sullen and resentful mood. It is admitted on all hands that the Sikhs are a brave people and the best organised, and that they will not quietly accept the Communal Award.

Similarly, the Hindus think that they have been most unjustly dealt with, and in spite of the fact that they challenged the power of the Congress in the 1926 elections and defeated the Congress candidates in all the constituencies but two, and always stood out for a policy of co-operation with the object of getting their communal grievances redressed, it is the Hindu minorities of the Punjab and Bengal that seem to have been picked out for punishment. It seems that they are, after all, to be placed as "hostages" in the hands of the Moslem community, because that community wanted them as "hostages" for the good behaviour of the Hindu majorities elsewhere.

The Hindus have, from the very day the Communal Award was announced, protested in every possible constitutional way. Any modification of the Communal Award on the conditions laid down by His Majesty's Government is impossible or hopeless. However, suggestions are made that—keeping in view the Communal Award and other circumstances of the case—if the British Government is not prepared in any way to accept the recommendations of the Simon Commission or the Indian Central Committee—recommendations which are more in consonance with fairness and justice than those given by the Communal Award—the following proposals might at least be accepted.

(a) In the Centre the Moslems demanded one-third of the seats. It is submitted, therefore, that they should get no more than one-third, directly or indirectly, and that their quota should not be increased above one-third by means of indirect methods such as through special constituencies.

(b) In the Punjab joint electorates should be introduced in some of the constituencies, which should work side by side with separate electorates in other constituencies. I will make my meaning more clear. Generally speaking, the central districts of the Punjab are more advanced than those of the Western or Eastern districts. Moreover, there is no very great disparity in the populations of the Moslems and non-Moslems in the central districts, therefore the system of joint electorates should be tried in these areas.

The opinion in favour of joint electorates is changing considerably, even in Moslem circles. People who at one time were not in favour of joint electorates are now coming round to the view that they are certainly a better solution than separate electorates. However, suspicion and distrust die hard. The Eastern districts being predominantly Hindu, and the Western districts predominantly Mohammedan, it will serve no useful purpose if joint electorates are introduced in these two parts, when the atmosphere throughout is surcharged with communal bitterness and hatred created by various circumstances, not the least among them being the Communal Award given by His Majesty's Government. Leaving these two parts of the Punjab aside for electing members through separate electorates, the Central districts may at least be used for the experiment of trying a modified system of joint electorates, with a reservation of seats for three communities, reserving separate electorates in this district only to the Sikh community, and, so long as the Poona Pact is in force, to the Depressed Classes.

The suggestion that joint electorates and separate electorates should work side by side was made by no less authorities than His Excellency Sir Malcolm Haley and Sir Geoffrey de Montmorency, retired Governor of the Punjab, in their official memorandum which they submitted to the Simon Commission. The suggestion is, therefore, not novel. It was made by me with regard to the Central districts before the Muddiman Committee in 1924-1925.

I hope and trust that in order to meet the changing moderate opinion in all the communities of the Punjab, the suggestion will be accepted and thus the rigour of separate electorates will be modified to a partial extent.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(c) I suggest further that in view of the grave dissatisfaction in India, and particularly in the Punjab, with the terms of the Communal Award, the Joint Select Committee should consider whether it would not be advisable to modify the conditions attaching to the revision of that Award. The life of one Assembly should surely be long enough to prove whether the Award in its present form is acceptable. I therefore submit that the period of operation of the present Award should be reduced from 10 to 5 years. Further, the condition attaching to the revision of the Award, that this should only take place by agreement between the communities concerned, needs modification. It should, I suggest, be altered so as to permit of the appointment of an Arbitration or Conciliation Commission at the instance of an All India Minorities Protection Board (see proposal 5, of this memorandum), or alternatively at the instance of the Governor-General, after consultation with the Governor of any Province or Provinces. Such a Commission should make recommendations concerning modification to the authorities.

ALL-INDIA MINORITIES PROTECTION BOARD.

V. My fifth proposal concerns the constitution of an All-India Minorities Protection Board. As the system of communal representation is going to be the marked feature of the new Constitution and, as the communal majorities are bound to assert their power over the minorities, it is essential that a central board for helping the Governors of the various Provinces and the Governor-General, should be constituted. The office of this central Board should be in Delhi. Two Hindus, one Mohammedan, one Sikh and one Christian or European should be appointed as members to look after the interests of the various communities. The members should elect their own president and make rules for the procedure of the Board. The members should be drawn, preferably, from public men. They should have the right to call for all necessary information from Government Departments. It should be the function of the Board to advise the Governors in discharging their special responsibilities for the protection of minorities. The constitution of such a Board will considerably help in creating confidence in the minds of minorities, that all minorities will be treated in a similar manner and no single minority will be picked out for special treatment. Unfortunately, an impression exists in the minds of the minorities, especially in the minds of the Hindu minority of the Punjab, that they are hostages in the hands of the majorities. The Governors of the Provinces have been burdened with many onerous duties. They are not expected to carry out their special responsibilities without the guidance and help of advisers. For this reason also the Board will serve a useful purpose. It is therefore requested that the matter be given full consideration and I am sure that the necessity of an advisory board or council on the lines I have suggested will be appreciated.

VI. The sixth proposal I wish to submit is with regard to the re-arrangement of the boundaries of the Punjab. The principle of the distribution of provinces on a religious or linguistic basis has been accepted in the case of both Sind and Orissa. The Punjab, it is submitted, is a province which is composed of areas and peoples who have no natural affinity. The east differs from the west in language, customs, manners, and religion. The Central Punjab, consisting of the Jullandhar and the Lahore divisions, equally differs from the Western Punjab. The suggestion for the reorganisation of the boundaries of the various provinces was first made by the Simon Commission (see Simon Report, vol 2, pp. 15, 16 and 26). Without making any definite suggestion as to the manner in which the boundaries of the Punjab should be demarcated, I very strongly support the proposal of the Simon Commission with regard to the early appointment of a Commission with a neutral Chairman to go into this most important and vital question.

THE POLICE

VII. My seventh proposal refers to the transfer of the Police into popular hands. It is regrettable that the Punjab Hindu's position in this matter is misunderstood. It was never the desire of the Punjab Hindus that the Police should remain a reserved subject. While giving evidence before the Simon Commission, the Punjab Hindu's position was made quite clear by me, for, I pointed out that law and order should be transferred to the Central Government, which in its turn should be fully responsible to the Indian people.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

In stating the position of my community before the Third Round Table Conference, I emphasised that the Police should be transferred, but with this proviso—that there should be a statutory committee consisting of a Hindu, a Mohammedan and a Sikh to help the Minister in the discharge of his responsibilities for law and order. I still insist upon this statutory committee, to which a European might be added, if necessary. I am convinced that the special circumstances of the Punjab require that the Police should be transferred, and should not be kept a reserved department, and that a committee of the nature suggested by me would prove of great use and helpfulness to the Minister.

RECRUITMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICES.

VIII. My eighth proposal is with regard to the recruitment of the Public Services. I maintain that positions of trust and responsibility should always be filled on the basis of efficiency and merit alone; that communal, racial, or caste considerations lower the efficiency of the services and corrupt public life. The recruitment of public services on communal grounds began long before the reforms. Under the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms impetus was given to this tendency of filling public posts of trust and responsibility on communal grounds. The result was that efficiency suffered, communal bias invaded the Services, and corruption increased. I do not see how this thing can be remedied by introducing more British element, on racial grounds alone, into the Public Services of the country.

I maintain very strongly that if a Public Services Commission is constituted, and posts of trust and responsibility—of which a schedule should be prepared—are filled on the basis of merit alone, the tone of the Services would rise very high.

It is submitted, therefore, for the consideration of the Joint Parliamentary Committee, that the All-India Public Services Commission should be retained, and Provincial Services Commissions should be brought into existence at once. The Services Commissions should be definitely charged with the duty of filling posts by open tests, whereby candidates, without any consideration of caste, creed, or colour, should be permitted to compete and thus take their due share in the administration of the Government. No amount of recruitment of British-born subjects for these posts would stem the tide of communal or racial bias, which is bound to increase if the suggestion made by me is not adopted.

It is submitted, therefore, that the Public Services Commission be asked to prepare a schedule of all those services which can be termed posts of trust and responsibility. In any case the security services—Police, District Magistrates and Executive Officers and Judiciary—should be recruited on no other basis but that of fitness, efficiency and merit. It is of the highest importance that the public confidence in the administration and the judiciary should be restored and strengthened.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

IX. The ninth proposal relates to the constitution of the House of Assembly. It is submitted that the number proposed in the White Paper for the constitution of the Central Legislative is small. It should not be less than 600. The larger constituencies which would have to be formed if the number is kept small will not be easily manageable, either by the candidates, or the representatives of the people in the House of Assembly. If Britain with a small population and a small area finds it necessary to have over six hundred members in its Parliament, why should not India, with a larger population and a larger area, have a membership of 600? The Simon Report fixes the number of the Federal Assembly at 460. The proposal which I am submitting will fix the number at 400 members for British India and 200 members for the States.

THE HIGH COURTS OF INDIA.

X. Tenthly, I propose that the High Courts in India should be central subjects. They should not be under provincial control. This recommendation was made by the Statutory Commission (see paras. 341-349, Vol. 11, of their Report). The Nehru Report also makes a similar suggestion. On page 207 of the proceedings of the third Round Table Conference, Sir M. Gwyer and Sir Claude Schuster have given, under para. 19, very weighty reasons—with which I entirely agree—for the necessity of placing the High Courts under central control.

The Highest Appellate Court should be kept as free as possible from communal pressure. The judges and their decisions should not be made the subjects of virulent debates in the Provincial Council on any occasion. A common enough method adopted by some members of the Punjab Council is to propose cuts in the expenditure of the High Courts and then bring High Court matters into debate and discussion. Such action has been taken by some persons on account of private motives.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

It is the duty of all persons interested in the impartiality of the Courts to see that the confidence of the public in the highest tribunals of justice in the provinces should not be undermined. Therefore, it is essential that the recommendations of the Simon Commission on this point be adopted in the new Constitution.

The limit of the age of retirement of the High Court Judges should be raised to 65.

MARTIAL AND NON-MARTIAL RACES AND INDIAN DEFENCE.

XI. It is absolutely essential that if self government is to be real and effective, the Indians must have control over their military and defence forces. A beginning, therefore, must be made at once.

The following suggestions are put forward for consideration.—

(1) The arbitrary distinction between martial and non-martial races should be abolished at once. This question was brought up by Sir Henry Gidney before the Third Round Table Conference. It was supported by Dr. Ambedkar, the representative of the Depressed Classes. It met with full support from all quarters of the House. The Secretary of State was pleased to accept that suggestion, and a promise was held out that in future individual fitness and efficiency alone will be taken into consideration in filling the ranks of the Army. The White Paper makes no mention of this proposal. It is submitted that in the instrument of instructions the recruiting authorities should be definitely charged with the duty of opening up the ranks to all the citizens of India, provided they conform to the tests laid down for recruitment.

(2) The scheme of Indianising the Army should be speeded up. I support the suggestions made by various important Indian members on this point.

(3) I desire that an Advisory Military Council should be instituted. The Council should be predominantly Indian and members selected from the two Houses of the Central Legislature should have seats on this Council. The number on the Council may be fixed after full investigation. The budget and proposals with regard to military and defence matters should be fully and fairly discussed before this Council. The decisions of this Council will not be binding on the Governor-General, but the Council will help the Indians to understand the difficult and intricate defence problems. I hope this suggestion will meet with the approval of the British Parliament.

(4) A National Army is an absolute necessity, and the composition of the various units, companies and regiments on a caste and religious basis should not be maintained. This leads to unnecessary emphasis being given to caste, and tribal differences. The Army was organised on a more national and democratic basis in the beginning of the British rule, and I respectfully suggest that the same procedure should be adopted.

THE POSITION OF THE PUNJAB HINDUS EXPLAINED WITH REGARD TO SELF GOVERNMENT.

I am afraid that the position of the Punjab Hindus has not been correctly appreciated. It has been wrongly thought that they were opposed to full responsible Government. This, I very respectfully submit, is not correct. I had the honour of leading the Hindu deputation before Sir John Simon, when it was made absolutely clear that the Hindus of the Punjab want full Dominion status for the country, but they were opposed to the system of separate electorates, as it was considered by them to be non-democratic and non-national. They believed that instead of encouraging a spirit of goodwill and trust, the system of separate electorates stereotyped communal distinctions, created undue bitterness, and was responsible for the increase of communal bias in various spheres of public activity. On that ground, and that ground alone, it was submitted that they would have no advance at all, rather than that advance be made on communal and sectional lines.

Unfortunately, the position taken up by the Punjab Hindus has not been appreciated, and the advance is now to be on definitely communal and religious lines. The Hindus of the Punjab have not changed the views they expressed before Sir John Simon, but this does not mean, and it can never mean, that in the opinion of the Punjab Hindus the country is not animated by a spirit and desire for advancement to the full.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

On the other hand, we maintain that all sections of the community, whether Hindus, Mohammedans or Sikhs, all peoples, whether living in the rural or urban areas, are eager for freedom and full responsible government. Various causes, into which I need not go, have stimulated the desire of the people for achieving national unity and national freedom. This national unity cannot be achieved by means of separate, sectional and caste differences, which have now been stereotyped on account of statutory sanction being given to them. Yet the spirit of freedom is abroad, and it cannot be crushed.

The organisation of the various communities in India, even on religious and communal grounds, has helped to create a spirit of restlessness, which is no less than a desire for advance. The people of India are not satisfied with the very moderate demands ceded to them under the White Paper. In the opinion of most of the people the White Paper gives with one hand and takes away what it has given with the other. This view of the situation may or may not be correct, but there is not the least doubt that this feeling does exist, even in the most moderate but influential circles of all the communities.

The White Paper, in order to meet the growing national consciousness and the desire for freedom, should be made more liberal. The impression that seems to be prevailing in England, that the National Congress is dead, or that the Civil Disobedience movement has been laid low for all time, is entirely wrong.

Similar impressions prevailed in this country after the martial law of 1919 in the Punjab. But the spirit of the Indian people, now awakened, can never be crushed. The best way and the only way to keep India and England together is to concede to the Indians their demands for self government to the full. This is the only way for peace in India. No other way can lead to the happiness and welfare of the people of the two countries—Great Britain and India—which is desired without exception by all reasonable men.

The scheme of the All India Federation, with central responsibility, holds the field in India, and it should hold the field in England. The efforts of all the British political parties should be directed to make the scheme more liberal, more fair, and more just, but under no circumstances should the name of the Hindus of the Punjab be used for the purpose of blocking Indian advancement towards full responsible government. A statement of that kind is not a true interpretation of their feelings, and is not a correct statement of their case. Even now, if a scheme of advancement on national lines—totally abolishing distinctions of caste and creed, religion or race—is produced, and the legislatures, District Boards, Municipalities and Services are freed from the communal poison, and statutory sanction is not given to their sectional distinctions, the Hindus of the Punjab, though in a minority, will gladly accept such a scheme. They will ask for no safeguards, or guarantees, for they know that a policy of mutual trust and goodwill is the only right policy. India now cannot be ruled any longer in the old way and on the old lines.

MEMORANDUM 69. THE NEW CONSTITUTION AND COMMUNAL ELECTORATES. SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM BY PANDIT NANAK CHAND, M.L.C.

SUMMARY.

I.—The present position.

The history of Communal Electorates in India—their recognised unsuitability for self-government—the views of leading authorities on the subject.

II.—Evil effects of Communal Representation as seen since the Minto-Morley Reforms.

(a) In the Legislative Council and the Municipalities.

(b) In the Services (including the Courts of Justice).

31^o July, 1933]

[Continued.]

- (c) In education.
- (d) In taxation.
- (e) In treatment of the Depressed Classes.

III.—The effect the Communal Award will have upon public life.

Communal tension will be increased—Britain's responsibility—unjust treatment of the Hindus—reason for this—the separation of Sind.

IV.—External dangers arising from the Award.

The Imperial, military and strategical importance of the Frontier Provinces—recent frontier troubles, Afghan Invasion, 1919, Afridi Tribes, Hijrat Movements, 1921 and 1922, Ahrar—the proposal for a Pakestan—Lord Hardinge's advice, 1846—the dangers of communal passions during elections.

V.—The Award must be revised.

Communalism should be abolished—equality of security must be established between the Hindu and Moslem communities—recommendations of the Simon Commission must not be thrust aside—equality of treatment for minorities must be granted—a Committee of Enquiry into minority treatment should be set up—equality of civic rights should be established.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION AND COMMUNAL ELECTORATES

The new constitution is to be based on communal electorates under the Communal Award. That is to say, the Legislatures of the country are to be divided into water-tight compartments so far as the various religious communities living in India are concerned. In other words, it will be impossible for a Hindu to vote for a Sikh or a Moslem, for a Moslem to vote for a Hindu or a Sikh, or for a Sikh to vote for a Hindu or a Mohammedan. Similarly, Christians and Anglo-Indians will have separate electorates.

Such a system of electorates is not likely to lead to the growth of public spirit, or to harmony between the communities. As a matter of fact, communal electorates have been universally condemned. They were introduced for the first time under the Minto-Morley Reforms, but at that time nobody was thinking of responsible self-government for India. Indeed, Lord Morley took great care to make this clear in his public statements. The learned authors of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report condemned this system of government. They said.—

“The communal electorates perpetuate class divisions and stereotype existing relations, and they constitute a very serious hindrance to the development of the self-governing principle.”

The Statutory Commission which investigated the constitutional question also fully realised the danger of communal separate electorates. The Prime Minister himself spoke in no uncertain terms about the injurious character of the system —

“The evil of communal electorates (he said) has assumed its most dangerous form and proportion in India, where different communities are out to claim that the Legislature is to represent not regions but religions.”

Communal electorates were a concession to please the Moslems. Under the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms the system has had a long trial, and so far as the Punjab province is concerned the ill effects of this system of government are writ large upon the history of the last 12 years.

EVIL EFFECTS OF COMMUNAL REPRESENTATION.

The communal electorates have poisoned the public life of the Punjab, and have been productive of great bitterness between the various communities living in the province. The majority community have not failed to take undue advantage of the power which came to them under the system of government based upon these communal electorates. Communalism has entered every sphere of public life, and has marred the usefulness of such public bodies as the Legislatures, municipalities, the Services, and schools and colleges. A careful study of the debates of the Punjab Legislative Council would show how almost every important question has been discussed and debated from the purely communal standpoint. The majority of the questions which have been put to the ministers and government officials have been inspired by communal motives. No secret is made by the members of the Council of their communal prejudices.

It is natural that at the time of the elections the various candidates representing, not the people at large, but only the various communities, should hold out promises to the electors for securing to their own community unfair concessions and advantages. Communal newspapers and communal leaders have come to the forefront, and have helped to fan the flames of communal bigotry and jealousy. Riots have increased. Attempts have been made to crush religious freedom and liberty by illegal means. In many cases, to secure advantages in the municipalities, communal considerations have prevailed. In most of the municipalities communal electorates have been introduced, but where the majority community would have helped the minority by introducing separate electorates, they have been refused. In the District Boards separate Communal electorates have not been introduced as they would have helped the minorities as against the majority, so far as representation on the District Board was concerned.

31^o July, 1933]

[Continued.]

Services.

Even in the Services, which are the mainstay of our administration, and where one would expect that the right men would be chosen irrespective of religion, caste or race, posts are given on the basis of religion or caste. Authoritative declarations were made by a high Government official in the Legislative Council of the Punjab that, in the Services, communal percentages could not be fixed, but actually the Punjab Government has forced various departments to recognise the principle of filling posts on a communal basis. Even such high and august posts as judgeships of the High Court are demanded and filled on the communal basis. The efficiency of the judiciary, which has been the foundation of the popularity of British Rule in India, is being undermined by introducing the communal spirit into it, and this has been responsible for the invasion of communal bias in the decisions of judicial cases.

It is clearly recognised in the case of subordinate judgeships that communal bias has increased.

In the services, not only communal but caste considerations prevail with the Government for the filling of posts; and the Punjab Land Alienation Act has also been made the basis of filling public posts.

It is, therefore, only natural that corruption should increase and efficiency be lowered, and whenever attempts are made to bring offenders to book, the plea put forward is usually on the lines of a communal defence.

The doors of the Services have largely been barred against Hindu youth merely because they happen to belong to a minority community.

Educational Interests.

Attempts have even been made (in some cases unfortunately with success) to introduce the communal poison into schools and colleges. Admissions to the educational institutions are being regulated on a communal, and in many cases, a caste basis. In the Punjab the Hindus and the Sikhs find it extremely difficult to get their own languages or scripts recognised as official languages, and as a medium of instruction in the schools and university curricula. In fact, in many districts in the Punjab, schools have had to be closed down because the District Boards would not give grants in aid of the Sikh educational institutions.

It has been very difficult for the Hindus and the Sikhs to understand why their languages and scripts should not receive similar treatment to that granted to Urdu in the neighbouring province of the U.P.

Taxation

Discriminatory treatment in the levying of punitive taxes is another glaring instance of this communal bias. In the town of Bajwara, in the Hoshiapur district of the Punjab, the Hindu and Sikh families were forced to pay a punitive tax while none of the Moslems were taxed, because the Deputy-Commissioner belonged to the majority community.

Depressed Classes.

The efforts of the non-Moslem communities to raise the status of the Depressed Classes has been resisted by the majority community with a determination which is difficult to understand.

Thus we find that under this travesty of democratic government the life of the country is already being slowly and systematically poisoned, and under the Communal Award the process will receive tremendous impetus.

THE EFFECT OF THE COMMUNAL AWARD UPON PUBLIC LIFE.

Though the results of recognising communalism as a basis of government have been so disastrous, it still does not seem to have suggested itself seriously to the framers of the new Constitution that the time has come for communal policy to be totally abandoned. Rather, under the Award, communalism has been given a recognition which it is difficult to see will at any time be abandoned.

31^o Juhl, 1933.]

[Continued.]

I submit, very respectfully, that the Award is extremely one-sided and unjust, and is likely to create even more bitterness between the various communities than exists at the present time. It will become a matter of extreme difficulty to run a Government smoothly. There is bound to be a perpetual struggle for undue favours and concessions, and troubles are inevitable.

The responsibility for introducing a government of this nature lies at the door of the British authorities. It cannot possibly be attributed to any others. As the Paramount Power, responsible for the peace and tranquillity of the country, it is of primary importance to Britain's reputation that the course taken should be a right one.

Injustices to the Hindu Community.

Looked at from the purely communal point of view, the Hindus have been most unjustly treated.

(a) The Hindus, who represent about 75 per cent of the whole of British India, have been reduced to a minority of 45 per cent. in the Central Legislature.

(b) In the Provinces of Bengal and the Punjab, where, as minorities they were entitled—on the formula propounded for the benefit of the Moslem minorities—to a weightage, they have not been given representation even on a population basis.

(c) The investigations made by the Simon Commission and their subsequent recommendations have been arbitrarily thrust aside. In so far as the Punjab is concerned, the Communal Award gives to the Moslems much more than was demanded by them in the Punjab Provincial Committee. In a House of 165 members they wanted one more seat than all the other communities combined, whereas in the Communal Award they are given about 52 per cent. of the seats.

The Punjab Hindus, who throughout have co-operated with the Government and have fought elections against the Congress candidates and defeated them in order to get their grievances redressed, have been placed as "hostages" in the hands of the majority community, and as if this were not sufficient, the Sind, in spite of its financial bankruptcy, is to be carved into a new Moslem province to satisfy Moslem demands.

EXTERNAL DANGERS ARISING FROM THE AWARD.

It is very difficult to understand why grave Imperial, military and strategical considerations have not been taken into account when making the Communal Award. It must be apparent to every student of the subject that whenever the Communal Award is made the basis of a new Government, and the separation of the Sind is accepted, there will be on the frontiers three important strategic provinces, namely, the North-West Frontier, the Punjab and Sind.

A strong Moslem Government based upon communal electorates will be established in each of these. But it is forgotten that beyond the Punjab there are independent Moslem States such as Afghanistan and Persia, and that close to the borders of the North-West Frontier there are independent tribesmen always armed to the teeth and periodically making raids on the frontier. It is forgotten that only in 1919 the Afghans invaded India. It is forgotten that the Afridi Tribes have been giving constant trouble to the British authorities. It is forgotten that there was serious trouble due to the religious Hijrat Movements in 1921 and 1922. It is forgotten that the Ahrar Movement is still active in the Punjab, and has created trouble in Kashmir quite recently. It is forgotten that some of the Moslem leaders are dreaming of establishing a "Pakestan" (that is, "a land of the pure" as opposed to "a land of the infidels") in these frontier provinces.

So long ago as 1846, Lord Hardinge, the then Governor-General of India, issued the following warning with regard to the Punjab and the North-West Frontier —

"I am satisfied that the Mussulman population will be generally ready to make common cause against the British power, whenever any Afghan or Persian intrigues may afford the opportunity. This restless feeling was felt in the Deccan—and to allow a Mohammedan Power to occupy the Doabs between the Khyber Pass and the Sutlej would excite and revive Mussulman hopes throughout India. It is not desirable anywhere within our Indian Empire, but to permit it again to rear its head on our most vulnerable frontier, and in contact with the Mussulmans of Central Asia, would be a perpetual source of anxiety to the Government. If this be so, the Government of the Punjab must either be Hindu or British."

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Again.

"This entrance (the Khyber Pass) into India has always been the high road taken by every invader. A Hindu Government acting as our advance guard had for thirty years barred this entrance against all intruders. The very existence of such a nation depended upon its success in subduing the Afghan and Mussulman population. A Hindu government under Runjeet Singh fulfilled all these conditions without any expense or anxiety to us. The Punjab was so hemmed in by natural boundaries that it could never materially extend its power in any direction by conquest. Having conquered its Mussulman enemies, it had a natural and mutual interest with the British Government in resisting all foreign aggression from Central Asia, and so long as a Hindu people could hold the Five Rivers, it appeared to me the arrangement best calculated to secure the interests of both Governments."

One can easily imagine the condition of these provinces which are in close touch with the frontiers, and what the feelings of the majority community will be when elections take place, and communal passions are roused by newspapers, political agitators, and the candidates interested in securing election to the various local bodies and the Legislatures.

It is not a policy of wisdom and foresight to establish strong Moslem States in these provinces. If the Moslems are to be given weightage in other provinces, it naturally follows that they should give the same concessions to the Hindu and other minorities in these provinces, especially when these minorities are living close to the frontiers of India and are in perpetual danger of attack from outside.

THE AWARD MUST BE REVISED.

It is, therefore, essential that the Communal Award should be revised before any attempt is made to implement the new Constitution.

(a) The Government should abolish communalism as a basis of government throughout India.

(b) In any case it should, in fairness to the Hindu minorities living in these Provinces, offer equal security to that which is proposed for Moslems in Provinces where they are in a minority. If the Hindu representation in the Central Legislatures can be cut down from 75 per cent. to 45 per cent., there seems to be no reason at all why in the Punjab the Moslem should not be content with 45 per cent. of the seats in the Legislature while their population is only 56 per cent.

(c) The recommendations of the Simon Commission must not be ruthlessly set aside. The unanimous verdict of the three great political parties in Great Britain is entitled to greater weight and respect.

(d) It is submitted that, in so far as the Communal Award is concerned, a uniform formula should be sought, and applied without variation throughout India, treating all minorities with equality. If the Moslems are entitled to receive excessive representation in the Legislature and local bodies of the U.P., why should not the same concessions be made to the Hindu minority in respect of the Legislatures and local bodies throughout the Punjab, Bengal, the North West Frontier, and in Sind—if the latter is to be set up as a new Province.

(e) With regard to Services in the Punjab, minorities should receive the same treatment as the Moslem minorities in the U.P.

(f) A Committee of Enquiry should be set up at once by the Joint Parliamentary Committee to consider the question of the treatment of the minorities in the various provinces during the last twelve years. It is submitted, with all respect, that such an investigation can only result in the recognition of a uniform method of treatment to be applied to all minorities alike.

(g) Before any system of democratic government is established, it is essential for the peace of India and the good name of the Government, that all His Majesty's subjects in British India should enjoy equality in so far as civic rights are concerned. The Punjab Legislative Council should be charged with the task of changing the discriminatory character of the Punjab Land Alienation Act, and money-lenders belonging to the Agricultural tribes should be placed in the same category as those belonging to the non-Agricultural tribes; and the cultivators and agriculturalists of all castes should receive similar treatment. There should be uniform rule for all.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Justice and fair play must be made the bases of the new Government, with such equality established between the communities that none has reason to complain. Only so can the new Constitution bring justice and peace to India's peoples.

MEMORANDUM 61—BY B. C. CHATTERJEE.

I.

In the chequered history of British imperialism, a singular but sinister event is taking place in an Indian province which is worth more than a passing notice on the part of the British people. Great Britain appears to be proceeding to uncreate with her own hands what may be considered the most distinctive achievement of her Indian administration. I am referring to the Prime Minister's Communal Award and his subsequent incorporation of the Poona Pact therein—twin events which threaten ruthlessly to blot out the future of the Bengalee Hindu race. The fact hardly needs stressing that the outflowing of the Bengalee Hindu's genius and the upbuilding of Bengal's new civilisation and culture has been the outstanding phenomenon of British India. Bengal has a past history not devoid of interest; she developed a splendid literature before the British era; her sons were forward of all Buddhist missionaries to go and spread Gautoma's faith over Tibet, China and Japan; and it was a Bengalee Prince who conquered Ceylon. But nothing done by Bengal in the precedent epochs is comparable to the reality and the results of her renaissance during the British period. From the days of Raja Ram Mohan Roy to those of Rabin-dranath Tagore, the Hindu community of Bengal has given birth to a continuous stream of thinkers, singers, jurists, scientists, artists, authors, reformers, philanthropists, patriots, orators, of whom any country would have reason to be proud. And this bursting of Bengalee life into flower in its different branches could without difficulty be traced, firstly, to the fact that the British have throughout been able to give Bengal the stability of law and order, and secondly, to the quick and sensitive response of the Bengalee Hindu mind to the stimulus of what may be termed the British Enlightenment—the call of science, the inspiration of the immortalities of English literature, and of that romantic unfolding of the human drama which is British history. It is quite obvious that if England were held, here and now, to an account of what she has done in India—not merely in the matter of slitting open a few deserts with canals and turning them into smiling gardens—but by way of developing India's human material, she would have to fall to recounting what has happened in Bengal during the period of her stewardship of India. She would have to refer to Ram Mohon Roy, Bankim Chandra Chatterjee and Rabin-dranath Tagore, Keshub Chandra Sen and Surendranath Banerjea, Jagadish Chandra Bose, Profulla Chandra Roy and the modern school of Bengal scientists with its immense promise of growth. England could hardly point to the Rajput, Sikh or Marhatta as shining examples of her work in India, for they had been very much there before her advent, and have hardly (with one exception) since cultivated her science or letters. Gandhi is not a British product, but is rather the embodiment of an Eastern protest against the very spirit of Western culture.

And yet, by one of those ironies of fate that strew the pathway of history, England is taking up the role of filicide towards Hindu Bengal. She is behaving as the unconscious mother smothering her own child by turning on the wrong side in her dream. In her new dream of Empire, England appears to be unconsciously turning on the wrong side to crush the Bengalee Hindu out of existence. By his last Communal Award the British Premier has given the general body of Hindus in Bengal 80 seats in the coming provincial Parliament as against 119 seats awarded by him therein to Bengalee Moslems. The prevalent opinion in England that the Hindus of Bengal have accepted that Award does the latter grievous injustice, and is charged with the potentiality of much trouble in prospect. British statesmen were heard to say in the years 1905 and 1906 that the Partition of Bengal was a settled fact, and that Bengal had accepted it. That was a half-truth, too, pregnant with explosive possibilities. Like the Premier's Award, it was accepted by the Moslems of Bengal who stood to gain by it, but the Bengalee Hindus opposed it to a man, and it took England's Ministers 7 years of bitter agitation and trouble to make sure of the fact, and then to undo the Partition by invoking the personal aid of no lesser a personage than His Majesty the King.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Tragedy stalks Bengal once again in the guise of the Award. The Partition spelled trouble for the handfuls of Hindus in Eastern Bengal; the Award threatens the Bengalee Hindu's very existence. It treats the two centuries that have rolled by since the battle of Plassey as an irrelevant interlude, and seeks to confer the sovereignty of Bengal once again on the very Moslems from whose ancestors Great Britain had wrested it in 1757. It is beyond all cavil or question that under the prospective Constitution the Moslems of Bengal would form the biggest majority party in the Provincial Council, and that the Governor would in consequence have to send for the leader of that party to form his Government. (This would be so even on the supposition that the Hindus captured the majority of the special seats created by the Award.) In view of the fact that our Moslem brothers in Bengal have steadily refused our offer of a joint electorate in any shape or form, we may legitimately conclude that the leader of the Moslem party so sent for by the Governor would form his Cabinet on communal lines (except it be that he might have on it a representative of the so-called Depressed Classes who would be utterly dependent on him). We may also confidently anticipate that a Government so summoned into being will bring on legislation of a grossly communal type, if we are to judge of matters in the light of the action of the local bodies with Moslem majorities in Bengal which have deliberately discontinued grants to Hindu institutions, and denied Hindus the amenities which they have extended to Moslems living in the same area with a cheerful readiness. The Government of Bengal could furnish a thousand and one instances of such local misgovernment, if called upon. There is not the smallest reason to suppose that Bengalee Moslems will undergo a deep change, and pass into something rich and strange, on being invested with sovereign power in Bengal. All the indications are, to the contrary, even those afforded by the zeal and enthusiasm of the present lot of Moslem M. L. C's, which is all in the cause of legislative and administrative action in the special interest of the Moslem community.

The fact stares us in the face that it is the Hindus—and pre-eminently the Bengalee Hindus—who have worked for and won the grant of free institutions to India. Throughout the last half-century of political struggle and striving our Moslem brethren of Bengal have held their hands off, and not even taken the interest therein of being lookers-on. To drive us under subjection to them is deliberately to look for trouble. All the more so, when it is a moral certainty that the Moslem majority in Bengal is going to be communal, and not patriotic. While the Hindus have throughout demanded rights and privileges on behalf of all Indians, Hindu and Moslems, the Moslems of India have not been able to formulate a single claim since the introduction of the Reforms which was not strictly limited to their community. And the mentality underlying their demand is so inverted, so subversive of all that one understands by the word "patriotic." When Hindus made the demand in the past years for entry into the higher services of India, and were told that they could only do so on the basis of an open competition with the Britishers, they accepted the suggestion with alacrity, and sent their sons to England to acquire the necessary education to compete with the British entrants for the services under notice, and the world knows the result that followed. One wonders if Great Britain would at all have entertained our claim to self-rule if our young men had not proved themselves to be in a state of moral and intellectual parity with British youths under conditions of a fair field and no favour. But what say our Moslem fellow-men? They want to get into the higher directive services of India, not on the basis of competition, but on that of nomination! What would Great Britain say to Scotland if her statesmen were to insist on Scottish youths being nominated into the Home Civil Service on the ground of their inability to compete with England's young men? Such a contingency is impossible because every Britisher puts his country before sect, creed, or other individual considerations. And unless and until the Moslem of Bengal has learned to do so—and he is far, far from it—how is Great Britain going to hand over the destinies of the Bengalee Hindu to his keeping? The first and the last quality we expect, and have been taught and encouraged to expect, from the Britisher is justice. And why should that great and blessed quality be absent from a political award made by the Prime Minister of Great Britain in so far as it affects the Hindus of Bengal?

31° Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

It is not so long ago that the present writer made an appeal to the Moslem members of the Bengal Legislative Council across the floor of the House, with the consent of the Hindu members, to agree to come into the new Council on the basis of a joint electorate. That would ensure their coming into the Council with a Moslem majority, too; but the Hindus were and are, agreeable thereto, inasmuch as a joint electorate is the only conceivable basis of democracy, and further, as the Hindu voters would in such event be able to hold the Moslem members returned on their votes to an accounting for their doings in the Council. A chilly silence was all the reply to that offer. We, Bengalee Hindus, have done our utmost to convert Bengalee Moslems to nationalism, but the latter have refused to be so converted up to date. The British Premier's Award has since ratified that refusal. And that Premier is none other than the Ramsay MacDonald who has all along been the friend of Bengal Hindus, and to whom the latter have throughout owed and rendered something of a spiritual allegiance! And what sort of a future is he committing us to? I refrain from drawing a picture of it to avoid exacerbation of feeling. But I echo the real feeling of the Bengalee Hindu in stating that he would prefer some kindly plan of immediate extinction to that slow poisoning of the body politic in Bengal which must result from the Award. It cuts asunder all the threads of the past political growth and tradition of British-India so unaccountably. In the last agreed political settlement reached by the Hindu and Moslem representatives of all India at Lucknow in 1916, Bengal's Hindus were given ~~sixty~~ seats as against 40 seats allotted to Bengal's Moslems on the Provincial Legislative Council. The last Government of India Act incorporated this arrangement. The Simon Commission indicated in the clearest words that this proportion would be kept up by the British Government in the absence of any fresh agreement between the parties concerned, or in the event of Bengalee Moslems not agreeing to have a joint electorate. Bengalee Hindus took that to be a serious and authoritative pronouncement. They had every reason to. What was ethically right only a few years back cannot have turned itself into a wrong in the interval. Such quick-change political artistry, surely, cannot be the foundation of an imperial settlement between Great Britain and India.

The retort will probably be forthcoming that Bengal has so misbehaved herself in the interval, as far as her Hindu population is concerned, that the anarchical movement, still on foot, and led by Hindu boys and girls, has so blackened the Bengalee Hindu's record, that his community has thoroughly deserved the treatment meted out to it by the Premier's Award. But is it justice, or is it not against all the accepted tenets of British justice, to punish a whole community to the point of wiping out its political future, for the sins of a bare handful of its irresponsible youths? Burke's refusal to draw up an indictment against a whole people has lost none of its validity. All the articulate classes in Bengal—Co-operators and Non-co-operators alike—have with one voice condemned the anarchical movement in Bengal. That these denunciations have not been in the nature of pious professions, but been sincerely meant, is proved by the fact that the young revolutionaries have all along found themselves driven to commit acts of brigandage with a view to securing the wherewithal for carrying on their propaganda and their work. No Bengalee worth the name has aided the movement with a penny. One hears a talk, now and then, of there being brains behind the movement. It is quite natural for the casual observer to say so. But those who really know the movement will willingly testify that it is the work of Bengalee youths of between 16 and 22 years old. Older people are not trusted as being liable to fits of cowardice. We have the further definite fact that the incarceration of Messrs Subhas Bose and J. M. Sen Gupta who were considered to be the brains of the party did not in the least interfere with its continuance and activities. What does seem to have crippled the movement for what may be considered an appreciable interval of time is the Government steady pursuit of the policy of interneg every suspect. And let us also not lose hold of the circumstance that on a liberal estimate the number of these youths would not exceed 1,000-1,500 in a population of about 22 millions. The latter know nothing of how and where the revolutionaries carry on. I personally know of many distressed parents—who would no more countenance a revolutionary movement than undertake a flight to the moon—having been surprised out of their breath on hearing reports of their boys or girls having bombed or shot somebody. The secrecy pursued and preserved by the revolutionaries has mystified the nation, and not unoften baffled the police. There it is, and could Great Britain be heard to say to the whole Bengalee Hindu community “you are going to be punished for what you are not responsible”?

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

II.

And to add to our distress, Mr Gandhi gives away 30 out of the above-mentioned 80 seats on the Bengal Legislative Council to the so-called depressed classes in Bengal, and the Premier promptly promulgates his acceptance of this act of Gandhian charity! The most curious feature of the Poona Conference was that the high-caste representatives were summoned to it from all the Provinces but Bengal from where its conveners were pleased to invite a solitary Namasudra, one Mr. Rasik Biswas claiming to represent no more than a mere section of the Namasudras of Bengal, who constitute, according to the schedule published by the Bengal Government, one out of the 86 Bengalee depressed classes. The essential point of the note appended to the Premier's Communal Award was that it could be supplanted in whole or in part by an agreed settlement among the parties concerned. The Poona Pact was far from being an agreed settlement as far as it concerned Bengal, 99 per cent. of the castes and sub-castes making up the Bengalee Hindu community not having been represented at its genesis, and rather having been ostentatiously excluded therefrom. How can we, and why must we, Hindus of Bengal, be held to the terms of this Pact in the circumstances? It has already bred bitter discontent throughout the Province by reason of its inherent injustice and unfairness. The Lothian Committee which held a penetrating investigation into the whole question at first hand came rightly to the conclusion that the problem of depressed class representation does not exist in Bengal as it does in the other Provinces. All Bengalee Hindus—irrespective of questions of caste or sub-caste—draw water from, or bathe in, the same well or tank without let or hindrance, all the Hindu boys and girls of the Province go to the same schools and colleges, and enjoy an equal status therein, Bengalee Hindus of each and every caste fill public offices and the professions on the footing of an absolute equality. From the political standpoint, one would be justified in saying that there is no such body as the depressed class in Bengal at all. There is not a single public right or privilege from which a single so-called depressed class Bengalee is debarred by reason of his birth. The aforementioned Mr. Biswas (who came to give evidence before the Lothian Committee), when challenged by the present writer to point out a single instance of denial of a political right or privilege to his caste-people on the score of their being Namasudras, could do no better than complain that they could not marry the daughters of high-caste Bengalee Hindus! There are of course, social inequalities in Bengal, as everywhere else, the differences manifesting themselves in that Province in the circumstance that the whole community of Bengalee Hindus is divided up into over a hundred castes (with the Brahman at the apex) whose members may only inter-marry or “inter-dine” within the limits of their respective castes. The prohibition against inter-dining (as the expression goes in India) between castes is, however, breaking down amongst the educated, i.e., the politically minded classes. During the last session of the Council, the present writer invited the Hindu, Moslem and European M.L.C.'s of Bengal to meet the Mehter (the last on the social ladder) member of the Legislative Council at tea in the Council Restaurant, and the remarkable feature of the gathering was that all the high-caste Hindu M.L.C.'s made a point of being present, and that they fraternised as intimately with the Mehter M.L.C. as the Europeans and some of the Moslems did. Not the least interesting fact to relate is that a number of the so-called depressed class M.L.C.'s made themselves scarce for fear of losing caste! The essential fact to bear in mind about Bengal is that the high caste Bengalee, even of the orthodox type, leaves his orthodoxy aside in deciding on matters of cultural or national importance. His religious notions which prevent him from sitting down to a meal with a European has not in the least stood in the way of the Bengalee youth, even of the orthodox type, cultivating an intellectual intimacy with his Missionary teacher, and entertaining deep feelings of affection and respect for him. Similarly with regard to the men of his own community who have won his spiritual homage. Sir B. N. Seal—comes of a caste whose members could not hand round a glass of water to the men of high castes to drink—has been the acknowledged Guru of two successive generations of high-born Bengalee Hindus. Bengal's higher classes have always welcomed men of the lower rungs of the social ladder into high public offices, offering them the same respects they would to the high-caste incumbents thereof. No Bengalee but is proud of Dr. M. N. Saha—Bengal's youngest F.R.S. Education is a passport to every Bengalee Hindu for entry into the freemasonry of what is known as the educated community which cuts across all the divisions of caste and sub-caste, and the only way a man excels therein is by virtue of his moral and intellectual equipment, the question of his origin playing no part in determining his status in it. And in a like way, in Bengal's world of politics, its most distinctive feature consists in the fact that even the most zealous exponents of orthodoxy, the high-born Pundits and the like who have had nothing to do with Western education, shed their bigotry completely when addressing themselves to the task of electing a fit man to the Legislative Council or other public bodies. They always have their eye on the quality of the candidate's political creed, and never on his caste. In the general election campaign of 1923 the late M. C. R. Das swept the board practically clean of all the candidates of his rival parties on the ground that he was regarded as the greatest patriot of Bengal. He had been most heterodox in his mode of living, and was certainly an outcaste from the standpoint of Hindu orthodoxy. But he carried practically all the high-caste Hindu votes including those of the orthodox. The present writer (who happens to be a Brahman) was easily defeated during that campaign by a Namasudra nominee of C. R. Das. The latter won the overwhelming majority of high-caste votes in the constituency concerned. It is the commonplace of one's experience in Bengal to see high-caste people vote a low-caste candidate to a public body, central or local, to see the former serving, honouring and obeying the latter in a variety of ways, although there could be no social intercourse between them by way of inter-marriage or inter-dining. The Poona Pact could no more be made to apply to Bengal than it could be to England whose sons and daughters hold very exclusive views on the question of marriage, and—may one add?—on that of inter-dining, too. There is no understandable principle behind the Poona Pact in so far as it seeks to govern the elections to the Bengal Legislative Council. It wears the appearance of an ill-informed attempt to re-barbarise Bengal, to drag her back into conformity with those parts of India which have yet to develop a political conscience.

31^o July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

How is one going to formulate the distinction at all between the depressed and non-depressed with a view to ensuring a real representation of the Bengalee Hindu community on the Legislative Council? The list of the depressed originally compiled by the Bengal Government was clearly based on the fact of their educational backwardness. And the list has since gone on dwindling as each caste whose members have been able to educate themselves has had its name taken off the depressed category by making special representations to the Government. The Subornobaniks, Sahas, Tantubuiys and Mahishyas who have in the latter years taken to education with earnestness are all off that list. It was the turn of Namasudras who also count a perceptible number of educated men in their ranks to declare themselves off next. But for reasons which need not be discussed now they took up the cry during the visit of the Simon Commission in favour of separate electorates, and separate representation on the Legislative Council, local bodies, and even the State services, on the analogy of the Moslem demand for the same. They were hard put to it however to formulate a basis for their separatist creed in view of the avowed elasticity of the Hindu social structure in Bengal, and have indeed failed to offer a rational one up to date. Their attempt to make out a case before the Lothian Committee ended in disastrous failure. A Namasudra gentleman who was sitting as a member of the Provincial Franchise Committee took it upon himself thereafter to submit a note to the Lothian Committee behind the backs of his high-caste Hindu colleagues (vide Vol. II of the report, pp. 251-259, and 261-262) wherein he formulated a novel distinction of his own between Bengal's depressed and non-depressed. Shortly stated, his definition would exclude from the category of the depressed those 9 castes in Bengal whose members are entitled to pass round a drink of water to an orthodox Bengalee Brahman, and would include in that category all the rest who are not so privileged. Such a definition ignores, in the first place, the definite fact that orthodoxy is altogether on the wane in Bengal, and in the next place, the incandescent reality, that the orthodox cast their orthodoxy aside at the time of electing a candidate to the Council. But above all, the definition defeats itself. The fact has to be remembered, in this connexion, that the Namasudra rigidly excludes all members of the castes below his from social communion, and would certainly not accept a drink of water from the hands of such people, and since he is pretty high up on the social ladder with its 100 and odd rungs in the shape of castes, he dis-entitles himself, on a parity of considerations, from representing the vast mass of Bengalees below him in social rank. In fact, in view of the total absence of social communion between caste and caste, the definition under consideration would necessitate the separate representation of each caste on the Bengal Legislative Council! The last and the paramount circumstance ignored by the author of the definition is that of the 86 so-called depressed classes on the Government schedule, none but the Namasudras and Rajbansis have hitherto asked for separate representation, and it is incompetent to only these two particular classes to speak on behalf of all on the very grounds of distinction formulated by themselves. The further fact confronts one that the members of these two castes are so distributed over the districts of Bengal that they would be bound to capture at least 25 out of the 30 seats allotted by the Poona Pact to Bengal's depressed. This is a chilling prospect for the 84 out of the 86 castes on the schedule, and they distinctly prefer being represented on the Provincial Council by the higher caste Bengalees possessing greater education, power and enlightenment than the Rajbansi and the Namasudra. Indeed it is the people of the higher castes, and not of the two claimant ones, who have founded various missions, educational and otherwise, to bring about the uplift of the backward sections of Bengalees.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued]

Judged by every possible test, the Poona Pact seems to be unfair to the Hindus of Bengal. It threatens to cause a serious set-back to the movement of enlightenment and emancipation we have spoken of. The Rajbansis who had so long been styling themselves Kshattriyas and clamouring to be put out of the schedule, have since elected to stay back among the depressed. Nor does one understand how the Poona Conference came to give away 30 seats to the classes under review. The Premier had given them 10 seats for 20 years on the basis of a joint electorate. The Poona Pact enlarges the number 3 times, and creates at the same time what amounts to a separate electorate for the said classes. Asked for the reason of it by the present writer, Mr. Gandhi wrote to say "he was a centpercent-wallah and therefore did not examine the seats allotted." This frank avowal surely knocks the bottom out of the Prime Minister's acceptance of the Poona Pact in so far as it touches Bengal.

III.

Thus stands the Hindu community of Bengal vis-a-vis the new constitutional proposals. Their materialisation on the basis of the Premier's Award as supplemented by the Poona Pact can only result in wiping that community off the political map of India. The Prime Minister drives it under a Moslem hegemony in the first instance, and then lifts the sword handed over to him by Mr. Gandhi (!) to cut it asunder, the two pieces whereof will have every encouragement and reason to repeat the story of the famous pair of Kilkenny cats. Can Great Britain expect the Bengalee Hindu to accept the prospect, or would she not humanly expect him to fight against it to the last breath in his body?

And yet all this alienation is avoidable, and is being gratuitously courted. The proposed reforms would hardly get a chance in India if the British were to drive the main body of Bengalee Hindus into a maddening paroxysm of estrangement therefrom. All the aftermath of the Bengal Partition points to such an inference. The present writer who most earnestly wishes to see the coming constitution get under way is far from intending to utter idle threats. But past experience cannot be ignored. The Bengalee Hindu who is the most emotionally charged of all Indians can do all the mad things and bad things that result from a sense of outraged patriotism. It is the earnest prayer of the present writer that England shall not drive him thereto.

31^o Juli, 1933.]

[Continued]

The difficulty is that there is patent injustice characterising the Prime Minister's Award. The number of adult Bengalee Hindus is 11,503,668; that of adult Moslems in Bengal is 12,855,474; the franchise is to be conferred on a proportion of these two bodies; and bear the fact in mind, as already stated, that the introduction of free institutions into India has not owed anything at all to the efforts of Bengal's Moslems, but has admittedly owed much to the efforts and sacrifices of Bengal's Hindus, further, that the culture, wealth and enlightenment of modern Bengal are practically synonymous with Hindu Bengal, on what principle does the British Premier allot 119 seats to Moslems over against 80 to Hindus? The only other possible reply would be "because they were the previous rulers of Bengal." To say so would be to repudiate all that the British have brought about in Bengal since 1757, it would be to initiate a new chapter of Bengal's history headed "The betrayal of Britain and Bengal." The present writer would respectfully suggest, in view of the insignificant difference between the two sets of adult population in Bengal, that the two communities should be called upon to elect their representatives to the reformed Council either on the basis of a joint electorate pure and simple, or in the alternative, on the basis of an equal division of the seats in the Council between themselves, after counting out those reserved for the Britisher, Anglo-Indian, and Indian Christian. Such an equal division could be effected either on the footing of a joint or of separate electorates, although the former alternative would be preferable to every nationalist. The effect of an equal division of the seats between the two communities would be to paralyse the spirit of communalism, as the representatives of neither community would be able under such an arrangement to carry any measure through the Legislature with the aid of their communal votes only. And it is hoped that when both sets of representatives find themselves in a parity of advantage and disadvantage, and impotent for doing evil to each other, they may awake to the feasibility of doing good to each other by combining their votes in furtherance of their common weal. This ideal of an equal division of the council seats has been before both the communities for some time, and one's prayer goes up from the depths that England will give effect to it. The highest justice is to undo previous injustice, and no imperial country has, within recorded annals, known how to do it better than England. Lastly, the Premier's application of the Poona Pact to Bengal must needs nullify itself in that Bengalees knew nothing about it, and have since its promulgation universally disagreed from it.

Let England do these two courageous acts of justice, and introduce the Reforms into India with the Hindus of Bengal on her side. And it is the firm belief of the present writer that such righteous action will win over the present revolutionary youths of Bengal in the same way that the courageous declaration of the 20th August, 1917, won over the then revolutionary party of India.

MEMORANDUM 62 (SUPPLEMENTARY) BY B. C. CHATTERJEE.

I.

(a) The Premier's Award, in so far as it affects Bengal, constitutes a denial of responsible government to its people.

(b) Responsible government is promised in the Declaration of the 20th August, 1917.

(c) The promise is repeated in the Preamble to the Government of India Act.

(d) The Simon Commission presuppose it as the basis of their deliberations.

(e) The Premier laid down in his letter of instructions to the Franchise Committee that "it has been decided that the Governor's provinces are to become responsibly governed units." (Vide Franchise Committee's Report, Vol. I, p. 7.)

(f) The implications of responsible government are clearly stated by the same Committee on p. 8 of the same volume. Among other things, the legislature will have to contain "elements required to form both stable ministries competent to conduct executive government in the conditions of modern India, and oppositions capable, not only of criticism, but of forming an alternative government."

(g) The conditions above stated could not come into operation in Bengal unless the Premier's Award were modified.

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued]

(g) The Award gives the Moslems of Bengal 119 reserved seats on the Bengal Council on the basis of a communal electorate.

(h) On the basis of a very conservative computation, Bengal's Moslems would be able to secure 6 out of the 20 special seats reserved under the Award. They may secure as many as 12.

(i) Even if they secured no more than 6 of the special seats, their party would be 125 strong in a House of 250 of whom Hindus would be 94, Britishers 25, Anglo-Indians 4 and Indian Christians 2.

(j) The Moslems would, under such circumstances, form the largest communal majority party in the Province, and the Governor would be constitutionally bound to send for its Leader, and ask him to form his Government.

(k) There would be the greatest incentive for all the Moslems to hold together in a single party in view of all the 7 ministries being available to their representatives in the event of their sticking together.

(l) The Britishers, Anglo-Indians and Indian-Christians would normally vote with the Moslem Government so formed. Past experience of working of Legislative Councils would warrant such a presumption.

(m) There would be the greatest temptation for a Government so formed to go in for communal legislation and non-neutral administrative acts to the prejudice of Bengalee Hindus.

(n) Past action on the part of Moslem majorities on Bengal's local bodies would justify such a fear.

(o) In the event of the Hindu community of Bengal feeling aggrieved by the acts and omissions of the communal Moslem Government, the Hindu members on the Council would be unable to bring about a dissolution of the Government by bringing on a vote of censure; nor would the Hindu voters be able to elect the members of an alternative Government as the result of a re-election.

(p) Even if the Britishers, Anglo-Indians and Christians were to agree to combine with the Hindus—a very remote possibility—they could not form an alternative Government in the circumstances.

(q) The Award would translate into effect the very contingency that was unanimously ruled out by the Simon Commission in reference to Bengal and the Punjab, namely, a definite Moslem majority in the Legislative Council unalterable by any appeal to the electorate (Vide Report of the Indian Statutory Commission, p. 71, Vol. II).

It is respectfully submitted that the terms of the Communal Award in so far as it affects Bengal, go beyond the scope of the authority conferred on the Prime Minister by Parliament.

II.

(a) The introduction of a joint electorate would be a solution of the whole difficulty.

(b) The Simon Commission advocated it (Vide, p. 72).

(c) Failing joint electorate, and any agreement between the parties concerned, Parliament would be bound to formulate a scheme which would establish a parity of rights and obligations as between the two communities of Bengal.

(d) An important fact to note in this connection is that it is principally the services and sacrifices of the Bengalee Hindus which, admittedly, have won the prospects of responsible government for Bengal.

(e) Another fact is that, although the total population of Bengalee Moslems exceeds that of the Hindus by over 5 millions, the difference between the two sets of adult population is no more than 1,300,000 in round numbers.

(f) It is submitted, in these premises, that the numerical strength of the two communities should be judged, for the purpose of an equitable division of the Council seats between their representatives, on the basis of each community's respective adult, and not total, population.

(g) Further, it is the adult population on whom the franchise is conferred.

(h) It would also be unfair to let the dead hands of the buried little ones bear down the scale in favour of the Moslems in the weighing of the problem under notice.

(i) It is respectfully submitted that an equal division of the Council seats between the two communities—after counting out those reserved for the Britisher, Anglo-Indian and Indian-Christian—would be the most equitable in view of all the circumstances involved.

(j) It would put the two communities in an exact parity of political advantage and disadvantage, and would render each impotent for acting to the detriment of the other.

(k) It would consequently take away the incentive for the formation of political parties on communal lines, and provide the maximum of stimulus for Hindus and Moslems joining together to achieve their common good.

31^o July, 1933.]

[Continued]

(l) A scheme of this character was formulated by the present writer as far back as the beginning of 1931 for adoption by both communities.

(m) The scheme further proposed an equal division of the ministry; and also of all offices under Government, subject to candidates of either community satisfying an irreducible minimum test of efficiency to be formulated by an independent Services Commission.

(n) The Moslem leaders of Bengal had the foresight to signify their assent to the scheme, subject to the condition that the Hindu leaders did the same.

(o) A minority of Hindu representatives agreed; but the majority did not, as they read into the Simon Commission's Report an authoritative indication that the proportion of Council seats prescribed by the Lucknow Pact and adopted by the Government of India Act would be maintained in Bengal and the Punjab in the event of the Moslems of those two Provinces refusing to have a joint electorate.

(p) The Hindus of Bengal will now be agreeable to such a scheme provided their Moslem countrymen agree thereto.

It is submitted with the greatest respect that, in view of all the above facts and circumstances, the Joint Committee will be pleased to recommend the aforesaid scheme for adoption by Parliament conformably to the latter's promise of responsible government to Bengal.

III.

(a) The only possible objection to the scheme may lie in the fear that in the event of the Hindus returned to the Council being of the Swarajist persuasion, they might, with the aid of some Moslem M.L.C.'s, make the working of the Constitution impossible in the manner of their predecessors during the time of the late Mr. C. R. Das.

(b) It is submitted that there should be a Council-creed, just as there has been, ever since Mr. Gandhi's assumption of political leadership, a Congress-creed which every entrant to the Congress must subscribe as the condition precedent to his entry into that body.

(c) Every entrant to the Legislative Council should be legally required to pledge himself in writing to a declaration that he will, upon entry into the Council, work the constitution in the manner prescribed and contemplated by the Government of India Act.

(d) Sanction should be attached to the declaration entailing immediate expulsion of the member acting in breach thereof, and entitling the rival candidate who had polled the next largest number of votes to come into the Council in his stead and place.

(e) Other penalties which may be considered adequate could be prescribed against the default contemplated.

(f) Congressmen who should appreciate the compliment of imitation paid to their organisation could not have the least ethical ground for objecting to such a provision of the law.

(g) It is not intended that Congressmen should be kept out of the Legislative Councils. All that is suggested is that they should come in as converts, and not as wreckers and destroyers.

(h) It is submitted that the new Constitution should not be placed at the mercy of those whose avowed aim is to destroy it.

(i) Should the Bengal Legislative Council get the chance of working for 10 years on the footing of the redistribution of the Council seats above suggested, and of the exclusion of wreckers, it would be able to do much real work for the people of Bengal, and throw all other rival organisations into shade in consequence.

(j) The scheme of redistribution of Council seats and that of formulating a Council-creed go together.

(k) The Governor's decision on the question of whether an M.L.C. has acted in violation of his pledge or not shall be final, and not be open to question in any court of law.

IV.

(a) The present writer who had acted as Counsel for the various members of the earlier revolutionary party of Bengal, on trial in different courts, was able to bring about an understanding between that party and the Government after the passing of the Government of India Act of 1919.

(b) Most of the men who were released on their pledge of loyalty to the new Constitution have since remained true thereto.

(c) A great many of the facts relating to the above matter would be found in the late Mr. Montagu's Diary, and Sir Valentine Chirol's last book on India (being a collection of his letters to The

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued]

Times), and would also be within the recollection of the Marquess of Zetland.

(d) The writer issued a public appeal to the members of the present revolutionary party in Bengal to give up their activities in view of the coming introduction of provincial autonomy. The Government of Bengal was pleased to send out printed copies of it to all the internees, deportees and political prisoners.

(e) The writer has since received a communication from a number of men confined in the Trichinopoly Jail (and considered by the Bengal Government to be important persons) asking for an interview for the purpose of discussing the details of the appeal made to them.

(f) This seems to point to a hopeful way of peacefully solving, for the second time, the very serious problem created by the revolutionary movement.

(g) On the contrary, the danger of the revolutionary youths (boys and girls) gaining a very great accession of strength, in the event of Bengal being made over to the management of a communal majority party of Moslems, is a terrible reality looming ahead.

(h) The Anandamath which is the Bible of the party preached a patriotic and holy war against Moslems.

(i) The very conditions imagined by Bankim in that book would become an incandescent reality, were the scheme of the Award to go through, and Bengal would in no time be involved in the red run of a revolution feeding itself on blood prodigally shed by boys and girls whose number would continue increasing.

(j) The writer is far from wishing to exaggerate.

(k) The Marquess of Zetland, who has had first-hand acquaintance with the facts of the last revolutionary movement, could be referred to for corroboration of the above statement.

(l) The real danger in Bengal lies in the doing of things that would antagonise its Hindu youths by igniting the fire of that militant idealism which the Anandamath has kindled into lasting life.

(m) The statutory establishment of a Moslem majority in the Council unalterable by any appeal to the electorate would just be calculated to achieve this.

(n) The present writer deems it his imperative duty to warn the Joint Committee of the utter impossibility of any Constitution working in Bengal in the face of a determination on the part of its Hindu youths to ensure its failure with the price of their lives.

(o) The revolutionaries are not with Gandhi, but are patriotic, and not unamenable to conviction, as past events show.

(p) When they find Bengal governed by the whole of the people of Bengal for the whole of the people of Bengal, their occupation will be gone, and they will revert to the cause of law and order, as did their predecessors.

(q) They are not anarchists.

V.

The Poona Pact cannot but be revised in relation to Bengal, because

(a) Bengalee Hindus were no party to it;

(b) There are no depressed classes in Bengal;

(c) The Poona Conference did not in the least acquaint itself with the peculiar conditions of Bengal;

(d) Every Bengalee of any caste whatsoever, enjoys same civic and political rights with all other Bengalees, the quality and extent of his enjoyment thereof being determined solely by the state of his education and character, and not by the caste he belongs to;

(e) At the time of a general election, the Bengalee Hindu voter looks to the quality of the candidate's political creed, and never to his caste.

MEMORANDUM 63. ON BEHALF OF THE CENTRAL HINDU COMMITTEE OF CENTRAL LEGISLATURES. BY BHAI PARMANAND, M.L.A.

1. The Hindus and the Communal Settlement.

While fully supporting the view that the responsibility given to the Central or to the Provincial Legislatures has been placed under so many restrictions as to reduce it to a mere name, and that the safeguards with reservation of powers to the Governor-General and the Governors under the name of "special responsibilities", "discretionary powers", Governor-General's powers of issuing ordina-

31^o Julu. 1933.]

[Continued]

ances and enacting special acts, etc., take away the spirit of responsibility leaving only the form behind, I have to submit that the chief subject which I propose to deal with is the grave wrong done to the Hindus by the settlement of the communal problem, commonly known as the Prime Minister's Award, and by the apportionment of seats in the Legislatures to various communities, as outlined in the White Paper.

2. Wrong procedure adopted in arriving at a solution of the communal problem by mutual agreement.

It was a wrong assumption, based upon a fallacious theory, that the communal problem of India could be settled by mutual agreement among the various communities and diverse interests, and further that the settlement was intimately connected with the question of Hindu-Moslem unity.

The Hindus and Moslems having entirely different ideals as to their future growth and development, it was no use mixing up the settlement of communal issues and the Hindu-Moslem unity or any agreement dependent upon it. Unfortunately however, the discussions in the Round Table Conference centered round the question of the unity of various communities and it assumed an unusual importance during the Second Round Table Conference, which was attended by Mahatma Gandhi. To achieve this unity was a passion with him and, to that extent, it proved to be a source of weakness. Hindu-Moslem concord, taken by itself, is an excellent thing, but as understood in Indian politics, it has led to untoward consequences.

The Congress, in its struggle to achieve self-government, has run into the habit of calling this struggle a war. For the purposes of war, of course, complete unity among different parties is essential. And, in order to secure that unity the leaders of the Congress had been offering higher and higher terms to the Mohammedans without properly considering how those terms would affect the Hindus. But to understand the matter aright it is necessary to know that this struggle is not a war in its literal sense and the grant of self-government to India, whether due to the growth of a new feeling of humanity in Britain, or due to pressure brought to bear upon the British Government by various modes of agitation including the recent Civil Disobedience movement, could not but be in the nature of a gift to India by England. It is true that even to force England to give India self-government unity among the various communities would be a great help, but it could not be an essential condition.

3. Communal constitution, a negation of democracy.

It is acknowledged on all hands that democratic constitution must be free from the virus of communalism. It can be said with all certainty that no constitution which is based upon entirely different, and very often mutually opposed interests, could lead to the growth of a truly national government. The full force of this argument has been perceived by everyone who has had to study the communal problem in India. The authors of the Montague-Chelmsford report discussing this subject come to the following conclusion:—

"We conclude unhesitatingly that the history of self-government among the nations who developed it and spread it throughout the world is decisively against the admission by the State of any divided allegiance against the State's arranging its members in any way which encourages them to think of themselves primarily as citizens of any smaller unit than itself. The communal system stereotypes existing relations. We regard any system of communal electorates as a very serious hindrance to the development of the self-governing principle."

The Statutory Commission supported the above view thus:—

"Communal representation—the provision by law that a particular religious community shall be represented in a popular legislature solely by members of its own body with a guarantee as to how many communal seats there shall be—is an undoubted obstacle in the way of the growth of a common citizenship."

The Prime Minister again expressed the absurdity of communal electorates by saying that—

"The evil of communal electorates has assumed its most dangerous form and proportion in India, where different communities and minorities are out to claim that the legislature is to represent not regions, but religions, not areas or interests, but castes and creeds, by a strange electoral system based on the grouping of voters by religion in separate communal electorates."

31° July, 1933]

[Continued]

And, moreover, in explaining this complicated question to the House of Commons, he said:—

"This is one of the problems which has to be faced because, if India is going to develop robust political life, there must be room for national political parties based upon conceptions of India's interests and not upon conceptions regarding the well-being that is smaller or less comprehensive than the whole of India."

Sir Austen Chamberlain, representing the British Government in the Minorities Committee of the League of Nations, said.—

"It was certainly not the intention of those who had devised the system of minorities' protection, to establish in the midst of a nation a community which would remain permanently estranged from national life. The object of the Minorities Treaties was to secure to the minorities that measure of protection and justice which would gradually prepare them to merge in the great national community to which they belonged."

4. The Duty of the Government.

Under the circumstances and for the reasons mentioned above the only right course for the British Government was to chalk out a truly national constitution for India without paying any heed to the claims put forth by the communally-minded leaders of the various communities; or to follow the general principles laid down by the Minorities Committee of the League of Nations for the guidance of various Governments in communal matters.

Failing that, the next best course for the Government was to discover a uniform plan and to follow it strictly in the matter of distribution of communal rights. Scrupulous impartiality was the one thing to be expected from the Government in this case. Unfortunately what we find is that the proposed constitution emphasises and accentuates communalism above everything else and not only accedes to the communal demands, but gives every encouragement to communalism by putting a premium over it, as the proposals in the White Paper show.

5. The Statutory Commission's opinion on this subject authentic and unbiassed.

The Statutory Commission was appointed by Parliament in 1927, in pursuance of Section 84A of the Government of India Act. The Commission carried on their task of investigation in India in co-operation with the Committees appointed from the Central and the Provincial Legislatures. Among other things the question of communal representation was enquired into. And naturally their unanimous view based on a thorough examination of the question on the spot should carry weight and authority. The first question before them was that of communal representation which they call most important and highly controversial. We know what view they had. But in spite of that they decided in favour of maintaining separate representation. And why so? They give their reason in the following words:—

"We are now faced, as the authors of the Montague-Chelmsford Report were faced, by the indisputable fact that the Mohammedan community as a whole is not prepared to give up communal representation and would regard its abolition, without the assent of that community, not only as the withdrawal of a security which it prizes but as a cancelling of assurances upon which it has relied."

Having a consciousness that the responsibility of retaining communal electorates lay on the Mohammedan community the Statutory Commission took a fair and unbiassed view of the subject. They did not try to discover any new rule for their guidance in the settlement of the Hindu-Moslem question. They took the Lucknow Pact and followed the lines of that agreement arrived at between the Hindu and Moslem leaders in 1916, when communal tension had not been replaced by goodwill.

Referring to the most disputed problem of the allocation of seats to different communities in Bengal and the Punjab, they say with great reason and truth:—

"But a claim has been put forward for a guarantee of Mohammedan representation which goes further than this . . . This claim goes to the length of seeking to preserve the full security of representation now provided for Moslems in these six provinces and at the same time to enlarge in Bengal and the Punjab the present proportion of seats secured to the community by separate electorates to figures proportionate to their ratio of population. This would give Mohammedans a fixed and unalterable majority of the general constituency seats in both provinces. We cannot go so far. The continuance of the present scale of weightage in the six provinces could not—in the absence of a new general agreement between the communities—equitably be combined with so great a departure from the existing allocation of seats in Bengal and the Punjab.”

31^o July, 1933.]

[Continued]

The Communal Award disregards all this and goes to the length of giving more than a mere statutory majority to the Mohammedans in the Punjab.

6. The contrast between the White Paper and the Statutory Commission as regards allocation of seats in the Central Assembly

The Statutory Commission allotted seats to various communities in the proposed Federal Assembly in the following proportion fixing the total number of seats at 250, they assigned 150 seats to the Hindus (including the Depressed Classes), 75 to the Mohammedans and 25 to other communities. Thus the Hindus get 60 per cent. (15 per cent. less than their population ratio), and the Mohammedans get 30 per cent. of the total (5 per cent. more than their population ratio). The White Paper allocates 105 instead of 150 seats to Hindus (including the Depressed Classes) and 82 to Mohammedans. Thus it reduces the Hindu majority (75 per cent. of the whole population) to a minority by giving them a representation of 42 per cent.

The comparative allocation of seats as proposed in the Statutory Commission's Report, the Government of India Despatch and the White Paper is:—

	Hindus.	Moslems	Percentage of Hindu to Moslem seats.	Sikhs.	Europeans, Anglo-Ind. and Xtians.	Special Constituencies (Commerce, Labour, Women and Landholders).
Statutory Commission	150	75	per cent. 33.0	5	17	—
Govt. of India Despatch	136	75	36.7	5	20	—
White Paper ..	105	82	44.0	6	20	37*

* These special seats have been taken out of the Hindu seats (General Constituency) reducing their percentage from 60 per cent., according to the Simon Commission, to 42 per cent. of the total by the White Paper.

7. The Iniquities of the Communal Award.

(a) The Communal Award is iniquitous because it gives a statutory majority to the majority community in the Punjab, to an extent which is beyond the expectations of even the Moslem leaders of the Province, thereby establishing a fixed and unalterable religious statutory majority which could not be reduced by any appeal to the electorate in the Province. Fixing the total number at 175, the White Paper gives 86 to Mohammedans, 43 to Hindus and 32 to Sikhs, i.e., 11 more than that of the Hindus and Sikhs combined. Adding 10 seats of Special Constituencies five more would go to Mohammedans, thus making their total 91 and of all the rest 84. With such a strong statutory communal majority in the Punjab Council the Governor, even with his special powers, would not be in a position to protect the minorities, because in the face of opposition from this majority he would not be able to form an alternative government. Thus “freed from this contingency and sheltered by the citadel of religious orthodoxy the majority might easily become a veritable engine of oppression and misrule against which the combined opposition would be impotent.”

(b) In other provinces special weightage is given to Moslem minorities. In the

31° July, 1933]

[Continued.]

United Provinces, for instance, the Moslems forming 14 per cent. of the population are given as many as half of the number of Hindu seats in the Upper Chamber. On the other hand the Hindus in the Punjab, a minority community in the province, instead of being given any weightage get less than even their population ratio.

(c) The Punjab being the main recruiting ground and a source of supply of 62 per cent. recruits to the army of defence, the Moslem Government of the Punjab would exercise an entire control over this source.

(d) The creation of a separate deficit province of Sind, with a population of less than four millions and the introduction of full-fledged reforms in the North-West Frontier Province, with a population of 2½ millions, each necessitating a subvention of nearly a crore of rupees at the cost of the poor people of India, cannot surely be called measures of protection for the minorities. On the other hand the Corbett scheme of creating a new province consisting of the Ambala Division of the Punjab, together with some districts of the U.P., which could have served as a solution for the most difficult problem of the Punjab and which is keenly desired by the people of the Ambala Division, was altogether ignored.

(e) Such enormous communal concessions have created anomalies like the following.—

The backward population of the North-West Frontier Province maintaining their administration at a heavy cost to the Central Revenue are given five seats, i.e., less than half a million people of that Province return one member to the Federal Assembly. While an advanced province like Bengal, with a population of over 50 million, is given 37 seats only, which works out at one member to one and a half million people. This is three times the number of persons represented by one member of the Federal Assembly in the case of the North-West Frontier Province.

MEMORANDUM 71 HANDED IN BY RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA.

Supplementary Statement on the North-West Frontier Province.

The N.W.F.P. was a part of the Punjab till 1901 when Lord Curzon decided to separate it on the ground "that the conduct of the external relations with the Tribes on the Frontier should be more directly than hitherto under the control and supervision of the Government of India." This Scheme was opposed by the then Lt-Governor of Punjab, Sir Macworth Young on the ground that the five Districts proposed to separate were indistinguishable from the unsettled trans-border area culminating in the Durand Line which separates British India from the neighbouring Kingdom of Afghanistan. This trans-border tract still remains a sort of no man's land. It is nominally under British control, but this control has only been loosely exercised and the tract remains, as it was in 1900, not only a disturbed area, but inhabited by the congeries of marauders, buccaneers, and refugees from the neighbouring and surrounding independent states. It is a source of constant anxiety to the settled districts and through them to the rest of India, because this region is waterless, comprising as it does of rocky mountains and hills variegated by narrow valleys where scant vegetation grows with difficulty and the crops raised are insufficient for human sustenance. The whole of this area is inhabited by about 3,000,000 tribesmen and may be roughly classed as falling under a few distinct well-known tribes such as Wazirs, Mahsuds, Bannuchi, Affridis, Shinwaris, Mohmands and others. These tribesmen are more or less a nomadic people making war upon their neighbours and amongst themselves and making frequent incursions into the settled area, the nearest of which is Peshawar, an armed, fortified city with a population of about 100,000 souls. In spite of the continuous watch and ward kept by the Military, frequent raids are made into the British territory by this warlike tribe of Pathans who form the bulk of the population.

These tribes have manufactured their own fire-arms in their small factories in which they have succeeded in producing rifles closely imitating the British rifles which they often steal and which have to be specially guarded against the tribal marauders.

The non-Moslem population in the five settled districts which is known as the N.W.F.P. is about 8 per cent. the Moslem number 92 per cent. being about 22,27,000. The area of the five settled districts is 13,419 square miles and the total population about 24,25,000 and as such is about one-quarter of that of Assam, the smallest Province in India, both in point of population and area.

31^o Julii, 1933]

[Continued.]

The five settled districts which since 1901 were governed by a Chief Commissioner are now, since 1932, by the Governor and a Council (with one Executive Councillor and a Minister to assist him)

The Simon Commission with the members of the Central Committee, visited this area in 1928, they went all over the settled and unsettled districts, saw several of the Tribal agencies, examined witnesses and in their report said "we have come to the conclusion that responsibility for the administration of the North-West Frontier Province cannot be separated from responsibility for the peace of and control over the tribal area. Only thus can the security of the North-West Frontier be effectively maintained."

"In making this recommendation we are endorsing the view of the North-West Frontier Enquiry Committee which was set up in April, 1922, under the Chairmanship of Sir (then Mr) Denys Bray to report whether such separation was advisable, and if not, what was the best constitutional development to be recommended for the province. (Vol. II, page 101). Later they say "all frontier experts, from frontier officer to Lieutenant-Governor and Viceroy, have been unanimous that the frontier tracts and frontier districts form one organic whole which can only be properly managed if both parts are in the hands of one centralising and controlling authority on the frontier itself." The Bray Committee assembles in a striking footnote at the bottom of page 8 of its Report, excerpts from the opinions of various authorities on this point. These include not only expressions of opinion from such distinguished administrators as Sir Alfred Lyall ("It is an established principle from Peshawar to Karachi that the frontier can only be managed properly if both sides of it are in the hands of the same British authority") and Sir John Maffey ("I do not think there is anybody who has any real experience, official or non-official, who would think it feasible to separate these two component elements"), but also the views of frontier notables, such as Nawab Sir Abdül Qayyum ("Separation is neither advisable nor practicable") and Wazirzada Mohammad Akram Khan "Our interests are so common that we can never be separated"). They reaffirmed the view held by local officers and the Chief Commissioner who combined in his person the dual responsibilities of administering the five districts and acting as Agent to the Governor-General, that the dealings with the Tribal area should not be disturbed but, nevertheless, acting under the pressure of local agitation and the Red Shirt movement the British Government had to introduce Provincial Autonomy for the five districts, granting to them a subvention of one Crore of Rupees from the Central revenue.

The introduction of Reforms of the N.W.F.P. was made in pursuance of the Round Table Conference, Sub-Committee No. 5, the proceedings of which are printed in Vol. 5, pages 90-92. The new Council came into being on April 18th, 1932, Mr. Gidney and then Mr. George Cunningham was appointed executive Councillor, and Sir Abdül Qayaum Khan first Minister. The Council consists of 40 members out of which 28 are elected—of these 22 are Moslems, five Hindus, and one Sikh. Out of the remaining nominated 12, five are English, six Moslems and one Sikh. During a short regime of one year the Council government of the five districts has established its policy of gradually squeezing out the Hindus from all Public Services, appointing less qualified Moslems rather than well qualified Hindus in posts since created, and meting out differential treatment in the matter of educational grants, etc. The following are a few instances, illustrative but not exhaustive, of this communal preference shown by the Moslem Government of the N.W.F.P.

1. A few months ago five new posts for probationary sub-divisional officers were created in the Public Works Department, for which highly qualified Hindus holding British Degrees applied, but none of them were accepted. Moslems holding even inferior degrees were taken. (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, March, 1933.)

2. The Selection Board has not made a single Hindu appointment to the post of Deputy-Superintendents of Police, though many qualified Hindus had applied and, in spite of the fact that there is not a single Hindu in the whole of the Cadre (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, March, 1933).

3. In the re-trenchment effected in the Forest Department, notices were served on 14 clerks (12 Hindus and 2 Moslems), but later on the notices on the 2 Moslems were withdrawn and the 12 Hindus were retrenched (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, March, 1933).

31° July, 1933]

[Continued.]

4. The Islamia Moslem College, Peshawar, is receiving a grant to the extent of rupees 103,000 per annum as against the Vedic Bharatri (Hindu) College Dera Ismail Khan, which receives only a grant of rupees 10,000 per annum. In the case of the Islamia College, the grant comes to more than 300 rupees per student per annum, while in the case of the Vedic Bharatri College, Dera Ismail Khan, the grant comes to less than rupees 140 per student per annum. Vedic Bharatri College put in a request for the increase of the grant to the extent of rupees 5,000 per annum, as their expenses had increased, and with a view to meet them they had to make a cut of 10 per cent. in the salaries of their staff and were further compelled to increase the tuition fees of the students by 33 per cent. These steps were not taken by any other College in the province, the natural result being that the staff in the Vedic Bharatri College was becoming discontented, while the number of the students began falling steadily, because, as stated above, they had to pay extra fees. At the same time the Islamia College had put in a request for the increase of the grant-in-aid by an extra 20,000 rupees. The Honourable the Minister (Sir Abdul Qaiyum), who is in charge of the Educational Department, could not see his way to recommend the grant of rupees 5,000 for the Hindu College, but found it advisable to sanction rupees 20,000 for the Islamia College, of which he is the Founder and the Honorary Secretary (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, March, 1933).

5. It should be understood that Sanskrit, the National language of the Hindus, is a part of the University curriculum, just as Persian and Arabic, are for the Moslems. So far all possible facilities have been given to the Hindu students reading in the Government High Schools to have recourse to Sanskrit. In the Government High School, Peshawar, a few months ago the Honourable the Minister considered it advisable to abolish the said post, the natural consequence being that the Hindu students who had taken up Sanskrit as one of the languages, had either to leave the school or give up the study of their National language. It will thus be seen that deliberate attempts are being made to Momammadanise the Government schools which, to all intents and purposes, should be open to all classes and creeds. The post of the teacher only involves an expenditure of about rupees 40 per mensem and would be more or less a drop in the ocean when it is seen that the annual expenses of the school run to more than rupees 25,000. For the Moslem students there is arrangement, and very adequate arrangement, for imparting Persian Arabic and religious instruction.

In addition to that it was even considered desirable to sanction a new grant for the Moslem Orphanage School at Nowshera. It will thus be seen that funds can be found, if required, for the Mohammadan institutions, but in the case of the Hindu students, they are even denied the privilege of having recourse to Sanskrit, their national language (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, March, 1933).

6 District Board Scholarships—Since the last 10 years five scholarships to the extent of Rupees 250 per annum have been granted every year. One of these scholarships has always been awarded to a Hindu, but this year, all the five scholarships went to the Moslems. (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, March, 1933.)

7. Discriminatory fees in the Government High Schools are hitting the Hindus and Sikh Students very hard and are one of the reasons why these schools are not very popular with them. There are two grades of fees—one for the Agriculturalists and the other for the non-agriculturalists. While a Moslem student has to pay at the rate of one Rupee per mensem, 1/4 P.M., 1/8 P.M., 1/12/- P.M., 2/4/- P.M. and 2/8/- P.M. in the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth classes respectively; a Hindu student has to pay at the rate of Rupees 1/8/- P.M., 2/-/- P.M. and 2/8/- P.M. and 3/-/- P.M., 3/8/- P.M. and 4/-/- P.M. respectively in the above mentioned classes.

8. Every year five students are nominated from the Frontier province for admission into the Engineering School, Rasul. Each candidate costs the Government about Rupees 1,200 per annum. This year no Hindu was taken. (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, March, 1933).

9. The N.W.F.P. Government pays the Punjab Government annually a certain share for the maintenance of the King Edward Medical College, Lahore. In the year 1931-2 the Frontier Government paid Rupees 22,392. Five students were nominated from this province but no Hindu was selected. (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, October, 1932).

31° July, 1933.]

[Continued.]

10. Central State Scholarship for Study Abroad.—This Scholarship is tenable for a period of three years and the candidate in question is paid at the rate of £360 per annum. So far three candidates have been selected from this province and all belong to the Majority Community, that is Moslems. (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, May, 1932).

11. At the time when the Cut motions were moved in May, 1932 Session of the Frontier Legislative Council during the course of the General Discussion on the Budget, it was pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition Party (Mahk Khuda Bux), that the standard of services, more particularly in the Law and Justice Department, was very low. One of the members of the Minority Community suggested that with a view to improve the standard, the only course open to them was that in future all the appointments in the said Department should be made on the basis of merit and efficiency and not by communal representations. No sooner than this point was mooted out the Leader of the Independent Party withdrew his cut motion on the plea that communal tinge had been infused into the debate. (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, May, 1932).

12 A resolution was moved by one of the members belonging to the Minority Community to the effect that 50 per cent. of the posts in the Judicial line from amongst the Members of the Bar be filled by open competition and remaining 50 per cent. in the following ratio Moslems 36 per cent., Hindus and Sikhs 14 per cent. This proportion was suggested and based on the representation given to the Minority in the Legislative Council under the White Paper. The Resolution in question was hotly opposed by the members of the Majority Community and an amendment was moved by the Leader of the Opposition that all appointments should be made by nomination, and not by open competition. The amendment was carried. (N.W.F.P. Legislative Council Debates, October, 1932).

13 Kohat Loan.—After the unfortunate riots that took place in Kohat in the year 1924, where it is alleged that the Hindus and Sikhs suffered losses to the extent of crores of rupees, a loan amounting to ten lakhs of rupees was advanced by the Government of India with a view to set up the people in their business and to build their houses.

As the Hindus and Sikhs had suffered greater losses, naturally the major portion of the loan was advanced to them. The world-wide economic depression hit everybody and more so the Kohat sufferers. The loan which had to be repaid within 10 years by annual instalments could not be repaid, hence the Government of India extended its term to 20 years. Still the people could not or were not in a position to repay. On the request of the Kohat sufferers, a resolution was moved in the N.W.F.P. Legislative Council in the March, 1933, session that a recommendation be made to the Government of India for the entire remission of the loan. This resolution was hotly opposed by a majority of the Moslem members of the Council and was thus defeated. At the same time they moved a resolution for the remission to the extent of 50 per cent. of land revenue and water rates. This remission amounted to more than 20 lakhs of rupees, or in other words, about 30 per cent. of the Provincial revenues, and was carried.

14. The following comparative statement is indicative of the share of the Minorities in the Public Services in the N.W.F.P.

		Hindus and Sikhs.
(a) Hon'ble the Minister	Moslem	nil.
(b) The President of the Legislative Council	Moslem	nil.
(c) The Deputy President of the Legislative Council	Moslem	nil.
(d) The Secretary of the Legislative Council	Moslem	nil.
(e) The Assistant Secretary of the Legislative Council	Moslem	nil.
(f) The Secretary, Legislative Dept. (Legal Remembrancer)	Moslem	nil.
(g) The Additional Judicial Commissioner	Moslem	nil.
(The Judicial Commissioner is an Englishman belonging to the Indian Civil Service).
(h) The Additional District and Sessions Judge	Moslem	nil.
(The District and Sessions Judge is an Englishman who belongs to the I.C.S.)
(i) Provincial Civil Service	Moslems	5

31° July, 1933]

[Continued.]

						Moslems.	Hindus and Sikhs.
(j) Police—
Deputy Superintendents	15	nil.
Inspectors	32	24	8
Sub-Inspectors	173	131	42
Asst. Sub-Inspectors	117	106	11
Head Constables	553	459	82
Constables	5,082	4,541	540
(k) Educational Department—
Indian Educational Service	3	1	nil
(Two Englishmen).
Provincial Educational Service	9	9	nil.
District Inspectors of schools	5	5	nil.
Personal Asst. to the Director Public Instruction	1	1	nil.
				No.		Moslems.	Hindus and Sikhs.
Registrar Educational Department	1		1	nil.
Vice-Principal Training College	1		1	nil.
Subordinate Educational Service	11		8	3
Head Masters of Government High Schools	11		8	3
Teachers in District Board Schools	491		473	21
Clerks in the Education Department	46		41	5
Admission to Training College, Peshawar within last ten years, Senior Vernacular class	976		885	91
Admissions to Junior Vernacular class during the last ten years	692		634	58
12. Revenue Department—
Tehsildars Selection grade	2		2	nil.
„ first grade	4		4	nil.
„ second grade	5		5	nil.
„ third grade	7		6	1
„ fourth grade	6		5	1
Naib Tehsildars Selection grade	8		7	1
„ „ first grade	5		3	2
„ „ second grade	12		9	3
„ „ third grade	19		16	3
13. Agriculture Department—
Agriculture Officer	1		1	nil.
Extra Assistant Director of Agriculture	2		2	nil.
Assistants in the Agriculture Dept.	12		10	2
Clerks in the Agriculture Department	6		6	nil.
14. Veterinary Department—
Superintendent	1		1	nil.
Deputy Superintendent	1		1	nil.
Assistant Surgeons	5		5	nil.
Assistants	26		23	3
Inspectors	2		2	nil.
Clerks	5		5	nil.
15. Co-operative Credit Societies—
Inspectors	16		16	nil.
Sub Inspectors	21		21	nil.
Clerks	12		12	nil.
16. Agriculture Officer's Office—
Head Clerks	1		1	nil.
17. Office of Asst. Registrar—
Head Clerk	1		1	nil.
18. Office of Superintendent Veterinary—
Head Clerk	1		1	nil.

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

The N.W.F.P. has been rightly described as the gateway to India. For 3,000 years it has been the gateway of trans-border immigrants into India. The Aryan population entered through the two great historical passes known as the Khyber and the Bolan passes. They still remain the vulnerable passes for the truculent trans-border tribes to enter the fertile valleys of the Punjab.

The political problem concerned with the N.W.F.P. has, however, in recent years undergone a striking change. The Hindus have for several thousand years settled down in India, to which country they are confined; there are no Hindus outside India excepting small bands of settlers and traders who do not count. The Moslems, on the other hand, extend from the N.W.F.P. to Constantinople in the West, Turkistan on the North and Arabia in the South. The centre of this great Moslem power though divided by political and geographical boundaries, is held together by a single religious cement and the extension of their regime to India during the Mogul period is a fact of history. The Hindus are only anxious to keep what they have got and possess no desire for territorial conquest. Their religion counsels peace and tolerance of all classes and all creeds. From time to time the Moslem fanatics have openly challenged the supremacy of other religions and the one word "Jehad" is an unflinching war cry which brings all the brotherhood together regardless of all other ties or affinities. In the late Afghan War of 1919, when the Indian revenue suffered a loss of 9 crores of rupees in repelling the Afghan invasion, a Moslem regiment, "Khyber Rifles," enlisted and maintained by British India for the protection of the frontier, boldly deserted their ranks and went over to the side of the enemy with all their arms because, forsooth, Afghanistan had declared a Holy War against India. This is described in an official publication as follows from the Report of the N.W.F.P. Subjects Committee, 1931, pages 89 and 90; para. 23, sub-heads 2 to 7).

(2) What occurred when Afghanistan declared War in 1919 is thus briefly described in an official publication:—

"The Afridis of Khyber Rifles had wavered from the start and the corps was disbanded to forestall a mutiny. In Waziristan when the withdrawal took place mutinies occurred both at Miran-shah and Wana. Wana and the posts of the Gumal Route were evacuated in face of opposition both from the mutineers and tribesmen and the loyal portion of the Wana garrison, retiring on Zhob, was severely handled and had practically all its British Officers killed and wounded. Darweshkhel Wazirs and Mahsuds finding the omens of victorious Ghazi too clear to be ignored were ready to rise en masse, had any Afghan backing been forthcoming. As it was the country was flooded with deserters with the rifles and ammunition they had taken with them, and raiding and attacks on pickets started on an intensive scale in the Derajat and Peshawar, where the state of the Afridis was much the same as that of the Wazirs." The small town of Gumal, at the mouth of the pass, was looted and burnt; the Police had to evacuate it and people fled. The tribes in the year 1919-20, according to the Border Report, committed 611 raids with 293 British subjects killed, 392 wounded, 461 kidnapped and property worth Rs.21,30,209 carried away.

(3) What was the Hijrat movement due to? The Khilafatists had preached that British India was Dar-ul-Harb, ruled by the infidels. Tens of thousands of Pathans sold their all—lands, houses, cattle, etc.—and migrated to Afghanistan, Dar-ul-Salam, the land of the faithful.

(4) And the terrible Kohat tragedy what was the cause? In a small pamphlet published by an orthodox Hindu, a passage was declared as derogatory to Mecca, the sacred city of Islam in Arabia. The Hindu quarters of the town were given up to flames and the whole Hindu population was forced to fly through fear for the sake of their lives. The Muslim ruffian element in the town was joined by the villagers and by people beyond the border, and as the whole police and constabulary were of the same community the civil authorities were helpless.

(5) The open insurrection in Mansehra Tahsil (Hazara district) was created... by... the preaching of

31^o Julii, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Jihad or religious war by a Mullah. Let me quote the same authority:—

“Unfortunately an agitation based on religion was bound to affect the peculiar temperament of the Frontier Muhammadan in ways not strictly religious. In Hazara the unrest spread to the trans-border tribes, necessitating military operations to restore order. Throughout the province and especially Bannu this agitation engendered a spirit of lawlessness and defiance of authority.”

(6) The same spirit of lawlessness and defiance of authority manifested itself among the Pathans in the city of Peshawar on two occasions, first at the time of Afghan War “of 1919 and later when His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was there at Peshawar.” Sir John Maffey, the Chief Commissioner in his evidence, said:—

“Peshawar city may easily become very ugly under small provocation owing to its peculiar composition and situation. In the year 1919 they had to place a cordon of troops round the City. They made a great many arrests.”

(7) A Hindu bookseller at Lahore published a pamphlet which was regarded as casting a slur on the life of the great Prophet. The man was murdered in his shop and the assassin was canonised. Propaganda was carried beyond the border and 500 Hindu and Sikh families, who had for generations lived as Hamsayas (dependents), were expelled from their hearths and homes. It was through the intervention of the authorities that they were allowed to return after months of exile.

What happened in the N.W.F. Province in the year 1930 at the time of the red-shirt movement will need volumes for even a brief statement. Suffice it to say that the entire Province was ablaze from one end to the other. The military had to be requisitioned and posted in the various storm centres, such as Peshawar, Charsada, Bannu, etc., to maintain Law and Order. Firing had to be resorted to a number of times. In the open rebellion Captain Ashcroft, with his eight Sepoys, was killed in the Bannu district, and the same fate befell

Mr. Murphy, a member of the Indian Police in the Mardan Tehsil.

On account of the agitation that had been launched in the tribal territory and in view of the sympathy that the tribesmen had for their co-religionists in the settled areas, that is the Moslems, they came as near as the city railway station of Peshawar. Had it not been for the prompt action on the part of the military and the frontier authorities, it is difficult to say what would have been the state of affairs in the Frontier. The reason why the Hindus of the N.W.F.P. require special measures of safeguards in the future Constitution are briefly stated as follows:—

(a) Their educational and Economic status in the Province is out of all proportion of their population, as previously stated. They are 34 per cent. educated (male population), as against 3 per cent. (male population) of the Moslems in the Province. They contribute about 84 per cent. of the taxes.

(b) Their Political conscience is quite distinct from their religious conscience, while the Pathans of this Province subordinate all considerations to the consideration of religion as is evidenced by their fanatical outbursts and their record of crime—the highest in the whole of India. The Hindus have never in their long History permitted similar outrages on the Moslem population, as their religion teaches them tolerance and peace and has made the Hindu Community characteristically unwarlike as contrasted with the Pathans. These facts cannot be denied and the following authorities quoted are sufficient to refute any denial if made.

Prevalence of Violent Crime.

Regarding the violent crime, it may be pointed out that the Frontier Province is very criminal. In fact there is no other Province in India which could come in any way near to it. The figures of murder, raids, kidnapping, attempts at murder, culpable homicide and criminal trespass, etc., are simply appalling. The following statistics of murders and raids taken from the Frontier Enquiry Committee Report (presided over by Sir Denys Bray) speak for themselves:—

31^o July, 1933.]

[Continued

Year.		Number of Murders.	Raids.
1914	..	316	365
1915	.	394	345
1916	.	416	292
1917	...	400	223
1918	.	353	189
1919	..	474	611
1920	..	644	391

In 1922, Peshawar, the capital of the N.W.F.P. was alone responsible for 305 murders, 147 attempts at murder and culpable homicide, 48 kidnappings, 37 unnatural offences, 97 dacoities and robberies and 661 criminal trespasses resulting in death or other serious offences.

Referring to the report of the Frontier Regulations Enquiry Committee (1931), it would be found that in the year 1929, the Frontier Province was responsible for 490 murders, 84 dacoities, 115 rioting and robbery, 94 cattle thefts and 2,565 reported serious offences.

A reference to the Report (1930) submitted by the Committee presided over by the Honourable Mr Justice Suleman will not be lacking in interest:—"The population both of Peshawar district and city is addicted to crimes of violence to a remarkable extent. The comparison with the statistics available for other parts of India is not without interest. In the Punjab, which shares with Burma the distinction of being the most criminal of the Governor's Provinces of India and has a population of some 21 millions, there were 667 murders in the year 1928, while in the Peshawar district, which has a population of one million, there were 307 murders. In the Punjab, the most criminal district is Lahore, in which in 1928 there were 56 murders, that is one-fifth of the number of murders in the same period in the Peshawar district. The population of Lahore district is numerically about equal to the population of Peshawar district."

"Another reference of equal interest could be made to the N.W.F.P. Police Enquiry Committee presided over by Sir David Petrie.—'It appears that serious offences have steadily increased from 709 in 1902 to 2,045 in 1929 and the tendency is still onwards. The official statistics for 1930 show that 292 murders were committed in the Peshawar district alone, an increase of some 40 over the statistics of 1929, the number of raids and dacoities is more than double that of the previous year, while the number of burglaries has also largely increased.'"

If one were to compare the cases of murders per ten thousand population in the N.W.F. Province with that of the Punjab, it will be seen that whereas the frontier can claim to have 2.02 murders per ten thousand of the population, the Punjab figures will only show .29. This fact is equally apparent in the case of dacoities. The figures are .35 for the frontier Province as against .042 for the Punjab. A reference has already been made above that the criminals can find a safe asylum in the trans-border territory. This fact is apparent from the report of the Frontier Regulations Enquiry Committee (1931) which shows that there were as many as 414 outlaws in the tribal territory for the offences that they had committed in the British territory. These figures relate to the year of 1929.

In view of the foregoing statement it is not difficult to suggest the measures which the Hindus consider suitable for their special requirements. These measures must not be taken to follow any principle of reciprocity since the case of the N.W.F.P. is exceptional and must therefore be subject to exceptional treatment. The Hindus demand that in recognition of their educational and economic importance they should be given a seat in the local Cabinet and in order to counteract the display of religious fanaticism which permeates the Frontier and to introduce an element of greater efficiency and stability in the conduct of business, a certain percentage of posts in the higher administrative and subordinate ranks be reserved for them. In making this claim the Hindus base it upon their political and educational advancement and their substantial contributions to the coffers of the State no less than for the insuring of peace on the Frontier and its more efficient administration commensurate with the advance of progress and the Democratic principle upon which such advance is made and justified.

8682. Dr. Moonje, is it to you that we should address our questions in the main? Have you made arrangements amongst yourselves?—The questions may be asked of me and whenever I find that any one does not refer to the particular points with which I am to deal, I shall refer it to the other witnesses for the replies.

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Chairman.] I shall reserve my own questions until I discover what my colleagues propose to ask you.

Earl Peel.

8683. I only want to ask two questions of detail. I think we are dealing with the statement of the Hindu Mahasabha on the Constitutional question—is that not so?—Yes.

8684. In paragraph 27 (c) of Memorandum No. 57—I am dealing with the statement of the Hindu Mahasabha on the Constitutional problem—you say that: “An impartial arbitration be appointed to investigate into the obligations incurred under the authority of the Secretary of State for India which India is called upon to discharge”. What exactly do you mean by that investigation, and what is it actually to investigate?—The financial obligations which India has to discharge on account of which a period of transition is considered necessary. Those obligations have to be investigated as to how far India is legitimately obliged to pay those financial obligations, so that we shall be in the position to know the period of transition.

8685. Do you mean that you want an investigation into the question of whether the existing financial liabilities of India have been properly imposed?—Yes, that is one of the points.

8686. Do you want, then, to take each debt as and when raised and ask whether it was properly raised and how the money was spent?—I have particularly in mind at present the capitation charges with which India is charged—that is the charges that have to be paid by India for the training of British troops and British material in England for the defence of India. That is one of the points I have got in mind. Another point I have got in mind is the charges that India has to pay for the so many expeditions that have to be made, for instance, conquering Burma and such other things.

8687. But that question of capitation charges is being investigated now, is it not, by a Committee?—Yes; when it was written it was included in the general question.

8688. You do not wish to question, therefore, that any of the loans incurred by India have been properly raised and incurred, do you?—That is also a point which may be investigated.

8689. What do you mean by “properly raised”, then?—I have not used that expression here; I have used the expression “an impartial arbitration be appointed to investigate into the obligations.”

8690. But do you suggest then, that it may be, as a result of an investigation of that kind that certain Indian liabilities should not be taken over by the new Federal Government? Is that the object of your Inquiry?—After the investigation is made, we shall be in the position to know which are the charges which India is legitimately obliged to pay, and which are the charges which, perhaps, India need not be obliged to pay.

8691. On the ground that they have not been spent in the interests of India, or what is your view?—Yes, in the interests of India.

8692. There is only one other question I want to ask on that; I do not want to ask any questions, of course, about the communal award. On page 28 you talk about a complete scheme of Indianisation of the Indian Army in 30 years?—Yes.

8693. And then you say: “Thus no higher authority could be quoted”?—Yes.

8694. Do you intend to suggest then that you have high Military authority for the Indianisation of the Army in 30 years?—Yes. I regard my Commander-in-Chief in India as the highest Military authority that I can quote in support of my contention. My point is that Lord Rawlinson, who is the Commander-in-Chief, recommended to the then Governor-General of India, Lord Reading, that the Indianisation could take place in 30 years. That is my highest authority in India.

Marquess of Reading.

8695. Would you mind asking, what does he mean by Lord Rawlinson's Report? I have a special reason for wanting to know. What do you mean by Lord Rawlinson's Report?—A Committee that was appointed by Lord Rawlinson.

8696. Do you mean the Military Requirements Committee of 1921?—Yes, that is the name if I remember it right now. In the Report of that Committee a scheme for Indianisation of the Army in 30 years has been recommended.

Earl Peel.

8697. You are quoting a Military authority, but is it not a fact that Lord

31st July, 1933] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESEMUH, Mr BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Rawlinson never recommended Indianisation in 30 years? All that happened was: he was ordered to produce a scheme which would Indianise the Army in 30 years, and that was the best scheme he could decide upon for carrying into effect that particular instruction?—I am not concerned so much as to what he ultimately recommended, and what he did not recommend. I am concerned with this one particular idea, that Lord Rawlinson, the Commander-in-Chief, thought it feasible that the Indian Army could be Indianised, according to his scheme, in 30 years.

8698. Was not this a fact. He did not express any opinion as to whether it was feasible, or not—all he did was to carry out certain instructions which he had received, and produced the best scheme he could for Indianisation on the assumption that it was to be carried out in 30 years?—If my information be right, for which I have no authority at the present moment, I think that the Government of India thought that scheme a feasible scheme.

8699. How can you assert that high authority for limiting the period to 30 years? I am not quite sure what your authority is for making that statement. Is it an unpublished Report?—As I have said, my authority is the Report of the Committee appointed by Lord Rawlinson.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] My Lord Chairman, this is rather an embarrassing situation. The Witness, apparently, happens to have been in a position where, as a Member of a Confidential Committee, he had access to a confidential Report. Can we allow references to that confidential and unpublished Report to appear in the evidence taken by this Committee?

Chairman.] I hope that Lord Peel will examine the Witness, apart from that point.

Earl Peel.

8700. I particularly wanted to call attention to this paragraph, because it seemed to me not to be based upon any public document. That is the reason I called attention to it.—I may mention one fact, that in the Defence Committee of the Round Table Conference reference was made to two Reports.

Mr. Cocks.

8701. I would like to ask one or two questions of Pandit Nanak Chand. In the first place, in sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph iv of your first Memorandum, you speak about the joint electorates in the Punjab. I merely want to ask you this. Would not that proposal be opposed to the Communal Award?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) It certainly modifies the Communal Award, to a certain extent.

8702. In paragraph vi of the same Memorandum you speak about the re-arrangement of the boundaries of the Punjab. Would you mind explaining a little what you suggest there?—The Simon Commission Report, second volume, pages 24 to 26, proposes the appointment of an impartial Commission to go into the boundaries of the different Provinces. Their main argument is that the arrangement of the Provinces is unsatisfactory. Most of them have been brought into existence for administrative purposes. There is no unity or natural affinity on which these Provinces are based. I submit, with regard to the Punjab, that the Punjab is a Province where there is no natural affinity between the three areas, namely, the Western, Eastern and the Central Punjab. I understand that it is almost settled that Sind is to be separated on religious and linguistic grounds. Claiming my right, on the same ground, I wish that the Punjab should be re-arranged into three Provinces, namely, the Western, to go with the North-West Frontier Province, and the Eastern, some of the district, to the United Provinces Province, and the Centre to be formed into a Province by itself. My meaning would be quite clear, if you were to look at this map of the Punjab given in the Nehru Report, it clearly shows how there is a marked distinction between the various parts of the Punjab. May I hand in this map? (The same is handed in.)

8703. Would you agree with the statement that there is very little support for this proposal, whatever may be said on theoretical grounds, there is very little practical support for it?—There is great support for it. Only recently, in the Eastern Punjab, there was a big Conference held where the people desired that the Eastern Punjab should be separated. In the two Round Table Conferences there was agitation on the part of the Sikhs and the Hindus with regard to the desired re-arrangement of the boundaries of the Punjab, and I do not think it stands to justice or fair play that the predominantly Hindu districts, which differ in language and religion, should be subject to a majority community living in the Western Punjab, having different manners, customs and religions, and divided in various matters.

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

8704. Have you read all the evidence which has been given before this Committee, because, if so, have you read an answer given by the Secretary of State to me, on that very point, in which he said the difficulty about this question of the Punjab was that there was no support for it?—I beg very respectfully to differ from the opinion given by the Secretary of State. I have read that portion of his statement, and I think if an investigation is made on this point, you will find that I am supported in this matter.

8705. The only other question I want to ask is this. In your second Memorandum, under the paragraph called "Educational Interests," you speak of the Urdu, Punjabi and Hindi vernaculars. What exactly is your suggestion?—My position is this, that in the Punjab (again, this is a point connected with the first which you have just been asking me) the Sikhs have their script, what is called Gurmukhi or Punjabi, and their language is also Punjabi. The Eastern Punjab has got Hindi as its script, and the language is also different from the West. We find that in all these three areas, Urdu is the medium of instruction, mainly, and it is also the official language. My point is this, that in the Punjab all these three vernaculars should be recognised as holding the same position as Urdu. This is the case in the United Provinces and recently in Bihar, where the Muhammadans have been given the right of having Urdu as the official language in their schools, and in other administrative Departments. I see absolutely no reason why Gurmukhi and Hindi should not receive similar treatment. On the other hand, we find in the various District Boards in the Punjab Gurmukhi schools have been closed, because grants would not be made to them. There has been a fierce struggle going on in the Punjab Legislative Council, and outside the Legislative Council, for the recognition of these three vernacular languages. Recently there was a trial of strength in the University. In that discussion I, also, took part. My only submission is that the Hindu and the Sikh minorities should be treated in exactly the same manner, with regard to the language and script, as the Muhammadan minorities are treated in the United Provinces and other parts.

Major Attlee.

8706 Dr. Moonje, I have only one question to ask. In the event of the proposals in the White Paper being adopted, do you think that your community would be prepared to work those reforms? Of course, Sir. The politics of the Mahasabha to which I belong is the policy of responsible co-operation. We are prepared to work whatever constitution may be given to us. If the Constitution is satisfactory we shall work it with pleasure. If the Constitution is not satisfactory we shall work it with an idea to get it amended as early as possible.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

8707. I desire to put some questions with the idea of getting the facts relating to the Poona Pact. I want whoever chooses to answer the question. I do not want the witnesses to go into any dispute between the Hindus and the Moslems as regards representation in the Council. I put certain dates to the Secretary of State, and I will just repeat them to you. The Communal Decision is dated the 17th August, 1932. Mr. Gandhi's letter to the Prime Minister is dated the 18th August, 1932, in which he says, among other things. "This fact will cease if British Government revise their decision and withdraw their scheme of Communal electorates for the Depressed Classes, whose representatives shall be elected by general electorate under common Franchise." Then there was a reply from the Prime Minister dated 8th September, 1932, in which the Prime Minister pointed out that his scheme was not intended to separate the depressed classes from the other Hindus, and so on. Now I come to the next date. I would like to ask you something about it. On the 15th September, you remember Pandit Mohan Malaviya issued a notice in the newspaper inviting some friends. His exact words were: "To a few friends to hold a meeting for the consideration." Will you kindly tell the Committee who is Pandit Malaviya?—Pandit Malaviya is a respectable citizen of India, and at one time my leader

31^o Julii, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

(Mr. Bannerjee.) He was twice President of the Indian National Congress.

8708. I wanted to know if he was a Hindu?—(Dr. Moonje.) Yes.

8709 But on the 16th September Pandit Malaviya announced that the venue would be changed from Bombay to Delhi?—Yes.

8710. This fast unto death began on the 30th September, 1932. To cut the matter short ultimately the Pact was signed on the 25th September, 1932. Is that so?—Yes.

8711. You were there?—I was not there in Poona when the Pact was signed.

8712. You were at Bombay?—I was in Delhi.

8713 It was signed on the 25th September, 1932, as you have told us, and, on the 26th September the very next day, at 11 o'clock in the morning, the Home Member announced in the Assembly at Simla that His Majesty's Government had accepted the Pact. I shall ask the Bengal witness at this time, that is to say, between the evening of the 25th September and 11 o'clock on the 26th September, 1932, where was the Government of Bengal? Was it in Calcutta or in the Hills?—(Mr. Bannerjee) It was at Darjeeling in the Hills

8714 Before acceptance of the Pact by His Majesty's Government next morning, or may be earlier, were any of the representative Hindus, or any Hindus, to your knowledge, sent for by the Government for inquiring whether they were agreeable to accept this Pact?—I could not speak for any Hindu; but, in any case no member of the Bengal Legislative Council was consulted, and, so far as my information goes, no representative Hindu was asked his opinion on the question.

8715. Was any representative of the Bengal Hindu Sabha sent for, or inquiry made by telegram whether the Bengal Hindus were willing to accept the Pact?—No inquiry was made by the Government of Bengal of any representative Hindu from Bengal, whether belonging to the Mahasabha or not.

8716. I want to take you to the next period of time. The Pact having been accepted, or rather acceptance having been announced, on the next day, the 26th September, was any protest or objection made by Bengal Hindus, first of all, either in newspapers or in meetings, or anywhere?—Yes.

8717 Will you tell us very shortly what was done and by whom?—No concerted action was taken immediately, but individual protests were made in the newspapers as early as the 29th September by members of the Bengal Legislative Council. I, myself, a member of the Bengal Legislative Council, protested against the Pact in a letter to the "Statesman" newspaper. Within a week from that time, Mr. N. K. Basu, a member of the Bengal Legislative Council, protested against that in a letter to the "Amrita Bazar Patrika", within a fortnight Mr. B. C. Chatterjee, who is also here, sent a series of letters to the "Amrita Bazar Patrika" and the "Liberty." There were individual protests. At that time the Bengal Legislative Council was not sitting. Its next Session commenced in November. Immediately after the commencement of the Session, 25 Members of the Bengal Legislative Council sent a telegram of protest to the Prime Minister, or I believe, to Sir N. N. Sircar who was here, for the purpose of forwarding it to the Prime Minister. After that there have been various other protests. Shall I go into details?

8718. Very concisely if you can give the facts?—On the 11th January, at a representative meeting presided over by Sir B. B. Ghosh, now a member of the Executive Council of the Viceroy, a protest was recorded against the terms of the Poona Pact, and since then the Bengal Legislative Council at its meeting of the 14th March has adopted a resolution protesting against the Pact.

8719. Will you take it from me (it appears from the printed evidence) that Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru informed the Committee that two or three important Bengali Hindus had cabled to him accepting the Pact. I wrote to Sir Tej Sapru, and his present recollection is that he does not remember the names or the description of any of these Bengali Hindus except that one is some Rajah from Kurseong. Can you tell us who he is?—No, I have no idea, nor do I think there is any such person, nor is there any representative Bengali who would send such a telegram to Sir Tej Sapru.

8720. You may take it from me that Dr. Ambedkar stated from his seat here, that seven Members of the Caste Hindus were present when the Pact was made. I wrote to Dr. Ambedkar on the 23rd July, and put it to him that it would be fair

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHEROHAN KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.]

even now to disclose the names of these witnesses so that I can get their status and position from the Bengal witnesses. I have not received any reply. May I ask you, so far as your information goes, first of all, was any Bengali or representative Bengali present at Poona? I am proceeding backwards?—Present at Poona at the time of the signing of the Pact you mean?

8721. Present at Poona at the time of the signing of the Pact, or very shortly before, or about that time?—So far as my information goes, only two Bengalis were present at Poona at the time. One of them is a caste Hindu, but he also does not occupy any representative position, nor had he been deputed by any public association of Bengal to go and sign the Pact.

8722. What about the other Bengali?—The other Bengali was a Namasudra belonging to the depressed classes.

8723. Did any Bengali caste Hindu sign this Pact?—No, no Bengali caste Hindu signed this Pact.

8724. Do you know, as a matter of fact, when the party went down to Poona from Bombay?—I do not remember the date.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

8725. You referred to a certain telegram which had been sent by the 25 members of the Legislative Council and the replies and so on. I have tendered my letter of the 14th December, 1932, from myself to the Prime Minister, which contains those telegrams. (See page 1118), The Committee was further informed by Dr. Ambedkar that he had sent a letter to the Prime Minister. I asked for a copy; I have not got it. Have you any knowledge about a letter that was sent by Dr. Ambedkar to the Prime Minister?—I do not know anything about it.

8726. As a matter of fact, in spite of the reason given for the fast, namely that the fast will continue unless the scheme of communal electorates disappears, or until that is revised by His Majesty's Government, there was no demand by Mr. Gandhi for an increase of seats?—There was no specific demand whatever on the part of Mahatma Gandhi.

8727. He put it on the ground that this communal electorate would disrupt and vivisect Hindus: that was the ground?—Yes.

8728. Tell me very shortly what has been the result of the Pact. See if I am right. Under the original communal decision, which we submit ought to be accepted on this point, the allocation for Bengal as regards the Depressed Classes was ten?—Not to exceed ten. A maximum of ten was the language of the Government.

8729. Under the Poona Pact the number is increased to thirty?—Yes.

8730. In addition to the thirty, is it not a fact that the Depressed Classes, particularly (if I may use the expression the fighting classes, form 60 or 70 per cent. of the population in portions of East Bengal and of North Bengal?—Yes.

8731. As a matter of fact, at the present moment there are six or seven Members from this class without any help of any Pact, or things of that kind?—Yes; five Members belonging to the Namasudra and the Rajbangshi castes.

8732. There at present six or seven without any help. In the increased Council, can you form any kind of rough estimate as to the number of seats they can get in addition to the thirty?—Apart from the thirty reserved for them, they are sure to get at least a dozen seats.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8733. Who?—The Namasudras and the Rajbangshis—the Depressed Classes, to put it generally.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

8734. I do not want to get into details about caste and so on—that would take too much time—but these two castes form about 2,000,000?—Thirty-four lakhs precisely—3½ million.

8735. They had been, ever since about 1911, getting themselves returned in the Census returns as belonging to the higher class, and in fact one of this class still uses the sacred thread?—Yes, the Rajbangshis. The Namasudras also are a very advanced community in many respects.

8736. In answer to certain questions which you put in the Bengal Council, Mr. Prentice said that in sending the list here of the scheduled castes, he had not followed either the recommendations of the Lothian Committee, or he had not applied any criteria at all, but had simply put forward such castes as he thought to be politically and socially backward. You put those questions?—I put certain questions.

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Mr. Butler.] Before we leave that point, if you study the White Paper, on page 124, the word "provisional" is included after the names of the scheduled castes in Bengal.

Sir N. N. Surcar.

8737. I realize it is provisional. In answer to another question, he said there are 4,500 objections on behalf of different communities. They are all objecting to be included in this caste, and he says he will read them when he goes to the hills?—Yes.

8738. Have you subsequently been told what has been the result of the investigation as to these Depressed Classes?—The result had not been published till the middle of June. I do not know what has happened since then.

8739. I have done with the Poona Pact. We had some evidence here about the simplified form of vote with coloured boxes and so on. You recently had experience of that, had you not?—Yes, in November last.

8740. Will you tell the Committee shortly how that system worked and what was the result?—That simplified voting by means of coloured boxes, in my humble opinion, does not help matters at all. People vote, not for a particular person, they vote for a particular colour; and I submit that is neither representative government nor democracy.

8741. I want to know how many votes were recorded?—Even with this simplified form of voting, even with the help of the coloured boxes, you cannot poll more than 300 in a working day of, say, six hours.

8742. I do not want general statements. How many could be polled on this occasion?—On this occasion, 2,000 people had arrived for the purpose of recording their votes. The poll continued from 11 a.m. to midnight and during this time only 609 votes were recorded with the help of this simplified form of voting which is supposed to facilitate matters.

8743. The others had to be sent away?—Yes, they had to be sent away.

8744. Do you agree with the rather optimistic statement made in the Franchise Committee's Report that a thousand can be polled on a single day?—They could be polled, but it would not be balloting. In point of fact, they would only be asked whether he was going to vote for such and such a man. That is not preserving the secrecy of the ballot box, but if secrecy were to be preserved, if voting were to proceed on regular lines, it would be absolutely impossible to poll a thousand votes in a day.

Mr. Butler.

8745. May I ask the witness how many polling clerks he is referring to on this occasion?—One polling officer and two assistants.

8746. May I ask him whether, if the number of assistants is increased, it does not make it easier?—That will not help in the least, because it is the polling officer only who can go inside the polling booth and ask the illiterate voter whom he is voting for. You cannot entrust that duty to less responsible people.

Marquess of Reading.

8747. Did the polling officer in that case ask every voter whom he was voting for?—Except in the case of the illiterate voters, he did not put that question; but the illiterates form 50 per cent. of the voting strength, and this not on the franchise proposed by the White Paper but on a narrower franchise which is reserved for local board elections.

8748. Did I understand you to add in the case of the illiterate voters the polling officer asked every voter whom he is voting for?—Yes, he had to.

8749. That is not the system proposed in the Franchise Committee's Report?—I beg your pardon; in this particular case they had coloured boxes, but they forgot which coloured box was for which candidate. Consequently, they asked advice and assistance of the polling officer.

Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan.

8750. We do not really know what is intended to come out of this examination. Is Mr. Bannerjee's contention this, that this particular method of coloured boxes is objectionable or does he mean that the electorate should be reduced that you cannot cope with the large number of voters? I just want to clear that up?—Whether the electorate should be increased or reduced is not the point with which I am immediately concerned. What I am immediately concerned with is that, in the first place, with the coloured boxes you do not get proper voting at all. In the second place, even with the coloured boxes you cannot possibly poll a sufficiently large number of people on one day, so that with the huge electorates proposed in the White

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Paper there is just a possibility of an administrative breakdown so far as recording of votes is concerned.

8751. Your objection, therefore, is confined to this particular method of voting?—No, I have made it perfectly clear that it is not a question of this or that method, my point is that in the present state of literacy, you could not possibly record a very large number of votes on one day.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker

8752 Are you against the large electorates proposed in the White Paper?—Yes. But that is a different question.

8753. On the merits, are you against the larger electorates proposed in the White Paper?—On the merits, I am. That is my individual opinion.

8754. Are there many people in Bengal who share your view?—A large section of people.

8755 Do they form the majority or the minority?—I could not say; I have not taken a census of that. I have ascertained the views of many of my colleagues on the Legislative Council, and the majority of them would be against it. All the Members of the Bengal Provincial Franchise Committee were against it.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

8756. I would like to put this question both to Mr. Bannerjee and Mr. Chatterjee. You are both Members of the Council. Will you kindly answer a question straight before the Committee. Supposing the White Paper Constitution is accepted and the safeguards are not removed to the extent to which it is desired by some people, and so on—take it substantially that, barring details, the White Paper goes through, will you be prepared to work this Constitution in Bengal?—Yes, certainly the large majority of the people will be quite prepared to work the Constitution.

8757 I believe, Mr. Bannerjee, you are the President of the Congress Committee?—No, at present there is no Congress Committee. I was, in 1927, President of the Bengal Provincial Congress Committee.

8758 You were President up to 1930, were you not?—No, I was President in 1929 and 1930 of a District Congress Committee. In 1927 I was President of the Bengal Provincial Congress Committee.

8759. At any rate, you were President of some Congress Committee, up to 1930?—Yes.

8760 You have now severed your connection with the Congress?—Just at present, I do not hold an official position in the Congress, but I am a Member of the Congress.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8761 Do you pay the yearly subscription of the Congress, as a Member?—Yes, I am a four anna or 6d. Member, as they call it.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

8762 Will Mr. Chatterjee kindly answer this question. Will he be prepared to run this Constitution—I mean, not entering the Legislature for creating breakdowns and deadlocks, and things of that kind, but honestly to run the Constitution, if you get nothing but the White Paper, substantially—there may be slight alterations?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) In my humble opinion, if the Constitution which has been sketched in the White Paper goes through, then we shall not get responsible Government in Bengal; and those who have been looking forward, like myself, to the salvation of India through the working of Provincial responsible Governments, will be too disappointed to take part in such a Constitution; but I think the elections would be contested, as far as the Hindus are concerned, on the one side, by those who want to wreck the Constitution, and, on the other, by those who may be shortly described as job-hunters.

Sir N. N. Sircar.] What is your reason for saying that?

Sir Austen Chamberlain

8763. Would the Witness make clear what part he proposes to take in the contests which he has just described?—I shall not be in it at all, Sir.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8764. May I put one question? You do not suggest, that if the Constitution outlined in the White Paper is given to India, it will be received with satisfaction by the important political parties in the country?—May I just understand the question? This question is a bit too general. If I could understand the trend of the question?

8765. I am asking you because you answered the question put by Sir Nripendra Sircar that the Constitution

31° Julii, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

would be wrecked?—Mr. Bannerjee said that.

8766. What is your view—would it be worked with satisfaction?—As I have said, as far as I can see, it denies us responsible Government in Bengal, and that will create very profound dissatisfaction. But, as I say, there are two classes who might be expected to come and contest an election, those who want to wreck the Constitution and those who want jobs.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

8767. May I know why you say it denies responsible Government in Bengal?—Because in Bengal it creates a permanent communal majority which is unalterable by any appeal to the electorate, to use the language of the Simon Commission. If I may add, the Lothian Committee Report pointed out that in order that you may get responsible Government, you must, in the first place, have a party in power, functioning as Executive Government, and also an Opposition which would be capable not only of criticism, but of taking over the responsibilities of Government, when called upon to do so. In Bengal you have created a permanent communal majority, in the first place, by giving our Muhammadan friends 119 guaranteed seats on the basis of a communal electorate, and of the special seats, if you make a very conservative computation, they would be bound to get at least six; so that our Muhammadan Members of the Council would be in a permanent majority, would have a permanent number of 125, as againsts the Hindus and the Britishers, Anglo-Indians and Indian Christians, and, necessarily, the leader of this party must be sent for by the Governor to form his Ministry; and since this is going to be a Ministry founded upon the basis of a communal electorate, returning a communal party into power, that Ministry, as far as one can see, must be a communal Ministry, and there will be the greatest incentive on the part of our Muhammadan friends to stick together, because, if they did so, they would get all the seven Ministries to themselves, and if they did things which others did not like, the latter could not replace them.

8768. One last question, Mr. Chatterjee. Do you not think your suggestion would antagonise people, the suggestion which you make at paragraph (k), Document No. 62, the proposal you make of giving the Governor the power to decide whether a particular Member is acting in conformity or not. Do you not think that is impracticable and will antagonise people?—If I may explain myself, as far as I am personally concerned, I am able to say, with a fair amount of confidence, that if Bengal is given responsible Government, either by the alteration of the Communal Award in the shape of the creation of a joint electorate for all, or even by altering it to the extent of giving the Hindus and Muhammadans an equal number of seats on the Council, then the Swarajists, or, in any event, the most influential section of them, will come and work the Constitution. I have no doubt about that. I have been in intimate touch with the Swarajists for the last three years, and I think I can give the assurance to this Committee that in the event of a satisfactory re-adjustment of the seats so as to make responsible Government real to Bengal, the Swarajists will come and work it. But I make this suggestion that I have made here to meet a certain objection that the Secretary of State appeared to raise in the House of Commons when he introduced his White Paper. He rather felt that if the Hindus came in in any large number, the wrecking tactics might be revived. It is merely to allay his fear that I make this suggestion, but if, as Sir Nripendra Sircar has put it to me, if the suggestion I have made does not appear to recommend itself to men like him and my countrymen generally, then I will not press it, because it is not an essential part of my scheme.

Sir A. P. Patro.

8769. Will you kindly tell the Committee whether the Hindu Mahasabha is a religious association or organisation or entirely a political organisation or political association?—(Dr. B. S. Moonje.) The Hindu Mahasabha is essentially a religious and a social organisation, in order to bring about religious and social reform of the Hindus, but it had to go into politics in order that attacks and assaults made on the rights and privileges of the Hindus could be defended.

8770. I mean the Hindu Mahasabha is a very comprehensive expression, is it not?—Yes.

8771. And it does not include all representative Hindus in the organisation?—It represents all Hindus, Budhists, Depressed Classes, etc.

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND

By the population basis I meant the adult population basis.

Marquess of Lothian.

8782. Do you apply this principle to other Provinces and to India as a whole as well?—I apply the principle of joint electorate to all the Provinces of India.

8783. The principle of equality of representation: Do you apply that to all the other Provinces and to all India?—Where equality would be based equitably, as it would be in Bengal, having regard to the various considerations involved. I can make my point absolutely clear by giving the figures. If you take the adult population as the basis of your calculation, then of the general seats, Muhammadans would get 103, and Hindus 96. If Muhammadans get another six seats, which is the least which in my computation they would get of the special seats, then their number would be 109 and the Hindu number would be 110, that is to say, it would work out to an equality. If you have the same proportion in the other Provinces, then certainly they should be equal, provided the proportion is the same. (Dr. Moonje.) May I say something on this point?

Chairman.

8784. If you please?—The point that has come out of Mr. Chatterjee's reply to Lord Lothian is in a general way this: If there is a joint electorate in all Provinces and no reservation of seats anywhere, the Hindus accept the position as a position of equality of all, so that everybody will get it according to his merit and competency. If there is reservation, the Hindus are prepared to accept reservation on the population basis of the minority community in any Province, whether in that Province the minority is a Hindu minority or is a Muslim minority, but the Hindu Mahasabha can never accept that point where reservation is made to a majority community and on a communal basis, because under those circumstances, as Mr. Chatterjee has said, there is no responsible government; there is a communal government that is established. That is the general principle that ought to be applied equally to all the Provinces including those Provinces where the Hindus are in a minority.

Lord Rankeillour.

8785. On that might I ask, Dr. Moonje whether, if he has joint electorates, he would also have proportional representation?—I have no objection. I should be very glad if the system of proportional representation were to be introduced, if there are joint electorates. I consider personally that the system of proportional representation is the best solution for remedying this communal inequality.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

8786. May I put a general question: What merit has a Muhammadan in the eye of the Hindu Mahasabha?—He is an Indian, a citizen of India.

8787. Would you accept him as a Member of the Hindu Mahasabha?—I have said that the Hindu Mahasabha is essentially a religious and social organization. So far as its religious activities are concerned, the Muhammadans have no concern with that. So far as politics are concerned, the Hindu Mahasabha is entirely a national organization where the Muhammadans in those political departments can join.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8788. It is on the same lines as a Muhammadan communal organization?—Quite so.

Sir Hubert Carr.

8789. Arising out of that remark, I cannot quite follow why, if in the legislature matters of vast interest to the Province will not cut across communal differences, Dr. Moonje should say that in a joint electorate a man would get in on his merits, whether Hindu or Muslim. Is that what you claim: That in the Legislature large matters of interest would not cut across communal differences, but in a general electorate merit alone would decide which member would go to the Legislature?—In the Legislature large questions cannot be discussed on national understanding and on a national basis because every member in that Legislature comes from a communal electorate. We hope, and it is accepted and it is the experience of the world, that when those communal electorates are done away with and everybody considers and comes into general electorate as an Indian, as a citizen of the land, his ideas of his communal interest are set aside and then he begins to think of how the whole administration is to be run, as a citizen and not as a Hindu or as a Mussulman.

31st July, 1933] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

8790. I take it that is a general hope. I will pass on, if I may, to a question which arises out of several of these Memoranda and that is with regard to the protection of minorities. Pandit Nanak Chand speaks with considerable apprehension of the future of minorities. Does he think that a Second Chamber in the Punjab, where the communalities might be expected to be somewhat less keen, would afford some protection for minorities?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) The question is On what lines is the Second Chamber going to be formed? If the Second Chamber is going to be formed on lines on which the Lower Chamber is recommended to be formed, I am afraid it would be entirely of no use to us—to the minorities—because the minorities in the Punjab had the bitterest experience of the communal domination by a majority community, and I can speak from experience of ten years in the Legislative Council of the Punjab that no important question there has been considered but from communal standpoints, and, therefore, if the Second Chamber is also formed on the same lines it would be entirely of no use; but if the Second Chamber is formed on different lines I would like to know the lines on which it is going to be formed, and then in that case it might prove of great use to the minorities.

8791. Would you expect, Pandit, that as communalities begin to die out they would die out in the more highly qualified assembly—the Second Chamber—first?—My experience is this, so far as the Punjab Legislative Council is concerned: The more highly educated a person is the larger is his desire for communal domination. I am afraid I can see no time when with these communal electorates there would ever be a growth of harmony or of national spirit.

8792. I will leave that question. May I refer to one other question and that is with reference to Memorandum No. 62, Section IV, paragraphs (o) and (p). Would Mr. Chatterjee tell us whether he considers terrorism will die out under such a regime as is suggested in the White Paper, or whether he thinks it will continue even against a popularly elected government?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) If the regime suggested in the White Paper goes through and then materialises, a permanent communal majority unalterable by any appeal to the electorate, in that case the revolutionary movement would get worse.

8793. Against whom would it be levelled—against the new Government?—I am afraid so.

Marquess of Salisbury.

8794. When you say it will get worse, might I ask why you think it would get worse?—Because it would create such a terrible disappointment to the whole of the Hindus in Bengal that the material for the growth of the revolutionary feeling would be very much deepened.

8795. You mean because there would be no other method of redress. Is that your idea?—That is so. We are trying our last method of redress before this Committee, and, if we get no redress here I am afraid the Terrorist Movement would get a tremendous fillip.

Sir Hubert Carr

8796. I wanted to get clear whether that would be levelled against the Government or against whom? Would it be against this new Muhammadan Majority Government?—I am afraid so, Sir.

8797. So that terrorism we may look upon as not being levelled against, shall I say, the British Raj, but against any Government they do not like?—Yes, any Government that eliminates responsible government.

Marquess of Reading.

8798. May I ask one question on that answer? Mr. Chatterjee, I did not quite follow one of your answers to a question. Do you mean to suggest that the Terrorist Campaign in Bengal is in any way affected by communal movements or differences?—The Terrorist Movement in Bengal up till now has not been a communal movement.

8799. I thought it had nothing to do with communal questions at all?—It has not, but if the conditions foreshadowed in the White Paper go through, then, I am afraid, the Government that would function being a Communal Government, it will take a communal turn.

8800. That means, take a communal turn merely for the purpose of accentuating the movement against that Government. That is the point, is it not?—A little more than that, if I may say so. As I have said quite plainly in my Memorandum, it would unfortunately bring into reality a condition of things

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

which was imagined by Bankim Chatterjee in his book called "Anandamath," which, as you know, is a sort of Bible of this party. (Dr. Moonje.) May I explain this point a bit?

Chairman.

8801. Please?—What Mr. Chatterjee means to say is this. The Terrorist Movement has been brought into being in the hope that it exercises a pressure upon the British Government to give India self government and Dominion status.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

8802. That is not so at all?—And so long as the hope is there that this Committee, which is sitting here, is our last resort, where we can place our views and appeal to the British nation that it is to the interest of both India and England to have responsible Government and Dominion status on a purely national line, and not on communal lines, there is a hope that, if such an eventuality were to happen, the Terrorist Movement will die out of its own accord; but if the Constitution, particularly in Bengal, as formulated in the White Paper, were to provide for a Communal Majority established by Statute, and others have no right constitutionally to make their minority into a political majority, if that goes through in this Committee, the last hope of having redress will have gone, and they will fight the battle of desperation with their back to the wall, and that is why Mr. Chatterjee means that, if this Constitution goes through, in Bengal the Terrorist Movement, instead of dying out, as it is hoped it will, would have a fillip. That is what Mr. Chatterjee means.

Chairman.

8803. I should like to hear from Mr. Bannerjee whether he agrees with what Dr. Moonje has just said?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) May I speak as coming from a province where Terrorism is rife? My opinion is that Terrorism is something like an endemic disease. Once it is planted in a country it has a tendency to remain there irrespective of the character of the Government, but my impression is that if the Hindus of Bengal are bitterly disappointed with the decisions of the Committee, it is possible that the terrorist bias in the minds of some of the people will be accentuated.

8804. Mr. Chatterjee, do you agree with the interpretation Dr. Moonje put upon your words?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) As far as I am able to say, I do.

Marquess of Salisbury.

8805. You say you do?—I do agree with what Dr. Moonje has said.

Sir Hubert Carr.

8806. If the Bengali Hindus are satisfied with amendments brought in the White Paper, what party will the Terrorists join when they give up their present activities?—I think they might even stand for election to the Legislative Council.

8807. As?—As men who wish to work responsible government. I am basing this prediction (although it is always difficult and dangerous to make predictions) on my previous experience. We had a revolutionary movement in Bengal from 1907 onward.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

8808. 1905?—It began from 1907, 1906 to be absolutely correct; 1906 onward.

Sir A. P. Patro.

8809. The partition of Bengal?—No, the partition of Bengal may have been the immediate cause of it, but there were other elements working, for instance, the triumph of Japan over Russia, and a great many other considerations which I cannot enter into consistently with the time at our disposal. This movement which went on increasing, and which did not cease with the undoing of the Partition, came to an end when Great Britain announced her famous change of policy in the Declaration of the 20th August, 1917. The Marquess of Zetland, who was the Governor of Bengal, during a period of time when this movement was at its worst, would bear me out if I tell you that these Terrorists, that is those of them who were defended by me in the various Courts of law, authorised me to submit a Memorandum to the Government of Bengal (it was submitted by me to Lord Carmichael, but Lord Zetland had access to it) in which they said that if India were really started on the road to freedom within the ambit of the British Empire, they would give up their revolutionary activity, and after the

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Montagu-Chelmsford report came out, I had letters, addressed to me from the Andamans and various other places, in which these various people who had been either sentenced to transportation or imprisonment had been interned or deported, asking me to convey their assurance to Mr. Montagu that, in view of the Declaration of the 20th August and of the statements in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report they had no further fight with Great Britain, and that they might be brought back, so that they might live the life of ordinary peaceful citizens, and an amnesty was thereafter granted, and these men came back, and 95 per cent of them have kept their pledge, and have been living the lives of loyal and law abiding citizens. It is in the light of this experience that I venture to predict that if we have real Provincial autonomy, real responsible government functioning in Bengal then the present revolutionary movement will come to a stop, because the revolutionaries occupation will be gone.

Chairman.

8810 For the sake of clearness the Andaman Islands in those days was a penal settlement?—Yes. I think they have revived it as a penal settlement lately.

Sir Hubert Carr.

8811. I do not want to press this matter further. There is only one thing that I want to be quite clear about. Would the attitude of the Terrorists have been different with the Muslim Party in charge of the government in Bengal, or would they still retain their Terrorist methods?—If the Muslim Party in charge of the Government were to be returned on a joint electorate, I think Terrorism would cease.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

8812. Is that information you have had from the Terrorists?—I am very thankful for this question. Nobody knows who are the Terrorists actually at large, not even the Police; but a large number of people have been interned at various centres in Bengal. I have also had to defend accused persons in what are known as Terrorist cases; and, from my conversations with these people, I venture to say that I am speaking quite responsibly when I say that the realisation of provincial autonomy of a real type would put an end to this Terrorist movement.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

8813. I just want to ask one or two questions to Dr. Moonje, to start with. Dr. Moonje, you have been asked certain questions by Sir Nripendra Sircar about the meeting that was called by Pandit Maaan Mohan Malviya in Bombay to discuss what could be done with regard to the question that was raised by the fast of Mahatma Gandhi. I just want to ask you one or two questions in order to bring out the details. You were present at the Conference which was held in Bombay under the presidency of Pandit Malviya on 19th September, 1932?—(Dr. Moonje.) Yes.

8814. At that meeting, as you know, a small Sub-Committee was appointed?—Yes.

8815 Consisting of the representatives of the Depressed Classes and of the Caste Hindus, including Mr. Jayaker, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and others?—Yes.

8816 That Sub-Committee went over to Poona to discuss this question?—Yes.

8817. Because they thought it would be very desirable to be near Mahatma Gandhi when the matter was being discussed. The Poona Pact was arrived at at Poona as a result of the deliberations of the Sub-Committee, in agreement with Mahatma Gandhi?—Yes.

8818. Then the Conference which had appointed this Sub-Committee met again in Bombay on the 25th September?—It may be; I was not present.

8819. At that meeting the Pact was put to the vote and was passed; is that not so?—I am glad that Dr. Ambedkar has given me an opportunity of explaining all the details.

8820. Do you know that of your own knowledge?—I can give the details which I, personally, know.

8821. I just want to ask this question. I want to know whether you are aware that the Sub-Committee, after having finished its work in Poona, came back to Bombay and reported what it had done to the main Conference of the Hindus which had appointed the Sub-Committee?—Yes, it must have done.

8822. I will put the question to Mr. Gavai, who I think was there. Mr. Gavai, you took part in the negotiations which resulted in the Poona Pact?—(Mr. Gavai.) Yes.

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

8823. I am not putting it in an offensive manner, but you at that time belonged to what is called the Raja-Moonje Pact Party?—Yes.

8824 You were present in Poona?—I was.

8825. When the Pact was signed, the Sub-Committee came back to Bombay and reported to the Conference under the Presidency of Pandit Malviya and a resolution was passed by the whole of that Conference, approving of the Poona Pact?—Yes. (Dr. Moonje.) On these points that Dr. Ambedkar has asked me, may I not explain?

Chairman.] I think the Committee would prefer to hear the conclusion of Dr. Ambedkar's examination. We will hear your explanation afterwards, Dr. Moonje.

Dr. Ambedkar.

8826. After the Sub-Committee was appointed and it went to Poona to discuss this matter with Mahatma Gandhi, there was a Session of the Hindu Mahasabha held at Delhi between the 24th and 26th September, 1932?—(Dr. Moonje.) Yes.

8827. Under the presidency of Pandit Malviya?—No, under the presidency of Mr. R. C. Kelker.

8828. Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee was present at the meeting in Delhi?—Yes.

8829. Raja Narendranath was also present at this meeting of the Hindu Mahasabha in Delhi?—Yes.

8830. Is it not a fact that the Poona Pact was ratified by the Hindu Mahasabha at the Delhi Session?—Yes; there is no question about that.

8831. Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee is the leading member of the Caste Hindus of Bengal?—Yes.

8832 And also a very prominent member of the Hindu Mahasabha?—Yes. (Mr. Bannerjee.) May I explain that he is not a Caste Hindu at all; he is a non-Caste Hindu, he is a Brahmo.

Marquess of Zetland.

8833. I saw there was a misprint in the evidence before; it is a very natural mistake. Sir Rabindranath Tagore was described as a "Brahmo," which is a very different thing from a Caste Hindu. In the evidence the word "Brahmo" became "Brahmin," which is one of the highest castes of Hindus there is. The same thing applies to Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee; he is a Brahmo, not a Brahmin. Is that not so?—Yes.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan.

8834 We on this side, who really do not know the details of this, wish to understand it. Is it Brahmin or non-Brahmin, a question of birth, a question who is born a Brahmin? Dr. Moonje is a Brahmin by caste, although he might give us his convictions so far as caste is concerned?—If he adopts a different religion, he ceases to be a Hindu.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8835. May I ask a question on this point? You do not mean to suggest that because a man is a Brahmo, he ceases to be Hindu?—(Mr. J. L. Bannerjee.) He certainly ceases to be a Hindu by religion; he is a non-Hindu. When a Bramho marries he has to describe himself as a non-Hindu.

8836. I am not speaking of the matter in connection with the law of marriage or anything of that kind, but do you say, as a Hindu, that if a Brahmin becomes a Brahmo in religion he ceases to be a Hindu or a Brahmin?—He ceases to be a Brahmin, certainly.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

8837. Dr. Moonje, apart from the question of whether Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee is a Brahmo or Hindu, he has been taking a very active part in the movement of the Hindu Mahasabha?—(Dr. Moonje.) Yes.

8838. He has been a protagonist of the Hindu interest?—Yes.

8839. Raja Narendranath comes from the Punjab?—Yes.

8840. He is the President of the local Hindu Mahasabha?—He is a President of the Hindu Mahasabha, too. May I explain, my Lord Chairman?

Chairman.

8841. If you please?—I was called to the meeting in Bombay by Pandit Malviya when the meeting took place and when the discussions were going on. I got up, Dr. Ambedkar will remember, and said that when Mahatma Gandhi was not prepared even to grant reservation of seats to the Depressed Classes in joint electorates with the Hindus, when he was in London at the Second Round Table Conference, it is not possible for Mahatma Gandhi to come to any compromise on this question, in order that he may give up his fast. However, to our great relief, on the second day news came that Mahatma Gandhi was prepared to recognise the reservation of seats in joint

31st July, 1933] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

electorates I was greatly pleased. Then at a certain meeting, where the principle of the Poona Pact was being evolved, I distinctly told at that time Pandit Malviya that this principle of the Poona Pact which is being evolved is based upon separate electorates. I personally, and the Hindu Mahasabha as a body, have a fundamental objection to separate electorates, and I personally and the Hindu Mahasabha as a body will not accept this principle of the Poona Pact. Then of course I could not go to Poona, along with the other members, for carrying on the negotiations. Then, to my satisfaction, having come to know that Mahatma Gandhi was prepared to accept the reservation of seats, I said "The danger to Gandhi's life is over," and therefore I went to Delhi. In Delhi, when the session of the Hindu Mahasabha was in progress, we received the wire that Gandhi had accepted the Poona Pact and, naturally, everybody was anxious to save the life of Gandhi, and we passed a resolution in the Hindu Mahasabha—

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

8842 Accepting the Pact?—Yes, accepting the Pact. But it must be understood here that on the spot, Raja Narendranath on behalf of the Punjab protested, and protested in vain, but of course the majority of the whole House was at that time in fear and dread—

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

8843 Under the shadow of the fast?—that if the Pact was not accepted, Mahatma Gandhi's life would not be saved, and therefore they accepted the Pact. Those are all the details. One particular point is this. In our negotiations with Dr. Ambedkar during the First and Second Round Table Conferences, Dr. Ambedkar has agreed, and I made that agreement on behalf of the Hindu Mahasabha that he was fully satisfied if, under a system of joint electorates, reservation of seats on the population basis would be granted to him. On one occasion during the Second Round Table Conference, when Dr. Ambedkar thought that there was some ambiguity in this point, I suggested to him that a joint letter should be sent to the Prime Minister, signed by himself and myself, saying that the difference between the Depressed Classes and the Hindus were settled by this arrangement; that is, reservation of seats on the population basis in joint electorates with the Hindus.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

8844. To which I did not agree?—To which, at that time, Dr. Ambedkar did not agree, but at the First Round Table Conference, Dr. Ambedkar did agree and, by his consent, the fact was announced to the American newspapers.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.] I do not accept that.

Mr. M. E. Jayaker

8845. May I ask a question, Dr. Moonje? You were speaking about the Hindu Mahasabha accepting the Poona Pact at Delhi?—Yes.

8846. Do you mean to say that the Hindu Mahasabha accepted the Poona Pact, not on its merits, but because of the satisfaction that Mahatma Gandhi's life was saved?—I have already said that when the Pact was being evolved I distinctly said that the principle under which the Pact was being evolved could not be acceptable to me personally or to the Hindu Mahasabha as a whole because it was based on separate electorates. (Bhai Parmanand) May I add one word? The Punjab Hindus have a similar feeling towards the Poona Pact as the Hindus of Bengal. Raja Narendranath was opposed to it on the very day when the Hindu Mahasabha passed a resolution accepting it in a hurry. Within 48 hours of the acceptance of the Poona Pact at Bombay there was a Hindu protest in the open meeting. The Secretary of the Punjab Hindus also made a protest, and Dr. Gokalchand sent a cablegram to the Premier here that the Punjab Hindus were opposed to it. The Hindu feeling is still opposed to it. There are articles in the newspapers, which I have not with me, that the Poona Pact has affected the Hindus of the Punjab very badly. Then one thing more, and that is that certain Scheduled Tribes of the Depressed Classes, who regard themselves recorded in the Census Report as Hindus, as Butwalas, Barawals, Kabirbanthas and Domes have not been included among the Scheduled Tribes of the Depressed Classes. They are carrying on an agitation on that behalf, the names of these Tribes are Butwalas, Barawals, Kabirbanthas and Domes. They amount to about 50,000 population in the Punjab because they got themselves recorded in the Census Report as Oriyas. They are not mentioned in the Scheduled Tribes; and they are creating this agitation in order to be included among them. So that shows a sort of prejudice against those Tribes of the so-called Depressed Classes amongst all those who describe themselves as Hindus. Therefore, my request to the Joint Select Committee is to look into this matter, and at least give them a right in the new tribes

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.]

Mr. Zafulla Khan.

8847. His last point is not clear. These particular tribes whom you have mentioned want to be scheduled?—Yes.

8848. And they have not been scheduled?—This is another aspect—

8849. I want to clear the point up. Not exactly, but in a sense, they are as much depressed as those who have been put in the schedule?—My point is this, that simply because they have described themselves as Hindus in the scheduled castes they have been excluded from this right which has been given to the other tribes.

8850. The right to be scheduled?—Yes (Dr. B. S. Moonje.) May I explain this point. As regards the Punjab and as regards Bengal the objection of the Hindu Mahasabha is that after careful examination, both by the people and the Lothian Committee, it was found that the question of depressed classes does not exist in Punjab, and the question of depressed classes in Bengal is not so insistent or is not so keen as to require any very great consideration. It was this point which has been made a grievance, and my friend, Mr. Parmanand, says that these people are complaining that they are not included in the depressed classes because they have been made Arya Somajis. The point is that if the depressed class question in Punjab is to be created as a vested interest in separate electorates, then these depressed classes have a right to be included, because they themselves are members of those classes, which are now being scheduled as depressed classes. If that vested interest is not to be created then those people have no claim to be included in those depressed classes.

Dr. Ambedkar.

8851. Might I ask one question. You object to the Poona Pact being applied to Punjab because, in your opinion, there are no depressed classes there?—(Mr. Bhai Parmanand.) Not in the sense in which there are in most of the other Provinces.

8852. In some sense, are there or are there not? Are there depressed classes in the Punjab or are there not?—They are not Untouchables, they are not Unapproachables. No distinction is kept, and it is in the Report of the Simon Commission and the Government of India Report also that the distinction between caste Hindus and the depressed classes does not exist in the Punjab.

8853. Might I ask you this question? How do you reconcile yourself. Your first position is that there are no depressed classes and, therefore, there should be no provision for them, and your second complaint is that certain depressed classes are not included in the scheduled list?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) I have dealt with this point, and I will give you an explanation. As far as unapproachability and untouchability is concerned, it does not exist, or, if it exists, it is almost negligible; there is very little. This is admitted by the Government officials, by the Sikhs, by the Mahommedans and by the Hindus, but certain classes have been scheduled as depressed classes and certain others of equal status, whether economically backward or otherwise, deprived of certain rights, namely, of purchasing land, and so forth, want to be scheduled along with those others because they are on the same social status.

8854. You are very anxious that they should be included?—I am not anxious; they are anxious. I do not want anybody to be called a depressed class.

8855. I want to ask a few questions, Mr. Chatterjee, regarding Bengal. I think your main complaint is that the Bengal-Hindus were not represented when this Poona Pact was evolved—is that it?—(Mr. B. C. Chatterjee.) That is one of the complaints. My main complaint is—8856. I will take this for the moment because I want to exhaust one at a time. I think it was admitted by your colleague that there were members of the Bengal caste Hindus present both in Bombay and in Poona?—Yes (Mr. J. Bannerjee.) At Poona one caste Hindu was present; that is what I have said.

8857. Were not there dozens from other Provinces?—(Mr. B. C. Chatterjee.) That may be Marquess of Zetland.] Dr. Ambedkar, could not we solve the whole of this problem if you told us the names of the Bengal caste Hindus who were there.

Dr. Ambedkar.

8858. I am giving the names. These names were given in the course of the discussion that took place in the Bengal

31° Juln, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND

Legislative Council on the 14th March, 1933?—Will you kindly give the names?

8859. There was no contradiction at all on that point?—I was in England at the time.

Dr. Ambedkar.

8860. I am quoting from the speech of Mr. Mullick who represented the depressed classes in the Bengal Legislative Council. This is what he says?—(Mr. J. Bannerjee.) He is a nominated member, not an elected representative, I want to make that point clear.

8861. He is a representative of the depressed classes?—And he has been defeated in a constituency before—twice before 8862. What difference does that make to the point I am dealing with? I am on the point whether certain Bengal Hindus were present or not. This was a statement made in the proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council in the course of a speech by a Bengal Depressed Class Member who advocated the Poona Pact "We know that they were men like Swami Satyananda of the Hindu Mission, Babu Haridas Mazumdar, M.A., B.L., of the Amrita Samaj, Babu Pramathanath Banerjee, ex-M.L.C., of Midnapore, Babu S. C. Das Gupta of the Khadi Pratisthan, besides men like Pandit Malavya, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Mr. Rajagopalcharia"?—Excepting one, none of them was present at Poona. That was a statement in the Council.

8863. Will you permit me to go on?—Please answer when I ask a question?—It is an incorrect statement.

8864. I say this statement has not been contradicted by anyone in the Bengal Legislative Council?—I was present on that day. No speech was delivered, but something was read from paper; and it is quite possible that people missed those bits. A paper was read very indistinctly.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar.

8865. The proceedings of your Council are published, are they not?—Yes.

8866. Since the publication of those proceedings has there been any contradiction?—Yes; immediately after the debate was held, as soon as we learnt that certain names were given out, a contradiction was made in the newspapers.

Dr. Ambedkar.

8867. I put it to you that not only were these men present at Bombay?—I am speaking of Poona 8868. I am talking first of all about Bombay. Not only were these men present at Bombay when the sub-committee was appointed, but they had conversations with me individually in my office and urged me to come to a settlement. This is a fact which I disclosed in an interview which I gave to the Bombay Times and which is published on the 17th March, soon after your legislative proceedings were announced?—The very next day I contradicted your statement and said that did not touch the point because three of those members had not, according to your own admission, gone to Poona, and were not present at the time of the Pact. (Mr. B. C. Chatterjee) I just want to say this, that it is nobody's case and I do not think it is Dr. Ambedkar's case—that these gentlemen were sent to Bombay, or a solitary gentleman who was present at Poona was sent there by the Bengali Hindus or any body of Bengali Hindus, they may have been there accidentally or may have been there because they wanted to see the Mahatma who was ill. Some actually went there for the glory of carrying his dead body in a procession.

8869. I will put it to you that if that is the case that it was well known that these men had left Calcutta for the express purpose of attending the Malavya Conference. That has been published in the "Liberty"?—They did not go there on authorisation by any public body in Bengal. They may have gone there on their own business or for some other reason. May I make an offer to Dr. Ambedkar; may I just say this: We, in Bengal, feel it a great slur that there should be a suggestion that there are depressed classes in Bengal. The Bengali Hindu have been going on doing social work for over a century now in order to remove caste barriers and things like that. I ask Dr. Ambedkar to agree to this. The Lothian Committee very fairly formulated two characteristics, two criteria, for determining who are depressed classes, untouchability and unapproachability within a certain distance. I suggest that the Bengal Government should make an enquiry into

31° Julii, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

who are the people in Bengal who are untouchable and unapproachable, and if their number is ascertained we should be willing to give these people their proportion of representation on the Bengal Legislative Council on the basis of a joint electorate.

8870. That is another matter, I am not discussing joint electorates, I am discussing this important point of fact when it was known that certain Bengal caste Hindus were going to Bombay to attend the Malviya Conference. I am quoting to you from the "Liberty" of the 17th September, 1932; it is a paper which is published in Calcutta. I find in column 4 on page 5 of the "Liberty" of that date this report appearing under broad headlines: "Swami Satyananda and others leave for Bombay. Swami Satyananda, Sjs. Hari das Majunder and Jajneswar Mandal of the Amrita Samaj are leaving for Bombay to-night to attend the Malaviya Conference." They were not going on any of their private business?—As far as I am concerned I have never heard of the gentlemen; this is the first time I have heard of them; certainly they have been hiding their light under a bushel as far as Bengal is concerned, and these gentlemen must themselves have sent the report just to advertise that they were going.

8871. My point is that the public of Bengal was aware that certain members from the caste Hindus were proceeding from Bengal to attend the Malaviya Conference, and if the public of Bengal thought that they were not representative it was quite possible for them to send a message to Malaviya not to trust these people?—I submit it is most unfair to the public of Bengal to hold them to a paragraph that appeared casually in some column of the "Liberty."

8872. I am only stating it as a fact that everybody in Bengal ought to know?—Nobody reads the paper through like that. Nobody searches out particular columns to find out things like that. It never came to our notice.

Dr. Ambedkar.] I will not press you further on that.

Sir Austen Chamberlain

8873. Does Mr. Chatterjee mean he was unaware that such a meeting was being held in Bombay?—We were aware that a meeting was being held, but we were completely unaware that anybody was taking it upon himself to go from Bengal to that meeting.

8874. If you had these strong feelings on the subject and you were, in your opinion, the most representative body who could speak on behalf of those who held your views, why did not you send representatives when you became aware of the meeting?—We did not know what was happening there. We, in Calcutta, honestly did not know what was happening there excepting that we heard the news that Mr. Gandhi was going to fast. (Mr. J. Bannerjee) We did not attach any great importance to it. The Malaviya Conference was not going to dispose of the fate of the caste Hindus of Bengal; therefore, nobody went there in any capacity whatever. The Poona Meeting was really important.

8875. You were aware of the meeting, but you did not think it worth attending. That is the position?—I am afraid you are confusing the two meetings at Bombay and Poona. The Pact was signed at Poona and that was the important meeting to which the caste Hindus were not invited and could not go. The meeting at Bombay was a sort of preliminary canter. We were justified in not attaching much importance to it.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

8876. May I put this to you. I do not want to offend you in any way, Mr. Chatterjee, but it appears that, perhaps, the attitude of the Bengal caste Hindus was. "We are not concerned with this; perhaps it will come to nothing; if it helps to save the Mahatma's life, well and good, if it affects us in any way we can repudiate it afterwards"?—(Mr. B. C. Chatterjee) With great respect that was not so. I had the honour to be on the Provincial Franchise Committee and had the honour to co-operate with the Lothian Committee. We went into careful investigation as to who were the Untouchables. That is the whole point for investigation.

Dr. Ambedkar.

8877. You are going away from my point. The reports of what was happening in Bombay and Poona were published regularly fully in the "Liberty" every day. Are you prepared to contradict that?—I am sorry to say I never read this issue of the "Liberty."

8878. I brought the "Liberty." I purposely did not bring the "Statesman" because I thought you would say it is an Anglo-Indian paper?—Why

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND

should I? I cannot imagine myself saying that.

8879 I brought it deliberately because I know it is a Hindu paper²—It is. It comes to my house. I read it occasionally.

8880. I put it to you that the proceedings of the Malavya Conference held on the 20th are given one full front page in this "Liberty"?—I hear that from you.

8881. You can see it for yourself. I will pass it to you?—I accept your word for it.

8882. Similarly, what happened on the 21st is published on the front page fully in the issue of the 22nd²—I dare say.

8883. So that anybody in Bengal would really know what was happening in Bombay and Poona I will put to you one more point?—We thought that before any decision of this weighty character could ever be come to, public bodies in Bengal would be invited to send their representatives to take part in the deliberations.

8884. When the sub-committee was constituted there was no protest made against its composition that there was no representative from Bengal²—They would have no right to 8885 If you refer to the "Liberty" of the 22nd September 1932, it contains the Report of the proposals I made to this sub-committee on the basis of which I was prepared to negotiate. Mr. Jayaker will corroborate me that I did propose certain things on the basis of which I was prepared to co-operate. In my proposals I had demanded 50 seats for Bengal. (Mr. J. L. Bannerjee.) Depressed Classes you mean?

8886 I mean Depressed Classes, and yet there was not a single statement of protest from the Bengal caste Hindus either to Pundit Malavya, who was supposed to negotiate the Pact on this basis, nor did you send anybody to Poona, although you knew I had made this demand which was published, as I say, in a most prominent place in the issue of the 22nd September²—I am sorry, but I am afraid we did not attach as much importance to Dr. Ambedkar's proposals as we ought to have done.

8887 I am sorry. You are to suffer for it. I just want to ask you one or two more questions about this. The announcement of His Majesty accepting the Poona Pact was made on the 26th September, 1932, in the Central Legislature in both Houses. That announcement by His Majesty's Government was acclaimed by everybody in the Central Legislature; there was no protest made then by any member either in the Council of State or in the Legislature against the acceptance of this Pact. Is not that so²—That may be so.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] Bengal is represented in the Central Legislature.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] With reference to an imputation made by Dr. Ambedkar, that when Sir Harry Haig, the Home Member, made an announcement to the Legislative Assembly there was no protest from any member, I wish to draw the attention of the Joint Committee to the fact that it is not in accordance with the practice of the Legislative Assembly when an announcement of a decision by His Majesty's Government is made for any reference or any protest to be addressed by any member of the House.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.

8888 I was in the House when this statement was made by Sir Harry Haig, and it was met by universal acclamation?—(Mr. Bhai Parmanand.) I was also there, but there was no acclamation about it.

Dr. Ambedkar.] There was applause, if you will take the language of the Proceedings.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.

8889 I meant applause, yes²—Some people might have done it.

Dr. Ambedkar.] The whole statement is given in the Legislative Council Proceedings for the 26th September, 1932, Volume 5, No. 5, and after the statement is concluded there is in brackets "applause". The same statement was made in the Council of State. What I want to put is this, is it not a fact that the following gentlemen represented Caste Hindus in the Legislative Assembly?—(Naming them.)

Then in the Council of State there are the following.—(Naming them.)

—(Mr. B. C. Chatterjee.) My answer is that they did not realise the repercussions of the Pact and they are now unanimous in condemning it. (Mr. Bhai Parmanand.) May I explain this point.

8890 I do not know that there is any explanation needed. They are members of the Assembly and they did not protest. With regard to the protests in the Bengal Provincial Council itself after the Pact in September, 1932, there was a

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.]

session of the Bengal Legislative Council in November, 1932?—Yes.

8891. There was no formal resolution moved in the Council protesting against the application of the Poona Pact to Bengal.—(Mr. B. C. Chatterjee.) No.

8892. I am referring to the Report of the Council Proceedings.—I must reply to this question. The first thing we did was to get together all the influential Hindu members of the Council within a short time of the Council Meeting, and we decided that we should jointly—8893. May I have an answer to my question, and then we can have an explanation. I want to know whether there was any formal resolution moved in the Bengal Legislative Council in the November Session which met immediately after the acceptance of the Poona Pact protesting formally against it. That is what I want to know, was there a resolution?—Undoubtedly. I did put in a resolution protesting against the Poona Pact in the November Session, but I was induced to withdraw it by the joint representations of Mr. Rasik Biswas, a member of the Namasudras, an influential member, and Pandit Malavya, because both of them assured me that they would get Dr. Ambedkar to hold another meeting and revise the Poona Pact in view of the facts which were placed before them, and they repeatedly requested me not to press it to a division in the Council without giving them this chance.

8894. Was it moved?—They induced me to withdraw it and on the ground—

8895. It was not moved?—I withdrew it.

8896. It was not moved?—I say I withdrew it.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

8897. You had given notice of it?—I gave notice of it, and, on that representation of Mr. Rasik Biswas and Pandit Malavya, I withdrew it. I did not move it.

8898. In the March Session of 1933, the motion that was discussed was a special motion. The ordinary motion which stood in the name of Mr. Shanti Shukharswar Ray was not moved?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) It could not be reached.

8899. No priority was sought for it?—Priority was sought for it, but priority could not be obtained. There was no time to reach it. Subsequently a special resolution was moved by me.

8900. A month after that resolution was passed, in the March Session of 1933 in the Bengal Legislative Council, a public meeting was held in Calcutta in the Albert Hall, on the 21st April, 1933. It was presided over by one Mr. Sasmal, and that meeting passed a resolution condemning the attitude of the Bengal Legislative Council in protesting against the Poona Pact?—Very possibly.

8901. The proceedings of that Committee are published in full in the "Liberty" of 22nd April, 1933. Is that a fact, or is it not?—Very possibly. I do not know myself. (Mr. Chatterjee) I was in England.

8902. You said that the Bengal Government at the time the Poona Pact was accepted was somewhere in Darjeeling, and that no Hindu was consulted. You said that in answer to Sir Nripendra Sircar?—Yes.

8903 Will you tell us what was the composition of the Bengal Executive in September, 1932. Who were its members, and what was its communal composition?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) There were three Bengali members—no, two Bengali Hindu members in the Bengal Government.

8904 Is it your suggestion that the Bengal Government which had two Bengal Caste Hindu members on it did not approve of the Poona Pact?—I have nothing to suggest about the Government, but I am quite sure that both the Hindu members of the Government had disapproved of it, and had emphatically protested against it.

8905. With respect to the Central Executive you have said one Bengal Hindu was there, Sir B. L. Mitter. Is that so?—Yes, I cannot say anything about Sir B. L. Mitter, but I would ask you to refer to the present member of the Viceroy's Executive Council.

8906 It has been suggested by Sir Nripendra Sircar in the course of his examination that the whole thing was accepted by His Majesty in a sort of emergency created by the fast of Mahatma Gandhi. What I want to put to you is this: Is it not a fact that the first letter written by Mahatma Gandhi to the Government was not dated the 18th August, but was dated the 11th March, 1932 (that letter is addressed to Sir Samuel Hoare); it is practically five months before the letter referred to by Sir Nripendra Sircar, and that is what he says. That is before the communal decision was given; that is my point. This is his statement: "Dear Sir

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Samuel, You will perhaps recollect that at the end of my speech at the Round Table Conference when the Minorities claim was presented I had said that I should resist with my life the grant of separate electorate to the depressed classes. This was not said in the heat of the moment nor by way of any rhetoric. It was meant to be a serious statement", and so on. Then he says "I therefore respectfully inform His Majesty's Government that in the event of their decision creating separate electorate for the depressed classes I must fast unto death." The threat to fast was not given in the letter of the 18th August, after the Communal Decision was given, but was given in the letter of the 11th March, 1932?—Quite true.

8907. And his Majesty's Government gave separate electorate to the depressed classes notwithstanding this threat in the letter of the 11th March?—Our complaint against the Pact is that it perpetuates that very evil of separate electorates.

8908. That is another matter. You had better say that to Mahatma Gandhi; I cannot discuss it?—The award of His Majesty's Government is much more acceptable to us than the Poona Pact.

8909. I will ask you one or two questions about that. Your complaint is that the Poona Pact gives a larger number of seats to the Depressed Classes than were given in His Majesty's Government's Award. I want to draw your attention to the letter of the Prime Minister to Mr. Gandhi dated the 8th September, 1932, and this is what he said. "The number of territorial seats allotted to Muslims is naturally conditioned by the fact that it is impossible for them to gain any further territorial seats and that in most Provinces they enjoy weightage in excess of their population ratio." I want to draw your special attention to this: "The number of special seats to be filled from special Depressed Class constituencies will be seen to be small and has been fixed, not to provide a quota numerically appropriate for the representation of the whole of the Depressed Class population, but solely to secure a minimum number of spokesmen for the Depressed Classes in the Legislature who are chosen exclusively by the Depressed Classes. The proportion of their special seats is everywhere much below the population percentage of the Depressed Classes"—Quite so, because it is expected that many of the Depressed Classes, especially in Bengal, will come in through the general constituencies.

8910. What I want to draw your attention to is this: In giving the Communal Award and apportioning seats to the Depressed Classes His Majesty's Government and the Prime Minister have definitely admitted that those seats are not in proportion to the population ratio and were much below?—Quite true, but, at the same time, the Prime Minister there distinctly makes it clear that the number allotted to the Depressed Classes is less than their numerical proportion, because he specifically mentions the case of Bengal, because in Bengal many of the Depressed Class members would be sure to come in through the general constituencies.

8911. He never mentioned anything about Bengal, I can assure you?—Most certainly he has done so; I have read the Award carefully.

8912. With regard to this, there was a session held—the seventh session of the Bengal Provincial Hindu Conference at Malda, somewhere between the 17th and 19th of September, 1932, under the presidency of Mr. Ramanand Chatterjee. Is that so?—Very possibly.

8913. In the seventh session of the Bengal Provincial Hindu Conference at Malda?—Very possibly. I do not know; I have no personal knowledge.

8914. I want to read to you a resolution that was passed at this Bengal Provincial Hindu Conference, published in "Liberty" of the 19th September, 1932: "This Conference appeals to the so-called Depressed Classes not to demand representation on the basis of separate electorates in the coming Constitution, and affirms its adherence to the Raja-Moonje Pact and its readiness to concede representation to the Depressed Classes according to their population strength through joint electorate even if it means surrender to them of the majority of seats allotted to the Hindus"—(Dr. Moonje.) May I reply to that question? The resolution was passed. We stick to it, and my friend Mr. Chatterjee has made a sporting offer to Dr. Ambedkar. Is he prepared to see what his number would be according to the population basis, the Depressed Classes being defined as untouchables and unapproachables? We are prepared to make this sporting offer to Dr. Ambedkar, and let the whole question be decided in Bengal and the Punjab as to what is the number of the Depressed Classes according to the definition that the Depressed Class member is one who is untouchable or unapproachable. We make the sporting offer.

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.] I do not want to make the fate of my people the sport of party politics and I am afraid I cannot accept that offer.

Lt.-Col. Sir H. Gidney.

8915. What is the size of the membership of the Hindu Mahasabha?—The Hindu Mahasabha represents the whole Hindu community of India. That is the size. It is that size which represents the whole of the Hindus of India.

8916. What would be the rough total membership of this Hindu Mahasabha?—That membership is that membership which meets in the annual sessions, and that membership in each Province often goes to 10,000, 12,000 or 15,000. That is the membership.

8917. You mean to infer that only a few thousands of your Sabha represent the Hindu community of India?—So many thousands in each Province where the Hindu Mahasabha has been held. If Colonel Gidney wants to know if such a system as prevails in England, where there are so many registered members of certain associations, it prevails in India, where I say there is no such system prevailing in India, there is no such system even in the Congress or anywhere.

8918. Do the members pay a fee to belong to this Sabha?—Yes.

8919. You reckon your total according to those who pay the fees?—Yes, in the annual session.

8920. Can you give us the total of your membership?—I have just told you that to each meeting of the annual sessions that are held in the different Provinces, sometimes 15,000 people come, sometimes 10,000, sometimes 12,000.

8921. What position do you hold in this Sabha?—I am holding the position of the working President of the Hindu Mahasabha.

8922. Mr. Chatterjee, in a statement in an early part of your evidence you said you favoured either an alteration of the Poona Pact as far as Bengal is concerned, or you would rather have a joint electorate?—(Mr. B. C. Chatterjee.) Is this on the question of the depressed classes?

8923. Yes?—What I said, on the question of the depressed classes was this, that the Lothian Committee, after a very patient and elaborate investigation, formulated a definition of "Depressed Classes" as implying untouchability and unapproachability within a certain distance, and I suggest that, since the actual number of our untouchables and unapproachables has not been ascertained in any one of the Provinces, this number should first be ascertained; and then those who are actually Untouchables and Unapproachables should be given a representation on the Provincial Council in the proportion that they bear to the total body of the Hindus of the Province on the basis of a joint electorate.

8924. Would I be right if I said that the Hindu community were the monied class of Bengal?—Yes. That is true up to now.

8925. Would I also be right in saying that the Hindu community occupy the highest positions in all Government and other services in Bengal?—They hold the preponderating share of the higher services.

8926. Both in official and subordinate appointments?—Yes.

8927. Would I be right in saying that the fear of the Hindu community is more one of power than of politics?—What is the distinction between the two? I have not appreciated the distinction between power and politics.

8928. I mean material power as contrasted with political ideas?—We Bengalee Hindus should be quite glad to have all our offices filled with Muhammedans if they were fully qualified for those offices.

8929. Further on in your evidence you said that if the White Paper were passed it would meet with two sections—one whom you describe as obstructionists and the other whom you said would be job-hunters?—Yes.

8930. Which section do you think the Hindus would join?—I said those are the two sections of the Hindu community who would come in—the job-hunters and the wreckers.

8931. Do you mean to say that the White Paper would only be administered by the Hindus or jointly with the Muhammedans? Do you only speak for the Hindus?—No, not at all. What I want is a joint electorate on the basis of which a man could come to the Provincial Council, be he Hindu or be he Muhammedan, and if the Muhammedans came in with a majority into the Provincial Council on the basis of a joint electorate, I should

31^o Juhi, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. RANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

welcome it and I should submit to their Government with the greatest alacrity. What I object to is that the Muhammedan Community should be guaranteed a perpetual unalterable majority on the basis of a communal electorate which absolutely puts an end to responsible government.

8931a. Under the present conditions, are you aware that the Hindus in Bengal have driven out all other communities from the majority of appointments. When I say "driven out," I use the expression very widely—I mean that they occupy all the appointments, and the other communities are not given them at all?—Under the conditions of a fair field and no favour the Hindus have gradually ousted many people of other communities. Take the Calcutta Bar, for example, at one time it was dominated by the European element, at the present moment, on the footing of purely open competition, I think the Hindus now dominate it.

8932. I am not talking of professions. I am talking of such a thing as the Calcutta Corporation, such Departments as the offices of Posts and Telegraphs, and such other services where they preponderate to the loss of the Mussulmen and other minority communities?—All I ask for is a fair field and no favour, and I should welcome everybody coming in under those conditions and qualifying for the public services in any department of the Government.

8933. Would you not favour the safeguarding of those minorities?—Not by, if I may use a vulgarism, mollicoddling them. We Hindus had to come all the way to England to sit in open competition with Englishmen and sit for examinations in their own language, and we have had to compete on those terms and have got in. It would absolutely destroy the moral fibre of India if any community asked to enter the public services under conditions of artificial encouragement or culture.

8934. I am not talking about superior services. I am talking of the services that are administered by the Government of India and Provincial Governments—of subordinate and upper subordinate grades?—I submit that the subordinate is entitled to the same standard of recognition from the public as any other 8935. Are you a Member of the Calcutta Corporation?—No.

8936. Would I be right if I said that the Calcutta Corporation is a mirror reflecting the political views of Bengal?—At the present moment, now that we have introduced a joint electorate into the Calcutta Corporation, it is so. Now that we have introduced the principle of joint electorates into the Calcutta Corporation, it is a mirror.

8937. And that would be supported by the fact that at the last election of the Mayor and Aldermen of the Calcutta Corporation a majority of the Swarajists got into power. Is that right?—Yes. I dare say the majority were Swarajists.

8938. Are you aware of the resolution which was passed by the Calcutta Corporation who killed an I.C.S. judge?—I am not aware of any such resolution not aware of any such resolution.

8939. Do you not know of a resolution that was passed by the Calcutta Corporation which was also published in their Gazette?—Praising the assassin of a judge? I do not know of any such resolution.

8940. The assassination of an official?—I have no knowledge of it.

8941. You do not know of it?—No; I do not think the Corporation could have done such a thing.

8942. It was mentioned to this Committee that that resolution was passed, and it was read out to this Committee?—Kindly give me the particulars.

8943. I do not know the name of the man who was killed or the assassin, but I think Members of the Committee will remember Mr. Page reading it. I think it was Judge Garlick?—I do not know of any public body in Bengal which passed a resolution praising the man who killed Mr. Garlick, because he was the one man who was held in the highest estimation by all Swarajists and non-Swarajists.

(After a short adjournment.)

Mr M. R. Jayaker

8944. I want just to ask a few questions in connection with the suggestions you have made for improving the White Paper from your point of view. The Hindu Mahasabha is not purely a religious association but it also takes political work in hand?—(Dr. Moonje.) Yes.

8945. Is it the fact you have branches all over the principal Provinces?—All over the Provinces.

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

8946. You have no regular membership?
—There is no custom in India of having regular membership.

8947. May I take it that what you put by way of suggestion for improving the White Paper from your point of view has the support of all those provincial organisations?—Yes.

8948. I will put you some questions which are more general than particular now. If any of those improvements were granted are you in a position to state that you will be able to form a political Party in India to work the Constitution?—Of course.

8949. Not in the sense of breaking it but in the sense of working the Constitution?—If my conditions were incorporated in the Constitution it is impossible for me to break it. I will work it out and I will keep on working it out.

8950. Will you be able to form a big Party in India to work it?—Yes, I am quite sure.

8951. Your answer does not depend on the attitude of the Congress. Whatever the Congress may do or may not do, you think you have enough support in the country to form a big Party to work the Constitution?—I think my past experience gives me confidence that I shall be able to form a big Party to work it.

8952. And enter the Ministry and work the administration through the Ministries?—That is quite right.

8953. What is your own belief—what is your own expectation? If these improvements are made in the White Paper do you think you would be able to draw into working the Constitution a substantial section of Congressmen?—I think so—a large section of Congressmen will come in.

8954. Would you give me more definitely what percentage of Congressmen would come in?—Well, I think the 5 or 10 per cent. of people who have got religious faith in what is called non-co-operation may be out, but those who take the political view will be all in this Party to work out the Constitution if our improvements which I have insisted on in my statement are carried out.

8955. I am asking this question because there is a section of people in this country who believe that there is no use launching a Constitution of this character for India because the only political Party in India, namely, Congress, will not work it and there will be no other Party formed in the country to work the Constitution. Therefore I am asking you, can you assure the Committee that you are in a position to “deliver the goods,” to use an expression which is very often current in this country?—The Congress itself is in a non-co-operation mood simply because Congress has not yet been assured that there is going to be self-government and Dominion status. If these improvements are carried out, the people of India and even Congress will see a very great step has been taken towards self-government and Dominion status, and I am positive a large percentage of Congressmen also will feel that the Constitution should be worked.

8956. I think that is perfectly true. I have got that answer, but I am leaving Congress out for the moment, and I am asking you, outside of Congress, do you think you can get enough support to form a big Party to work this Constitution?—I am quite confident of that.

8957. I want to ask you another point about the Rawlinson Committee's Report to which you have made reference. Is not it the fact that copies of this Report were distributed to the members of the Defence Committee at the first Round Table Conference?—So far as I know copies were not distributed but—it will be on the record—if I remember aright at this moment, it was said that copies of this Report would be supplied to the members. That is my recollection at the present moment.

8958. But the main incidents of this Report, if I might just recall this to your mind, formed a subject matter of discussion before the Defence Committee of the Round Table Conference?—On the contents of that Report—assuming my recollection to be correct—the whole discussion was upon that.

8959. It was not then treated as confidential?—No, we did not think of it as that.

Mr. R. A. Butler

8960. There is some confusion about this particular Report. This particular Report was never supplied to the Defence Committee?—I have said these Reports were not supplied to us at the first Round Table Conference, but the information was given to us that there would be no objection in supplying these Reports to the members if and when required. I think this will be borne out by the Report of the first Round Table Conference.

31^o Julii, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA, Mr. R. M. DESEMHUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8961. Is it your recollection that summaries of the contents of those Reports were supplied to the members?—That is so.

8962. Am I not right in my recollection of that?—I think you are right.

Mr. Isaac Foot.

8963. My recollection is that a request was made for it when Mr. Thomas was in the Chair, and Mr. Thomas promised that it should be made available. My recollection, however, does not go beyond that—I think the matter was discussed in that way.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8964. My recollection goes a little beyond that. I think summaries of that Report and of another Report of 1922 were given overnight—I may be wrong but that is my recollection?—Summaries of some Report were given—there is no question about that fact—so far as I remember, but I cannot at the present moment remember that the summary was given us of this particular Rawlinson Report. The whole discussion in the Defence Sub-Committee was based upon the contents of this Report.

Chairman.] I want to be perfectly clear about this. These summaries were not published?

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] They were not published. They were supplied, if my recollection is right. The point was raised by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Sir Mahomed Shafi.

Mr. R. A. Butler.] These summaries formed part of Appendix VII.

Chairman.] Were they published as such?

Mr. R. A. Butler.

8965. Yes?—I think they are published in the Report, if I remember aright.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] I do not think they are here.

Mr. R. A. Butler.] These are in an abbreviated form. They are not in this edition. This is naturally an abbreviated volume which does not contain all the proceedings of the Round Table Conference.

Chairman.] What are you referring to?

Mr. R. A. Butler.] This is one of the Blue Books published in connection with the Round Table Conference.

Chairman.] Thank you.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8966. Have you seen, at all events, the Report that was referred to by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru?—That was when we first heard of it—for the first time when it was raised by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Sir Mahomed Shafi.

8967. It was then pointed out, in any event, in 1921 a person of such military experience as Commander-in-Chief, Lord Rawlinson, thought it was feasible and consistent with the safety and tranquillity of India to furnish a scheme which would mean the Indianisation of the Indian Army within thirty years?—Yes.

8968. That is the only point you wish to make in your memorandum?—Quite so.

8969. You have no desire to disclose any particular confidential information but merely this fact?—Yes.

8970. Namely, that this high military authority thought it was feasible in 1921 and consistent with the safety and tranquillity of India that the Indian Army could be Indianised within thirty years. Is that what you wish to bring out?—That is exactly my point. I am not concerned with the Committee as such but I am concerned with the fact that the Committee came to the conclusion that the Indianisation of the Army would be feasible in thirty years.

8971. You are using it as an argument in favour of the feasibility of that proposal?—Yes, I must.

8972. It was based on feasibility?—I assume it must have been.

8973. That would be the main consideration before the mind of a functionary like the Commander-in-Chief in India?—If it was a thing which could not be regarded as safe for India, I do not think a high military authority like Lord Rawlinson, Commander-in-Chief, would ever give out such a scheme of Indianisation as he has done.

8974. May I ask your attention to the Report of the Defence Committee of the first Round Table Conference, of which you were a member. In that Report in paragraph 3, towards the bottom of the paragraph, reference is made to this Rawlinson Committee's Report, and I just want to read one short sentence to you. After stating the different views

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

as to whether the Indian Army could be Indianised, this is what the Report says: "The difference in these two views being fundamental, the Sub-Committee decided to incorporate these in its Report, and the Chairman further undertook that, when, in pursuance of the resolution of this sub-Committee, Expert Committees were appointed, those Expert Committees would as a matter of course take into consideration the proceedings of the previous Committees and in particular the proceedings of the Military Requirements Committee of 1921"—that is the Rawlinson Committee—"and the Committee on the Indianisation of the Indian Army of 1922." You were a member of the Committee which was appointed, and, in pursuance of the express wish of the Committee, and in the course of that Committee's deliberations, I understand you were supplied with a copy of this Rawlinson Committee's Report. Am I right in that?—Quite so.

8975. May I just ask you, Pandit, a question or two on your memorandum, beginning at page 6, where you object to the latter part of paragraph 122 of the White Paper?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) Yes, that is quite right.

8976. Which is the part to which you object?—It is the part which begins: "But no law will be deemed to be discriminatory for this purpose on the ground only that it prohibits either absolutely or with exceptions the sale or mortgage of agricultural land", and so on.

8977. I follow that?—It is from there up to the end of the paragraph.

8978. You object to it because you think that it will make possible the enactment of Acts like the Punjab Land Alienation Act?—More than that—that and something else. If you permit me, I will explain my objection. This paragraph 122 is really meant for the protection of minorities, and it is against discriminatory legislation in the first part, but the latter portion which begins with the words "or any part thereof" permits discriminatory legislation of all kinds. It practically nullifies what is said in the first part of this paragraph 122. I will give an illustration: "But no law will be deemed to be discriminatory for this purpose on the ground only that it prohibits either absolutely or with exceptions the sale or mortgage of agricultural land in any area to any person not belonging to some class recognised as being a class of persons engaged in, or connected with, agriculture in that area." Supposing in the United Provinces—I leave out the Punjab for the moment because it is the hotbed of the Punjab Land Alienation Act—the majority declared that the Anglo-Indians are a community which are unconnected with agriculture and therefore they should not be permitted to purchase agricultural land or to mortgage agricultural land, then those people, the Anglo-Indians, would probably be driven out slowly and slowly and would not be permitted to buy agricultural land in that Province, or for the matter of that in any other Province, if such laws were passed. So in the same way the Depressed Classes, the Indian Christians, or any caste for the matter of that, could be interdicted from purchasing agricultural land, which really forms the main strength of people's maintenance in an agricultural land like India. So it is not a protection at all to the minorities. The object of this is merely to protect the discriminatory character of the Punjab Land Alienation Act, but I entirely fail to understand (and I wish some member of the Committee would explain it to me) why the second clause was put in just after this recognising "the existence of some right, privilege or disability attaching to the members of a community by virtue of some privilege, law or custom having the force of law." Does it mean that all these disabilities which exist at the present time can be extended, or that the privileges which certain people enjoy can be retained or extended merely on the ground that they have existed in the past? I therefore feel the effect of this clause, which was really the result of a desire to protect minorities, whether those minorities were Hindu, Muslim, Christian or Sikh, is to place in the hands of the majority, whether of religion, caste or race, such oppressive powers that it would be open to the Legislature to pass discriminatory legislation of all kinds.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] Is not it the fact that this goes too far, "or recognises the existence of some right, privilege or disability attaching to the members of a community by virtue of some privilege, law or custom having the force of law"? That would exclude, for example, any legislation prohibiting

31^o July, 1933] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND

polygamy, because polygamy is a custom protected by law of a particular class of the community.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan] By personal law.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

8979 By personal law. It will prevent all future legislation giving women a right to inheritance in their husbands' property, because it will be a sexual disability to which women are subject by law or custom having the force of law. would not it have that effect?—Quite so That is why I said I should like to know what is meant by this The first portion I understand is meant for the protection or saving of the discriminatory character of the Punjab Land Alienation Act With regard to the second part, I do not know what the draughtsman had in mind when he put in these words. I do not know what his intention was, but the result to an ordinary lawyer would be that any kind of custom or privilege which would be discriminatory in character could be not only maintained but extended I go further Under his special responsibility, the Governor would not be able to apply the Act for the protection of a minority Supposing the Punjab Legislative Council passed an Act that such and such people are not to be permitted to purchase land, and the Governor came along and said: "You cannot pass such laws, because this is against a minority," the reply would be, "There is a new Constitution giving us this power. You are debarred from questioning the power of the Legislature to pass a law of this kind." Therefore, the special responsibility of the Governor would be a dead letter Then again I go further. In the Punjab a custom has arisen by which posts are given on the basis of agricultural and non-agricultural tribal rights. It has been recognised by the Punjab Government that people are entitled to get posts in the State as the result of their being members of agricultural communities. I will put in, with your permission, my Lord Chairman, an annual statement which is prepared by the Punjab Government which would show that these posts are given to agricultural tribes and non-agricultural tribes, taking into consideration their caste or tribe. Such a thing is unheard of in other provinces or places—the Punjab Land Alienation Act was not meant for purposes of this kind even in the Punjab

Chairman.

8980. Would it satisfy you if I have it made available to the Committee and do not publish it on the Notes?—That would serve my purpose quite well. (Document handed in) The position is this. Not only is that printed and published by the Punjab Government but resolutions have been moved in the Punjab Legislative Council asking for the distribution of posts on the basis of agricultural and non-agricultural tribes, and a sort of custom has grown up that such posts are to be given to members of the agricultural tribes, and admissions to the schools and colleges are regulated on a basis of this kind. There is one incident which I cannot but bring to the notice of this august Assembly, which is of very great importance, which happened only recently No doubt you have heard of the Hydro-Electric Scheme which is now about to work in the Punjab. A member of the agricultural tribe moved a resolution in the Punjab Legislative Council that agriculturalists should be given electricity at a concession rate. That was moved by a Sikh gentleman. The Punjab Government resisted that with all its might. They said. This is a commercial department and we cannot possibly give concessions but everybody must pay the price for the electricity who wants to get it; and the resolution was carried by the casting vote of the President If you study the Punjab Legislative Council debates you will find that privileges of all sorts and kinds are demanded on the basis of caste and religion.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

8981. We have gone a great deal beyond my question. My question only related to legislation because paragraph 122 relates to legislation. It does not speak of resolutions or departmental matters or administrative orders. Therefore, I wanted to ask you whether, in objecting to that part of paragraph 122, you had in view legislation like the Punjab Land Alienation Act?—Quite so.

8982. Would you just explain to the Committee what it is you object to about the Punjab Land Alienation Act? You speak of it but you give us no idea of what is the objectionable feature to you of that Act?—I will just explain that. In 1900 the Punjab Land Alienation Act was passed—

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

8983. I do not want you to go into the whole context of the Act but will you give us the features which you regard as objectionable?—Section 3 of the Punjab Land Alienation Act defines agriculturists on the basis of tribes, that is to say, a person is an agriculturalist not because he pursues the profession of agriculture but because he belongs to a notified agricultural tribe, which, in other words, is a definition based on birth. In the Punjab the population is thus cut up into two classes, agricultural tribes and non-agricultural tribes. The agricultural tribes are a little less than 50 per cent and the non-agricultural tribes are a little above 51 per cent. This is a feature of the Punjab Land Alienation Act which is discriminatory in character on the ground of birth. I object very strongly to that because many inequalities and injustices have sprung up on account of this qualification. I want this discriminatory character of that Act to be removed and an occupational definition of agriculturists to be put in.

8984. Supposing the definition was based upon occupation and not upon caste and birth, your objection to the Punjab Land Alienation Act would be removed?—Entirely.

8985. Then, on page 20, towards the end of your Memorandum, you speak about the High Courts being centralised. You draw the attention of the Committee to certain reports like the Statutory Commission Report, the Nehru Committee Report, and the Third Round Table Conference proceedings with a reference to the memorandum prepared by Sir Maurice Gwyer and Sir Claud Schuster. Will you just tell the Committee what the Nehru Report is?—It is a report of an All-Parties Conference which took place in 1928 and drew up a constitution for India.

8986. It is a report of a Conference of all political parties in India?—Of all political parties in India—the Congress, the Hindus, the Muslims and the Moderates—every one of the parties.

8987. They recommended what?—They recommended that it should be a central subject.

8988. In the next paragraph you refer to some experience of your own, or at least I assume so. Is it your own experience that you are stating in the next paragraph?—Yes, I have seen in the Punjab Council efforts made to bring the High Court into discussion and debate. Most of those resolutions were disallowed on certain technical grounds, but somehow or other on indirect resolutions regarding the stenographers, or something of that kind, the High Court has been brought into discussion and debate. If provincial autonomy is granted and the High Court is made a provincial subject I am afraid that the integrity and independence of the High Court is bound to be affected. I draw the attention of the Committee to the White Paper where it deals with certain matters of this kind; for instance, in List 3 (Concurrent): "Jurisdiction, powers and authority of all Courts (except the Federal Court, the Supreme Court and Rent and Revenue Courts) with respect to the subjects in this List. Civil Procedure, including the Law of Limitation and all matters now covered by the Indian Code of Civil Procedure." A communal majority can always restrict the right of appeal in certain matters, for example, suits concerning money lenders, and so on, and in civil procedure on such matters as the Law of Limitation. Limitation can be cut down if the communal majority find that the minority misbehaves. Such a thing has been done in the Punjab Legislative Council. Similarly, the maintenance of all Courts is made a provincial subject under List 2 (Exclusively Provincial), Clause 28. "Administration of justice, including the constitution and organisation of all Courts within the Province," etc., "and the maintenance of all Courts within the Province." Sometimes you find people who had hoped to get judgeships in the High Court trying to ridicule the Court by means of the Legislative Council. If the High Court required so many stenographers, for instance, it will be open to the Legislative Council to throw out those demands.

8989. This is the sentence in your Memorandum to which I wish to draw attention. "A common method adopted by some members of the Punjab Council is to propose cuts in the expenditure of the High Courts and then bring High Court matters into debate and discussion"—Yes.

8990. Do those matters relate to the way the High Court dispenses justice?—No, that they cannot do.

8991. What are these matters?—The appointments in the administrative staff of the High Court.

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr J L BANNERJEE, Mr G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R M DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND

8992. But what are they—is it the appointment of the judges?—The appointment of the judges cannot be discussed.

8993. What is it that is discussed that you refer to here?—Questions with regard to the staff of the High Court—that so many people should be taken on on the grounds of caste and religion in the High Court and the High Court is not doing justice in that respect.

8994 How is that discussion likely to interfere with the independence of the High Court?—Supposing the High Court does not want a particular man and somebody is pressing the claims of that particular man, but the High Court only wants a man on merit, then the Legislative Council at the instance of a dissatisfied member of the Council may refuse the grant and thus bring the integrity and independence of the High Court under its own power.

8995. How is this evil likely to be removed by making the High Court a matter for the Central Government?—Because the Central Government is removed from the provincial atmosphere, and it is very difficult for a man to influence a Central Government in the same manner as in the provinces.

Mr. R. A. Butler

8996. I think the Pandit will have observed from section 98 that the expenses of the High Court are not votable?—I take it that is the salary of the High Court Judges.

Mr R. A. Butler.] If you read the subsection you will see that it is a wide application. I am referring to paragraph 9, sub-section (iii), on page 63 of the White Paper, but I do not think it is necessary for me to read it all out.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

8997. “The salaries and pensions—including pensions payable to their dependants—of Judges of the High Court or Chief Court or Judicial Commissioners; and expenditure certified by the Governor, after consultation with his Ministers as required for the expenses of those Courts”?—“After consultation with his Ministers”—I would object to that as there is bound to be a conflict between the Ministers and the High Court That is exactly my position.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

8998. But it is “after consultation with his Ministers,” not “on the advice of the Ministers.” There is a difference between “after consultation with his Ministers” and “on the advice of his Ministers”?—Where are you reading from?

Mr R. A. Butler.

8999 It is on page 63, paragraph 9, sub-section (iii)?—Yes, I see the passage But may I point out the Governor cannot always defy his Ministers. That is exactly the position.

Mr R. A. Butler.] I think the Pandit will realise that the term “after consultation with his Ministers” has a different meaning from the term “on the advice of his Ministers” These are terms that we are using in our constitutional discussions—they are different in their meaning.

Mr M. R. Jayaker.

9000 Supposing the provincial Government wanted to retain control of the appointments relating to the lower judiciary but agreed to transfer the High Court to the control of the Central Government, would you agree to that?—What is happening now is this—

9001. Have you understood my question?—I think so, but perhaps you would repeat it.

9002. Supposing the High Court were transferred to the Central Government control and the appointments to the lower judiciary were made by the provincial Government, would you agree to that proposal?—It would be a better proposal than the present one, but it would not be an ideal one.

9003. I know that, but would you agree to that proposal?—There is no question of my agreement. I would prefer it to this 9004. Would it find favour with the Hindu Mahasabha for whom you are speaking?—I am not speaking as for the Hindu Mahasabha—I am only speaking now as a citizen of the State.

9005 Would that class of opinion that you claim to represent here be satisfied with that proposal which I have just suggested?—It would be more satisfied no doubt. I consider it would be better satisfied with that than with the existing recommendation, but the best thing would be to fill up these appointments to the judiciary purely on the basis of merit, which is not the case under the circular of the Punjab Government, where posts are filled on the basis of communalism.

9006. Do you suggest that the big positions like the positions of High Court Judges are filled on communal

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.]

grounds?—Well, it is the experience in the Punjab that these posts are given on the basis of communalism. I have said so in my Memorandum.

9007. Never mind about that. Are the people who are appointed to be High Court Judges appointed because they belong to a particular caste or class?—I do not know whether I shall be open to be attacked for contempt of Court, but I will take the risk, and I am bound to say that is so.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9008. May I put to you a few questions on the Poona Pact. The Poona Pact was promoted by the single desire of Mahatma Gandhi and his friends to substitute joint electorates for separate electorates—(Dr. Moonje.) Yes.

9009. Having considered at leisure what you said in a hurry, do you think that you have achieved the purpose of ensuring joint electorates in accordance with the terms of the Poona Pact?—No.

9010. Has the mischief which you wanted to guard against of separate electorates still endured—is that so or is it not so?—It is perpetuated.

9011. Therefore all concerned entered into this Pact on the mutual mistake that they were contracting for joint electorates but in the result they have found they have contracted for the very thing that they wished to avoid?—I could not say it went to that extent because the people concerned were very intelligent people. I can only say this much. We were under the threat of the loss of Mahatma Gandhi's life and all considerations at that time were put aside except that Mahatma Gandhi's life should be saved.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9012. Having saved his life you want to go back now on the Pact?—No. May I reply to that question. The question of the Poona Pact was re-opened only because Sir Rabindranath Tagore went to Mahatma Gandhi and wanted to re-open the question and he said "Let it be re-opened".

9013. Was not it re-opened by you?—No, it was re-opened by Dr. Ambedkar himself.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] Is there anything immoral or unconstitutional where all parties to a contract make the contract under a common mistake which they afterwards discover in them asking for that contract to be amended or re-opened?

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] Is that a question you need ask the witness?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] You said I put a question about the Poona Pact being made in view of the position of Mahatma Gandhi and the desire to save his life, and you remarked now that his life is saved you want to re-open the Poona Pact. Therefore, I think I am entitled to ask the witness that question.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] The witness said "no" and I am satisfied with that.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] He did not say "no".

Mr. Zafrulla Khan

9014. He said he did not want to go to that extent.—I said the Poona Pact was re-opened for a reason. The initiative for re-opening was taken by Sir Rabindranath Tagore and it was felt it should be re-opened it should be re-opened completely.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] I quite follow that.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9015. Three objections have been taken with reference to the position of Bengal in this matter. One is that while a large number of telegrams were sent supporting the Poona Pact to save the life of Mahatma Gandhi, none of the Bengal representatives and indeed no accredited representative from that Province, sent any telegram or message that the Poona Pact was unfavourable to Bengal.—(Mr. Bannerjee.) Telegrams sent to whom?

9016. To the authorities—either the Government of India or the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister.—(Mr. R. C. Chatterjee.) The position was this. The members of the Legislative Council did record their protest publicly in the newspapers, and they took it for granted that the Government would take notice of this protest. They felt, however, that the Poona Pact having been concluded under the authority of Mr. Gandhi, and having had the blessing of the Government in India within twenty-four hours, it was a very difficult matter to interfere in individually. They thought it would be better for the members of the Legislative Council to wait and to meet together and to dismiss the matter, which they did, and they formulated a joint protest and sent it forward to the Government. But the members of the Legislative Council could not meet together until the Legislative Council sat in November. As soon as the Legislative Council sat in November we met together, deliberated on the matter, formulated our protest and cabled the same to Sir N. N. Sircar with the request that he would put it to the Prime Minister. That was within a few days of the meeting of the Legislative Council in November.

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

9017 For how many days had the Poona Pact been under discussion in public?—Well, it began with the letter of Mr. J. L. Bannerjee?—(Mr. J. L. Bannerjee.) No, the point to remember that it was only discussed from the 30th to the 4th.

9018. Do you think you could ascertain the wishes of 50 millions of the people of Bengal with a period of four days?—No.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] It has been said that Sir Rabindranath Tagore sent a telegram which was handed in by Sir N. N. Sircar. I should like that to be shown to the witness.

Chairman. Will you put your question?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9019. Is Sir Rabindranath Tagore a leader of any political party in Bengal?—(Mr. J. L. Bannerjee.) No, he is not a leader of any political party in Bengal. He was not a party to the Pact and when he sent his telegram to the Prime Minister he did not even, on his own admission, know the contents of the Pact. That telegram which was handed in to the Chairman was published one month before the Pact was signed in a magazine which is the mouthpiece of Sir Rabindranath Tagore.

9020. Is he a Brahmin?—He is a Brahmin.

9021. Is it the fact that Sir Rabindranath Tagore is not connected with any political organisation in Bengal?—No, he is not, he has emphatically declared again and again that he does not wish to be connected with any political organisation.

9022. Now it has been said that the first protest that came from Bengal after the decision of His Majesty's Government was after three months?—That is so.

9023. What is your reply to it?—The protest was made within a week after the Poona Pact was concluded, but I do not know whether any protest was forwarded to the Prime Minister or to His Majesty's Government here. (Mr. Chatterjee.) The protest was not forwarded until the Members of the Council all met and then acted together. (Mr. Bannerjee.) That was within less than two months.

9024. A question was put to you by one of our colleagues that in the Calcutta Corporation, where you have substituted joint electorates, the Swarajist element has a predominating majority?—Yes.

9025. Does the Swarajist majority in the Calcutta Corporation reflect the views of the taxpayers of Calcutta?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) Since they are in a majority, they can legitimately claim to represent their views.

9026. Would you regard the Swarajists as political outlaws?—Certainly not.

9027. Will you not give them the same chance as the other taxpayers to influence the decision of the Corporation by securing a majority if they can?—Certainly.

9028. And give yourself the right of turning them out, if you can?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) I may say that the Swarajists secured their election to the Calcutta Corporation, not upon any political ticket, but upon the record of their achievements in the municipal sphere.

9029. Can you contemplate any Constitution which is intended to keep out any section of political opinion from the working of that Constitution, and do you think that would be conducive to the peace and content of the country?—Certainly not.

9030. Now I will ask one question of Pandit Chand. You have said in your Memorandum, and you have repeated it just now, that the effect of Clause 122 is to stereotype the distinction between agricultural tribes and non-agricultural tribes in your Province?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) Yes.

9031. Do I take it that under the law to which you object, a member of an agricultural tribe, if he takes to service or trade, and a member of a non-agricultural tribe, if he exclusively takes to agriculture for his living, still remains a member of an agriculturist or non-agriculturist tribe, according to his caste, irrespective of what his occupation and profession may be?—That is so.

9032. Then it is an artificial division, partition of the country into agricultural and non-agricultural tribes, based

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.]

upon caste, which you object to. Is that so?—Yes.

Mr. Butler.] I think, my Lord Chairman, it would not be quite correct to say that the Act is based upon caste alone?—It is based upon caste.

9033. If I may quote, I think it is based more upon tribe, and not on the caste?—Caste and tribe mean the whole thing.

9034. I shall use these words: The object of the Act was to “maintain the old framework of society and keep the land in the hands of the tribes we found in possession of it,” and so the word “caste” would be an inaccurate description in the Act?—Caste and tribe mean the same thing

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9035. May I put one question to Pandit Chand Is it or is it not a fact that Brahmins would be a caste in the Punjab?—Yes.

9036. Is it, or is it not, a fact that Brahmins in some districts are scheduled as agricultural tribes and in certain other districts not so?—In some districts they are scheduled as “B” class agriculturists, which is a worse thing than non-agriculturists, and in others not at all.

9037. Is it, or is it not a fact, for instance, that Syeds are scheduled as agriculturists in some districts and not in others?—73 per cent. are agriculturists, and they are described as agriculturist tribes, while Brahmins are 69 per cent. agriculturists and are not described as agriculturists.

9038. I am raising the point that there are several castes which in some districts are scheduled as agriculturists and in others they are not?—Quite right, that is true. The distinction is based on birth.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9039. What happens in the case of a person belonging to that tribe which is scheduled, but who is not, in fact, an agriculturist? Does he get the benefit of the Punjab Land Alienation Act or not?—Yes. certainly.

9040. He gets the benefit, although he does not pursue the occupation of an agriculturist?—Perfectly right. I will give you an instance. Supposing a piece of land is sold by a member of an agricultural tribe, and it is offered for sale in the market, my friend Chandri Zafrulla Khan would be entitled to purchase it, and I should not be, though we are both pursuing the same profession of law.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9041. I would not be entitled to purchase unless the seller was a member of the agriculturist tribe, and I happened to be a resident in the district in which the land was situated?—Certainly. The illustration I am giving is this. My friend, Chandri Zafrulla Khan, lives in Lahore, so do I. The seller, let us say, Sardar Buta Singh, lives in Lahore. He is a lawyer by profession. He sells his land. I shall not be able to purchase it, neither will Chandri Zafrulla Khan be able to purchase it, because Chandri's caste or tribe is Jat, mine is Brahmin. Profession does not matter.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9042. I take it that what you object to in Clause 122 is that the check, the future Constitution, seeks to place on the power of the Legislature is by saying that the Federal and Provincial Legislatures would have no power to make laws. Is that so?—You mean the first part?

9043. Yes?—The first part restricts the passing of legislation which is discriminatory, and prohibits, if a law is passed, discriminating—

9043A. I am not dealing with that point. The question I put to you was what you object to is the check that the British Parliamentary enactment is likely to place upon the power of the Indian Legislatures in matters dealt with in Clause 122?—Please let me explain myself. All the minorities wanted the first part of the clause—that is to say, a prohibition by the Constitution against discriminatory legislation. That we wanted, every minority wanted that, as I have said in my Memorandum, but we did not want the various exceptions or provisos at the end of Clause 122.

9044. You accept the principle of Article 122, but you think it is too wide?—The principle of Article 122 is correct. It should prohibit discriminatory legislation on the basis of one's religion, descent, caste, colour, or place of birth; but the effect of the provisos is not only to nullify what is stated in Article 122, but to give vast power of oppression to the majorities, and to enable them to pass discriminatory legislation.

9045. One last question I wish to put to Dr. Moonje You have said that you

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

represent the Hindu Mahasabha. Do I understand that the Hindu Mahasabha is the only organised body of Hindu opinion in India?—(Dr. Moonje.) That is the only organised body next to the Congress in India.

9046. The Congress is a non-communal body. The Hindu Mahasabha is a communal body, and it has at its becking the bulk of Hindu society in India?—The Hindu Mahasabha is a communal body in so far as it is composed only of Hindus. The Hindu Mahasabha is essentially a national body, so far as the political principles which it preaches and insists on for the Constitution of India are concerned, the entire Hindu community is at the back of the Hindu Mahasabha.

Chairman.

9047. I just want to be certain that I understood an answer of yours this morning. Do I understand that the membership of the Hindu Mahasabha is not scheduled—that you have no list of members, and that there is no subscription?—No, there is a subscription. Without subscriptions, nobody can be a member of the Hindu Mahasabha sessions, but what I said was that in India there is no custom, up to now, as it is the custom in England, that the organisation keeps a regular register of all the members.

9048. No register of members is kept?—A list of the members and a list of the entire body of the Hindu Mahasabha is not kept, nor of any of the other Associations.

9049. But local headquarters do keep their list of members?—Yes.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.

9050. What is the subscription?—Five annas.

9051. One anna more than the Congress?—Yes.

Sir A. P. Patro.

9052. When, is it paid?—It is paid every year to the Association of which he is a member. If he is a member of a Provincial Association, it is paid to that Association; if he is a member of the All-India Mahasabha, he pays it.

9053. Are there any Constitutional rules?—Yes.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.

9054. But he only pays, if he attends the Annual Meetings?—No, he pays the subscription annually whether he attends or does not attend.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] Then you ought to have a list.

Sir A. P. Patro.

9055. May we have your Constitutional Rules?—I shall file them.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

9056. Dr. Moonje, may I draw your attention to the pamphlet, No. 57, wherein you say: "Hindusthan, the land of Hindus"?—Yes.

9057. By Hindusthan, you mean India?—I have used the Indian word for India.

9058. Does the "land of the Hindus" include the 77,000,000 Muslims?—I have already said that the Hindu Mahasabha is a national body in its politics and it means the land where the Hindus live, whether by religion they are Hindus or Christians.

9059. Therefore, the word "Hindus," there, covers Muslims?—Yes. Outside India, Muslims are known as Hindus. If you like, I can explain my point a little further.

9060. I simply did not understand what you meant. If you look at your sentence, it says Hindus and Sikhs. Hindus there, includes Mussulmans? "It is the Hindus and Sikhs of the Province who in their kinship with the Hindus and Sikhs of this vast country, called the Hindusthan, the land of the Hindus, are the real and most reliable gate-keepers of India"?—Yes.

9061. So, in that sentence, by "the land of the Hindus," you meant Hindus and not Mussulmans. That is not your meaning?—No. I have already explained this in my speeches before the meetings of the minority Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference 9062. I feel reassured about that. I do not want to discuss in any way the subject of the Communal Award, because I have already made a statement regarding it, but what I want you to consider, Dr. Moonje, is this: The composition of the Assembly is given at page 93 of the White Paper. I am sure you have considered the effect of that over the whole of India. If you have done that, you will find, on taking the special constituencies into consideration, that in the United Provinces the Hindus will have, say, 68 per cent. of the seats; in Bihar, 63 per cent.; in the Central Provinces, 85 per cent.; in Orissa, 90 per cent.; in Bombay, 75 per cent., and in Assam 53 per cent.?—Yes.

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued]
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] I think you will find that a very reasonable estimate of the Hindu seats in all these Provinces. I want to know. Is not that so?—That is not my point. My complaint has been that where the Hindu forms the majority, his seats have been curtailed, have been brought down to a statutory minority. Where the Hindu forms the minority, even his representation (no weightage has been given to him) is brought down below what he is entitled to on his population ratio.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

9064. Do you agree, that these figures I am giving to you are correct?—They may be correct, I do not know, I cannot say.

9065. Then it is only in the North-West Frontier Province that the Mussulmans will be 76 per cent.; in Sind, 63 per cent., those are the two Provinces in which the Mussulmans will have a clear communal majority?—Yes.

9066. In the Punjab the Mussulmans, according to this Table, will, as I calculate, be about 51.8 per cent., and in Bengal, 50 per cent., according to the calculation made by Mr. Chatterjee, himself. Would he agree to those figures?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) No. I have not quite understood Sir Abdur Rahim's figures.

9067. Not the Hindus—Mussulmans in Bengal. You said 125 out of 250?—Yes.

9068. That is 50 per cent.?—50 per cent., but not as against the Hindus—as against the Hindus and Christians.

9069. The total seats?—Yes, and Europeans.

9070. What I meant to say was, if you take the entire picture, then you cannot complain that the Muhammadans have been given any undue preponderance in any part of India. That is the position I put to you?—(Dr. Moonje.) My complaint has been that in those Provinces where the Mussulmans are in a majority, their majority has been guaranteed to them by the Statute. Where they are in a minority they have been given weightage at the cost of the Hindus. On the other hand, where the Hindus are in a majority, their majority has been reduced to an absolute Constitutional minority. Wherever they are in a minority, their proportion of representation has been fixed even below their population basis.

9071. In the North-West Frontier Province and in Sind, the Hindus have been given weightage, have they not?—Yes.

9072. In Bengal and the Punjab, the Mussulmans have not been given the same proportion as the population, have they?—That is exactly my grievance. I said, and I say, my grievance is that a majority does not require any protection by statute. It is the minority that requires protection by statute, if protection is to be given.

9073. However, I pass on from that. Now, Mr. Chatterjee, I want you to tell me this. You know, as a matter of fact, that in Bengal, both among the Hindu and the Muhammadan members of the Council, there have been different political parties, have there not? They have been divided into political groups?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) Not in my experience; not during the time I have been on the Legislative Council—the last three years. The Muhammadans have all formed a group together.

9074. Do you remember when Mr. C. R. Das was in the Legislative Council of Bengal, that he had a majority of the Muhammadans in his following in his group?—Yes. I was not there, but that is so, he had a number of Muhammadans.

9075. How many political groups are there among the Hindus now in the Bengal Council?—Mainly, there are two groups.

9076. And among the Muhammadans?—No group, excepting one gentleman, who has always stood up for the principle of a joint electorate. His party is one strong, the rest are on the other side.

9077. Even after Mr. C. R. Das's death, there have been several groups among the Muhammadans of Bengal. Is that not so?—I was not in the Council then. I can only give hearsay evidence of how those groups were managed.

9078. You have told us that if the scheme of the White Paper regarding this communal composition of the Legislature is accepted, in that case the Terrorist activities will be directed against the Government of Bengal. That will be the Mussulmans forming a Government: Is that not so?—Yes.

9079. Is that information derived from the Terrorists themselves?—I think I

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

have already answered this question twice. I will answer it a third time. My point is that this Terrorist Movement began in 1906 by way of a protest.

Chairman.] I do not think it is necessary to repeat them. I quite agree with the witness, that he has answered the question before.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

9080. In spite of that, Muslims have been in the Government. Do you think that that would deter the Muhammadans from taking part in the future Government of the Province. Do you think that will deter the Musselmans of Bengal from taking part in the future Government of the Province judging from past experience?—In the past no such situation has arisen. The White Paper for the first time proposes to create an unalterable communal Muhammadan majority in the Council, and I do not know how they are going to react when the Constitution begins. Whether they will abdicate or stand to their guns one cannot say at the present moment. The past supplies no guidance because such a thing has not happened before.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] I can say that the Muhammadans will not be deterred by such a threat.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9081. The witness did not suggest that the Muhammadan Ministers would be deterred by that fact?—No.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9082. Dr. Moonje, you presided over the annual meeting of the Barra Bazar Hindu Sabha in Calcutta on the 25th July, 1926, did you not?—(Dr. Moonje.) I do not remember the date, but I presided over the meeting.

9083. Is this a correct report of the proceedings? "Presiding over the annual meeting of the Barra Bazar Hindu Sabha, Calcutta, on 25th July, 1926, Dr. Moonji traced the history of lost Hinduism during the last nine hundred years quoting Afghanistan, Kashmir and Malabar as instances in point, and also mentioning that India had lost 70,000,000 of her men to another religion"?—Yes.

9084. "The object of the Hindu movement would be to keep together all Hindus and to extend the Hindu religion so that India might be called Hindustan, the land of the Hindus"?—Yes.

9085. "It seemed to him that the Hindus were living under two dominations, the political domination of the English based on its strength of machine guns and the domination of the Muhammadans based on their aggressive mentality"?—Yes.

9086. Is that correct?—Yes.

9087. This is the statement in your Presidential address?—Yes, it is.

9088. You said just now that by Hindustan you meant the land of Hindus and Muslims together?—Yes.

9089. You have just pointed out that you were feeling aggrieved at finding 70,000,000 of your Hindus have become Muslims?—What is your question?

9090. My question is you pose to be a friend of the Muslims, and you have just said to Sir Abdur Rahim by Hindustan you mean Hindus and Muslims together, but here you have described what is your meaning of Hindustan, that is the land of the Hindus, and you have regretted that 70,000,000 Hindus have been converted to Muslims. How do you reconcile these two statements?—If you go to Afghanistan and meet an Afghan Sikh he calls himself an Afghan. If you meet an Afghan Hindu he calls himself an Afghan. If you meet an Afghan Muslim he calls himself an Afghan because he lives in the land of Afghanistan; but when you ask them what they are by religion, they say "I am a Sikh," or "I am a Hindu," or "I am a Muslim." In the same way in Hindustan, which means the land of the Hindus, the Hindu may be by religion a Christian, he may be by religion a Sikh, but he is a Hindu of the land of Hindustan, as in the land of Afghanistan he is an Afghan, as an Englishman is of the land of England, or a German of the land of Germany, or a Frenchman of the land of France.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9091. Does the Hindu Mahasabha claim to represent the views of Hindus as defined by you now?—Of course, that is the view of everybody who calls himself a Hindu Hindusthan.

9092. The Hindu Mahasabha is an institution which represents the views of Hindus under the definition you have just given?—Yes.

9093. Hindu as defined by you?—Yes.

9094. Including myself?—Including yourself, quite right if you call yourself a Hindu of Hindusthan.

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9095. What did you mean by saying that India had lost 70,000,000 of her men to another religion?—I will give my answer by illustration.

9096. Give me an answer. What do you mean by this?—I am giving an answer by illustration: In England there are Protestantism and Roman Catholicism. A large number of people may go to Protestantism or to Roman Catholicism. If a larger number go to Roman Catholicism, Protestants will not feel very happy over it, or if a larger number go to Protestantism, Roman Catholics will not feel very happy about it. In the same way if a larger number of Muhammadans become Hindus, Muhammadans will not be very happy, if a larger number of Hindus become Muhammadans, Hindus will not be very happy. Everybody is entitled to propagate his religion by the most free and legitimate means possible.

Mr. Zafulla Khan.

9097. Dr. Moonje, nobody denies that the object of Hinduism should be to win back those who have gone out of it, or even more those who never entered it before, but you say the point of Hinduism is by winning these people to make it possible that India may become the land of the Hindus?—No, India is already the land of the Hindus.

9098. You do not consider it will be Hindustan unless 70,000,000 Muslims are brought back into Hinduism?—India in English is called India, but in our language it is called Hindustan.

9099. What do you mean by saying "so that it may become the land of the Hindus," if it is already the land of the Hindus?—As one community by the increasing number of conversions we will feel happier over it. In the same way if a larger number of people become Hindus, Muhammadans will become unhappy over it.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9100. You delivered your Presidential address at the special session of the Hindu Mahasabha held at Patna on the 16th and 17th April, 1930, did you not?—There was no Session held at Patna in 1930.

9101. When was there a Session in Patna?—In 1926, if I remember aright.

9102. Speaking of Hindu-Muslim unity, you were pleased to state as follows: "This unity is to my mind a volatile commodity appearing very real and worth having till the price is paid" "2—Yes.

9103. "When it assumes the form of impalpability and intractability" ". And having stated that you had never been a believer in pacts and concessions in bringing about Hindu-Muslim unity, you advised your co-religionists that 'they should leave Muslims severely alone in their present mentality and leave them to think and act as they pleased'." Did not you say that?—Yes, I said that. What is your question?

9104. Nothing at all. I just wanted to show what you said. You gave a statement to the "Times of India" last year. There you asked "the Hindus as elder brothers, to develop courage and strength to pull the Muslims by the ear" "2—I may give a reply? It is a reply to the argument that is used against me that the Hindu being the majority brother—the elder brother—he should be generous enough to the younger brother, the Muslim.

9105. So as to pull his ear?—Let me give a full explanation. My reply is that if the elder brother is called upon to exercise his obligation, as the elder brother in making concessions to the younger brother, he has also another obligation, to put right the Muslim, the younger brother, by pulling his ear if he is going astray. When Swami Shradhanda was murdered we expected that the whole Muslim community would come round in a body to condemn the murderer, but instead of that we found that the murderer was deified and amongst the leaders of deifying that murderer were some who were members of the Round Table Conference. Therefore if the Hindu as an elder brother has the right of making concessions, he has also the right of pulling him by the ears if he is going astray.

Dr. Shafa' At Ahmad Khan.] Just after the murder of Swami Shradhanda the annual meeting of the Muslim League was held at Delhi, and to the best of my recollection a resolution was passed condemning the murder.

Mr. Zafulla Khan.] I hope Dr. Moonje will cite resolutions of the Hindu Mahasabha condemning the murders of Muslims at Sholapur and Cawnpore.

31^o Juli, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9106. "Since 1916 an agreement of mutual consent in brotherly friendship between Hindus and Muslims known as the Lucknow Pact is in actual operation through the present Government of India Act." You say that in paragraph 1 of Document No. 57?—Yes 9107. Are you aware that at Lucknow in 1916 the Bengal Muslim representatives protested strongly against the Lucknow Pact which gave to the Muslims statutory minority in a province in which they were in a majority?—I do not know. Nobody emphasised that point. Nobody brought up that point in all these discussions on this question during the five years. The point you are saying now was never brought to notice.

9108. I will give you the history of the Lucknow Pact?—So far as I remember it was not even noticed by the Simon Commission which gave considerable thought to the history of the Lucknow Pact.

[Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] The history of the Lucknow Pact was this, which will be found in a supplementary note by Dr. Abdullah Al-M'amun Suhrawardy in the Indian Central Committee, page 24. "The annulment of the Partition of Bengal and the unsettling of that 'settled fact' on the 12th December, 1911, had shaken the faith of the Muslims in the pledges and promises of British statesmen. The dubious attitude and policy during the Turco-Italian and Balkan Wars, of England, the traditional friend and old ally of Turkey, had also distracted and disturbed the Muslim mind. This drove the younger men of the Muslim League into the arms of the Congress and the resolutions passed by the League in 1913 bear unmistakable traces of Congress influence. Then came the Great War in which the forces of the Caliph were ranged on the side of the enemies of the Empire, and sorely tried and strained the loyalty of the Muslims to the British Throne. There was a great unrest and ferment in the whole Muslim world. Astute Congress politicians were not slow to discern their opportunity in the misfortune of Islam and they offered the unsophisticated Muslims the olive branch of the Lucknow Pact which was readily accepted." Then it says "Thus was concluded what is commonly known as the Lucknow Pact. This remarkable document is not an index and charter of Hindu-Muslim unity. It is in reality the measure of Muslim discontent and dissatisfaction with the anti-Islamic policy of England which Mr. Gandhi subsequently developed into what he styled the 'Khilafat Wrong.' Disillusionment followed soon and the Muslims of Bengal and the Punjab bitterly rue to this day this Pact which some Muslims were led to accept for the sake of what they imagined to be service to their faith and country. For, in reality, it gave the Muslims nothing substantial. By a clever gesture of peace and good will the astute Congress politicians succeeded in securing the acquiescence of the handful of young and inexperienced politicians of the Muslim League to the relegation and subjection of Muslims to the position of a minority in every province in India including the provinces of Bengal and the Punjab where they constitute a majority. The Government of India in para. 21 of their despatch to the Secretary of State for India—No. 4 (Home Department) dated Simla, April 23, 1919, pointed out that 'the results of the Lucknow compact were defective.' The Honourable Sir W. H. Vincent 'considered that it gave the Mohammadans of two provinces (Bengal and the Punjab) too little.'"

Chairman.] Is that a question?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9109. Yes?—I will explain. Neither the Simon Commission nor the Government of India thought there was no such thing as the Lucknow Pact. If the whole history as given by the Simon Commission as regards the Lucknow Pact is read, it will be noticed that the Simon Commission takes it as a fact, and the Government of India also take it as a fact, that there was a Pact known as the Lucknow Pact which was agreed to between the Muslims and the Hindus. I will read what the Simon Commission says: "In the absence of a fresh agreement, we are compelled to accept" so-and-so. The Government of India say in their despatch "The Lucknow Pact is no longer acceptable to either party." Up to that moment, the Pact was acceptable to both parties. Here my point is that the Pact is acceptable to the Hindu but not to the Muslim; it is repudiated by one party but not by the other party.

9110. Will you agree with me that the conditions in 1916 were different from the conditions of to-day? I will direct your attention to a few fundamental differences before you give your answer.

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

The first is this: Government is proposed to be constituted on a Federal basis as against the present unitary system of government. Secondly, there will be provincial autonomy, the provincial administration being henceforth responsible for the government of the Province, and not the Governor-General. Thirdly, dyarchy will be replaced by Provincial responsibility. Fourthly, the officials and the nominated blocs will disappear in the future constitution. Fifthly, it is proposed to confer responsibility in the Centre. Give me a reply now, as to whether the conditions of 1916 differ very much from those of to-day?—The fact remains that the Hindus and Muslims entered into a Pact called the Lucknow Pact in 1916, and another fact also remains that it is one party which is repudiating the Pact and not the other Party. That is what I am complaining of. When Pacts are made between two communities on their word of honour, and when one party is repudiating that pact, such a one-sided repudiation should not be allowed. That is my grievance. If they agree to make another pact, that is a different thing; but so long as another pact by mutual agreement is not made, no encouragement should be given to the repudiation by one side of the Pact. That is my grievance. In this respect I may quote what the Right Honourable J. H. Thomas said in his speech in the House of Commons on the question of the Irish problem: "But we will not be a party and cannot be a party to allowing a question of this kind, which is a solemn obligation made between two people, to be treated simply as if it were a scrap of paper." That is exactly my position. Another pact may be made by mutual agreement; I am quite prepared for that; but until another pact by mutual agreement is made, the former Pact to which both communities solemnly gave their consent must prevail and one side should not be allowed to repudiate. Further neither party has a moral right to repudiate the pact and if solemn pacts pledging the honour and word of peoples are allowed to be repudiated and treated as a scrap of paper in easy conscience peaceful and ordered conditions of life will vanish and civilised life itself, as has been so truly said by the Right Honourable J. H. Thomas, will be made impossible.

9111. I will refer to Section 2 (c) under the heading "Decision of the British Government on the Communal Problem," of the Memorandum. You say: "That in the Punjab and Bengal where the Muslims form the majority communities, provision has been made for guaranteeing majority by statute, though indirectly to the Muslims majority in Punjab and for guaranteeing a large majority by statute to the Muslims majority in Bengal over the Hindu minority who have been thus deprived of all possible constitutional means of converting their minority into political majority"?—Yes.

9112. Under the system of separate electorate when seats are fixed by statute is it not inevitable that both majorities and minorities will be guaranteed by statute?—That is my grievance. The separate electorates when introduced were introduced as a measure of protection of the minority community. My grievance is that, instead of confining it to minority communities, they have been extended to majority communities; that is my first grievance. The second grievance is that in separate electorates in the Punjab, according to my calculation, if special seats are not to be calculated, 49.1 has been guaranteed by statutory majority to the Muslims, while Hindus being 28 per cent., what has been guaranteed to them is 25.4 per cent. if special constituencies are not to be included, but if they are to be included then, according to my calculation, Muslims' majority is guaranteed 52 per cent., and Hindus who are 28 per cent. are given only 26.8 per cent. That is my grievance.

9113. Are not the Hindu majorities guaranteed by statute in Bombay, the United Province, Madras and the Central Provinces?—No.

9114. Why not?—It is the demand of the Muslims and that is what we are quarrelling against. What we say is that a situation should be so created that where the Muslim is in a minority he should be free to convert his minority into a political majority. Where the Hindu is in a minority he should be free constitutionally to convert his minority into a political majority.

9115. How can a minority be converted into a political majority in these Provinces, Madras, United Province, Bombay and Central Provinces. How can it be done?—The protection to the

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

minorities is legitimate and should be guaranteed in so far as there are special interests—their language, their culture, their personal laws—protection for all these should be guaranteed by the statute. Whatever comes under public administration of the country is neither Hindu in character nor Muslim in character, it is of a national character and in that national character there is no such thing as Hindu, no such thing as Muslim, and therefore on constructive programmes Muslims can form parties which can get a majority and Hindus can form parties which can get a majority.

9116. You remember the Morley-Minto Reforms?—Yes.

9117. You know that Lord Morley gave five communal seats and then he was hoping that the Muslims would contest on the joint electorate in Bengal and would have their share in the Council?—I do not know this.

9118. Will you take that from me that that is the fact?—Yes

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9119. Will you take this also from me: Although they had five communal seats, the Muslims in Bengal could not capture a single seat, except one by a fluke, when the Hindu member's paper was found to be incorrect and was rejected.

Chairman.

9120. Does the witness agree?—(Mr. Chatterjee). I do not agree

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9121. Are you aware that under the Morley-Minto scheme five communal seats were guaranteed to us under the communal electorate and the rest of the seats we were asked to contest in the joint electorate. We could not secure one single seat except one single seat by a fluke when the Hindu member's paper was found to be out of order?—(Dr. Moonje). May I give an answer?

Chairman.

9122. Yes?—In my Council in Nagpur there are 72 members.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] I am now asking Mr. Chatterjee about Bengal. I have nothing to do with Nagore.

Chairman.

9123. My colleague has asked you whether you are aware of such and such a thing. What is your answer?—(Mr. Chatterjee). My reply to Mr. Ghuznavi is that in those days the electorate consisted—

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9124. I want him to say Yes or No?—I am going to answer the question. I can only answer the question in my own way.

Chairman.

9125. Answer the question in your own way, Mr. Chatterjee.—I would remind Mr. Ghuznavi that in those days the electorate was confined to membership of the district boards and the municipalities, an absolutely limited electorate, where the Hindus predominate undoubtedly, but when you get a joint electorate on the basis of the members recommended by the Lothian Committee I have no doubt that the Muhammadans will come in in a majority, they being in a hopeless majority in northern Bengal and eastern Bengal. We have heard the expression "hopeless minorities." I want to use the expression "hopeless majorities." The Muslims are in such overwhelming majorities in those two parts of Bengal that their own people who have calculated the matter very carefully have come to the conclusion that even on the basis of a joint electorate they will come in in a majority and we should welcome them as our rulers when they come in as our representatives and as also the representatives of the Muhammadans. We should then welcome them. (Dr. Moonje.) May I supplement this by giving an illustration of the same kind? In my Province the Council is composed of 72 members. Out of 72 members, hardly 7 are Mussulmans, and yet to-day the President of our Council is a Mussulman, because his politics are the politics of all concerned.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9126. Who is the President of the Nagpur Municipal Corporation?—The President of the Nagpur Municipal Corporation is a Mussulman, because he happens to belong to my Party. He has been made President, because he is the best Member in that Party contributing to the construction programme which appeals to the majority of the people.

9127. And who was his predecessor?—His predecessor was a Parsee

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9128. I am coming to the recent elections, to give you an illustration. You know there is a Landholders' con-

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

stituency, under the Montagu-Chelmsford scheme, and they can return five members?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) I know that.

9129. Would you be surprised that not a single Mussulman has been returned in the last 12 years in that landholders' constituency?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) The Muslims could be easily returned, if they were united. If they are disunited, it is not our fault, I suppose.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9130. Is Mr. Ghuznavi aware that it was stated on the Statutory Commission that no good class Muhammadan so far had been forthcoming to stand at the election, and that is the reason why they do not get in?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) I was just going to say that Muhammadans have been so communal in their outlook that they have somewhat alienated feeling. The moment a Muhammadan says: "I am an Indian first, and I am a Muhammadan next", we shall do anything he asks us to do; we shall be at his bidding and at his disposal then.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9131. But not the proportionate seats in the Council?—Yes, you come in on the joint electorate. We are practically certain you will come in in a majority.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9132. How was it that they could not return one Mussulman landowner?—The point is that no Muhammadan since the late Mr. Rasul has stood up in Bengal as an Indian first and a Muhammadan next. The moment you do that, you absolutely conquer us, and make us your slaves; we will do everything for you then.

9133. I will give you an instance. A certain Mussulman stood for election for the Bengal Council, but was not returned?—But he is known as the communalist Muhammadan in Bengal.

9134. Then with regard to the Calcutta University, not a single Mussulman has been returned by the Calcutta University till now?—The Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University is a Muslim (Mr. Bannerjee) But what is the proportion of Hindu graduates to Muhammadan graduates there?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) What I say is this; that our Mussulman brothers have taken to, what you call, English education very recently.

9135. And I will give you the reason why they have not yet produced outstanding types, that is the great difficulty. But whenever we Hindus get a competent Muhammadan, we always give him the preference. Take the Calcutta Corporation, where the Swarajists are the predominant Party. We had a Mussulman who had gone to India as a chartered accountant after passing his examination in England. He was preferred by the Swarajists to all other candidates put in, because he was the best qualified candidate available, and they were glad of the fact that he was also a Mussulman. As you begin to produce big men, you will begin to command our respect, confidence, and so forth. Take that young man who did very well in his examination at Oxford only last year. Every Hindu welcomes him, honours him, and would like to have him in any position of responsibility.

9136. Calcutta Corporation has returned a Hindu as the Mayor, and not a Mussulman, although a Mussulman stood this time?—The overwhelming majority of the Calcutta Corporation are Hindus.

9137. Therefore, the Hindus will not vote for the Mussulmans?—But I will guarantee the Mayoralty of Calcutta to any Muhammadan you nominate, providing you accept our demand for a joint electorate. I can say on behalf of the Hindus that I guarantee successive Mayoralties, if you will accept our demand for a joint electorate.

9138. Do you know anything about the Resumption Proceedings of 1828?—No.

9139. I am reading just a few lines from an address given to his Excellency the Governor-General by the Muslims of Bengal and the Central National Muhammadan Association, the oldest Muslim political body in India, founded in 1877 by the late Right Honourable Syed Ameer Ali, which has to its credit 52 years of service. They said. "When the British East India Company acquired from Shah Alam, the last Moghul Emperor, the Dewani of the Eastern Provinces of India, Moslems, throughout India, particularly Bengal, held predominant position and commanded wealth and political influence. Persian was then the court language and Civil, Criminal, Executive and Revenue Officers were mainly Moslems. Members of the Moslem aristocracy, such as the Feudal Lords, Jagirdars, Mansabdars, Amadars and Lakjirajdars, who held rent-free grants, generously utilised their resources for the general well-being of the country. The

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Civil Lists of 1793, when Lord Cornwallis made the Permanent Settlement of land revenue, show that Moslems then formed more than 75 per cent. of State servants. It was not until 1828, when the Resumption Proceedings were instituted in Bengal and conducted for 18 years with a degree of harshness, leaving behind a legacy of bitterness, that serious disaster overtook many ancient Moslem landholding families. That versatile writer and historian, Sir William Hunter, in his 'Indian Mussulmans,' speaking of the disastrous effects, says: 'At an outlay of £800,000 upon Resumption Proceedings an additional revenue of £300,000 a year was permanently gained by the State. A large part of this sum was derived from the lands held rent-free by Mussulmans or by Mussulman foundations. Hundreds of ancient families were ruined, and the educational system of the Mussulmans, which was almost entirely maintained by rent-free grants, received its death blow.'

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] May I raise a point of order? When Mr. Zafrulla Khan made a statement in the morning that these communal questions were not to be gone into so far as the Communal Award was concerned, I reciprocated in the same spirit, and I said we will save the time of the Committee by not going into these questions. I thought that spirit was going to be kept up. I, personally, refrained from asking many questions of this character, which I could have put, but I deliberately refrained from going into any of these communal questions, in the desire of reciprocating the spirit to which Chaudri Zafrulla Khan referred, but if Mr. Ghuznavi is now to be allowed to go into ancient questions of history, I do beg your Lordship will prevent any of these questions to be raised or give us the liberty of re-examining the Witnesses, from the other points of view.

Marquess of Reading.] May I express really that we have arrived at a time at which we might pass from this purely communal question, I do not mean on the question of the number of seats, and so forth, which raised a practical question, but, surely, we shall do no good in the Committee by listening to a mass of evidence as to what has taken place in the past? After all, we are all familiar enough with the communal troubles that exist. I do suggest that our Delegate friends leave this general question, and confine themselves to any specific question they want to raise on numbers, and not bring us into this general atmosphere of communal disturbance, which, after all, does not help us, as far as I can see.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] As I have been referred to, I hope you will not mind my saying a word. I do not mean to say that these questions should be put, but, surely, Mr. Jayaker's memory must be somewhat at fault, or mine must be somewhat at fault, if he understood me in that sense. What I said was that I would not arrogate to myself the position that I should dictate to or submit to the Committee as to what they should do with regard to this matter. The question arose over Lord Zetland's question to the Lord Chairman that, so far as the Muslims were concerned, they have taken no part in these Proceedings, on the distinct understanding that the Communal Award was there. May I respectfully point to the fact that the mischief started when Sir Nripendra Sircar put questions to Mr. Chatterjee, in reply to which Mr. Chatterjee said there would be no responsible Government in Bengal, because the Award had set up a communal majority. Had that not happened, I am perfectly certain Mr. Ghuznavi would not have put any questions of that kind either.

Chairman.] In answer to Mr. Jayaker, I can only say that my judgment on a point of order does not arise, but expediency is another matter, and it does appear to me that we have gone very fully into many of these questions, and I can only rely on a sense of proportion, which I know is just as strong amongst the Delegates as I believe it to be amongst the Members of the Committee, and leave it at that.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] May I have permission to read only one further passage?

Lord Irwin.] Before Mr. Ghuznavi begins to read again, will he bear in mind that the more he reads, the more he will stimulate somebody else to read something further in reply; and will he not also bear in mind that probably all the arguments that he has been so well adducing, and others that he may still have in mind, just as the counter arguments that others may bring forward also, all those alike are now, I think, pretty well in the minds of the Committee, and I rather question whether any case is going to be greatly advanced at the moment, in the mind of any of those who have to

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

judge of these things, by the repetition of arguments which are sufficiently familiar.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] I will ask as few questions as I can. If you will allow me to put this in, I will not read it.

Chairman.] I must rely upon your own judgment in the ultimate case, Mr. Ghuznavi.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9140. Mr. Chatterjee, I will refer to your Memorandum, No. 61, wherein you state that in the local bodies with Muslim majority in Bengal, grants to Hindu institutions have been deliberately discontinued, and the Hindus have been denied the amenities which they extended to Muslims living in the same area, with a cheerful readiness. Are you aware that the Muslims charge the Hindus, who have hitherto been in power, in the local bodies both in East and West Bengal, with never, if rarely, making any grant to Muslim institutions, and neglecting to grant any amenities to areas in which the Muslims lived?—What is the question?

9141. The question is that you said this, that in the local bodies with Muslim majority in Bengal, grants to Hindu institutions have been deliberately discontinued, and the Hindus have been denied the amenities which they extended to Muslims living in the same area, with a cheerful readiness?—Yes.

9142. My question to you is this: Are you aware that the Muslims charge the Hindus who have hitherto been in power in the local bodies both in East and West Bengal, with never, if rarely, making any grant at all to Muslim institutions and neglecting to grant any amenities to areas in which the Muslims lived?—I am aware of the contrary, but, in any case, my answer is, two wrongs do not make one right.

9143. For your information, I can say this, and later on, in October, I shall illustrate this by reference to every single municipality, and district Board, and local Board, in Bengal. Are you aware that in practically all the local bodies with Muslim majorities in Bengal, the Muslims have consented to having at least a Hindu Vice-Chairman, if there is a Muslim Chairman, and vice versa, but that this is not so in those local bodies, excepting the Calcutta Corporation, where the Hindus are in a majority?—I should be very loath to answer this question.

9144. But you have made all sorts of references in your Memorandum; you have made all these charges in your Memorandum?—Have I to answer the question? I can answer the question, but I would rather not, because it may create more bitterness of feeling, but if Mr Ghuznavi insists upon the answer, I shall give it.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] You would rather not give an answer?

Chairman.] Mr. Ghuznavi, I understand you do not desire to press the Witness, if he does not wish to answer.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9145. Compulsory primary education is a good thing, is it not?—Certainly.

9146. And will benefit all the communities?—Undoubtedly.

9147. Will you agree with me that it was the zeal and enthusiasm of the present Muslim members of the Bengal Legislative Council, which was responsible for the passing of the Primary Education Bill?—No. That zeal spoilt it, to a certain extent. It would have been a far better Act, if the Muslim Minister had conceded us ten days' time, which we begged for, in order to sit with him and go through the whole Bill clause by clause with a view to eliminating certain patent defects which were in that Bill. If that had been done, we should have passed the Bill together.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] On a point or order which I put to you, is this, or can this be of any service to the Committee in arriving at their decision?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9148. You have said in your Memorandum that the Muslims of India have not been able to formulate a single claim since the introduction of the Reforms, which were not strictly limited to their community. Do you seriously want to make that statement?—That is my impression, but I am subject to correction by you. You point out to the Committee where I am wrong.

9149. The Muslim demands clearly refute this, and I will ask you to consider this, that if the Muslims had also not demanded responsibility in the Centre, in spite of their practically negligible minority in the Federal Legislature, and overwhelming Hindu preponderance, and had not shown a spirit of patriotism and self-sacrifice, self-government at the Centre would not have been at all con-

31^o July, 1933] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

templated?—That is for the Secretary of State to answer, I do not know it.

9150. You mean to say, if the Muslims did not agree to the Central responsibility?—I am not in a position to answer this question.

9151 I am quoting a speech from Sir Charles Tegart of the Royal Empire Society. He said that the Terrorist movement in Bengal was essentially a Hindu movement. Do you agree with this?—Yes

9152 I put it to you further that it is essentially a caste-Hindu movement?—I do not think that you are right. In course of my defending various cases, I have found that people who were not so-called caste-Hindus were also in the movement

9153 Is the answer that I am not right?—No, you are not right

9154 I put it to you, that not a single Muslim has even taken any part in this movement. Is that correct?—I think you are correct

9155. I have got in my hand a statement of Terrorist Crimes in Bengal, compiled by the Government of India, from January, 1929, to January, 1932. From this, you will see that the calendar of crimes of Terrorists shows not a single Muslim appears in this Terrorist list?—Quite right.

9156. Mr Chatterjee, is it not true that until recently the execution of political murderers was not condemned by the Hindu press, and local bodies, including the Calcutta Corporation, in which the caste-Hindus predominated, passed resolutions of sympathy on their execution, and praised their acts as patriotic acts?—I must very strongly protest against this suggestion. If you will read the speeches of my old father-in-law, the late Sri S. N. Bannerjee, from his day up to now, all caste-Hindus have agreed in condemning this movement.

9157. I have to put a statement which has not been contradicted. The Calcutta Corporation, as recently as two years ago, passed a resolution of sympathy?—Sometimes popular bodies do silly things; you cannot help them. That is the price you pay for popular Government

Sir A. P. Patro.

9158 For democracy?—Yes.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi

9159. Is it not a fact that when a political murderer is tried, practically the whole of the Hindu Bar in the Mofussil appears on his behalf, and that this has recently happened when the murderer of Mr. Douglas was tried the other day at Midnapur?—Certainly not. It is the members of the Hindu Bar who prosecute with the greatest zeal and even superfluous enthusiasm.

9160. Have you seen one of the terrorist leaflets?—Yes, I saw the one which was published against me after I had issued an appeal that terrorism should cease.

9161. Do you know what is the aim of these terrorists?—The present terrorists?

9162. Yes, the present terrorists, not the future?—Their aim is terrorism.

9163 Will you take it from me that the terrorists in Bengal want nothing short of a Communist Republic?—My poor knowledge derived from my contact with these very men during the time when they were being tried is absolutely contrary to what you say.

9164. They do not care twopence how many seats the Hindus get and how many the Muslims get?—I am afraid I know that you know nothing about them. Therefore, I cannot take it from you.

9165. Do you know Mr. Satyendra Mitra, who was an ex-detenué and a member of the Jugantar and terrorist movement?—No, not of the Jugantar. I do not think he was born then. He must have been in his swaddling cloth, if he was born.

9166. Will you accept it from me if I say it comes from the Rowlatt Report?—Certainly not. I have pointed out many mistakes in the Rowlatt Report.

9167 Will you take it from me that Mr. Mitra is more closely in touch with the terrorists than yourself? You told us this morning you were in touch with the terrorists and could tell us what they want?—You are misquoting me. I said it was impossible to know who the terrorists were, but I have come in contact with the men who were either in internment or who were in the various trials in which I have had to defend them. I am not in touch with the terrorist movement.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9168 I take it you are a barrister with a large criminal practice in the High Court?—Yes.

9169. Therefore you come in contact with the people who wish to be defended?—Yes.

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9170. Mr. Satyendra Mitra will be able to give better information about terrorists than yourself?—Certainly not; I do not accept that.

Marquess of Zetland.] Has this really got anything to do with the future Constitution?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] Why I am making this point is that the idea which has been given to this Committee is this: If the Communal Award stands in Bengal the terrorists will increase and terrorism will only decrease if you reopen the Communal Award. I was only bringing out the point that it does not matter twopence to the terrorists how many seats the Hindus get and how many the Muslims get. All they want is a Communist Republic.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] The point is quite clear. Is it necessary to pursue it any further?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] I have finished.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9171. Mr. Chatterjee, will you look at Memorandum No. 61?—Yes.

9172. You say in the third paragraph of that Memorandum: "The Partition spelled trouble for the handfuls of Hindus in Eastern Bengal, the Award threatens the Bengali Hindu's very existence. It treats the two centuries that have rolled by since the battle of Plassey as an irrelevant interlude, and seeks to confer the sovereignty of Bengal once again on the very Muslims from whose ancestors Great Britain had wrested it in 1757"?—Yes.

9173. What proportion have the Muslims got under the White Paper scheme in the Bengal Legislative Council?—I thought I had answered that question. They have got 119 guaranteed communal seats and in my opinion, on a very conservative computation, they will get another six seats out of the special seats created.

9174. I do not agree with you at all, that they are likely to get six seats, but granting for a moment that they are likely to get those six seats, they will be about 50 per cent.—125: exactly 50 per cent.

9175. Do you think 50 per cent. of the seats in a Legislative Council will lead to the transfer of sovereignty of Bengal?

—Yes.

9176. How?—Because the Governor will be asked to send for the leader of this party to form his Government, and therefore it will be a communal Government. The Governor may signify his desire: "Do please have some Hindus," but the Muhammadan Chief Minister or Prime Minister could very well say, on the strength of the party that he would have behind him, that he was not going to do it, he could have all the Ministers Muhammadans, and there would be nothing to prevent him from enforcing that wish on the Governor.

9177. Do you really think that a community which has only 50 per cent. of the seats will be in a position to form a ministry? Will it have a working majority at all in the Council?—The Muhammadan gentlemen will be 125 strong. Then there would be 25 Europeans, four Anglo-Indians, and two Christians, that is 31.

9177A. That leaves us with how much?—Ninety-four, I think.

9178. You are sure that Europeans would always side with the Muslims?—No, I am not saying that. These 31 gentlemen will not be expected to interfere with the functioning of the Muhammadan Government, when there is a squabble between the Hindus and this Muhammadan majority on questions which will affect the Hindus and Muhammadans only.

9179. On your hypothesis there is not a majority at all there is only equality, fifty-fifty?—No. That is what I want. After counting out the 31 seats you should divide the remaining 219 seats equally between Hindus and Muhammadans. If you do that, as my Muhammadan friends at one time were so agreeable to doing, then the trouble would be eliminated because the Hindus and Muhammadans would be of equal strength and could do no harm to each other by communal legislation.

9180. I am pointing out that you do not really transfer sovereignty if you give 50 per cent. to any community in any Council?—You do here. You do not give 50 per cent. merely to the Muhammadans. You create a body of another 31 people who would have nothing to do ordinarily with the domestic questions agitating Hindus and Muhammadans in the Council. The Hindus would be in a permanent minority, and from my past experience of the way Europeans, Anglo-Indian and Christian Members have been behaving in the Council, I am sure that on 99 out of a 100 points that arise between the communities in the Council,

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

they would keep quiet and let the Hindus and Muslims fight it out. Therefore, you would have a permanent majority over the Hindus with the help of which you would be able to force your wishes on the Hindus.

9181. In your Memorandum throughout you have tried to show that Hindus are supreme?—Supreme?

9182. Please let me finish: supreme in many spheres, culture, art, wealth, and that the Hindu is really the founder, if I may say so, of modern Bengal. Do you think a community like the Muslims, possessing only 50 per cent, will be in a position to rule the entire Council, in spite of the fact that the Hindus have possessed and have now enjoyed a monopoly of every department of life?—It is a question of number 94 against 125 means the 125 would be weighing against the 94. That is the difficulty, and I will give you one example. There was a Hindu professor who officiated—

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9183. Surely we are not going into details of appointments of this or that professor?—I am subject to what you say; I was giving an illustration of this point.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.] I do not wish to go into details.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] May I make an appeal, my Lord Chairman? Surely the purpose of the Delegates and of the witnesses here is to inform the Committee. Is this kind of examination and this kind of answer really going to be of the least use to any Member of the Committee when he comes to consider his report?

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9184. Mr. Chatterjee, I can give you an example in my own Province and of other Provinces where Muslims are in a minority?—May I take exception to this?

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan. I have not finished my question. The Muslims in my Province have comparatively small voting strength. In some Provinces they have only much smaller proportions. Yet they are quite prepared to work the reforms and have agreed to complete Provincial autonomy in their Province. They have never said they do not wish to be ruled by a Hindu majority in the United Province, the Central Provinces, or Madras.

Chairman.

9185 If any questions are put which you do not wish to answer, you have only got to ask for permission not to answer them?—I thought you were ruling out illustrations.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9186. The Muslims in minority Provinces are prepared to work it and I do not see why any differentiation should be made in other Provinces?—I do not want any discrimination. My point is that in those Provinces where the Muslims are in a very marked minority they have themselves demanded a separate electorate and weightage and they have got it. Where they are in a majority the question of protection of the Muhammadan majority does not arise. It is we Hindus who might have asked for some measure of protection against the Muhammadan majority. I am not asking for it if you will concede a joint electorate. If you do not concede joint electorate, then what I am asking for is that the seats should be divided in the proportion of the two adult populations in Bengal. That is all I have asked for—nothing more.

9187. Our experience in other Provinces has been that it is absolutely impossible to make any administration function successfully unless it has the co-operation of the two communities. Do not you think the Muslims of Bengal themselves will find it impossible to make the Provincial Government function successfully unless they have the co-operation and support of the Hindus?—As a lawyer I must say that everyone must be presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts. When, in spite of being a majority, you want a communal electorate, what can be your intentions but to have a communal Government?

9188. The Muslims of Bengal get only 48 per cent. They are in a minority; they are not in a majority at all. According to the White Paper scheme it is 47.8?—I have answered the question.

9189. They are in a minority according to the White Paper scheme and so far as the special constituencies are concerned, do not you think the Hindus are likely to capture more seats from the special constituencies than the Muslims?—I am making the moderate computation that the Hindus will get 14 and the Muslims will get six.

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.]

9190. Dr Moonje, in Section 6 of your Memorandum under the heading "Public Services," you say. "Recruitment to Services should be made on considerations of highest efficiency and qualifications necessary and available for any particular service by open competition." Are you aware that Raja Narendra Nath, who was once the President of the Hindu Mahasabha, agreed to the proposal that a third of the seats available in any local government should be reserved to redress communal inequalities?—(Dr. Moonje.) It may be his personal opinion; I do not know; but the position of the Hindu Mahasabha is that the Services form the soul of self-government and in those Services, at least so far as the Hindu Mahasabha is concerned, it desires no communal principle introduced. To open competition I have no objection. What the Mahasabha is saying is that in the public services, which is the soul of self-government, there ought to be no communalism. Supposing there is a Commander-in-Chief to be appointed, it should not be said that because he is a Hindu therefore he ought not to be appointed Commander-in-Chief, or because he is a Muslim he ought not to be appointed Commander-in-Chief. The Hindu Mahasabha says the person best fitted to be a Commander-in-Chief should be Commander-in-Chief whether he is a Hindu or a Muslim.

9191. Raja Narendra Nath did not object to a reservation of a third of the vacant seats for redressing communal grievance?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) May I reply because I know Raja Narendra's view on this point and I know his mind?

9192. I have got the answer of Dr. Moonje?—All along his view has been that posts of trust and responsibility should be open to merit alone, but as a concession to the quarrels going on between the various communities, he proposed a compromise, that 75 per cent. of the seats should be open to merit and competitive examination, and the remaining 25 per cent. should be open to be filled up to redress what are called communal or backward classes inequalities. That is his position. He prefers the first alternative, but in order to satisfy everybody and all the communities, he accepted the second alternative, but that has not followed in the Punjab.

9193. Do you agree with that or not?

9194. I would agree with Raja Narendra that that satisfies my Muhammadan friends, but it does not. In the Punjab they want 50 per cent. of the posts for themselves without any competition. At one time they demanded 40 per cent.; now it is 50 per cent., to-morrow it will be 60 per cent.

9194. I was only speaking of the principle approved of by Raja Narendra Nath?—As a compromise we will accept it, but it is not accepted by the other side—by your community.

9195. Mr Chatterjee, in the second paragraph of Section III of your Memorandum you say: "And yet all this alienation is avoidable, and is being gratuitously courted. The proposed reforms would hardly get a chance in India if the British were to drive the main body of Bengali Hindus into a maddening paroxysm of estrangement therefrom. All the aftermath of the Bengal Partition points to such an inference. The present writer who most earnestly wishes to see the coming constitution get under way is far from intending to utter idle threats. But past experience cannot be ignored." What exactly is the purport and meaning of this paragraph? Does it mean that if there is no modification of the Communal Award, the terrorists will get ascendancy so far as the Hindus of Bengal are concerned?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) I have answer this question five or six times.

9196. Do you not think that this, what I call a threat, would be used by other discontented elements and communities in the vast population of India?—If they had justice on their side.

9197. Are you aware of the fact that the principle of land alienation was accepted in the United Provinces before the Act was passed?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) I would like you to explain it to me.

9198. And since the last five or six years, proposals have been made by the United Provinces Government and various bodies for the purpose of extending the Land Alienation Act to certain districts?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) I have already said that if the object of the Land Alienation Act is to protect the agriculturist and cultivator from the wiles of the moneylender, I am all for it, but I want to have a definition of the agriculturist and the moneylender on occupation, not on caste, and I can point out to my friend on the authority of Mr. Darling, the gentleman who has written

31^o July, 1933] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
 Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
 Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

this book, "The Punjab Peasant", that 19,000 or more moneylenders belonging to agricultural tribes are to-day exploiting these agriculturists. I can give you the quotation if you want it and I hope my friend will read it. It is on pages 207 to 217, and where this particular thing occurs he says the land alienation has given these moneylenders of agricultural tribes their opportunity. It is possible for an agriculturist or a cultivator to be saved from the moneylender of non-agricultural tribes, but not from the moneylender of agricultural tribes. But, as I have said, the protection of the cultivator or of the agriculturist will receive our whole-hearted support, provided it is made on an occupational basis.

Mr. Zafulla Khan.

9199. Dr. Moonje, I am sorry to worry you at the end of a very long Sitting?—(Dr. Moonje) With great pleasure I shall answer your questions.

9200. But I have some questions to put to you, and other Members of the Delegation, on some points. Will you kindly look at paragraph 3 (e) of your Memorandum, No 57? It is rather an attractive proposal, and I want to understand one or two matters in connection with it. Your suggestion is that during the period of transition, although the Counsellors should continue to be responsible only to the Governor-General, "they should be selected from amongst the elected" then you have added in ink "Elected Indian Members of the Legislature"?—That, of course, is a printer's mistake. That is why I corrected it.

9201. Incidentally, of course, you want to exclude the elected European or Anglo-Indian?—Quite right; that is my intention.

9202. Assuming that, I will not go into it?—No; I must explain that.

9203. My question is not on that point at all. You may explain afterwards for the satisfaction of the Committee. My point is this. Supposing an elected Member is selected by the Governor-General as one of his Counsellors and put in charge of one of the Reserved Departments, according to you, would he, or would he not, continue to hold his elected seat in the Chamber? Will he have to vacate it or will he continue to hold it?—He need not vacate his seat.

9204. Would he not become an official as ordinarily understood, occupying an office under the Crown?—By general agreement everybody will be accepting this principle that this person who will be appointed by the Viceroy's Minister in charge of Defence will be for that purpose an official of the Government.

9205. Do you visualise that, apart from his own particular Department, the mandate of his constituency might differ from the wishes of the Governor-General, and on questions which are not connected with his own particular Department? His constituency may have desired him to vote in one direction, and the Governor-General in another direction. What, according to you, should be his position?—He is responsible to the Governor-General only in the Department of Defence. In other Departments, he is responsible to his constituency. He is responsible to the Governor-General only in the Department of Defence, as I said. In that Department, he will be responsible not to his constituency but to the Governor-General.

9206. That was the trouble of some of us who had to consider this proposal, that this would necessarily lead to one of two consequences, either he must vacate his seat, or, if he holds his seat, you will have the spectacle occasionally of finding one of these Counsellors in charge of a Reserved Department voting against the Government; but I do not want to pursue that any further, unless you want to explain anything?—On this point, I might explain that I was not present when all these discussions took place, so I do not know all the views on this side and that side, as regards the difficulties, but my point is, that if there would be a Constitutional difficulty for him to maintain his elected seat, I would not mind if he was required to resign his elected seat. My point is that in the period of transition Indians should have an opportunity of learning the art of control and administration of the Department of Defence.

9207. So that it would be met, if your desire were expressed in this way, that, ordinarily, the Governor-General should select Indians as his Counsellors. The point is really Indians—not so much elected members?—My point is, elected Indian members, because that man when he comes into the Assembly, comes with the confidence of his constituency, and I wanted that the Viceroy should elect,

31st July, 1933] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

such a person who commands the confidence of his constituency.

9208. Now I should like your view on another aspect of forming a Ministry at the Centre, and also in the Provinces, where there are Upper Chambers. You have, no doubt, studied the proposals in the White Paper carefully, and are aware that there is a proposal to have a small number of nominated Members in the Upper Federal Chamber and also in the Upper Chambers of those Provinces where Upper Chambers are sought to be set up. According to you, what would be your view if it were suggested that it should be open to the Governor-General or a Governor, as the case may be, to appoint one or more Ministers or, indeed, even the Chief Minister from among the nominated Members?—Of course, the same difficulty comes in, because I was not present at the discussions.

9209. I am asking your view upon it?—My personal opinion is that there ought to be no nomination, and positively no Minister should be appointed from the nominated members. I do not want to pursue the matter in detail, over which there has been a good deal of detail already, but may I draw your attention or Bhai Parmarand's attention, whoever is more connected with the matter, to paragraph 8 of your Memorandum No 57. I want to understand the exact implications of this sentence, "Owing to the fast of Mahatma Gandhi and the natural anxiety of the people"—I stress the word people—"to save his life, the Poona Pact was hurried through." Was it hurried through by the people—was it hurried through by the Government, or is the suggestion this, that people agreed to it under the shadow of the fast, as it were, without understanding the full implications of it?—I have already explained that position more in detail. I will repeat it, if you like. That supposing Mahatma Gandhi had put forward those proposals, in ordinary circumstances, when the threat of his death was not there. I am positive that that Poona Pact would not have been accepted by the people in India.

9210. Then may I take it that the position is this, briefly, that the people did accept it, but they accepted it under those peculiar circumstances?—They wanted to save the life of Mahatma Gandhi at any cost.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9211. How does the Witness expect Parliamentary Government to work in India if a distinguished individual can cause a whole Party to vote against their convictions by threatening to fast to death?—I had better not reply to that question.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9212. Do you not think that the establishment of democratic institutions will destroy this kind of hero-worship?—I hope so; it is expected to do so.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan.

9213. My next question is directed to Bhai Parmarand, and it is this. Is it the fact that he became aware of the terms of the proposed Poona Pact before it was accepted by His Majesty's Government?—(Bhai Parmarand.) Yes. I became aware of it, and was informed by the Government of the Punjab. My opinion was asked with regard to it. I told the then Governor of the Province that I did not care for the life of an individual, but the nation's necessities were more important. In my opinion, the decision of His Majesty's Government was better than that given by the Poona Pact.

9214. On the occasion to which you refer, was any other leader from the Punjab asked his opinion?—Yes, two other gentlemen were asked, the Minister for Local Self-Government of the Punjab and a Member of the Council of State. Both of them approved of my opinion, but they said that they were in an awkward position, and they said: "We do not want to oppose it, having regard to the life of Mahatma Gandhi."

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

9215. They agreed?—In a way, they agreed under the pressure of the Government of Bengal.

9216. There was no pressure of any kind?—There was pressure, in this sense, that the answer was demanded within one hour. No time was given to consult any other person. We were called by telephone all of a sudden, and we were there for an hour talking together and we were to give an answer definitely on that point and nothing else—pressure of time without consultation, and, of course, pressure of the Government in a way also that they wanted it in a hurry. The Governor said he must reply at once, and the Government wanted it at once, so they kept quiet over the matter or did not oppose it, and it was accepted.

31^o Juln, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9217. I shall not press that any further. An opportunity was given, although you consider it was too brief?—Yes. Then I came to learn that cablegrams had been sent over here.

9218 After His Majesty's Government had accepted the Award and the Poona Pact?—Yes. That was too short a time, within one hour or two hours 9219. Pandit Nanak Chand, may I ask you one or two questions upon one or two aspects of certain matters that you have put before the Committee? Will you kindly have page 119 of the White Paper before you, a page to which I have already drawn attention, List III—concurrent list of subjects?—Yes.

9220. You expressed a certain amount of anxiety with regard to some items entered in this List, particularly Nos 1 and 2?—Yes.

9221 And said that this would leave power to the Provincial Legislature to restrict rights of appeal and possibly to restrict periods of limitation, to the prejudice of certain classes?—Yes.

9222 Do you realise that in this concurrent list the Provincial Legislature would have power of legislating only with the previous sanction of the Governor-General, and that unless they satisfied the Governor-General that legislation was really necessary under these heads, different from general All-India legislation, permission would not be granted? If you have not considered that question, I put it to you that it is so?—(Pandit Nanak Chand) I have considered it, but I believe mistakes are possible, but I say that this civil procedure, including the law of limitation and jurisdiction, powers and authority of all Courts, are made also concurrent subjects, there is likely to be a great chance of there being different laws of proceedings and limitation, and when perhaps there is a certain amount of confusion, the Federal Government will step in, passing another law, when the mischief has been done.

9223 The aspect to which I was drawing attention was this. There could be no legislation by a Provincial Legislature with regard to any subject in the concurrent list, except with the previous sanction of the Governor-General?—The Punjab Land Alienation Act is an instance of that, when, with the previous consent of the Governor-General, that Act was passed, and it is discriminatory in character, so, I say, these things are liable to happen in the various Provinces under the influence of the communal majorities. Governors and Governors-General are, after all, human beings, and they are influenced in these considerations by their communal majorities.

9224. As you are so anxious about the Punjab Land Alienation Act, may I put to you one question with regard to it? I find it rather difficult to understand the point of your reference to paragraph 122. I put it in this way. Without going into the details of your objections (I do not accept your objections) with regard to the Land Alienation Act, I perceive your trouble is that you do not agree with the definition of "agriculturist" included in that Act, and would wish to have it changed, in the sense that you have explained to the Committee. Is that not so?—Yes.

9225. If paragraph 122 remains exactly as it is, surely it is still open to the local Legislature to amend that definition? Paragraph 122 would not stop the amendment of that definition as you desire it?—By the Punjab Local Legislature

9226. The Punjab Local Legislature could, if they accepted your definition, accept that definition instead of the present definition?—Quite so. But the question is, when they have a majority, as they have in the Punjab Local Legislature, it is impossible that they should change the definition.

9227. Surely you could convince the present Legislature that the definition is wrong, long before the coming into force of the new Constitution, if your view were accepted as just; it could be carried into effect?—Let me say this, that so far as the constitution of the Punjab Legislative Council to-day is concerned, out of 71 members of the Punjab Legislative Council elected members, 50 belong to the privileged class or tribe. It is not a Muhammadan-Hindu question at all. It is a question of privileged class versus non-privileged class, and I know that in the first Legislative Council, out of 71 present, 48 members belonged to the privileged class. The Ministers at that time brought a very harmless Bill before the Council, asking permission for the public at large to buy lands from agriculturists for industrial purposes. That Bill was defeated. The question is this that in order to get the Bill considered on its merits there must be proper reflection of the strength of the non-agriculturist population in the Legislature; that is to say, they should be 50 per cent. which is their population basis, and such thing is impossible with the land being the chief qualification for the vote, which it now is. It would be impossible, if you made land the chief qualification, to get the proper number of non-agriculturists in the Council. You must get at least 50 per cent., if you want to have that question discussed or debated purely on its merits. That is impossible, because the land is the chief qualification for the vote.

31^o Juhii, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESEMUKEH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

9228. May I proceed in this way? I am afraid I could not have made my point clear to the Committee. The only point I am putting to you is this: Surely you do not desire the Joint Select Committee to report that the definition contained in the Land Alienation Act should be amended even if they agree with you on the merits, but what I am suggesting to you is that this is a matter which can be dealt with in the local Legislature. You think your definition has not much of a chance of being accepted, but surely it is not a matter for the framing of the Constitution?—My submission before the Joint Parliamentary Committee is this, that the Punjab Alienation Act has a constitutional aspect and, as such, it is within the purview of the Joint Parliamentary Committee to give its decision thereon. I will try to show you. The Joint Parliamentary Committee is considering the right of vote, and property is the main qualification for the right of vote. Under the Punjab Land Alienation Act people are prevented from purchasing agricultural land, and therefore they are unable to acquire the primary or the most important qualification, which is the possession of agricultural land. In the Punjab further, the possession of agricultural land in rural areas gives them the right to purchase house sites, otherwise it is impossible under the customary rules of the Punjab Pre-emption Act for an ordinary person to purchase house sites, thus the person is deprived of the right of acquiring a vote through immovable property.

[Chairman.] Will you try once more to get an answer to your question, Mr. Zafrulla Khan?

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

I think I had better leave it alone. I want to make this absolutely clear because it has a constitutional [Chairman.] That is a different matter. I have not the slightest desire to prevent you saying anything, but I do suggest that when Mr. Zafrulla Khan puts a question it is just as well that we should have an answer on the notes, and unless I misunderstood the question, the statement we have just listened to does not constitute an answer to Mr. Zafrulla Khan's question, but perhaps he thinks it does.

Mr. Butler.

9230. Would not you like these points considered by the future Legislature, and, if we omit the words which you suggest it would remove the matter from the future Legislature?—I submit it would be impossible under the present conditions to get any satisfactory discussion or consideration of this question from the Punjab Legislative Council.

Mr. Butler.] That is a different matter. That is alluding to the present Legislature. We are discussing the Legislature of the future, and, as I understand your wish, you would not wish these matters to be removed from the competence of the future Legislature.

Marquess of Lothian.

9231. Their proposals for the modification of the Franchise as set forth in paragraph (3) under "Punjab Assembly" in your Memorandum, is the practical remedy which you ask for the objection which you now raise to the proposal?—That is quite true. I do not want land to be the main qualification in the Punjab for the acquiring of the vote.

Mr. Butler.

9232. That is another matter from Proposal No. 122 which we were discussing, although it has a bearing on it?—(Dr. Moonje) May I supplement the answer by saying that it is an essentially constitutional point. I do not want that any law should be there which can disenfranchise any particular body of people. That is the one aspect, and I do not want that the Constitution should be so framed as to prevent any class of man from choosing any occupation they like in the freedom of their choice, so I am looking at the Land Alienation question from a purely constitutional point of view, therefore it is a subject which lies within the purview of the Joint Parliamentary Committee.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9233. With all the wish in the world, not to protract my questions this has

31^o July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

been my difficulty throughout the day, that answers coming from different quarters of the batch of witnesses now in the witness box make the matter so confused that I really cannot follow several aspects at all. Pandit Nanak Chand tells us that if the definition of an agriculturist were changed in the Act he would have no objection to it?—Yes 9234. That is to say, whoever falls under his definition may be protected, and, people outside that definition, may be debarred from purchasing land, but you told us nobody should be debarred. Whose answer shall we take? Would you have any objection to any definition, or would you agree with Pandit Nanak Chand that people who are not connected with agriculture personally may be debarred, and people who are connected with agriculture should be put in the definition? So far as the right of acquiring land is concerned you are restricting it, and preventing a certain class from acquiring franchise qualifications?—So far as particular Acts are concerned Pandit Nanak Chand said that if the definition of those particular things could be modified it would meet his point. My point is that this question of land alienation is essentially a constitutional point, for the Constitution should not be so framed that a certain portion of the community should be disfranchised, and a certain portion of the communities should be prevented from making a free selection of the occupations they would like to have. Therefore it is essentially a constitutional problem.

9235 I find myself unable to make myself clearer by putting questions on this point, so I will leave it there. I have one or two other questions. I do not want the whole of my time to be spent over the Land Alienation Act which, surely, is a local matter. Mr. Chatterjee, may I put one or two questions to you which again, if you find difficult or inconvenient to answer, you need not. I shall try to make them as general as possible, and I wish to direct them to one or two aspects of matters mentioned to you which I think are rather helpful, but they have not been noticed by you. May I assume that your view is that a person elected to a Legislature by a joint electorate is likely to be very much more satisfactorily representative from the general point of view than a person elected by a separate electorate, and that to the first kind of person elected by a joint electorate you would have no objection whatsoever on the ground of numbers, because his quality would be better. That being so, I rather thought that these six seats, or more, according to you, out of the 20 special seats in Bengal which you think might go to the Muslims is rather a helpful feature of the distribution of seats, if as many as six are likely to be captured to Muslims, they will be Muslims, to which you will have no objection whatever?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) They will be far less open to objection.

9236. So really you would add them up to the 119 of the communally-minded Muslims?—It would be impossible for those six gentlemen to stand by themselves, it would not be possible. They would have to put in their lot with the 119.

9237. As to that opinions might differ, and, as it is a matter of opinion, I shall not press you further with regard to that. I find from the Memorandum that you yourself are a member of the Bengal Legislative Council?—Yes.

9238 I hope you are a member of the national outlook as compared with the communal outlook?—I hope so.

9239. Have you by any chance been elected by a joint electorate, or by a separate electorate?—At the present moment the electorate is separate.

9240. There are some joint constituencies, for instance, you are not representing one of them?—No.

9241. Mr. Bannerjee, are you also a member of the Legislative Council in Bengal?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) Yes.

9242. May I hope that, like Mr. Chatterjee, you are also a nationally-minded member?—I hope so.

9243. And also that you have been elected by a separate electorate?—Yes. There is no other electorate. There are no joint electorates.

9244. So, may I take it generally, that even under the present system separate electorates and constituencies do return members to the Legislatures who are nationally-minded?—Because we do not want separate electorates. We go there with a joint electorate mentality. We do not want separate electorates; they have been forced upon us.

9245. In spite of that, in the case of gentlemen like you who do not have joint electorates, and who bring to bear a national outlook upon affairs of State, it is possible for them to be returned?—Yes.

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Sardar Buta Singh.

9246. With your permission, I want to put one or two questions. Pandit Nanak Chand, I would draw your attention to this very document which you produce to-day, which is called "Statement showing the proportionate representation of the various communities serving in the different Departments," and so on. I want to draw your attention to Item No. X, "High Courts," because we have talked of the High Court to-day, and you have complained that the members who belong to the notified agricultural tribes at certain times have moved resolutions in which you think they have tried to interfere in the working of the High Court. May I tell you that we have got here in this heading No. X, "High Courts": (a) Ministerial Officers, (b) Superintendents, (c) Clerks, and then again, Subordinates to the High Court, Clerks of the Court, and other Clerks, and you may take it from me that as regards (a) Ministerial Officers, out of (a) there is not a single Sikh, and out of (b) there is not a single one who belongs to my community, and, out of 178, there is only one Sikh; and as regards these head clerks and other clerks, I will not take up the time of the Committee, but I will tell you the percentages, 66.7, 27.5, 48.9, 45.1, and 54.9. What is the proportion of population that you claim in the Punjab?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) You are proving my point. My answer is that this very mentality which has been exhibited here is always exhibited in the Punjab Legislative Council. The distribution of posts is not looked upon purely from the point of view of merit, but purely from the communal or caste point of view. This is a mentality which I deplore, and this is a mentality which will increase if communalism is made the basis of your Legislatures and local bodies, and this communal spirit will enter, and is entering, the public services of the community.

9247. I want only direct replies. My question is a very direct one. My community have grievances, and if I bring forward a resolution in my Council to redress these grievances what is the complaint which my friend is going to make?—I just want to know to which community you refer, whether it is the Sikh community, or the agricultural tribes community.

9248. The Sikh community?—You have my full sympathy.

9249. You have been trying to put your case in a not very fair and just manner. You would agree with me?—What I have all along submitted is that I do not want communal or caste considerations in the filling up of public posts, but if, for any minority community these considerations are accepted, then for the Sikhs and the Hindus of the Punjab the same considerations should apply.

9250. There is another aspect which you have tried to urge, and that is this. I draw your attention to your memorandum where you say that under this Punjab Land Alienation Act the poor proprietor has practically to sell his land at half-price?—Certainly.

Sardar Buta Singh.] If I tell you—and this is the opinion of the majority of my people in the Provinces—that before that Land Alienation Act was passed if the money was borrowed by a zamindar from a money lender, after a certain time, at compound interest, poor fellow, he had to give the whole of his land to the money lender.

Chairman.] I am very sorry, but I do not think I quite followed the whole of that question. Could we have it repeated?

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9251. May I make an appeal that we should remember that we are examining witnesses and put questions to them and not make lengthy statements?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) I would request my friend to read from page 209 of Darling's Book "The Punjab Peasant in Prosperity and Debt". He is an Indian Civil Servant and he knows the Punjab very well and he has given the reply to this question at page 209.

Sardar Buta Singh.

9252. You say in your memorandum that arbitrary distinctions between martial and non-martial races should be abolished?—Yes.

9253. You say so?—Yes; I say so.

9254. If I may I will draw your attention to a fact dealing with that because we happen to be connected with certain tribesmen who were sent to the front; afterwards we received a letter that certain specified persons should not be recruited because they have no traditions whatever to be in the Army, and they had proved to be absolutely unfit for

31° Julii, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Army service Would you agree with me that there are certain tribes and communities whose traditions are such that they are best fitted as Army material?—I say people should be taken on the ground of their fitness and efficiency, no matter to whatever tribe or caste or religion they may belong, and this was what was promised to us when Sir H. Gidney and Dr. Ambedkar raised this question at the Third Round Table Conference. The Secretary of State was pleased to give an assurance that it is individual fitness and efficiency that shall be taken into consideration for the recruitment of His Majesty's forces, and not any particular tribe or caste.

9255 You say in your memorandum "The debates of the Legislative Council of the Punjab will show that these tribes want (1) that the sources of revenue of the Punjab Government from land tax and water rates should be very substantially cut down" Is it not a fact that during recent years on account of heavy fall of prices agriculture has been hit very hard?—I have been a member of the Punjab—

9256. Please answer the question?—I am supporting what I have stated. I have been a member of the Punjab Legislative Council since 1924, and the water rates were increased in 1925 There has always been an agitation among the so-called agricultural tribes that these water rates should be substantially cut down. Similarly there have been efforts made that the land tax should be substantially reduced. My point, which I have expressed here, is this that the land should not be the monopoly of any particular caste, because if it became the monopoly of any particular caste, it would be very easy for them to get a reduction of these sources of revenue of the Punjab Government namely the land tax and water rates. I have full sympathy with the reduction of land tax and water rates whenever any emergency arises, and I have always supported these demands for reduction for temporary purposes whenever there was an emergency, but I am here expressing the view that if the Punjab Legislative Council is full of particular castes or tribes which alone can monopolise the land, there is a great danger that in the near future the land tax and water rates, which are the principal sources of revenue of the Punjab Government will be substantially curtailed and it will result in great confusion

9257. Only one more question. You have laid great stress on the fact that members of an agricultural tribe can take to certain other professions, they should not remain as agriculturalists. I want to put this aspect of the case. Supposing I am an agriculturalist, and I take to law and become a lawyer, and I have four sons?—Have you?

9258 Yes, you can take it from me. I want to put this to you There is a great difference between agriculturalists in this country and in my Province. They are following a hereditary profession in our country, and if one is an agriculturalist practically always one's sons are agriculturalists?—Not necessarily.

9259. In my Province that is so; I can trace it for many generations. Then supposing I am an agriculturalist, what can I do with my son, if he is not qualified for that profession he naturally cannot follow that profession?—It is your own concern.

Lord Rankellour.

9260 I have a few questions to put. As regards the Hindus of Bengal, did they accept the original award of the Prime Minister before the Poona Pact was entered into? Were they satisfied with that, Mr Chatterjee?—(Mr. B. C. Chatterjee) The original award made by the Prime Minister?

9261. The original award that the Prime Minister made before it was modified by the Poona Pact? Were the Hindus of Bengal prepared to accept it?—They made no complaint against it because it was on the basis of a joint electorate. (Mr. J. Bannerjee) They made no complaint against the Prime Minister's award so far as the representation of the depressed classes was concerned. The grievance was as regards the number of seats that had been given to the Mahomedans (Mr B. C. Chatterjee) Perhaps there is a little misunderstanding. What I said was that we accepted the Prime Minister's award in so far as it related to the depressed classes, certainly we did. We did not accept the award in so far as it related to the division of seats between Hindus and Mahomedans.

9262. You did not accept the Prime Minister's award in regard to that?—No.

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

9263. Now, Bhai Parmanand, give me an answer relating to the Punjab Hindus. Were they prepared to accept the original award of the Prime Minister before the Poona Pact?—(Mr. Bhai Parmanand.) Undoubtedly so. So far as that point was concerned we, of course, accepted it.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9264. Is it the fact that by the Prime Minister's award no seats were awarded to the depressed classes in the Punjab?—Yes. No seats were awarded because the Government had unanimously represented that the depressed classes question did not exist in the Punjab, so we were satisfied.

9265. You had not raised any other objection?—With regard to the other communal settlement and the other parts, we were objecting to it.

9266. You were objecting, and you never accepted that either?—No.

9267. Dr. Moonje, does the Hindu Mahasabha still claim to be the representative of the orthodox Hindus?—(Dr. B. S. Moonje.) It represents all sections, orthodox and non-orthodox, Reformers, Aryasamajists, Jains, Buddhists and everybody. There are certain differences only on certain points, but in all those respects that we have been discussing here the Hindu Mahasabha is fully representative.

9268. The orthodox Hindus do not object to it?—Only on two points, only so far as they have sent a memorandum have they a different opinion, but on those questions which are being discussed at the present moment the Hindu Mahasabha can represent them.

Dr. Ambedkar.

9269. May I put a supplementary question? Do I understand that you include the depressed classes also in your Hindu Mahasabha? Do you claim to represent them?—My contention is that I represent also the depressed classes and my friend, Mr. Gavai, who is sitting by my side, is a representative of the Depressed Classes on the Deputation of Hindu Mahasabha, and it has never been proved whether Dr Ambedkar represents the majority or whether Mr. Gavai represents the majority among the Depressed Classes.

That is a different matter. I know, do you represent the depressed classes?—I represent the majority portion of the depressed classes also.

9271. As far as I am concerned I absolutely disagree with that position. What does Mr. Gavai have to say? I still repeat the fact that the depressed classes do not belong to the organisation that Dr. Moonje represents. So far as his memorandum is concerned I know as a matter of fact that the Hindus of the Punjab have repudiated it?—What?

Dr Ambedkar.] That part of your memorandum No. 57 has been repudiated by the depressed classes of the Punjab.

Lord Rankenllour.

9272. I should like to refer to Section 70 of the Memorandum No. 60 headed "The Police". In the second paragraph it is suggested that there should be a statutory committee to assist the Minister responsible for law and order in his duties. Might I ask you, Pandit Nanak Chand, how you think that such a committee would help the Minister?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) Considering the special conditions of the Punjab I propose that there should be a Minister who will always depend upon a communal majority in the Council and that there should be a committee to help him representing all the principal communities living in the Punjab. There are, I know, and undoubtedly you must be aware, about 700 murders a year in the Punjab ordinarily, and there have been grave communal riots during the past 10 or 12 years, during the working of the reforms according to us due to the communal nature of the system of government introduced under the Montagu Council Reforms. There is one particular instance which I wish to bring to your notice.

Sir A. P. Patro.

9273. What is the answer? We are going into history?—This is the answer I am giving that I want all the principal communities in the Punjab to be represented on a Committee to be appointed by the Governor under Statute to help the Minister in the carrying out of his onerous duties of maintaining law and order in the Punjab.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9274. I do not know whether Lord Rankenllour is satisfied, but I thought his question was in what way such a committee would be expected to help?

31° July, 1933] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

By taking part in every way in discussing all the questions which a Minister has to administer in the carrying out of his police duties.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9275. May I interpose one question. To whom is the Minister to be responsible—to the Legislature or to the Committee?—The Minister would be responsible to the Legislature but in case there is a difference of opinion between the two, the Governor will intervene. My point is that ordinarily the Governor's power of intervention is for when there is something very extraordinary or grave. There are matters which will not come to the knowledge of the Governor if there is a communal majority in the Council; it will be the duty or rather the outlook of those people to keep back this information which is essential for the maintaining of law and order in the Punjab. If there was a statutory committee of this kind representing all the majority communities, the Governor would be kept in touch with what goes on in the province.

9276 Is the Committee to advise the Minister or to advise the Governor?—I take it that the function of the Committee would be both to advise the Minister and give information to the Governor, when the Minister does not act at once, or in case there is necessity for action. I should like to give you an instance.

9277. I do not want instances; I want to find broadly what your purpose is?—My purpose is that as in the Punjab there are three principal communities, it is absolutely essential, when you introduce communal domination in the Punjab, that the Police should be safeguarded in the best possible manner, and this I regard as the best possible manner to suit the circumstances of the Punjab, that there should be representatives of all the communities on this Committee, which would be in the nature of an Advisory Committee to the Minister, but if the Minister fails to do his duty, then the Committee or any Member of it can inform the Governor that he should intervene.

9278. The Minister should be guided, in your opinion, by the advice of the Committee?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) Certainly 9279 And not by the vote of the Legislature?—Certainly not.

9280. In other words, if he prefers the advice of the Legislature to the advice of the Committee, then you want the matter transferred to the complete disposal of the Governor?—Certainly, that is my point.

9281. You distrust the Legislature?—Yes, I do must certainly distrust a Communal Legislature.

9282. And you trust the Governor?—I do when it is a Communal Legislature. That is my grievance. It has been the grievance of the Hindus throughout. I want to give you a very good instance, if you will permit me—it is only one instance. One, Raj Pal, was murdered by a Muslim because he happened to write something against the Prophet in reply to a pamphlet published by a Muhammadan. When the Muhammadan was hanged and his body was delivered to the people 150,000 Muslims assembled in Lahore to do honour to this murderer, including gentlemen who held very high positions in society, some of them members of the Round Table Conference.

9283. I doubt the wisdom of giving that instance, which may provoke parallel instances?—Quite so, but my submission is that, in a communal system of government, it is absolutely essential for law and order to be properly maintained. It is with that view that I propose this Committee, consisting of the members of the various communities and a European, to help the Minister in his very delicate task.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

9284. May I move the deletion from the Notes of this instance, as it only exacerbates feeling?—Instances were given on the other side. It was sought to be shown that all Hindus were in sympathy with murderers, and here is an instance I am giving on the other side—if anybody can contradict me, very well—of 150,000 people assembled in Lahore to do honour to a murderer. Why should it be taken out of the Notes?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9285. It is not everything that a witness says which is going on the Notes. It is in the discretion of the Lord Chairman and the members of the Committee and the Indian Delegates to see that the Notes contain only what we consider to be necessary for the recording of the proceedings. If any improper questions are put and improper replies are given, even though a witness wants it to go on the record, it does not follow that such questions and replies should go on the record?—I strongly object to the use of the phrase, “improper answer”. It is not the question of a proper answer. This is a most important question which is a matter of life and death affecting 45 per cent. of the people in the Punjab. You entirely fail to understand our feelings—you ignore our feelings in this regard.

31° Julii, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Lord Rankellour.

9286. Your view really is this. It is necessary for the Minister to have some support, otherwise the communal pressure would be too great?—So far as the Punjab is concerned, I only speak with regard to the Punjab, but so far as that is concerned it is absolutely essential.

9287. Would you apply that everywhere?—Wherever minorities feel apprehension—I said this at the Round Table Conference and I say it now—they are welcome to have that safeguard.

9288. You would apply that to Madras?—Certainly, if a minority want it I do not object to it. (Dr. Moonje.) In this connection, if permission is given to me, I would explain the position of the Hindu Mahasabhas as representing the Hindus.

9289. You mean if there was an application from the minority in any Province you would give them some assistance of this kind in any Province?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) Yes; if a case is made.

9290. I was not quite clear about something which was said about the High Courts earlier on. Am I right in thinking that, though the judicial decisions of the High Court cannot be canvassed in the Legislature, the status of the High Court may be impaired by debates on whether they have too much staff or the like? Am I right in saying that that is what you were intending to convey?—Certainly.

9291. Therefore, you want the High Courts taken away from Provincial jurisdiction?—Certainly, that is my desire. This is what I want. The Government of India have stated in one of their despatches that the High Courts have been brought into discussion in various Provinces by the Provincial Legislature in this indirect manner.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9292. How would you prevent a similar discussion in the Central Legislature?—There would be much less chance of it.

9293. In what sense do you mean?—Because, for example, the Central Government is far away from the capital towns.

9294. But it is not far from that area—it is very near the Punjab?—I think there would be much less chance of it. This is a recommendation of the Simon Commission and two very important gentlemen who have put their comments in favour of it before the Round Table Conference.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9295. Do the Pandit's views represent on this subject the sentiments of the Hindu Mahasabha?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) Yes, that is what I was explaining. The Hindu Mahasabha's position is that, whether we are in a minority or in a majority in a Province, or whether the Muslims are in a minority or in a majority in a Province, there is no objection to popular franchise.—(Dr. Moonje.) The Hindu Mahasabhas are absolutely confident of their position in this matter. I defend this even when the mode of election is transferred. (Pandit Nanak Chand.) I have a special mandate from the Hindus of the Punjab on this matter. I represent them, and I submit Mr. Bannerjee and the other gentlemen cannot speak for the Hindus of the Punjab. I have been nominated to give evidence by all the Hindu members of the Punjab Legislature who are in our Group except two. Authority was given to me to represent them in a Conference which was held at Mooltan. I knew this objection would be raised by people who live in the other Provinces, and so I have taken great care to arm myself with this authority, and, therefore, on that authority, I am making my statement on this question.

Lord Rankellour.

9296. You are probably aware that, with regard to different subjects both a Central and Provincial Legislature would have power under these proposals to limit the jurisdiction of the High Courts—to limit their appeals, for example, and give more power to the subordinate Courts?—That is what I do not want. I should say it should be a central subject.

9297. You say it is of the higher importance “that the public confidence in the administration of the judiciary should be restored and strengthened.” Do you imply that confidence in the High Courts has been impaired?—No, not with regard to the High Court but with regard to the 31° Juhi, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.

Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

subordinate judiciary—I mean since the subordinate judges are being recruited on communal grounds, and also on the ground that the Zemindars, what are called the landowning classes, it is claimed should be taken in such numbers. There the communal bias is increased in the judicial appointments, and there has been an increase in communal bias in all departments since the time when communal considerations were made the basis for filling posts.

9298. Would you be satisfied if the jurisdiction of the High Court over subordinate Courts, which is very largely exercised now by consent, was made legal?—Quite so. I want that.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] The position of the High Courts over the lower judiciary is not by consent—it is by law.

Lord Rankellour.] Surely in some respects Provincial authorities allow the High Court to do things in the matter of appointments which they could keep in their own hands.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] That is not a question of jurisdiction

Lord Rankellour.

9299. They have the “powers and authority”?—(Pandit Nanak Chand.) So far as filling up posts is concerned, the rules are laid down by the Government. The High Court merely carry them out according to the instructions of the Government. What I submit and what I think is in your mind is that this control of the High Courts over the subordinate Courts should be kept free from communal and other influences, and, therefore, the High Courts should recruit these people on the basis of pure merit.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9300. Are you aware of the fact that the proposal of the Simon Commission to centralise the High Courts made in 1930 was opposed by an overwhelming majority of the Local Provincial Governments?—I do not know.

9301. Have you read the Despatches published in 1930 by the Local Provincial Governments on this question?—The Local Provincial Governments may have done so—I do not dispute that.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9302. On the question of the appointment of the subordinate judiciary, may I ask whether, so far as the Punjab is concerned, it is not the fact that the selection of candidates is made by the High Court dependent on whether they possess or do not possess certain qualifications belonging to rules framed by themselves, apart from any question of proportions?—It is now done by competitive examination, and I am very glad of that.

9303. That is by the High Court?—That is by the High Court, but as to how many Zemindars should be taken and non-Zemindars should be taken, that is a question of direction of the Local Government.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] The proportion as laid down by the Local Government in consultation with the High Court, but the actual selection and examination is done by the High Court.

Lord Rankellour.

9304. You would be content if these powers were exercised by Statute by the High Court?—Yes.

9305. The other day when we were discussing the franchise question I asked Sir John Kerr about the schedules to the Depressed Classes with a view of forming a register, and he told me those schedules would be generally accepted. I rather gather from what has fallen from you to-day that you would not accept that?—My position and the position of the Punjab Hindus, and not only the Punjab Hindus but the Punjab Government and the Sikhs and Mohammedans in the Punjab, has been that there are no Depressed Classes in that sense in that Province—there are none. Therefore, no recommendation was made by the Lothian Committee or even by the Simon Commission on this point. We have been forced to accept the schedules, and everybody now is clamouring to get into that schedule.

Major C. R. Attlee.

9306. I think the witness is not correct in stating that the Simon Report said that. They said there was a depressed class in the Punjab but their situation is much nearer the general run of the poorer classes?—I accept that correction.

Lord Rankellour.

9307. Would these Schedules of depressed classes that appear in the appendix to the White Paper be generally accepted in Bengal?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) No, not at all.

9308. You think Sir John Kerr was mistaken in thinking they would be?—Yes, I think so.

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

9309. A problem might arise with regard to these people being put on the register?—I know personally a great many castes who have been put on the Schedule have sent in protests against being included in the Schedule. If I may say so, the Lothian Committee gave a very exhaustive definition as to who is to be considered a depressed class man and formulated the two criteria of untouchability and approachability. If those criteria are applied in Bengal it would be found that the highest number which might conform to those criteria would not exceed between 900,000 and a million.

9310. We cannot take these Schedules as final?—No.

Mr. R. A. Butler.] The Schedule is marked "Provisional."

Lord Rankeillour.

9311. I know that?—(Mr. Deshmukh) So far as this schedule is concerned, may I point out that in C.P. list actually one class is included in it which is not untouchable at all, that class is the "Kohis." I brought this to the notice of the Under-Secretary of State for India the other day. I wish to refer to it so as to show you how the schedules are defective and need amendment even with regard to a province, where untouchables are well defined, as they undoubtedly are in C.P. There is no doubt that the schedules cannot be taken to be final

Marquess of Zetland.

9312. Mr. Chatterjee has answered so many questions with such consistent good temper to-day that I hardly like to put further questions to him, and I will only ask a very few questions to clear up one or two points which have not been made quite clear in the course of the examination to-day. Since Lord Rankeillour has touched upon the question of the depressed classes let me ask this question about the depressed classes in Bengal. I find that the Rajbanshi are scheduled to be put in the category of depressed classes. When I was in Bengal the Rajbanshi claimed to be Kshatriyas—is not that so?—(Mr. Chatterjee) Yes.

9313. Can you give me any reason why the Rajbanshis should be described as depressed classes?—No, no reason whatever. They have taken on the Sacred Thread and they have always claimed to be Kshatriyas. Before the Lothian Committee the gentlemen who came to give evidence said they were Kshatriyas and the Lothian Committee said that the Rajbanshis cannot be included among the depressed classes?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) May I put it in this way? The Rajbanshis object even now to be described as "depressed" classes—they prefer to describe themselves as the scheduled classes, which is a very different thing. (N.B.—This is a question put by the Marquess of Zetland.) The effect, therefore, of the Poona Pact will be to do the very thing which Mr. Gandhi desired to avoid doing. (Mr. Bannerjee.) Undoubtedly.

9314. Its effect, undoubtedly, will be to create an unwarranted and purely artificial division between two Hindu peoples?—Absolutely.

9315. One or two very short questions with regard to the position of the Bengal Legislative Council in future. The ground has been covered very largely already. But I want to say this. The impression which has been created on my mind by the questions which have been asked and by the answers which have been given on this question to-day is that separate communal electorates are really incompatible with responsible parliamentary government as we understand it in this country?—(Mr. Chatterjee.) Yes, we have been brought up on the pure milk of the old parliamentary doctrine.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9316. Do you mean in Bengal particularly?—Oh, no.

Marquess of Zetland.

9317. That is your position, I understand?—That is the position we have taken.

9318. But we have to recognise the fact that separate communal electorates are already in existence. We have separate communal representation in the Bengal Council as it is to-day?—May I respectfully remind you that the special communal electorates were added only for the protection of the minority.

9319. I know that and I am coming to that but the fact remains that we have separate communal electorates in Bengal at the present day?—Yes.

9320. I want to be quite sure how the Bengal Legislative Council of the future, if the proposals of the White Paper are retained, will compare with the Bengal Legislative Council of to-day so far as the distribution of seats between the Hindus and Muslims is concerned. How many members are there of the Bengal Legislative Council at the present day?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) 140.

31° July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

9321. How many seats are reserved for the Muslims?—40—39 or 40. It is only a question as to one, but it is 40 I think.

9322. How many general constituencies are there open to Hindus?—Your Lordship means non-Mohammedans?

9323. Quite so, non-Mohammedans?—57.

9324. So that under the distribution between these communities to-day the Hindus are a considerable preponderance?—They are in a majority.

9325. I understand—indeed I know from my own knowledge it is so—that the distribution was based very largely on the Pact which was referred to once to-day as the Lucknow Pact?—Of 1916.

9326. Which was an agreement between the Hindus and Muslims on that particular question?—Yes.

9327. So much for the Bengal Council as it exists to-day. The Bengal Council as it would be under the proposals of the White Paper would be something like this. There would be 119 seats reserved for Muslims, but there will be 51 special seats, and there will be 80 seats open to the general community?—Two out of which will be for the Hill tribes so that practically there will be 78.

9328. Under the Poona Pact 30 of those seats will be reserved for the so-called depressed classes?—Yes.

9329. Leaving 50, or 48, seats, according to the computation for the caste Hindus?—Yes, not simply for the caste Hindus, but for the general constituencies—we count that from eight to ten members of the depressed classes may easily come in from the general constituencies.

9330. What I want information about is this. There are 20 special seats?—Yes.

9331. Which will be open to contest between Hindus and Muslims. It has been said to-day that of those 20 seats probably 14 will be won by the Hindus and 6 will be won by the Muslims. If you can I would like you to tell me which of those seats are likely to be won by the Muslims. To begin with there will be 5 seats allotted to commerce and industry which will be open to competition amongst Hindus?—One of the commerce seats will be Muhammadan because such is already the recommendation of the Bengal Government—one seat for the Muhammadan Chamber of Commerce which has very recently come into existence again. There are altogether 8 seats for labour out of which on a very modest computation, at least 4, will go to the Muhammadans—more may go to them, but 4 certainly will go. So far as the university seats are concerned, that depends upon what the electorate for the Dacca University will be, and that question has not been settled. If the electorate is a quarter of the university then the Muhammadans will certainly come in, but it is contingent upon what the nature of the electorate will be.

9332. You assume that at least 4 of the Labour seats will go to the Muslims?—Yes.

9333. And one of the Commerce and Industry seats, making 5?—And probably one university seat also, and possibly one of the Landholders', the one in the Chittagong Division.

9334. So that under these proposals from your point of view the best that can happen will be that the caste Hindus will have 66 seats?—Not have them, but 66 will be open to them—all of them will not be theirs.

9335. I said 66, but is it that?—48 plus 14 is 62.

9336. I do not want to worry about minute differences of opinion over figures. My point really is that there will be a complete change over in the distribution of seats between Mussulmans and Hindus in the Bengal Legislature of the future, as compared with the Bengal Legislature of the present time?—That is so.

9337. What is really at the root of your objection to the proposals in the White Paper is that it will create a state of affairs which was ruled out by the Simon Commission on the ground that it would give a definite Mussulman majority in the Legislature, unalterable by any appeal to the electorate?—Yes.

9338. That is really the root of your objections to the proposals in the White Paper, as far as Bengal is concerned?—Yes; also there is the artificial splitting-up of the Hindu community set up by the adoption of the Poona Pact.

Mr. Zafulla Khan.

9339. I hope that Lord Zetland, when he comes to consider this question, will not be unmindful of the fact that the White Paper sets up an unalterable communal Hindu majority in Madras, Bombay, the Central Provinces, Behar and Orissa, and the United Provinces?—(Dr. Moonje) Not by Statute.

9340. The White Paper proposals are by Statute?—No.

31^o Juln, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] I am merely putting this on the record so that when this comes to be considered in this context it will be borne in mind.

The Marquess of Zetland

9341. I can assure Mr Zafrulla Khan that I shall bear that in mind, but is not that one of the strongest arguments against separate communal electorates?—(Dr. Moonje.) Yes.

The Marquess of Zetland] That is the point.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] The whole point with regard to separate communal electorates is that past experience has repeatedly shown that unless you reserve seats for certain communities they have no chance of getting in. If you reserve them on the basis of joint electorates they are bound to be returned, not according to the wishes of the particular community whom they are supposed to represent, but they are bound to be people who will dance to the tune of those who have had a hand in sending them in. Past experience has shown that so demonstrably and effectively that everybody, even against his wishes, was compelled to support, and to continue, the system of separate electorates.

Sir N. N. Sircar.] Have many seats been reserved for majority communities in Madras and other Provinces?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] That is the effect of the proposal.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9342. Have they been reserved, or not?—(Dr. Moonje.) No.

Sir A. P. Patro] Under the present system majority community seats are reserved. Madras has an experience of 10 years. It is an experience which must be a lesson to other communities. They were ruled out by the minority community, and they have worked and struggled hard to get into power.

The Marquess of Zetland.] My Lord Chairman, perhaps I may say that my only object in asking these questions was to get placed on record the actual facts and the views which are held by the witnesses who are under examination. No doubt other facts and views of other witnesses who hold other views will be obtained and placed on record to-morrow. I want to assure Mr. Zafrulla Khan that that is my only object in asking these questions.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] I am not objecting at all. I am merely placing on record my view also, so that my view, as well as your Lordship's questions, will be on record.

The Marquess of Zetland.] I do not desire to ask any more questions, my Lord Chairman.

Mr. Isaac Foot.

9343 I will not ask any questions of a general nature, but there is one question that I would like to put to Mr. GAVAI. Mr. GAVAI, you are here as a representative of the Depressed Classes?—(Mr. G. A. Gavai.) Yes.

9344. From what part of India do you come?—I come from the Central Provinces, and Berar.

9345. Do I understand, further, that you support the Memorandum which has been put in by Hindu Mahasabha: you have approved that, have you?—I have my general support to the Memorandum of the Hindu Mahasabha, with the exception that I do not agree with the statement that there are no Depressed Classes in the Punjab.

9346. You do not agree with that statement, but with that exception you approve the Memorandum which has been put in?—I generally approve of it.

9347. Do you hold any official position in representing the Depressed Classes?—I have been a Member of the Legislative Council for the last eighteen years.

9348. Do you hold any official position in representing the Depressed Classes, and are you the head of any Association?—I am the General Secretary of the All-India Depressed Classes Association.

9349. Have you consulted your Association to ascertain if they approve of this Memorandum?—No.

9350 Why have you not taken their opinion?—The time at my disposal was very short, but the President of the Association has written to me to say that I should accompany the Deputation, and I approved of it. I have the general support of the members of the Executive Committee of our Association, but the Association did not meet, and there was no resolution.

9351. Speaking in your own individual capacity, do you approve the Poona Pact?—Yes, I approve the Poona Pact in my individual capacity, and as a representative of the Association; I approve the Poona Pact.

9352. And your Association approves it?—My Association did approve.

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND.

The Marquess of Lothian.

9353. Dr. Moonje, Mr. Bannerjee, I think I am right in saying, suggested this morning that the franchise proposed in the White Paper was too extensive. Is it the view of the Hindu Mahasabha that it should be restricted from the proposals as put forward in the White Paper?—(Dr Moonje.) No.

9354. The Hindu Mahasabha approves of it?—Yes.

9355. They do not share the view expressed by Mr Bannerjee?—No.

9356. It has been suggested that, in the interests of simplicity of working, the Central Legislative, or the Assembly of the Central Legislature, should be elected by some means from the Provincial Legislatures, and not directly by constituencies, because the constituencies are so large, and they would contain so many voters. What is the view of the Hindu Mahasabha upon that point?—That question the Hindu Mahasabha, as such, has not considered, but my personal opinion is that it would be more convenient to have them elected from the local Legislatures?—(Pandit Nanak Chand) Perhaps I may say, with regard to this, that the Punjab Hindus have thoroughly considered this question in all its bearings, and they are of opinion that there should be direct election, and not indirect election.

9357. There are one or two points in your evidence about which I want to be clear. I do not want a long explanation, because I think that your main thesis is quite clearly before the Committee. As I understand your Memorandum relating to the agricultural tribes and the franchise, it is this, that about 50 per cent of the population of the Punjab is scheduled as agricultural tribes, and about 50 per cent. as non-agricultural?—That is so.

9358. Owing to the fact that the main franchise qualification will be property, the agriculturalists will get more than 50 per cent of the representation on the roll?—That is so.

9359. The estimates which I have seen vary between 60 per cent. and 75 per cent; is that your view?—That is the estimate made by the Local Government now.

9360. Am I right in saying that your anxiety is that the members returned by those majority votes may form a block which is interested in the vested interest in having a prior right to acquire land?—Yes.

9361. That may form the basis of a political party which might then proceed to abuse its powers?—This is what is happening to-day, and it is bound to happen to-morrow.

9362. As I understand it, you propose two remedies?—Yes.

9363. The first is, that the franchise proposals should be reconsidered in the manner that you suggest on page 10, with a view to securing a more level representation on the roll as between agriculturalists and non-agriculturalists? That is so

9364. The second is, that you raise the question under Clause 122 as it is drafted at present, that the Governor, in the event of the abuse of power in respect of the non-agriculturalists, would not have the right to intervene under his special responsibility?—He cannot. If Clause 122 stands as it is, my submission is that he cannot 9365. That is the second point that you want the Committee to consider?—Yes.

Mr. Butler] Arising out of Lord Lothian's cross-examination, you are aware, are you not, that there has been no opportunity of assessing the final proportion of agriculturalists to non-agriculturalists proposed in the franchise proposals, because it cannot be done until a roll is actually made, the figures must be approximate?—That was the position that I took up, but I was told that the Punjab Government has made some estimates, and those estimates were mentioned.

9366. My only point is, that it must be a rough estimate?—It is a rough and conjectural estimate.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9367. Are you aware that the prevention of prejudice to the interests of the minorities and prevention of discrimination between the various classes and interests in a Province are to be separate and distinct powers of the Government?—I do not think so.

9368. Have not you looked at the White Paper and seen that they are described separately under separate heads?—My point is—

9369. Is that so or not? You can explain afterwards?—What I submit is, that this is a distinction which will never be taken into consideration, if there can be a distinction of this kind. If the

31st July, 1933.] Dr. B. S. MOONJE, Mr. B. C. CHATTERJEE, [Continued.
Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, Mr. G. A. GAVAI, RAI SAHEB MEHERCHAND KHANNA,
Mr. R. M. DESHMUKH, Mr. BHAI PARMANAND and PANDIT NANAK CHAND

White Paper proposals, and especially paragraph 122, are converted into part of the law of the new Constitution, then the Governor would not be entitled to interfere whenever there is discriminative legislation against the minority, whether the minority be of caste, religion, or race.

9369A. I understand that you, Mr. Gavai, have a short statement to make on behalf of the All India Depressed Classes Association?—Yes, my Lord. I have already said, in my answer to the few questions that were put to me during the tendering of evidence before the Joint Parliamentary Committee yesterday by the Deputation of the Hindu Mahasabha, of which I am a member, that I am in general accord with statement No. 57 of the Hindu Mahasabha.

In respect of the Poona Pact, my personal position and that of the All India Depressed Class Association of which Rai Bahadur M. C. Rajah, M.L.A., is the President and I am the General Secre-

(The Witnesses are directed to withdraw.)

(Ordered, that the Committee be adjourned to to-morrow at half-past Ten o'clock.)

DIE MARTIS, 1st AUGUSTI, 1933.

Present:

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.
Marquess of Salisbury
Marquess of Zetland.
Marquess of Linlithgow.
Marquess of Reading.
Earl Peel.
Lord Ker (Marquess of Lothian).
Lord Irwin.
Lord Rankeillour.
Lord Hutchison of Montrose.
Major Attlee.

Mr. Butler.
Major Cadogan.
Sir Austen Chamberlain.
Mr. Cocks.
Sir Reginald Craddock.
Mr. Davidson.
Mr. Isaac Foot.
Sir Joseph Nall.
Lord Eustace Percy.
Miss Pickford.

The following Indian Delegates were also present —

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Rao Bahadur Sir Krishnama Chari.
Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan.
Sir Akbar Hydari.

Sir Mirza M. Ismail.
Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.
Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

His Highness The Aga Khan
Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
Sir Hubert Carr.
Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.
Lt.-Col. Sir H. Gidney.
Sir Hari Singh Gour.
Mr. M. R. Jayaker.
Mr. N. M. Joshi.
Begum Shah Nawaz.

Sir A. P. Patro.
Sir Abdur Rahim.
Sir Phiroze Sethna.
Dr Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.
Sardar Buta Singh.
Sir N. N. Sircar.
Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.
Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

The MARQUESS OF LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C., Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD are called in and examined.

Chairman.

9370. Khan Sahib Haji Rashid Ahmad?
 —(Khan Sahib Haji Rashid Ahmad.) Yes.

9371. Sir Mohammed Yakub?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Yes.

9372. Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Yes.

9373. Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) Yes.

9374. Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) Yes.

9375. You are good enough to appear before us this morning on behalf of the All India Muslim Conference and the All India Muslim League and you hand in a Memorandum which is No. 67?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Yes. It is as follows.—

MEMORANDUM 67 ON BEHALF OF THE ALL INDIA MUSLIM CONFERENCE AND THE ALL INDIA MUSLIM LEAGUE

1. The political awakening among the Indian Muslims took definite shape in 1906 when a deputation of leading representative Muslims waited on Lord Minto under the leadership of H.H. the Agha Khan in connection with the contemplated reforms which afterwards came to be designated the Minto-Morley Reforms. This was the nucleus from which was formed the influential body known as the All India Muslim League. This body played an important part in the evolution of the Montford Scheme and generally guided the political policy of the Indian Muslims.

2. The publication of the Nehru report in 1928 caused widespread dissatisfaction amongst the Muslims of India and it was considered desirable to organise all the existing All India Muslim political associations into one compact body representing all shades of Muslim opinion including the Ulama so as to provide a common political platform. This body was named the All India Muslim Conference. Its first meeting was held in Delhi under the presidency of H.H. the Agha Khan and was attended by delegates from all over the country representing all shades of Muslim political thought.

3. The Muslim Conference as well as the Muslim League aim at safeguarding the legitimate rights and interests of the Muslims of India and co-operating with other communities for the political advancement of India. These rights are embodied in the fundamental Resolution of the All India Muslim Conference passed at Delhi on January 1st, 1929. The Muslim attitude towards the system of government to be established in India may be summed up in the following extract from the first paragraph of that Resolution:—

“The only form of government suitable to Indian conditions is the Federal system with complete autonomy and residuary powers vested in the constituent States, the central government having control only of such matters of common interest as may be specifically entrusted to it by the constitution.”

4. This Resolution embodies the political programme of the Muslims of India, and the Muslim community has adhered to it in overwhelming strength. In India it is the creed of an overwhelming number of Muslims in every Province, while in England, at the three Round Table Conferences which were held in the years 1930-1932, the Muslim delegates regarded it as the most authoritative and representative expression of Muslim feelings and aspirations.

5. The attitude of the community towards the White Paper will be made perfectly clear by the Resolution passed by the Executive Board of the Conference, held at Delhi on March 26th, 1933.

6. As the White Paper does not embody a number of rights which the Muslims deem to be vital to their political interests, they urge that it should be modified to that extent.

7. The Muslims have consistently discouraged unconstitutional action, and believe in co-operation with all the elements of the Indian population for the purpose of making the new Reforms a success. They think, however, that the scheme outlined in the White Paper will not be a complete success until the Muslim community is assured of those rights which the White Paper has ignored.

1^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

The Muslims earnestly request His Majesty's Government to modify the White Paper along the lines indicated in the Resolution of the Executive Board of the Conference passed on March 26th, 1933, at Delhi. If the suggestions made in the Resolution are adopted, the Muslim community throughout India will render substantial help in making the new scheme a success, and in heartily working the new Constitution.

8. Copies of the fundamental Resolution of the Conference passed at Delhi on January 1, 1929, and the Resolution of the Executive Board of the Conference on the proposals of His Majesty's Government embodied in the White Paper, passed at Delhi on March 26, 1933, are enclosed herewith.

9. We would lay particular stress on the following points:—

I.—INTRODUCTION OF REFORMS.

There should be no delay in the introduction of Provincial Autonomy. If the pre-requisites for the setting up of Federation as laid down in the White Paper (Introduction 12, 13 and 32) are likely to take a few years, the Muslims are strongly of opinion that Provincial Autonomy should not be held up.

II.—THE FEDERATION OF INDIA.

We feel that there are great difficulties in working out an All-India Federation in which the Indian States must necessarily influence British Indian policy while British India will be precluded from interfering in the internal affairs of the States. We therefore urge that as many subjects as possible should be transferred to the Provinces, and as few retained for the Federal Centre as possible. It should be specifically laid down in the Constitution that the residuary powers should be vested in the Provinces.

III.—FEDERAL LEGISLATURE.

A.—The Lower Chamber or House of Assembly.

Muslim representation in the House of Assembly must be effective and adequate. The demand of the Mussalmans for one-third representation in the Central Legislature was made at a time when an All-India Federation comprising both the States and the British Indian Provinces was not within the range of practical politics. When, as at present, it is intended to give considerable representation to the States, one-third of the seats of the British Indian Provinces, if reserved for Muslims, will give them about 22 per cent. of the whole House. In order to rectify this and to give the Muslims their due influence in the Legislature, the Mussalmans should be guaranteed one-third of the total number of seats in the whole House. The seats awarded, namely, 82 out of 250, are even less than one-third of the British Indian seats.

B.—Upper Chamber or Council of State.

(i) The election to this Chamber should not be through joint electorates by the method of the single transferable vote, but through separate electorates, the Muslim members of the provincial legislature forming a separate constituency for each Province.

(ii) The Muslims should be specifically guaranteed one-third of the seats of the whole House as in the lower chamber.

(iii) No seats should be filled by nomination.

C.—Franchise for the Legislature.

Women should not be given the vote in the right of their husbands.

D.—Labour Representation.

We should like to see Labour being effectively represented. Special representation should be given to maritime Labour (Seamen) in as much as maritime shipping and navigation are proposed to be an exclusively federal subject. Similarly inland mariners working on mechanically propelled ships on inland rivers (also proposed to be made an exclusively federal subject) should be given special representation.

E.—Ministers' Salaries.

These should be a votable item.

IV.—GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S RELATIONS WITH THE LEGISLATURE.

There is no reason why the Governor-General should be given the extraordinary power of making Acts, a power which is fundamentally subversive of all principles of responsible government and would have the effect of depriving the elected representatives of the people of their exclusive right to legislate.

V.—SPECIAL RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AND GOVERNORS.

It should be clearly laid down in the Constitution that the special powers vested in the Governor-General for safeguarding the financial stability and credit of the Federation and the prevention of commercial discrimination and in the Governors for the latter purpose, should not be used in such a way as to prejudice the growth of Indian commerce and industry, nor should the special powers with regard to peace and tranquillity be used unless there is widespread danger.

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

[Continued.]

VI.—GOVERNORS' PROVINCES.

(a) Provincial Autonomy.

The principle of giving full autonomy to all the Provinces having been admitted, it is not necessary to say anything further under this head. But as it has been suggested in some quarters that law and order should be reserved in some Provinces, we would like to stress the extreme inadvisability of making any invidious distinction in this matter, as between the Provinces

(b) Governors' Acts.

Consistently with the principle of provincial autonomy, the provincial legislature alone should have the power of making Acts, and the Governor should have no special powers in that behalf.

VII.—PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES.

(a) Muslim representation in the Provinces.

While we realise that the Communal decision has been necessitated by the inability of the communities in India to come to an agreement with each other, and while we are in general agreement with the principles underlying that decision and are prepared to work the Constitution on that basis, we feel it our duty to point out that the Muslims have not been fairly treated

In the first place, the well-recognised principle that no majority should be reduced to the position of a minority, or even to that of equality, has been departed from in the case of Bengal.

Again, the weightage enjoyed by the Muslims in the Provinces where they are in the minority has been reduced in nearly all cases

As regards the new province of Orissa, which was not dealt with by the communal decision, the weightage given to Muslims is inadequate and ineffective. Their position ought to be reconsidered.

(b) Upper Chambers.

There should be no Upper Chamber in Bengal. The Legislative Council and public opinion have declared themselves to be emphatically against it Further, there should be no nominations in the Upper Chamber.

(c) Provincial franchise.

(i) Re Women. The same remarks as in the case of federal franchise. The women should vote in the separate communal electorates of the communities to which they belong.

(ii) Universities. The electorate should consist of the members of the Senate or the Court as the case may be

(iii) Commerce. Muslim Chambers of Commerce, wherever existing, should form separate electoral units in their respective Provinces.

(iv) Landholders. The electoral qualifications of landholders in Bengal and Bihar should be reduced and instead of there being several single-seated constituencies, there should be only one many-seated constituency for each of the two Provinces, the election taking place by the method of the single transferable vote.

(d) Ministers' salaries should be made votable and the Ministers should be fully responsible to the Legislature, and should hold office only so long as they enjoy the confidence of the House.

(e) Muslim Ministers.

There should be at least one Muslim Minister in every Province in which the Muslims are in a minority.

(f) Control of Provincial Governments over the Services.

Provincial Governments should have effective control over the existing All-India Service officers, and should have complete control over future All-India Service officers and over all existing and future Provincial and other Services.

(g) Miscellaneous.

(i) A substantial measure of Reform should be immediately introduced in Baluchistan.

(ii) Delhi. Delhi as the ancient capital and the present metropolis of India, has a special importance of its own, and this importance is likely to grow more and more. It should have a franchise analogous to the franchise in the Presidency towns.

The one seat allotted to Delhi in the Upper Chamber should go to Muslims and non-Muslims by rotation

(iii) Ajmere-Merwara. Ajmere-Merwara should, like Delhi, have a Muslim seat in the Lower House by separate election and a Muslim and non-Muslim seat by rotation in the Upper House of the Federal Legislature.

VIII.—RELATIONS BETWEEN THE FEDERATION AND THE UNITS.

(a) Residuary powers should vest in the federating units (see II above).

(b) Division of subjects: As many subjects as possible should be allotted to the Provinces (see II above). With special reference to White Paper, Appendix VI, List I.—

10 August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

"17. Shipping and Navigation on Inland Waterways as regards mechanically propelled vessels" should be entirely a Provincial subject where the operations are confined to a single Province: where more than one Province is concerned this jurisdiction should be concurrent.

49. Income Tax—This should be made a Provincial subject.

50, 51, 52 Death Duties, Taxes on Mineral Rights, Terminal Taxes, etc.—These should be allotted to the Provinces from which they are derived, and not merely distributed.

54. Imposition and Administration of Taxes not otherwise specified in List I or II.—This should be provincial.

There are some subjects which may, with advantage, be made concurrent, e.g. 14, Inland waterways passing through two or more units, and 15, Maritime shipping.

As regards item No. 2, in List III, Civil Procedure Code, no modification made by the Central Legislature should be enforced in any particular Province unless the Local Legislature of that Province has itself adopted that modification by a vote of the House.

IX.—THE JUDICATURE: HIGH COURTS.

The High Courts should be entirely a Provincial subject. The judges should be appointed by His Majesty on the recommendation of the Governor. There should be no additional judges. Temporary judges may be appointed as may be necessary by the Governor.

Every judge should retire at the age of 60.

The Provincial Legislature and not the Federal Legislature should regulate the powers of superintendence to be exercised by the High Courts over the subordinate judiciary in the Province.

X.—STATUTORY RAILWAY BOARD.

The Railway Board should have an Advisory Body on which all Provinces should be fully represented.

XI.—SERVICES.

Provincial Governments must have full control over all who serve under them. The rights and privileges of the present incumbents of the All-India Services should be guaranteed, but future recruitment for the Provinces should be placed in the hands of the Provinces. If necessary, the minimum qualifications of candidates may be laid down, and they should be recruited by Provincial Public Services Commissions, on the same lines as in England.

While we welcome Indianization, we strongly urge that the Muslims should have a full and adequate share in all grades of the Public Services, including the Army and other forces of the Crown. The inclusion of the large Muslim community under the general heading of Minorities has very much prejudiced the interests of the Muslims, as they have been treated on the same plane as numerically insignificant minorities.

To ensure the due representation of Muslims, we urge that the proportion of Muslims in the Services should reflect their proportion of representation in the several legislative bodies.

We would call special attention to the wholly inadequate representation of Muslims in the All-India Services, particularly the Railways, the Posts and Telegraphs, and the Accounts and Audit Departments. The Muslim employees should, in view of the fact that their rights have frequently been ignored, be accorded the right of being heard through their own recognised Trades Unions and Associations, as they have failed to secure the redress of their grievances through general Trades Unions and Employees' Associations. We ask that specific reference should be made to this matter in the Instruments of Instructions.

XII.—FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS.

We regret to note that no provision has been made for incorporating in the Constitution Act a declaration of Fundamental Rights. It is stated (Introduction 75) that "His Majesty's Government see serious objections to giving statutory expression" to large declarations of this kind but no objections have been specified and it is therefore not possible to meet them. It must however be stated that Muslim opinion in India is strong about the necessity of providing proper safeguards for the protection of Muslim religion and culture, education, languages and law, and this can only be ensured if a provision to that effect is embodied in the Constitution Act.

APPENDIX I.

Resolution of the All-India Muslim Conference, Delhi, 1st January, 1929.

"Whereas, in view of India's vast extent, and its ethnological, linguistic, administrative and geographical or territorial divisions, the only form of Government suitable to Indian conditions is a federal system with complete autonomy and residuary powers vested in the constituent States, the Central Government having control only of such matters of common interest as may be specifically entrusted to it by the Constitution,

1^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

"And whereas it is essential that no Bill, resolution, motion or amendment regarding inter-communal matters be moved, discussed or passed by any legislature, central or provincial, if a three-fourth majority of the members of either the Hindu or the Muslim community affected thereby in that legislature oppose the introduction, discussion or passing of such Bill, resolution, motion or amendment,

"And whereas the right of Moslems to elect their representatives on the various Indian Legislatures through separate electorates is now the law of the land and Muslims cannot be deprived of that right without their consent;

"And whereas in the conditions existing at present in India and so long as those conditions continue to exist, representation in various Legislatures and other statutory self-governing bodies of Muslims through their own separate electorates is essential in order to bring into existence a really representative democratic Government,

"And whereas as long as Musalmans are not satisfied that their rights and interests are adequately safeguarded in the constitution, they will in no way consent to the establishment of joint electorates, whether with or without conditions;

"And whereas, for the purposes aforesaid, it is essential that Musalmans should have their due share in the central and provincial cabinets;

"And whereas it is essential that representation of Musalmans in the various legislatures and other statutory self-governing bodies should be based on a plan whereby the Muslim majority in those provinces where Musalmans constitute a majority of population shall in no way be affected and in the provinces in which Musalmans constitute a minority they shall have a representation in no case less than that enjoyed by them under the existing law;

"And whereas representative Muslim gatherings in all provinces in India have unanimously resolved that with a view to provide adequate safeguards for the protection of Muslim interests in India as a whole, Musalmans should have the right of 33 per cent. representation in the Central Legislature and this Conference entirely endorses that demand;

"And whereas on ethnological, linguistic, geographical and administrative grounds the province of Sindh has no affinity whatever with the rest of the Bombay Presidency and its unconditional constitution into a separate province, possessing its own separate legislative and administrative machinery on the same lines as in other provinces of India is essential in the interests of its people, the Hindu minority in Sindh being given adequate and effective representation in excess of their proportion in the population, as may be given to Musalmans in provinces in which they constitute a minority of population;

"And whereas the introduction of constitutional reforms in the N.W.F. Province and Baluchistan along such lines as may be adopted in other provinces of India is essential not only in the interests of those provinces but also of the constitutional advance of India as a whole, the Hindu minorities in those provinces being given adequate and effective representation in excess of their proportion in population, as is given to the Muslim community in provinces in which it constitutes a minority of the population,

"And whereas it is essential in the interests of Indian administration that provision should be made in the constitution giving Muslims their adequate share along with other Indians in all services of the State and on all statutory self-governing bodies, having due regard to the requirements of efficiency;

"And whereas, having regard to the political conditions obtaining in India it is essential that the Indian Constitution should embody adequate safeguards for protection and promotion of Muslim education, languages, religion, personal law and Muslim charitable institutions, and for their due share in grants-in-aid,

"And whereas it is essential that the constitution should provide that no change in the Indian constitution shall, after its inauguration, be made by the Central Legislature except with the concurrence of all the States constituting the Indian federation,

"This Conference emphatically declares that no constitution, by whomsoever proposed or devised, will be acceptable to Indian Musalmans unless it conforms with the principles embodied in this resolution.

APPENDIX II.

Resolution No. 11, passed at Delhi on March 26th, 1933. This meeting of the Executive Board of the All-India Muslim Conference expresses its profound disappointment with the schemes of reforms outlined in the White Paper. In the opinion of the Board the said scheme fails to meet the demand of the Muslim community as embodied in the various resolutions of the All-India Muslim Conference.

1^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

In view of the extreme dissatisfaction of the Muslim community with the proposals of His Majesty's Government, the Board demands radical changes on the following lines.—

(1) The Provinces should be granted the largest measure of fiscal, administrative and legislative autonomy;

(2) The Governors' powers are excessive and should be curtailed.

(3) The provincial Ministers should be fully responsible to the Legislature, and should hold office only so long as they enjoy the confidence of the House.

(4) The provincial Governments should have effective control over imperial and complete control over provincial and other services.

(5) The powers of the Governor-General should be curtailed.

(6) The High Court should be an exclusively provincial subject. The appointment of High Court Judges should be made by His Majesty on the recommendation of the Provincial Governors and of the Provinces in which the High Courts are situated. The provincial legislature (and not the federal legislature as noted in section 175 of the White Paper) should regulate the power of superintendence exercised by the High Court over the subordinate courts in the Province.

(7) No weightage or other discriminatory privileges should be given to the Indian States

(8) Fundamental safeguards for the protection of personal law, education and culture of the Muslims should be incorporated in the constitution.

(9) Provision should be made for the effective representation of the Muslims in the public services of the country and the army. Effective steps should be taken to Indianize the army within a fixed period.

(10) As the Muslims claim one-third representation of the whole House in the Upper House of the Federal Legislature, and have been definitely promised one-third of the British Indian share of the seats in the House and cannot see any effective way of securing sufficient seats among the representatives of the States to make up their proportion to one-third of the whole House, it is their considered opinion that slightly increased proportion of their seats in the British Indian share over the one-third is essential.

The Muslims further disapprove of the principle of joint electorate in the elections to the Upper House of the Federal Legislature, and urge the adoption of separate electorate by direct method.

(11) A substantial measure of reforms should be immediately introduced in Baluchistan.

(12) The one seat allotted to Delhi in the Upper House should go to the Muslims and Non-Muslims by rotation

(13) The population of Delhi and Ajmere being equal, Ajmere should have the same measure of representation in both Houses of the Federal Legislature as Delhi, and such representation should be regulated by the same principle as in Delhi, and when one is represented by a Muslim the other should be represented by a Non-Muslim in the Upper House

(14) That inasmuch as His Majesty's Government's decision promised to give Muslims of Bihar and Orissa 42 seats out of 175 seats, i.e. 24 per cent. of whole House by separate electorates. This meeting of the Executive Board demands that the proportion then fixed should on no account be changed and the seats should be so allotted to Muslims in the Province of Bihar and Orissa in both the Provincial Legislatures that the total proportion of 24 per cent. should not be disturbed.

(15) That representation awarded to commerce should include the Muslim Chamber of Commerce of Bengal and Bihar as electoral units in their respective Provinces

(16) That the electoral qualifications of the landholders constituency should be reduced in Bengal and Bihar and single-seated constituencies should be changed into one multi-seated constituency in each Province by single transferable votes.

(17) The Indian States should be given no privileges of competing for All-India Service such as the I.C.S., I.M.S. and commissions in the Indian Army until the States agree

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

to extend the same privileges to British Indian subjects in their territories

Chairman.] I shall invite my colleagues to put their questions to you and reserve my own until I see what they propose to ask you.

Mr. Isaac Foot.

9376. In paragraph 7 you state that unless the suggestions you make are adopted you do not think the scheme contained in the White Paper can be a success?—That is so because there would be difficulties.

9377. You say later: "If the suggestions made in the Resolution are adopted,"—that is, the Resolution passed at Delhi, "the Muslim community throughout India will render substantial help in making the new scheme a success, and in heartily working the new Constitution." I would like to put this question. Of course, you recognise that the proposals contained in the White Paper have been made by the Government having regard to the many conflicting claims in India?—Quite so.

9378. Supposing the Government and this Committee came to the conclusion that the proposals as contained in the White Paper were the fairest having regard to all the conditions, would you still be prepared to co-operate in working that scheme?—The position of our Conference is that we hope modifications will be made, but if by any chance no modifications are made, or modifications are made which are not satisfactory to us, we shall have to reconsider the question in general meeting.

9379. Under Heading III C: "Franchise for the Legislature," you state that women should not be given the vote in the right of their husbands?—That is so.

9380. Would you amplify that? What is the ground of your objection there?—We think that the vote should be a matter of personal qualification, not a matter of vicarious qualification.

9381. Of course, that is a very substantial element in the Franchise proposals contained in the White Paper—the wife's right to vote as the wife. Do you attach importance to your suggestion here? Is it a very important part of your recommendations?—Our point is that the wife should vote if she has a qualification for herself, but merely to make it a question of voting because her husband votes doubles the vote in many cases of the husband.

9382. Is there anything in that claim that is peculiar to the Musselman population of India, or is it simply a political point?—I think it is mainly a general question, but there is also this question, that, by our social system, the women come out less than in other communities, and therefore our political influence will be prejudiced.

9383. That is, purdah so far as it exists, affects the Musselman population so much more than the Hindu population?—Exactly.

9384. Can you give us any information as to the extent to which purdah is disappearing?—I think it is disappearing gradually, but it will take a long time before it will completely disappear.

9385. To the extent that purdah does disappear the ground for your objection here stated is removed?—Not entirely, because we take the first ground as the more important.

9386. The first ground is that the woman ought to vote as an individual and not because of her husband's qualification?—Exactly. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) My Lord Chairman, may I be allowed to express my views rather elaborately on this question?

Chairman.

9287. Please?—My views, Sir, are as regards the enfranchisement of women, far be it from me to impose any inferiority of status on the women folk of my country. Indeed, as a Musselman, I am compelled to allow her full equality of status. I would therefore like to place women on the same level as men, and I would have the same qualifications for them relating to property or education as for men. I think it would lower the prestige of a woman if she were placed on the electoral roll only because she happens to be the wife of a certain man elector. Then again in India polygamy is not very unusual, and it would be highly illogical to give the vote to one wife, and deprive the other having the same legal and social status. Then again I consider it to be very unjust to deprive a women of her vote, after using it for a very long time, very unjust to deprive a women of her vote, after using it for a very long time, as soon as she loses her husband. Also I do not see any reason why the wife of an ordinary voter should have the right to vote while the mother, or the wife of a soldier, or a policeman, who has rendered valuable services in the defence of the country, or lost his life in the service of the Crown, should be deprived of it. I am therefore entirely opposed to creating any artificial qualifications for women other than those, or in addition to those, of men.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Mr. Isaac Foot.

9388. Is that an individual opinion, or is it the considered opinion of the deputation?—I think this opinion is shared by a majority of the witnesses here, and by an overwhelming majority of the Musselmans in India. I have in my hand the "Star of India" dated 6th July, 1933, and here is a passage from Simla. They say "It might seem unchivalrous that educated men in India should venture to criticise the views expressed by representatives of Indian women when they addressed public meetings of women in England, but the fact cannot be overlooked that the views expressed by them on the question of electorates for women do not seem to have met with the approval of a large number of Muslim politicians in this country. Those few Indian women, who are now carrying on a campaign in England in favour of joint electorates have laid great stress on the views expressed by Women's Associations in India, but they have altogether ignored the views expressed by leading Muslim politicians. No one will deny that the women of India who have been doing public work have endeavoured to keep out the communal question from entering the women's movement. No one will deny that Indian women's representatives, without exception, urged before the Indian Franchise Committee that women's representatives in the Indian Legislature should be there, not as members of particular communities, but as representatives of women of all castes and creeds. What however, Indian women's representatives forget is that the leaders of those communities which have demanded, and which have been given, separate electorates under the Communal Decision have insisted on separate electorates because they know that a sufficient number of true representatives of their communities will not be returned except through the system of separate electorates. For some years after the introduction of the next reforms, until the representatives of all communities are able to sink all communal differences, numbers would and should count in the Legislatures, and the leaders of the Muslim community cannot be blamed if they insist that Muslim women should be bracketed with their men, and that they should not be allowed to go outside their community." This passage, I think, represents the views of the Muslim leaders, at least, a very large majority of them in India. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) My Lord Chairman, may I add two remarks. One is that I understand that a certain number of Indian women themselves take the view that their qualification should be individual and not in virtue of their husbands' votes. Secondly, the point urged by my friend no doubt has been urged in various places in India, but it has never been placed before our Association as a whole.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9389. May I ask a supplementary question on that?—Is this view shared by the Muslim women as well?—The view that they should not have the vote in virtue of their husband's qualification?

9390. No. I am referring to what Sir Mohammed Yakub said in his statement this morning: Has this statement the support of the Muslim women in my country?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) A very large number.

9391. Could you name some of them, please?—It is difficult to give the names here, but I can point out certainly and definitely that this is the view of a large number of Muslim women in India.

9392. We have an All-India Muslim Ladies' Conference. Could you tell us of any resolution that that Conference has passed in support of your views?—You know it better than I do, Madam. (Khan Sahib Haji Rashid Ahmad.) May I quote a resolution passed by the All-India Muslim League. "The All-India Muslim League does not view with satisfaction the decision of His Majesty's Government that the right of franchise be given to women in the Provincial Legislatures in respect of their husbands' property, as such qualifications are only a breach of principles of true representation. The League is of opinion that every individual, male or female, must be qualified with his or her own merits and not upon the merits of others."

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9393. Was I not present at that meeting when this resolution was carried?—I do not know whether you were present or not.

9394. May I know whether it is the opinion of your organisations that women should get the vote in their individual right or whether you are against the extension of the franchise to women even in their individual right?—No, we are not against it. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) We have explained that we want the women to have the same qualifications as the men. We do not want any artificial qualifications for women. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) In other words, we want equal status.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan.

9395. You do not desire that any disqualification should be imposed on women merely on account of their sex?—No, certainly not.

Marquess of Lothian.

9396. When you say equal status, do you mean equal rights?—The same qualification for women as for men.

9397. The word used was "status." I wondered if you want women to have equal rights with men?—As regards franchise.

9398. But not as regards representation?—Yes, I think so.

9399. Would you say that a system which in fact only put one woman on the roll to twenty men was giving them equal status?—I think that is a wrong way of approaching the problem. We want to treat every citizen on his or her own merits. I think that it is wrong to say you must have a certain number. It is quite conceivable that when our women are educated and come out they may have the same number on the electoral rolls as the men, or possibly they may even exceed the men as they do in England. I am not opposed to that personally.

9400. You do not apply that principle to the men, do you, as far as the joint electorates are concerned?—That is because of the peculiar conditions in India.

9401. Surely it is a very peculiar condition if only one woman in twenty is on the roll, when you say you want them to have equal status?—Yes, but I think the proportion will increase every year and I hope it will increase.

9402. How will it increase under the White Paper scheme?—Surely as education increases amongst the women, the proportion of women must increase.

9403. But the education amongst men is much larger than among women, especially in the higher ranks, and the disparity will increase, not lessen?—I do not think so. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Their disparity was not considered objectionable in England. What was the percentage of women voters in England when you started your first reforms and what is the number of women members in the House of Commons to-day?

Begum Shah Nawaz.] Their proportion in this country was three to four.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] We have a qualification in this country, if it is of any interest to the witnesses, where the wife's qualification is by reason of her husband having a certain qualification.

Sir Joseph Nall.] Also there are certain cases where the husband has a vote by virtue of his wife's qualification.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9404. If nothing is to be done even after taking into consideration the peculiar conditions present in India with regard to the women voters, should any weightage be given to the minorities?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) May I say as regards the minorities, the question is rather on a different level. In my view (I am speaking individually because this point has not been considered together) there is no real difference of interests as between the sexes, and hence the world has got on for centuries without any votes to women. I think it is right that under modern conditions the women should have a vote, but it is only a matter of convenience and status. I do not think that the interests of the two sexes are so opposed that we need meticulous care in fixing the proportions, or anything of that kind.

9405. Is not it a fact, Yusuf Ali, that Islam was the first religion to recognise equality of status between men and women; that for the first time in history the word "musawat," meaning "equality," was used as far as the rights of citizenship go?—That is true, and it is one of the cardinal principles of Islam to give equal status to women and men.

9406. Is it not a fact that, even as far as the divorce laws are concerned, if an agreement is entered into by both the parties at the time of the marriage and the husband delegates his right of divorce, the woman has equality given, in that sphere?—That is true to a qualified extent. I cannot go into details of law, but it is perfectly true to a qualified extent.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHBAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHEED AHMAD.

Marquess of Zetland.

9407. Mr. Yusuf Ali, would you turn for a moment to Section VII of the Memorandum that has been put in? You say you feel it is your duty to point out that in the matter of representation in the Provincial Legislatures the Muslims have not been fairly treated and you give two specific examples of that. You say that in the case of Bengal "the well-recognised principle that no majority should be reduced to the position of a minority or even to that of equality, has been departed from." That is the first case you give. Then you give the case of the Province of Orissa and you say that, "As regards the new Province of Orissa, which was not dealt with by the communal decision, the weightage given to Muslims is inadequate and ineffective." First of all, with regard to Orissa, the figures which we have been given show that the Muslims form 1.9 per cent. of the population and that the representation which they are to be given in the Legislature will be 6.7 of the total number of seats; that is to say, the weightage which they are to be given is $3\frac{1}{2}$ times the ratio of population? Now what I want to know is, if you consider that that weightage is not sufficient, how much would you require?—Where the minority is very small, an exact proportion is difficult to fix, but I should like to give an instance in the contrary direction of Sind and the North-West Frontier Province. There the Mussulman majority is overwhelming, and the Hindu minority is very small, but we have given them willingly a little over three times the percentage; and I think in Orissa, too, without naming any exact figure, it is necessary, in order that the Muslims should have some weight in the consideration of local matters, that they should have rather more than the miserable four members.

9408. Let me take the very case you have mentioned, the North-West Frontier Province. You say that you have willingly conceded to the Hindus a weightage of three times the ratio of their population?—More than three times.

9409. 3.1 times actually?—Yes.

9410. But in Orissa, you have been conceded 3.5 times. If you think that in the case of the North-West Frontier Province you have treated the Hindus generously by giving them a weightage of 3.1 times the population ratio, why do you think that the Muslims in Orissa have been treated unfairly, when they have been given a weightage of 3.5 times their population ratio?—There are two answers to that. In the North-West Frontier Province, I believe (I have not got the figures here), your proportion is the non-Muslim population, not the Hindu population. There are the Sikhs in the North-West Frontier Province, and that complicates matters. In Orissa there are just the two communities, the Hindu and the Muslims, and, therefore, a fair comparison would be to take the Muslim and Hindu in both cases. Secondly, where the minority is very small, under 2 per cent., if you give them an equal weightage, it yet follows that their influence is almost negligible, you ought to give them a little more weightage. After all, supposing you give them representation of 10 per cent. in Orissa, that does not give them any preponderating voice, but, on the other hand, it would give them six members who can voice Muslim feelings. I hope that is clear, Sir. The smaller the numbers, the greater the weightage.

Mr. Butler.] I think, my Lord Chairman, on that point the Sikhs in the North-West Frontier Province are actually separately represented. If you will turn to page 93 of the White Paper, you will see that they have three seats. They are actually 1.8 of the population, and they receive 3.3 times the population ratio in the weightage.

Marquess of Zetland.

9411. However, you have given me your answer, and I do not say whether I consider it a satisfactory answer, or not. Your view then, at any rate, is that in all Provinces the minorities ought to be given weightage?—Certainly.

9412. Now let us turn on to Bengal. In the case of Bengal, the Hindus are in a minority?—But they are almost on terms of equality. As regards Bengal, I think my friend, Mr. Suharwardy, will be able to answer it.

9413. Almost on terms of equality, but not quite; they are in a minority?—They are in a slight minority.

9414. So that according to your principles, they would be entitled to some weightage in the Legislature?—Certainly not, because if you give them weightage, our majority goes. It has gone already.

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

In Bengal where we have a numerical majority in the Province, we have been reduced to a minority, and our principle that weightage should be given to minorities is on condition that no majority should be reduced to a minority or to a position of equality.

9415. That brings me to a point which I really want to bring out, and that is this, that in the case of a Province like Bengal, where it is agreed on all hands that a certain number of seats must be reserved for the representation of special interests or the representation of Europeans, of commerce and industry, and all things of that kind, it is really in those circumstances impossible to grant either to the Muslims or to the Hindus the full number of seats which they would be entitled to on a purely population ratio. Is that not so?—That would be so; but the main principle must not be lost sight of, that where we come to a Government by a majority, you must not convert that majority into a minority. Subject to that, we would agree to any modifications.

9416. But then, what you are claiming in Bengal is this, that the Muslims should have a majority, not only over the Hindus, but over the representatives of every other interest combined?—They should have a sufficient majority for the will of the majority of the people to prevail.

9417. If we are going to act upon that principle, that means that in Bengal you are going to reserve to the Muslims a permanent majority in the Legislature, are you not?—Just as you have reserved to the Hindus a permanent majority in all the other Provinces where they are in a majority.

9418. That is a different question. The Hindus, I agree, will have a majority in many Provinces, but only because the Muslims insist upon having separate communal electorates. But do let us, for a moment, if you do not mind, confine ourselves to Bengal. I do not approach this question either as a Hindu or as a Muslim; I approach it as a neutral, and I should dislike intensely any final solution of this question in Bengal which would be likely to leave a feeling of unassuageable bitterness between the two major communities in that Province, the Hindus and the Muslims?—We should dislike it, too.

9419. It is quite clear from the evidence we have already had, that the position which is proposed to be given to the Muslims in the Legislature in Bengal will leave feelings of deep resentment and bitterness amongst the Hindus in that Province?—I do not think so. The whole agitation is artificial.

9420. I do not expect you to think so, but I am telling you what the Hindus think, or, at any rate, the impression which the Hindus have created upon my mind. That being so, I want to put to you this suggestion: Would it not be a fair solution of this problem in Bengal, which is admittedly an extraordinarily difficult one, if you were to put aside all those seats which give representation to special interest, and, having done that, to divide the remaining seats, which are open to Muslims and Hindus, between those two communities on a population basis?—The difficulty with that is that we shall never be able to get the will of the people to prevail.

9421. Of course, it depends on what you mean by the will of the people. When you talk about the will of the people, you are talking about the will of the Muslim community. I mean, after all, the Hindus, as you say, form a very large part of the population of Bengal; I think you said nearly on an equality; but if you wish to have an arrangement under which the Muslims will have a permanent majority in the Legislature, how is the will of the Hindus ever to have any chance of enforcing itself at all?—In the same way as the will of the Muslims will have a chance of enforcing itself in the United Provinces, although they have only one-third representation.

9422. We are getting back to other Provinces?—We must consider India as a whole, must we not?

9423. An arrangement of that kind would not be satisfactory to you; you would not consider that you were being fairly treated under an arrangement of that kind?—No.

Marquess of Salisbury.

9424. I understand from the conversation which has already passed that you realise how difficult the situation in Bengal is?—Certainly.

9425. And you criticise very much the arrangements which are provided in the White Paper?—Yes.

9426. I think you have answered this question. If you are asked whether you are prepared to abide by the White Paper, you say you would take that into re-consideration?—I have answered it.

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9427. I apologise for putting the question again, therefore. I suppose you do not look upon the White Paper settlement as permanent?—Nothing is permanent in politics.

9428. Indeed, not. I mean, really, if the White Paper were passed in its present form, would you try to modify it afterwards?—We have indicated where we feel extremely dissatisfied with it, and if we had the power, we should certainly try to set it right.

9429. How would you proceed to set it right?—If we had the power I do not know what fetters will be imposed upon the future Indian Legislature, but we have already indicated the big points in which we think it should be set right. It is unjust that our representation in Bengal should reduce us to a minority where we are in a majority.

9430. Would you go to the new Central Assembly and try to get them to alter it?—If they had the power.

9431. Would you approach the Imperial Government to alter it?—That all depends upon the form which the future Constitutional machinery takes. I am assuming that it passes in the form of the White Paper.

9432. Then our Central Indian Legislature would probably not be favourable to us. We shall be in a minority.

Marquess of Salisbury.] I think that is so.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] If Lord Salisbury will excuse me, could he point out where the White Paper describes where constituent powers will vest? Lord Salisbury has said his question is that if the White Paper scheme is passed, we would be approached for a modification under the White Paper. So far as I have been able to study the White Paper, the White Paper does not say where constituent powers will rest for the modification of these proposals. If they are not in the White Paper, surely, the question does not arise. If they are, I hope Lord Salisbury will set me right.

Marquess of Salisbury.

9433. I think it is in paragraph 110. However, I only want to find out how they propose to do it. You mean, you will find an unfavourable majority in the Central Legislature?—Yes.

9434. So that you would find it very difficult to get a modification, I suppose, under an unfavourable Legislature?—We should like to get a modification now when the thing is on the anvil.

9435. Do you not realise that as soon as the White Paper is passed, and the new Central Legislature is established, it will be very difficult to get a modification?—We realise that.

9436. Have you realised that?—Of course.

9437. Do you not think that that is one of the reasons why you ought to approach the making of the Central Legislature with great caution?—I think caution is required at every step, but that does not mean that the scheme, as a whole, should be hung up.

9438. But it does mean that once the Central Legislature is passed in the present form, it will be very difficult to get a modification?—But there must be some method, some machinery by which future changes may be possible. We do not know what that will be in the final form.

9439. There is always the Imperial Parliament, of course?—Yes, but we should prefer, as good Indians and working in co-operation with our Hindu fellow subjects, that there should be some machinery in India by which even minority interests can be favourably considered by mutual understanding, by the growth of that feeling of national unity which is essential for the working of any representative institutions.

9440. I quite agree with you it is essential, but I should not have judged from some of the answers which have been made to-day and yesterday that that essential unity was in sight, quite?—But we are hoping for it; we are hoping to build it up.

9441. But, in the meantime, you would have to put up with whatever the arrangements were?—We shall have to take whatever comes.

9442. You do not realise the bearing of my questions upon the wisdom of fixing definitely now a Central Legislature?—No, the difficulty will be that that will stereotype matters.

9443. That is the difficulty—that is the one I am pointing out to you?—Yes.

9444. Have you weighed that, that it would stereotype matters?—Well, we want that to be modified; we do not want it stereotyped. I recognise that there is a body of feeling in this country which would stereotype it, but I think that that body of opinion is wrong.

9445. When you say a feeling in this country, do you mean in Great Britain or in India?—In this country especially.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt, M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9446. I do not think you can look upon anything as stereotyped in this country?—I am glad to hear that.

9447. I am thinking of India. I think it would be very unlikely that the British Government would modify the arrangements of the White Paper after they were passed against the wishes of the majority of the Central Legislature; therefore, you would have to convert the Central Legislature?—If our cause is just, we hope we shall be able to convert it.

9448. You are a very sanguine man then. I will not press you any more; I think you see my point. Now may I just refer to one or two of the major points of difficulty. I notice that under the heading of "The Federation of India" in your Memorandum, you say: "We feel that there are great difficulties in working out an All-India Federation in which the Indian States must necessarily influence British-Indian policy while British-India will be precluded from interfering in the internal affairs of the States"?—That is so.

9449. Have you any suggestion to make for getting rid of that difficulty?—We have made a suggestion in the very next sentence. "We, therefore, urge that as many subjects as possible should be transferred to the Provinces, and as few retained for the Federal Centre as possible."

9450. So that the method of security would be by eviscerating, as far as possible, all the jurisdiction of the Central authority?—I should not like to use the word eviscerating. That arrangement occurs in many Federal Constitutions. The State is all-powerful. The Federation is for specific purposes, and if you leave all residuary powers in the Provinces, I think these difficulties are minimised as much as we can minimise them.

9451. I do not think it turns upon the residuary powers; it turns primarily upon the specific things, whether to the Federation or to the Provinces?—Yes.

9452. You would minimize as far as you possibly could all that was allotted to the Federation?—By not allotting it to the Federation.

9453. By avoiding allotting it to the Federation?—Yes.

9454. That is your remedy?—That is what we can think of at present.

9455. I notice in a later part of your Memorandum you say you would allot Income Tax entirely to the Provinces?—That is a matter of taxation and resources.

9456. You realise it bears very strongly upon the point which you and I are now discussing, because if the Federation are to have control of Income Tax then it would be possible for the representatives of the States to vote the Income Tax which has only to be paid by British India?—I did not understand the question.

9457. If the Income Tax is to be a Federal subject, which is what the White Paper proposes, then it would be possible for the representatives of the States to vote taxation which was only to be paid by British India and not by the States themselves—the very point which your paragraph deals with?—Yes, quite.

9458. So the question whether the Federation or the Provinces have control of the Income Tax bears directly on the point of the paragraph we are discussing?—It does.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] May I interpose a question for the sake of clearing up a matter about which I am not sure?

Marquess of Salisbury.] Please do.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9459. Does the passage in your Memorandum refer to the imposition of the Income Tax or to the application of the Income Tax?—The allotment of it.

9460. I read it as meaning that the tax collected in the Province should go to the advantage of the Province?—That is the main point, but it is a matter of convenience as regards the actual imposition. We have not considered that point specifically, but personally I think if the tax goes to the Province it is reasonable that it should be collected by the Province and that all the machinery should be regulated by the Province.

Lord Eustace Percy.

9461. And imposed by the Province too?—And imposed by the Province too.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan

9462. You do not object to uniformity of rate?—Not at all. In fact, in some respects, uniformity is very desirable. It is a question of convenience.

Lord Eustace Percy.

9463. How is it to be imposed by the Province if it is to be uniform throughout the country?—I recognise that difficulty; if it is to be imposed by the

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Province, some Provinces may not have it.

Marquess of Salisbury.

9464. At any rate, you recognise that all those suggestions are entirely different from the proposal in the White Paper?—In those points.

9465. Just one other matter. Have you considered the question of direct election for the Central Legislature?—You mean for the Upper House of the Central Legislature?

9466. No. The Upper House is not to be directly elected. It is the Lower House, the Assembly, which is to be directly elected?—Yes.

9467. Have you considered that point?—Yes.

9468. Do you approve of direct election for the Assembly?—I think if we are going to work towards democracy direct election is the only method by which the will of the people can be expressed. I am not judging here of the wisdom of working for democracy, but I take it as an accepted basis of the whole of the proposals.

9469. It is not accepted. I do not know what you mean by accepted; it is before the Joint Committee now?—Yes; but the very fact that the Joint Committee has been set up and that the White Paper has been placed before them implies a certain attitude towards democratic institutions, does it not?

9470. It certainly does not imply a preference for direct or indirect election?—No, but I say if that principle is accepted, direct election is the only way to work it.

9471. Is that the view of all your colleagues here?—I think so. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Yes.

9472. Have you had any experience, any of you, of how direct election works?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) We have had experience in India for many years now.

9473. Do you think it works well?—It depends on what you call well. It works as well as in most countries.

Marquess of Salisbury.] That is a question of opinion.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Could the witness answer your question positively instead of comparatively?

Marquess of Salisbury.] Will you put the question?

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9474. Will you tell me whether you think it works well in India? Give me a positive answer and not an answer by comparison to how it works elsewhere?—A positive answer means a reference to all the philosophy of democracy and representative institutions, and I am not in a position to go into that. I can only use it in a comparative sense. I see representative institutions in various countries. Some people say they are working very badly. Some people say they are played out and, of course, all those arguments would apply to India as well, but if we assume that we are working for representative institutions in the sense in which they are ordinarily understood in the world at large, I do not see how we carry them out, except by direct elections.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] We would wish to pursue this, if possible. Perhaps Sir Austen Chamberlain would help the Committee and Delegates and tell them what he means by "working well," and then we would appreciate whether it has worked well in India or not. I think it would help the witnesses if they knew exactly what was intended by the question.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9475. I will put the question in another way. As it works does it present a true reflection of public opinion and preserve a close touch between the representative and his electors?—To a certain extent, but again I would draw a comparison with other countries. I do not think in any country it works absolutely satisfactorily and in India the franchise is restricted and there are a number of other conditions which it is proposed now in the White Paper to remedy. The larger the electorate, naturally the more representative the Parliament or the Council will be.

9476. I am not asking about the size of the Legislature, but whether the representation really reflects the opinion of the electorate, whatever it is, and whether the member is in close touch with his constituents?—In an absolute way I cannot give a positive reply but I think it does on the whole.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

9477. One would like to know whether, in applying these two tests which Sir Austen Chamberlain has laid down, those tests could not be better supplied if, for instance, the election to the Central Legislature were by the representatives in the Provincial Legislature who would be elected on a very wide democratic franchise?—Yes. You see, the touch then will be between the members of the Central Legislature and their electors of the Provincial Legislature. That would be two degrees removed, would it not?

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., • [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9478. Yes?—And to that extent I think it is less likely to reflect directly the opinions of the masses of the people themselves.

9479. But considering the size of the electoral districts in British India and the absence of good communications, I want to know whether in the beginning (you said we are working towards democracy), as a first step, would you not be able to get a better expression of opinion of the electors in the Provinces if their elected representatives in the Legislatures sent representatives to the Federal Legislature?—I do not think we shall get a better expression, although I recognize the difficulties which you have pointed out.

9480. In connection with the electors and their representatives, will there be very much connection between the two so far as those who are elected to the Central Legislature are concerned?—If the representatives in the Central Legislature are elected direct they will be forced in their own interests to go to their electors in their own constituencies and to get themselves into touch. It is no argument that because that has not been very conspicuously the case in the past, it will not be so in the future.

9481. Will it be possible in the beginning?—It may be difficult.

9482. We quite recognise that representative institutions ultimately require that, but in the present conditions of India I want to know whether under a system of indirect election you will not get a better type of representatives better expressing the public opinion?—Those are two different things: A better type of man is a very different thing from a man who better expresses the views of the electorate. I think probably you will get a more educated type, and so on, but the whole object is to bring the humblest cultivator into touch with the Central Government.

9483. He would be brought into touch first, and very intimately into touch with the Provincial Government, and his representative would be in touch with that?—That will be only indirect. That would be two degrees removed.

9484. You are referring to the words "direct" and "indirect," but I am looking to the ultimate result?—The result will be that the man who represents only the Provincial Legislature will be out of touch, and cut off directly from the people in the country.

Marquess of Lothian.

9485. Is not the point this, that the only contact which the individual elector has with the Member is on questions which are settled by the Provincial Legislature. He is never brought into touch with the Central Legislature at all by the system of indirect election?—If we are building up a constitution I think he should be brought into touch.

9486. Your objection to indirect election is that the elector is never brought into touch with the Central Legislature at all?—Exactly.

9487. Therefore you think direct election is the only way in which the nation as a whole can be brought to think about national affairs?—That is so.

Marquess of Salisbury.

9488. You think under the proposals of the White Paper, the representative in the Legislature could be in touch with the electors in these vast constituencies which are provided?—As far as the conditions allow, I think so.

9489. I suggest to you that the conditions do not allow?—I think that is too sweeping. I think what will actually happen in practice is this: The constituencies it is true will be very vast, but, when the Constitution gets into working—it will be to the member's interest to get into touch with all the people who count, the people who matter, the people whose votes are of any importance, and gradually there would be an education of the constituency just as has happened in any countries outside India.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

9490. Would not the people whose votes are of any importance, whom the man has to approach for election to the Provincial Councils, be the same people as he would have to approach for election to the Central Legislature?—Yes, but the issues will be different.

9491. I mean to say that the issues will be more personal than impersonal?—That is so, but that is, I think, rather a fault than an advantage.

9492. Yes, but we take a very imperfect world as it is to start with, and

1^o August, 1933] * Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt, M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

I want to ask you whether you will not really be getting all the questions which will be seized by the Legislature much better discussed and settled with reference to the interests of the people if their representatives in the Provincial Legislature send men to discuss this very highly technical and narrow range of questions which will be left for the Central Legislature?—That brings us to the Ma Bap theory of Government. Do things for them. If you do them well, why bother the people?

9493. Yes, at is the Ma Bap theory but the Ma Baps will be the men whom the people have sent to the Provincial Legislature?—Why should you make them Ma Baps, and not give the direct vote to the electors themselves.

Marquess of Salisbury.] This seems to be developing into a theoretical argument.

Sir A. P. Patro.

9494 Will you tell me whether you have had any electoral experience in the last 12 years? Have you contested any seats for the Provincial Council or the Central Legislature?—I did not actually contest a seat, but I have been in touch all the time, and I was a candidate for a little while in the United Provinces.

9495. You were defeated?—No, I did not go to the poll.

9496. So you have had no experience of the working of the Legislatures either Central or Provincial?—Not as a Member.

9497. I mean as a Member?—But I have been fairly in touch with political questions.

9498. I do not want all extra answers. Say Yes or No. Will you please tell me how long it is since you retired?—I retired in 1914.

9499. You retired from service in 1914?—Yes.

9500. Since then you have been spending all your time in England?—Not all my time.

9501. Most of your time?—I have been domiciled in England, but I have been in India fairly frequently. May I just add one word. The opinions that I have expressed are not my personal opinions. They are the opinions of the Association.

[Sir A. P. Patro.] I have not asked that question.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker

9502. Having regard to the fact that election to the Central Legislature at present is by direct method, do you not think that reversion to the indirect method would be regarded in India as a retrograde move?—I certainly think so.

9503. And it will cause dissatisfaction?—Certainly.

Marquess of Salisbury.

9504. Dr. Khalifa seemed inclined to say something just now?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) I was going to say so far as the question of contact with the electorate is concerned the remedy lies not in reverting to indirect election, but in making the electorate more manageable, and, as far as the White Paper goes we find, the number of seats in the Legislature having been increased, there will be a greater contact between the Member and his constituency under the reforms than at present, so Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali's point is established that as time goes on we will work for greater contact.

9505. You mean by having a larger number of members?—And by gradually reducing the size of the constituencies. That I take it will come in the natural course of development.

Mr. Y. Thombare.

9506. Therefore you are not in favour of a reduction of the size of the Central Legislatures?—Reduction from what?

9507. From the figure proposed in the White Paper?—No.

Lord Rankeillour

9508. Do I understand from what has just been said that you are in favour of the new Indian Legislature having powers to change its own constitution?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) I did not say that, but I believe that is the view generally held. It is not in the Memorandum; it has not been considered by the Association.

9509. But as long as communal differences prevail, you would always be in a minority in that Legislature, would you not?—That is so.

9510. If the system were working badly for you it would be rather difficult to get a change effected in your favour, would it not?—If it was working badly.

9511. Then do you not think that you are more likely to get some change, supposing you had a real grievance, from the Imperial Parliament than from the Central Legislature?—I do not see that it makes very much difference because when once the power was de-

1^o Augusti, 1933]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

SIR MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

centralised, and the seat of authority lay in India, even as a minority we could bring pressure to bear on our Hindu fellow subjects, which we could not on Parliament in London. We believe that even as a minority we can influence a great deal the course of events in India, and we hope that in the altered circumstances the Communal differences will get less and less important.

9512. Do you think your influence would go so far as to induce the Legislature to change the constitution altogether?—I am not prepared to say that in so many words, but I think the ultimate result if we are working for Dominion status will be that and must be that.

9513. Would you allow the whole of the Constitution Act to be subject to change by the Legislature?—Again this is my own personal view. I would say, Yes, except as regards the Imperial connection, and one or two fundamental matters like that. I think that as long as these communal difficulties arise the communal safeguards must remain, but I certainly envisage the time in the future when we shall be working just as the Dominion of Canada is working. We think the whole future is in its own hands.

9514. Would you allow the Central Legislature to take unto itself powers that had already been given to the Provincial Legislatures?—No, because we are all for residuary powers in the Provincial Legislatures.

9515. That would be fundamental and not subject to change?—I think that would be one of the fundamental matters.

9516. Therefore, there are some subjects which could not be changed in India and some that could?—I think the majority would be capable of change, but there would be certain fundamental reservations.

9517. You have not worked out what you think the fundamental reservations ought to be?—Not so far.

Lord Irwin.

9518. Might I, with Lord Rankellour's permission, interject one question, before he leaves that point? Supposing the ultimate statute contained anything in the way of constituent powers such as Mr. Yusuf Ali has been speaking of, would it be in his contemplation that such constituent powers, containing a power to alter the Constitution of the Provincial Councils, should repose with the Federation or with the Provincial Councils?—I think they should rest with the Provincial Councils, as far as the Provinces are concerned.

Lord Rankellour.

9519. Under paragraph XII, you speak of fundamental rights and you quote the introduction to the White Paper and the Government seeing serious objections. Have you prepared any draft of what you would like to be put in, as to fundamental rights?—We have said that, I think, here in that paragraph: "The protection of Muslim religion and culture, education, languages"—I use the plural, for this reason: We have our Urdu as our vernacular, and our two classical languages, Persian and Arabic—"and law."

9520. But you have not actually drafted any clause which would show that?—No, we have not.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9521. By law, you mean personal law?—Yes

Lord Rankellour.

9522 Under paragraph VII, you say in sub-head (e) "There should be at least one Muslim Minister in every Province in which the Muslims are in a minority" I suppose you would make that reciprocal, would you not?—Yes.

9523. I mean, you would allow a Hindu Minister in Sind, for example?—Yes. Everything that we say is reciprocal; what we have asked for ourselves, we are freely prepared to grant in the contrary case to the other communities.

9524 And there would be a Sikh Minister in the Punjab?—Yes.

9525. It was suggested to us yesterday that it would be a good thing if the Provincial Minister responsible for Law and Order should be helped by a Committee representing all the principal communities—an Advisory Committee. Has that suggestion been made to you?—It has not been considered by us collectively.

9526. Have you any opinion upon it?—My own personal opinion is that there is no objection to it, to have an Advisory Committee to advise the Minister who is in charge of Law and Order. But this should apply to all the Provinces or none at all. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) I am afraid I will have to go against Mr. Yusuf Ali on that point. Coming from the Punjab, and knowing the views of the Punjab Muslims very clearly upon this point, I think I am in a position to say that we are very definitely opposed to any Advisory Committee. If I may say so, only about three days ago, I came across a Report of a certain speech made by Sir Herbert Emerson, the Governor of the Punjab, which has been reported in "The Times" of July 28th, and I find one sentence there which, I think, supports my proposition that Law and Order should be transferred quite as fully to the Minister as in the other Province. His Excellency said. "The people and the Council have thus given the answer to those who doubted the wisdom of the present proposals for the transfer of Law and Order to responsible Ministers." It was a speech that he made in opening the special Session of the Legislative Council at Simla on the 27th July, and in the course of this speech, he complimented the Council on the work they had done and also approved of the principles laid down in the White Paper qua the transfer of Law and Order; and our Conference as well as the League are unanimously of opinion that no distinction whatsoever should be made in the matter of the transfer of Law and Order to responsible Ministers of the Crown. (Mr. Suhrawardy) I, too, am of that opinion, my Lord Chairman. (Mr. Yusuf Ali.) May I add that I contemplate, in my personal view, that any arrangements for one Province should apply to all. I am strongly against applying certain checks or palliatives, or modifying arrangements in one Province that do not exist in all.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

9527 The Muslim Conference is and has been strongly of opinion that Law and Order should be transferred in all Provinces?—Absolutely, yes.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9528. Can you visualise the possibility of a divided responsibility under the proposal of having an Advisory Committee in the Punjab? Would it not derogate from the responsibility of the Legislature?—I think that, to a certain extent, it will.

Lord Rankeillour.

9529. In Section V, you say that the powers for the prevention of discrimination should not be used in such a way as to prejudice the growth of Indian commerce and industry. What kind of thing have you in mind when you want that precaution taken?—It is conceivable that the pressure of foreign companies, having business in India, on the Governor may be so great that he may do things which are prejudicial to Indian commerce or industry. We want to avoid that; we want the Governor to feel that he can only exercise his powers, subject to the proviso that Indian commerce and industry come first in India. May I give an instance? The Ottawa Agreement. We have here a sort of general co-operation of the Empire as a whole, but the principle is recognised that it should be on the understanding that each commonwealth within the British Dominions should come first in its own arrangements.

Sir Hubert Carr

9530. When you say foreign companies, do you refer to British companies domiciled in the United Kingdom?—I mean, in a geographical sense, non-Indian.

Lord Rankeillour.

9531. Then would you look at the latter part of Proposal 122 in the White Paper, page 70?—Yes, it is the last sub-paragraph of paragraph 122 "A Federal or Provincial law, however, which might otherwise be void on the ground of its discriminatory character, will be valid if previously declared by the Governor-General or a Governor, as the case may be, in his discretion, to be necessary in the interests of the peace and tranquillity of India or any part thereof."

9532. That does not go far enough for you?—I do not think it goes far enough, for this reason, that you leave that absolutely to the discretion of the Governor. I want it to be put to him definitely: Supposing our Indian Chamber of Commerce goes up to him and says "We want to convince you that this will injure our trade," then he should feel that he has no discretion, if he is convinced that it will, he must give in and he must not overrule any measures for the protection of Indian trade and interests. There is a slight difference in language.

9533. Would you give those powers to the United Chambers of Commerce, or some such body?—No, I would not give the powers to them, but I should have it in their power to approach a Governor and convince him that it should not be in his discretion, or, as our lawyers would say, if there is a discretion, he should exercise it judicially.

9534. It would only be a declaratory clause drawing his attention to it?—Yes.

9535. Now only one other subject. What is your main reason for wishing to give the Centre as few powers as possible and

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

the Provinces as many as possible?—I have stated that, but may I repeat it?

9536. Was it because you wished the Indian States not to have too much influence at the Centre?—That is one reason.

9537. Is there any other reason?—Another reason is that in the conditions of India, a vast country like India, somehow the Provinces will be better in touch with life than the Centre, and, therefore, they should have most of the actual work of the country in their hands.

9538. And anything that was not specifically given by the Constitution Act to the Centre would be with the Provinces?—Yes.

9539. Is that not really making the Provinces into States?—That is, I understand, the object of this legislation—Autonomous Provinces.

9540. What precedent have you for giving the Provinces powers like these which have previously been possessed at the Centre?—I have not thought of a precedent, but if you omit the qualifying clause, the United States have the States practically omnipotent.

9541. But the States were there before they united?—Yes.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan.] May I suggest the precedent is the Montagu-Chelmsford scheme? The reforms which gave a good deal to the Provinces which was previously in the Centre.

Lord Rankeillour.

9542. But it did not give them residuary powers? Devolution, yes, but not to give residuary powers, surely?—(Dr. Shujauddin.) This question did not arise before, because the question of Federation did not come in. This question of residuary powers comes in only because we are considering as to whether we will have a Federal Government in the Centre, or not. The moment you consider that problem, the question of residuary powers arises ipso facto. It did not arise because before the Government had been a unitary Government. (Mr. Yusuf Ali.) There is also this, that devolution may be the devolution of all residuary powers, may it not?

Lord Rankeillour.

9543. I should have thought not?—There are two methods of devolution. You can devolve a particular power. I do not see any illegality in it.

9544. But residuary powers must reside somewhere?—Yes; you devolve them to the Provinces.

9545. And you have no precedent for that?—I cannot think of any.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan.

9546. Have you a precedent for a kind of Federation where some units are like some of the Indian States and some like the British Provinces which cannot help being scheduled to the Federation, where some powers rest in the units, and where others rest in the Provinces?—It is absolutely unprecedented, as far as I know.

Lord Rankeillour.

9547. I have only one or two more questions to ask. You do not think that great inconvenience would arise from the great diversity of Laws there would be in the different Provinces of India, if they had these large powers?—Not necessarily, because we have put in the Centre specific matters in which it is necessary to preserve uniformity.

9548. You have not drafted what, specifically, you would give to the Centre, have you?—No, I do not think we can draft these things.

9549. But this diversity of laws has created great inconvenience, for example in the United States?—Quite so.

9550. Would you give power to contiguous Provinces to unite under the Constitution?—Our position is that the present arrangement should not be alterable, because it would disturb the balance of the communities. Unite two Provinces, and thus disturb our representation, and so on, so we should prefer that these arrangements should not be alterable—that they should be one of the fundamental safeguards.

9551. Reserved to this Parliament?—I suppose it would have to be reserved to somewhere.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

9552. You do not mean permanently unalterable?—No; there must be some machinery for altering it.

Lord Rankeillour.

9553. But reserved to this Parliament?—I suppose so.

9554. Supposing that conditions made it appear that the Federation would be a long time coming into force, would you wish Provincial Autonomy to be introduced at once?—Yes, if the other thing were long in coming. We have said so.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9555 And you would not mind if the introduction of the Federation were deferred for a long time?—If it were necessary.

9556. And, perhaps, indefinitely?—No.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan.

9557. Did I understand from your last answer, Mr. Yusuf Ali, that it would make you happy secretly, as it were, if things were deferred at the Centre?—No, not at all. On the contrary, our people would be very dissatisfied. (Dr. Shujauddin) And if I may add, we would expect the question of Federation to be postponed only for a reasonable period of time.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

9558 And the Muslim Conference supports this scheme?—Yes, this is the view of the Muslim Conference.

Major Cadogan.

9559. Mr. Yusuf Ali, in Section IV of your Memorandum there is a sentence which I would be much obliged if you would explain to me; it is at the bottom of the page: "There is no reason why the Governor-General should be given the extraordinary power of making Acts." Do you mean that the Governor-General should have no power of making Acts under any circumstances whatever?—Not Acts, if the Legislative Council is functioning—if the Assembly is functioning.

9560 You were not contemplating a breakdown of the Constitution, when you wrote that sentence?—No.

9561. Then in paragraph VII, sub-section (g) you say: "A substantial measure of reform should be immediately introduced in Baluchistan". You are aware, I am sure, that the Simon Commission went to Baluchistan and collected as much evidence as they could on this subject. Do you remember the recommendations that the Simon Commission made to the effect that "It may be safely stated that the Baluchis have not themselves sought any alteration of the existing régime. The demand for representative institutions of a western type certainly does not come from them." You remember that recommendation?—Yes. I think a good deal of time has passed since then.

9562. I am going to ask you a question upon that. Do you agree that a great part of the inhabitants are nomadic?—A certain proportion, yes.

9563. How would you get nomadic tribes belonging to an electoral roll?—I do not think that applies to the major part of the major population.

9564. A great part, you will agree, will you not?—A certain proportion; I have not gone into the figures.

9565. Will you also agree that the majority of the Baluchis wish to go on living their customary lives?—Yes.

9566. Do you not agree with me that the will of the majority of the Baluchis should prevail?—Yes, but that is not inconsistent with reforms, because I think a great many of them would like to have representation. As regards the nomadic population, may I point to the precedent of Iraq? You have a large proportion of nomads there, but they have made efficient arrangements for their representation.

9567. You think that that would be practical in Baluchistan?—Either that; or you may have to leave them out, as a sort of scheduled area, as you do in other parts of Backward India; but I do not think that is any reason why we should stop some sort of representation of the people who are ready for it.

9568. A considerable part of the territory is not British territory, of course?—That is so.

8569. But the administration is the same in the part which is British territory, and in that which is not—the same kind of customary laws?—More or less; customary laws.

Sir Reginald Craddock.

9570. Mr. Yusuf Ali, the Committee which acted with the Simon Commission from Bengal was elected by the Bengal Legislative Council, I believe, was it not?—(Mr. Suhrawardy) It was not elected; it was appointed by the Governor.

9571. That Committee made the suggestion, or some of them did, that there should be a Board sitting with the Minister who was given the charge of Law and Order. Do you recollect that?—I am not aware of it. It might be so.

9572. It was so as a matter of fact. I think you can take that from me?—Yes.

9573. Is there anything which has occurred since those days which would

1^o August, 1932.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

make Mussulmans revise their position about Law and Order?—About that time the question whether Law and Order would be transferred was not very certain, and since then, when there is a question that there is a possibility of the transference of Law and Order, we are of opinion that Law and Order should be transferred in all the Provinces without any hindrances whatsoever.

9574. You formed that opinion, but you did not always have it, did you?—We have advanced a little bit from the days of the Simon Commission, if I may say so.

9575. Yes, advanced in those ideas?—Yes.

9576. But I do not suppose you have changed materially?—The persons who were on the Committee and the Provincial Committee were not the representatives of the Legislature or of the people as such.

9577. Bengal Council are not elected by the people?—Yes, the Bengal Council was, but the persons who were appointed were not elected by the Bengal Council. We have various elements in the Bengal Council.

9578. I would like Mr. Yusuf Ali to reply regarding the All-India Services. Does he want them abolished?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) I have given a good deal of thought to that, and it seems to me that the All-India Services as they exist at present would be quite inconsistent with the reforms. We should have to reconstruct them and I suppose if Provinces got complete Provincial autonomy All-India Services would be a misnomer. They would only have to be All-India Services for working the Federation.

Lt-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.

9579. Does Mr. Yusuf Ali mean that there should be no Federal All-India subjects?—Yes, there would be Federal subjects and for those Federal subjects there would be a Federal service, but I think that it is a mistake and it will cause endless trouble if you have the All-India Services as we knew them in the past. The whole atmosphere is changed. It is not fair to the All-India Services and it is not fair to the Provinces.

Sir Reginald Craddock.

9580. Would you then in future eliminate the British element from the Services?—Not immediately no, but it is one of the implications of Provincial autonomy that the appointments and regulations and promotions should be made by the Provinces as far as the service was rendered to the Provinces.

9581. You would not apply that to those already in the service?—No. Every vested right should be strictly respected.

9582. Do you think that the Provinces would recruit any British officers if they were provincialised?—I think so; for some time to come, anyhow. There will be—there must be—proper public service commissions, perfectly impartial, like judges, and they will judge everything on its merits.

9583. I suppose it is the case that since the Lee Commission Report in provincialised services like education, agriculture and so forth the recruitment of British officers has gradually ceased, has it not?—I do not know about that, I think there are a large number of British officers even under the Lee scheme.

9584. The old ones of the All-India Services?—Under recruitment I know several educational officers who were recruited from England.

9585. On special short contracts?—On special contract.

9586. There may be a few on special contracts, but those services are no longer recruited from Englishmen in the majority of Provinces, I understand?—I believe even now several Englishmen have been recruited to the educational services and in any case I should not wish there to be a race bar or a colour bar in any way.

9587. I know in some Provinces, at all events, there has not been a single British officer recruited since 1925, the date of the Lee Commission?—Is it Bengal?

9588. I do not know about Bengal. I do not think there are many in Bengal. There are certainly none in the Central Provinces?—I should like to have instances of cases where competent people have applied and have been rejected.

9589. They do not apply unless an application is made to the High Commissioner here by the Province?—Yes; but if the Englishmen do not apply I do not see how they can be appointed.

9590. The High Commissioner merely acts as an agent, I believe, in these cases?—I believe so.

9591. For a Provincial Government, who asks for somebody, and then the High Commissioner advertises. Otherwise it is no good people applying in the

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 SIR MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt, M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

air?—I have not seen any advertisements for services in India shutting out Englishmen in the way that I have seen advertisements about the India Medical Service shutting out Indians.

Lt.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.

9592. Does the India Medical Service shut out Indians?—The advertisements that appear in "The Times" say that applicants must be of European descent, which I think is very wrong in principle.

9593 What advertisements were those?—Indian Medical Service.

9594. When?—You can see them any day in "The Times." I have seen them recently.

9595 No advertisement ever appears in the newspaper except on a Government communique. No advertisement can appear except by the Government of India or the Secretary of State?—It is the Secretary of State.

9596. Could you quote one such advertisement?—I have not brought one with me, but I saw one only the other day.

9597. As a member of that service, I have never seen such a thing and I would be very grateful to see it because I am just as keen as you are?—You agree that the principle is wrong?

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.] Certainly.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker] Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney is a retired member of the Indian Medical Service.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.] That does not imply that my interest in the Indian Medical Service has ceased.

Sir Reginald Craddock.

9598. I will pass on. If any of the Delegates or the witnesses would like to answer, will they tell me whether there is a scheme for Federation of Provinces under the name of Pakistan?—As far as I know, it is only a students' scheme; no responsible people have put it forward.

Sir Reginald Craddock.] They have not so far, but, as you say, you advance very quickly in India, and it may be, when those students grow up it will be put forward; that scheme must be in the minds of the people, anyhow.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] What is the question?

Sir Reginald Craddock.] I wanted to know whether the witnesses had acquaintance with a scheme which was drawn up for what is called Pakistan.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] We have already had the reply that it was a students' scheme and there is nothing in it. What is the further question?

Mr. Isaac Foot.

9599. What is Pakistan?—So far as we have considered it, we have considered it chimerical and impracticable. It means the Federation of certain Provinces.

Sir Reginald Craddock.

9600. I have received communications about the proposal of forming a Federation of certain Muslim States under the name of Pakistan?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) Perhaps it will be enough to say that no such scheme has been considered by any representative gentlemen or association so far.

9601. I want to ask a question with reference to the attitude of Muhammadans towards what have hitherto been known as the Depressed Classes; that is to say, does the Mussulman population generally, the uneducated Mussulman population, treat the Depressed Classes any differently from the way in which they are treated by the Hindus?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) They have no Depressed Classes amongst themselves, and as regards the Depressed Classes amongst the Hindus, to the Mussulmans they are the same as any other Hindus.

Sir Reginald Craddock] For example, over the use of wells in a village mainly consisting of Mussulmans, would these Depressed Classes have the use of the wells?

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] I think we should like the point of the question explained so that we might follow what the questioner is aiming at.

Sir Reginald Craddock. That will appear.

Archbishop of Canterbury.

9602. Sir Reginald Craddock must ask his question in his own way?—Your question is, in a Mussulman village would a member of the depressed classes be shut out from using a well as he would be in a Brahmin village?

Sir Reginald Craddock.

9603. Yes?—I do not think so.

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dt. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9604. You think there are no disabilities put on the depressed classes by Muslims anywhere?—I think that where there is a large Hindu population surrounding it, probably the Muslims would be psychologically affected, but I do not think there is any reason to suppose that the Muslims would treat the depressed classes as any different from any other.

9605. You agree, however, to the proposal to give the depressed classes in the Punjab a special representation?—I think so, yes.

9606. You agree?—Yes.

9607. And the same in Bengal?—Yes, as long as the necessity remains, of course.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan.

9608. May I be permitted to make a statement in one sentence on the depressed classes question?—I think the position is this so far as the Punjab is concerned (I am not familiar with other provinces) the mere fact of a person belonging to any particular caste or tribe does not affect a Muslim one way or the other with regard to the treatment of such a person but if a person (it does not matter what his caste or tribe is) is engaged in a certain profession (and I have in mind the profession of a scavenger) which makes him physically incapable of association on equal terms, no doubt there is that hesitation and keeping off from him; but if members of the same tribe were not actually following that profession we do not think of any untouchability with them. That is the position so far as the Punjab is concerned?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) That is right. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) I think that obtains as far as every province is concerned as regards the Mussulmans.

Miss Pickford.

9609. Under Heading III C. of your Memorandum, "Franchise for the Legislature", you say "Women should not be given the vote in the right of their husbands". Have you given careful consideration to this point?—Yes, the Associations have actually gone into it.

9610. You are therefore aware that the White Paper does not make any proposal to enfranchise the wives of voters for the Federal Assembly?—The Franchise Committee report does.

9611. Not for the Federal Assembly?—What bearing has that on the present position?

9612. I suggest that you have not given very careful consideration to it, if you suggest that a differential qualification which is not suggested should not be given?—That is only an argument, is it not, Madame?

9613. If we proceed to the other point the White Paper does propose a vote to the wife of a voter for the Provincial Council?—Yes.

9614. And it is to that that you object?—Yes.

9615. On the grounds that you prefer an equal franchise?—Yes.

9616. In fact, you are in favour of equality?—Yes.

Miss Pickford.] Do you have women members of the All India Women's Conference?

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9617. No?—There is nothing to prevent them coming. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) We have one lady on the Council of the All India Muslim League, and that distinguished lady is sitting in this body.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9618. That is equal representation; one woman in 200?—There is no bar. Others have not applied, and, if they do we have no objection.

Miss Pickford.

9619. You have no objection?—Not the least. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) None whatever.

9620. Is there an All India Muslim Women's Conference?—There is an All India Women's Conference, but that is different from ours. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) So far as I know some meetings of a Conference were held which were known by the name of the All India Muslim Women's Conference. They were mostly social Conferences relating to the education of Muslim women, and things like that, and, so far as I know, politics were mostly outside the purview of those Muslim Conferences.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9621. We have had a Women's Conference since 1914?—I admit there has been a Conference known as the All-India Muslim Ladies Conference. They were advocating Muslim education, and other social reforms among the Muslim women in the country.

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Miss Pickford.

9622. As that is organised on an All India basis, would it not have been as well to have consulted those ladies about the questions of franchise and representation?—They are perfectly free, not only to give their opinions, but to come and sit on our body.

9623. Are you aware that if you have for women a property qualification on the same terms as men for Provincial Councils it will produce an electorate of rather under 2,000,000?—2,000,000 women?

9624. 2,000,000 women?—I have not gone into the figures. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) I may add that among the Mussulmans the women inherit property from their fathers or mothers and their husbands, and among the Mussulmans I think that the women owning property in their own name are not very much less than the men. In fact the inclination is, so far as the United Provinces is concerned, I think, that husbands are transferring property more to their wives, in order to save it from the bankers' clutches.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] There is one exception, is not there; the Punjab.

Miss Pickford.

9625. Arising out of Sir Mohammed Yakub's reply, is it a fact that the Muslim law is not followed in all the Provinces?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Under the Royal Declaration it ought to be followed in all the Provinces, and it is unjust that in certain Provinces Mussulmans have been debarred from following their Muslim law, for instance, in Punjab, but, in those Provinces, there has been an agitation among the Mussulmans for a long time that Muslim law should be applied equally in the Punjab also as regards women. Mussulmans in all the Provinces consider it very objectionable that Muslim law should not be applied to the women in any province. It is clearly contrary to the directions given in the Holy Koran.

Begum Shah Nawaz.] Is there any likelihood of this law being changed in the Punjab until and unless the women have a good voting strength in the Punjab?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) My Lord Chairman, it is not the Muslim men who have been trying to perpetuate this law in the Punjab; in fact the Muslim men in the Punjab have always endeavoured to make the Muslim law apply to the Muslim women also. It was the Government or the other people in the Councils who would not agree to it, and, therefore, the preponderance of Muslim men in the Councils in any way cannot be any hindrance in the way of the Muslim women getting their rights. On the other hand, we consider that contrary to the Holy Koran. We consider that no more injustice could have been done to the Muslims than to apply these laws to the Muslim women in the Provinces, and it is quite contrary to the Declaration of Queen Victoria, where it was said that personal law would be applied to Mussulmans and Hindus. (Dr. Shujauddin.) As a matter of fact, during the last Session of the Assembly one private Muslim member did introduce a Bill to the effect that all these customs shall be abrogated for the future, and that in matters of inheritance, and so on, only Muslim law should prevail. Unfortunately, this Bill could not be considered by the last Assembly, and it was not passed. I mention that only to show that even now, as things go, there is a very genuine desire among the general body of Mussulmans to see that personal law is brought back to the position which it ought to hold.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] One Member of the Punjab Legislative Council simply tabled a resolution of that effect and it could not be discussed, because it was not reached. The Punjab Council itself has not the power to make that change.

Miss Pickford.

9626. You admit then that at present there is an inequality?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali) As enforced by the British Courts.

9627. Taking the facts as they are, do you accept the official figures given in the Franchise Committee's Report that the women who will be qualified, on a property qualification, to vote for the Provincial assemblies will be under 2,000,000 as against 30,000,000 men?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) We cannot accept the corrections of the official figures always.

9628. You do accept them?—No, not always.

9629. But you cannot bring any figures to refute them?—Our experience is that during the last census the figures of the Muslim population in certain Provinces were tampered with to a very great extent.

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

SIR MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

Sir N. N. Sircar.] In favour of the Muslims²—(Mr. Suhrawardy.) No, in Bengal in favour of the Hindus. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) No.

Miss Pickford

9630. Given that those figures are correct, the ratio of women to men voters will be 1 woman to 15 men. Do you think that that is likely to give them an effective influence upon candidates and Legislatures?—As much as they had in England.

Miss Pickford.] Perhaps I may pursue that point. Until women had an effective voting strength in England there was very little legislation to which women attached importance passed in the Houses of Parliament, and, since they have had an effective voting strength, there has been considerably more.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9631. Is that the view of the whole Committee²—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) My Lord Chairman, in India the interests of a man and a woman are very much more identical than they are in England.

Miss Pickford.

9632. The point that I want to make is this "that you attach great importance to the Muslim community being a minority community, having weightage in the Assembly and in the Provincial Councils and in the Services because of the disabilities from which they suffer as a minority community. Do you not, therefore, on the basis of equality, think that it is only fair that women should have some differential qualifications?"—The women do not belong to a separate community, they belong to the community to which their men belong, and there can be no difference of interests or no conflict of interests between men and women. Therefore, the analogy which you want to apply does not apply to the case of men and women. Women have never suffered on account of men in the matter of legislation anywhere in India.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9633. What about the legislation against polygamy?—My Lord Chairman, I would not enter into the realm of religion. I think that our distinguished lady Member, the Begum Shah Nawaz, would find herself isolated in India, if she tried to take a step in the realm of religion.

Miss Pickford.

9634. In Sir Mohammed Yakub's statement, which he read to the Committee, he said it would not be fair to give a wife a vote in respect of her husband, and then deprive her of it when she became a widow. Is he aware, as a Member of the Franchise Committee, that that was not the proposal of the Franchise Committee, nor has it been adopted in the White Paper proposals?—Quite so, and, therefore, I say there is no logic in it. I want to point out the logic of the proposal which has been made.

9635. In answer to Begum Shah Nawaz, Sir Mohammed Yakub said that his views were held by the vast majority of the Muslim community. Is he aware that the note of dissent which he gave to the Franchise Committee's Report was not supported by his two Muslim colleagues?—My Lord Chairman, it was not objected to by them, only they did not care to put in a separate note, as I did. It does not mean that they differed from my views.

9636. Would it be fair to say that, perhaps, these views are not held by all the members of the Muslim community?—I think, my Lord Chairman, that these views are shared by most of the leaders of the Muslim community.

9637. Are the leaders, mostly, the older men of the community?—Older, as well as younger.

Mr. Davidson.

9638. I have only one question to ask, my Lord Chairman. When Mr. Yusuf Ali was replying to Lord Salisbury, I was not quite clear what his view was on one particular point, and it is this. It is admitted that if direct election is adopted for the Federal Assembly, the constituencies will be very large. Would I be correct in interpreting Mr. Yusuf Ali's answer as expressing the view that whether a constituency be large or small, or whether the electorate be large or small, the contact which a member has with his constituency and his electorate is good or bad according (a) to the effort made on the part of the Member to keep in touch with his electorate, and (b), upon the efficiency of his political organisation?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) That is perfectly true, subject to this qualification, that in the smaller constituency it would naturally be easier.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9639. But that no provision in any constitution can enable a candidate or a member to keep in touch with his constituency. That is a matter for himself?—Exactly.

Lord Eustace Percy.

9640. May I ask one or two questions just to try to elicit how you envisage Provincial Autonomy working? I gather from your reference to Income Tax that you wish, in any case, the whole of the Income Tax to be handed back to those Provinces where the taxpayer resides?—Yes, or where the income accrues.

9641. Then you would not wish India, as a whole, to concern itself with differences of administrative standards in different Provinces due to differences of wealth?—No, I would not say that. I think it is very important that India should be a united country, and I should certainly view it with misgiving, if India became broken up into a heptarchy or decarchy, or anything of that kind. I should like some uniformity.

9642. How would you get that uniformity?—We could get that uniformity, I think, by the power of control which the Federal Government will necessarily exercise.

9643. What power of control will the Federal Government exercise under your scheme?—Under my scheme, it would be as it is in the White Paper. The Governor-General-in-Council will have powers of control. His Government, the Federal Government, would have powers of control, and so on.

9644. I do not understand. Your paper, which you have placed before us, proposes that all the Services shall be recruited in the Provinces; that the Provinces should have complete control over the Services, and that the Federation would be left with no direct taxation which it could grant to the Provinces, and your whole scheme, I gather, is directed to wiping out, so far as possible, any control which the Federal Government can exercise over the Provinces?—No, not at all. I should view it as a calamity, if the Federal Government abdicated, to use a familiar phrase. I am giving my own personal views. The way I look at it is this. There are such large questions as Sea Customs and Defence, and Railways, and Foreign Relations, and so on. They must, necessarily, in any Federation be the concern of the Federation; but, being the concern of the Federation, they yet touch most intimately every individual citizen in the whole of India.

9645. I was not denying that there were certain Federal subjects which would touch the individual, but your statement is that as many subjects as possible should be transferred to the Provinces and as few retained in the Federal Centre as possible?—That is right.

9646. Then let us take the question, purely as an example, of education. You will admit that Bihar and Orissa will have very much less money to spend on education than the Punjab, under your scheme?—Well, I do not know.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] Before the Witness replies, would Lord Eustace Percy, perhaps, inform the Committee whether education at present is, or is not, a Provincial subject?

Lord Eustace Percy.

9647. I am not dealing only with the changes in the present position. I do not necessarily think that the present position is Utopia?—May I just give an example? I have often wondered how the United States are held together as one nation. There the State is practically everything, and the Federation does control legally almost nothing, but I see, from personal experience, that the force which keeps them together is the common country; there are no Customs barriers there; free intercourse between all the people, from one end to the other, even though their laws are so diverse, and I contemplate an India where, geographically, there will be absolutely no barriers, or fewer barriers than now. Our Indian States will be part of the Federation, and, further, you could travel freely from one place to another and learn about one part in another.

9648. But do you realise that in Finance, for instance, Income Tax, and in Criminal and Civil Law, you propose to leave much less power to the Indian Federation than the United States' Government has?—But I should like to see more agencies for uniformity, of course.

9649. But only agencies for discussion, with no Constitutional power?—There would be agencies for discussion, because every Province would send representatives to the Centre.

9650. I know, but I say, you want merely agencies for discussion, with no constitutional power?—Yes; I want con-

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

SIR MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

stitutional powers in the Governor-General, and in his Government.

9651. But not in your agencies of inter-Provincial co-operation?—I should like agencies of inter-Provincial co-operation also.

9652. But with no constitutional powers?—With constitutional powers?

9653. What constitutional powers?—Where all the Provinces, for instance, have an inter-Provincial or inter-State Board, that Board might administer certain things, in the Railways, for instance, which will be a Central subject.

9654. But the Railways are a Federal subject?—Yes.

9655. We will leave that point. I will just put one further question on Finance. Do you contemplate that Sind and the North-West Frontier Province will be the only Provinces which are to have subventions from the Central Government?—I hope even those Provinces will be able to stand on their own legs.

9656. Does anyone share that opinion?—I think the Sindis share that opinion. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) If there is full Provincial autonomy and the Provinces are allowed to run their Governments cheap, according to the resources of the Province, I think it will be soon that the North-West Frontier Province and Sind will both stand on their legs, as far as finances are concerned.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9657. Does not the North-West Frontier Province stand on an entirely different footing from Sind?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) The Frontier Province has other interests; those are external interests, and that is an All-India interest, of course; but as regards Sind, I believe that the Barrage is a very great asset, although at present it has not been fully realised. It must eventually give Sind a very large source of income.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.

9658. What about Orissa?—I have not gone into the finances of Orissa, but I am very much hoping that Orissa will be able to stand in the same way.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

9659. I have only one question to ask, and that is, can you tell me, with your experience, as to what would be the manageable size of a constituency in India which would really allow contact between the member and the electorate?

This is rather a theoretical question, is it not?—It would depend very much on the conditions. For instance, if you have a constituency where the communications are bad, even a small district would be difficult to run. On the other hand, in the United Provinces, with good railway communications and a dense population as near Aligarh, a very large constituency can be run by one person. It would all depend upon the circumstances. I do not think you can fix a standard for a constituency.

9660. Would you consider a minimum limit to be about 2,000 square miles?—Yes. It would depend upon the population and communications.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Do you mean, minimum or maximum?

Sir Akbar Hydari.

9661. In one sense, a maximum of 2,000 square miles?—Again that would depend upon the communications, and the population, and so on.

9662. But supposing that the conditions were most favoured, barring purely urban districts, in a district itself, say in the United Provinces, with which you are familiar as a District Officer?—Yes. I know some districts like Gorakhpur, which are huge and difficult to get about in. Other districts like Fatehpur, where the communications are excellent, the size is small and the villages are numerous. In a district like Gonda, large landed estates, well managed, are an asset on one side, and Forest areas an obstruction. I should not like to give an exact figure of a standard size.

9663. I do not want you to give me an exact figure, but some general idea in the neighbourhood of what mileage you would consider to be the maximum?—I think mileage would be very fallacious. You would have to take three factors, the area, the population, and the communications, and to evolve a formula including these three factors is rather difficult.

9664. Yes, it is difficult, I know, but it would be desirable to know, somehow. Give us two limits, something between so many thousand and so many thousand square miles?—I should prefer to leave it on its merits. If I were actually making constituencies, I should want to know how the population runs and what

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt, M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

the communications are, and so on. For instance, with the introduction of the motor-car, the distance is of far less importance than it used to be. If you take Hyderabad State, Adilabad would be quite a different constituency in that respect from Balda, and the surrounding districts.

9665. What would be the mileage at Aligarh, to which you have referred, which you think would be manageable?—I think you could have two or three districts there and run them quite well.

9666. Of what size?—Say about 50 by 60 miles each.

9667. That would be 3,000 square miles?—Yes, you could run two or three like that where the conditions are favourable.

9668. That is the most favourable, about 3,000 square miles?—Three times that, but I should not like to fix any limits.

9669. I am asking this because I want to know whether you said that the present system is direct election and it would be a retrograde step to go back?—Yes.

9670. You are aware that under the present system you have got a constituency for the Muhammadan member for the Northern part of Madras which is 83,000 square miles?—I know, but on the other hand, remember that there will be only a few Mussalmans, so your electoral roll will be very small and you could send your circulars by post, and could get about quite easily. That is why I am averse to fixing any geographical area as a limit.

9671. With regard to Muhammadans at least, owing to their special electorates, the size of the constituency will be very large?—It is very large.

9672. One member would have, for instance, to travel all over an area like Great Britain, or an area like England and Wales?—I consider that area very small for India.

9673. For one constituency, you would consider that small?—Yes. (Sir Akbar Hydari.) Then I have nothing to say.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

9674. With regard to the question of direct and indirect election, your express legitimately a preference for direct election for the Federal Assembly. I believe you know that in the case of the Federal Council of State, the method suggested by the White Paper is indirect election?

—Yes.

9675. Would you have the same indirect election for the Legislature also, or would you have a separate kind of election?—I do not understand your question. Do you mean instead of the indirect election, as suggested in the White Paper, would I have direct election?

9676. No. What I want was this. For the Federal Council of State, you know the scheme suggested by the White Paper is that of indirect election?—Yes.

9677. That is, election through the Provincial Assemblies?—Yes.

9678. Would you like to have the same sort of arrangement for the Assembly or a different one?—I do not think my association would like that at all.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9679. You would like to have direct election for both the Houses?—We have not considered it. We have accepted the other thing as a pis aller, but probably a direct election in both Houses would be better as far as I am personally concerned.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

9680. One or two questions about the States. You say in your memorandum, paragraph II, under the heading of "The Federation of India," "we feel that there are great difficulties in working out an All-India Federation in which the Indian States must necessarily influence British Indian policy while British India will be precluded from interfering in the internal affairs of the States," and as a remedial measure you suggest that as few subjects should be left in the Federal lists as possible. Would you also be satisfied with an agreement from the States that a Convention may grow, that the representatives sent, nominated by the States may not embark at all upon subjects concerning British India?—That would be acceptable, but I see great difficulties in working it.

9681. If there is a possibility of a Convention growing, would it be acceptable to you?—I think it would be acceptable. We have not considered that point.

9682. Then lower down you say, "When, as at present, it is intended to give considerable representation to the States, one-third of the seats of the British Indian Provinces, if reserved for Muslims, will give them about 22 per cent. of the whole House," and, therefore, you ask for additional weightage in

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt, M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

the whole House Why do you assume that the representatives nominated in the States will not be Mussalmans?—I do not say that they will not be Mussalmans, but the States' population as a whole is overwhelmingly Hindu.

9683. It is not merely the population standard that the States have accepted, the States have reserved the right of nomination?—I know, but take a State like Hyderabad, which is Muslim as regards the ruler, but where there is a large Hindu population, I think it is inevitable that a certain number of Hindu representatives will come from Hyderabad.

9684. In the same way in Kashmere, you would expect a Muhammadan representation?—We should expect it, but whether we should get it is another matter. Kashmere is a very good example.

9685. So why do you assume that in Hyderabad?—Because if I had anything to do with it, I should probably do it (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) Because Hyderabad is more advanced than Kashmere. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Inevitably, my friend will bear me out, Hyderabad standards are a good deal higher.

9686. You have no reason to complain that up till now in any of these delegations sent to the Round Table Conferences or to the Select Committee the States have sent any disproportionately large number of Hindus?—Here, the States have each only sent one or two. It will be a very different matter when you have a large number sent from, as it were, the population itself. These representatives now are the the representatives of the Government, and we assume that the Government sends the pick of the people in the State.

9687. You understand I know that in the case of the Council of State it will be the Governments that will be represented, it is only in Assemblies that the people will be represented?—In the Council of State in British India—

9688. I am talking of the States?—It will be the Chambers. I do not know what it will be in the States. I think it will be representatives of the Governments but for anything I know to the contrary the States may have their own Parliaments, and in that case I suppose they will send representatives to the Council of State.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

9689. I do not for one moment want to imply that the standard of any one State is higher than another, but probably what Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali had in view with regard to Hyderabad was that the Prime Minister is a Hindu, that a very important functionary like the Commissioner of Police is a Hindu. Out of four Commissioners of Divisions, two, if I remember aright, have been Hindus, and so I suppose what he means is that inevitably in a State like Hyderabad some representatives that it would send would be Hindus. That is all and nothing more?—That is exactly my meaning, and I know it from personal knowledge.

Sir Akbar Hydari.] I do not for a moment want to say that our standards are higher than those of Kashmere.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

9690. The same thing applies to many of the States, for instance, my own. It is a Hindu State?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) It is an advanced State.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

9691. May I complete my question. In Aligarh, with which you are familiar, you said there are 3,000 square miles, and it would be able to have three districts. You are aware that the Lothian Committee reports that under its proposals, which were wider than those of the White Paper, excluding the Muhammadan and other special seats, the average constituency would be between 5,000 and 10,000 square miles?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Aligarh has an area of about 2,000 square miles, and I suggested that two or three districts of 3,000 square miles each should be worked together; I think the Lothian Committee went too much on their English experience. I think that here, where the whole country is so small, there is no comparison with India, where we are accustomed to big distances. We sometimes accept an invitation to dinner 20 miles away which we would not do in England.

Sir N. N. Sircar.] Yes; we do.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9692 Do I understand aright from some of the replies which you gave to some of the questions this morning that the Mussalmans are opposed to the White Paper differential qualification for the franchise for women?—We are

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

opposed to a differential qualification for women.

Begum Shah Nawaz.] I wonder if you know about the Memorandum No. 2 that has been submitted to the Joint Parliamentary Committee on behalf of the three All-India Women's Organisations. In that Memorandum the qualifications that they have asked for are these. May I be permitted to read them to the witness?

Chairman.

9693. You asked the witness whether he knows about this memorandum. May I have an answer to that?—I know about the memoranda, but I should like to have my memory refreshed.

Begum Shah Nawaz.] In that Memorandum, women have accepted on the same basis as men property as one of the qualifications, and they have asked for literacy to be the educational qualification for both men and women, but instead of the White Paper qualification, that is that the wife of a voter should have the vote, they have proposed that men and women above a certain age should get the vote. Would you have any objection to accepting that?—My associations would object. I will not say what my personal view is. In these matters, as everyone knows, in the question of women's suffrage, there has always been a great deal of difference of opinion. I am here speaking not in my personal capacity but as representing these associations.

9694. Would you object to all these proposals for other reasons or for this reason only, that you feel that women should not become voters in large numbers?—I do not personally feel that.

9695. I mean your organisations?—I do not know whether I am entitled to say what reasons were at the back of their minds. Possibly, some people might have that as one of the reasons.

9696. I want to know from you the opinion of the organisations as such. Are they opposed to women becoming voters in large numbers?—I do not think so as far as I can judge, but they have not said anything of the kind.

9697. You say in paragraph (c) "Provincial Franchise": "The women should vote in the separate communal electorates of the communities to which they belong." Is not this the position, Mr. Yusuf Ali, that there is no communal feeling amongst the women in India at all, but the majority of the Muslim women realise that, in the absence of a settlement between the two communities, separate electorates having been maintained, under the communal award it would be difficult for Muslim women to have seats reserved for them through joint electorates?—It would be difficult for women to have seats reserved for them through joint electorates?

9698. Yes?—You mean that Muslim women will stand a very poor chance in joint electorates? Is that your question?

9699. No; it is more than that. All I mean is that although there is no communal feeling amongst the women in India, the majority of the Muslim women feel that as seats have been reserved for them the electorates should be the same as those proposed for the men?—I think that is a matter for the women to judge. As regards the statement that there is no communal feeling amongst Mussulmans—

9700. Amongst the women of India as a whole?—Amongst the Muslim women as a whole—the Begum Shah Nawaz is a shining example in support of that, but there are other examples to the contrary.

9701. You said something about the Muslim women supporting your point of view. May I point out to you that there have been various meetings held in different Provinces—in Punjab and also in other Provinces—in places like Lucknow and others, and many of these meetings have been held under the presidency of some of our leading Muslim women. I suppose some of you know of these meetings. Could you give me any instance where the Muslim women or Indian women who have attended these meetings have not strongly protested even against the numbers recommended by the Indian Franchise Committee, and have used such words as these that "Injustice has been done to the women's claims under the White Paper . . ."—I believe many of the women have said so, but the number of vocal women in India is rather small, and that is apt to give one a wrong impression.

9702. Is it not a fact that in Lahore itself 5 meetings were held and one of these meetings was held in the Muhammadan Hall under the presidency of Lady Abdul Qadir?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) A meeting was held, but I cannot say how far it was representative of the Muslim women of the Punjab.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9703. May I tell you that it was attended by almost all the wives of all the leading Muslims as well as many of the educated women in Lahore?—If that is so, I would not be inclined to say that it was representative of the whole of the Province.

9704. I did not say that the meeting held in Lahore was representative of the Province. There were many meetings held in the Province itself. You would agree with me that the women belonging to all the communities who have been holding meetings have been asking for a good proportion of the voting strength of the country and you can say nothing that would be contrary to this, that any meeting held by any women in any Province would show that they would be satisfied with 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 women voters?—Judging by the Meetings that have been held, of course, it would be correct to say, as the Begum Shah Nawaz does say, that the vocal women do want representation, and we are not opposed to it. (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) May I give a little bit of my own personal experience with regard to voting. It could well be said that the women at the meetings which they have attended—I do not know to what extent they are representative of the women of India—have said that they would like to have greater voting strength, but my little experience with regard to elections has shown me that even the women who have the franchise do not exercise it in India. We have seen this that particularly amongst women there is a very large number of false votes recorded and the women do not come to the polling booths to exercise their franchise. I really do not know what will happen if the franchise is extended, but I should think, from my past experience, that it will not be utilised.

Chairman.

9705. What do you mean by “false votes”?—The actual voters do not come to the poll.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.

9706. False personation?—Yes; they are impersonated.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9707 By other women?—Yes.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9708. Do you say that if women in large numbers were given votes they would not exercise their vote?—That is my belief, that our social customs are such that should you artificially confer upon them the franchise at this stage, it will not be exercised to a very large extent.

9709. Do you think that it is only due to the social custom and not otherwise, social disabilities only that prevent women going to the polling booths in large numbers?—Yes. The social customs are certainly responsible.

9710. Is it not the fact, Sir Mohammed Yakub, that the custom of the written dower is freely practised among the Muslims?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) In a very large number of cases the amount of dowry is written on the paper at the time when the marriage is contracted. (Dr Khalifa Shujauddin.) Not dowry—dower.

9711. Mahar is the word?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Dower and dowry are different things. I may say it is a part of the marriage, it is a consideration for the contracted marriage. Amongst the Mussalmans marriage is considered as a civil contract, and no contract as we know is valid without consideration. A dower or mahar, as we call it, is a consideration for the contract.

9712 Could you tell us whether there has been any instance where a husband or father has objected to the name of the girl being written in the document at the time of the marriage?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub) I do not think so, but that document is written in a very small circle containing only the names of the near relations. The whole bridal party attending the marriage is never shown that document and the name is not announced to them. Even the dean who performs the marriage, when he mentions the name of the bride, mentions it very softly, sometimes only in the ear of the bridegroom, so that others may not listen to it. (Mr H. S. Suhrawardy.) That is not so in Bengal.

Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan] That is not so in the Punjab either.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9713 You said this morning that if I were to ask for legislation against polygamy, I should be isolated. I quite agree with you that if I were to ask for social legislation, I would be isolated, because this has become part of religion, but I wonder if you know that since 1917, I have been proposing resolutions which

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

have not only been unanimously carried but women present have signed pledges not to give their daughters or sisters to men who already have wives?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Those meetings were attended by very few Muslim women, and those who signed did so because it would be considered unfashionable to go against the views of the meeting, but in practice they have not done it, and if I may be allowed to quote examples, in the very centre of Punjab—Lahore—I would point out that very leading educated Muhammadans and very leading educated women have married with persons who have two wives, but I need not mention them here.

9714. Is not polygamy a fast-dying institution in India at present?—It is, and it was never considered as an appropriate thing, in fact, among the respectable classes polygamy has always been looked upon as one of the objectionable things which are permitted under restricted conditions and circumstances. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) There seems to be some misapprehension in the mind of the questioner about polygamy. Polygamy is an institution. For polygamy to be permissible according to the laws of Islam is one thing, and for polygamy to be actually practised is another thing. I wish to inform the Committee that polygamy is only permissible. What is the actual proportion of people practising polygamy is a different matter altogether. Perhaps even the Begum Shah Nawaz will also agree with me that the number of people practising polygamy is very small. This does not, however, mean that any Muslim body of representative Mussalmans or any association will tolerate the idea of any interference in the matter of legislation with the institution of polygamy, and Mr. Suhrawardy was quite right when he said that if the Begum did undertake any such task, she would find herself utterly isolated. The very fact that these resolutions have been passed since 1917 and that a period of 16 years has made no difference in the outlook of the Muslim community ought to go to prove that point.

Sardar Buta Singh.

9715. Mr. Yusuf Ali, if I have rightly understood you, you mean to say that you personally and your Association are in favour of direct election?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) That is so.

9716. You have also said that the adoption of indirect election would be regarded as a retrograde step?—Yes.

9717. I would draw your attention to paragraph (c) of Part VII of your Memorandum, "Provincial franchise". With regard to Universities you say there: "The electorate should consist of the members of the Senate or the Court as the case may be." I want to put a question to you in connection with that, and it is this: Do you know what is the present system of electorate with regard to these Universities?—It is different in different places. In some places—as in the Punjab, which my friend knows very well—the election is in the hands of the graduates. In some places it is in the hands of the Senate, but our Association thinks that, on the whole, you get a better electorate by having a responsible body rather than by having a large number of graduates who have got out of all touch with the University and who do not really understand the questions which a University electorate ought to understand.

9718. Election in the hands of the graduates would be more democratic?—It would be more democratic to have the graduates, but we are not having democracy pure and undiluted.

9719. As regards the Punjab I think you would agree with me that the people would regard this step, if your proposal were accepted, as retrograde, and they would not accept it?—I think the Hindus would regard it as retrograde, but the Muslims would welcome it, and the Muslims form the majority in the Punjab.

9720. I think the Muslims do not want to have anything contrary to their own ways, and they forget the democratic principles. Is that so?—That is a matter of argument.

9721. I should like to put a question to Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin. I think you and your Association require certain safeguards because you think yourselves to be a minority community?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) Yes.

9722. You would agree with me that you want similar safeguards to be granted as regards seats in the Punjab?—Subject to the general principle laid down already that any grant of any safeguards to any minority does not interfere with the efficiency, or the efficient working of the majority.

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9723 You say in your Memorandum: "As regards the new province of Orissa, which was not dealt with by the communal decision, the weightage given to Muslims is inadequate and ineffective", and if I remember it aright, the reason given there is because they were so small, and if a little larger weightage were given it would be very good. Do not you think if you want a greater weightage in the Orissa Province we will be perfectly right in claiming similar treatment in the Punjab Province?—They have got it there, have they not?

9724. If you want more, we would be justified in wanting more?—It all depends I do not know what claim the Sikhs have put forward in that behalf.

9725. It is no question of claiming?—If they have not, it would mean they are satisfied with what they have got.

9726. That was not the question. There is one more question I want to put to you: What is your experience in the Punjab as regards the contact of the Members of the Legislative Council with the voters? Do you agree with me that there is sufficient contact between the representative and the voters? I should like to be explicit. The Punjab is mainly an agricultural Province, and the questions are mainly with reference to excessively favourable treatment of other races, and the people are always trying to put their grievances to their members?—The questions enumerated by Sardar Buta Singh I know are fairly important but do not form the whole list of questions in which the Legislative Council is interested.

9727. There is sufficiency of contact—I want to put that question to you?—The sufficiency of the contact is, again, a matter of opinion, because personally I feel that making the constituencies smaller would make the contact more effective

9728. That is what the White Paper scheme is certainly going to do?—Yes. So far as the demand or the claim for Sikh representation is being made I may be permitted to point out that I believe, and in fact all my Muslim friends also believe, that there is no difference whatever between the Hindu and the Sikh—in his outlook, or in anything for the matter of that; they inter-dine, they inter-marry, their customs are the same, their habits are the same, their demands are the same, and it is only because now things have gone in such a way that it is felt that something more can be got out of the Englishman on the one hand and out of the Mussulman on the other by making two separate claims, one on behalf of the Hindu and one on behalf of the Sikh, that the thing is put in that way.

9729. In the Punjab Legislative Council the majority of the Sikhs have been voting with the Muhammadans. Their interests are common. As regards inter-marriages, I do not put much value on that, but I rather put value upon economic questions. We have similar economic troubles in the Punjab, we being agriculturalists and the Muhammadans, too. They are really agricultural people there, and I think my friend may re-consider his position?—I am very glad to hear that remark being made, but so far as the identity of interest is concerned, of course it is not surprising that if the interest of the Sikh is identical with that of the Muslim he would naturally vote with him. I quite appreciate the idea lying behind that statement. (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) May I add something to this? We believe that in Punjab and in Bengal, in these two Provinces in particular, there is a far greater likelihood of the party system emerging and the Government being run on party lines rather than on communal lines than in any other Province.

Marquess of Lothian.

9730. Would you explain why you think that?—It is on account of the very effective weightage, or the very effective representation, as the case may be, which the minority, namely the Hindu and the Sikh members, have both in Punjab and Bengal, and it would be impossible for the Mussulmans, who have a certain majority there, not a very effective majority, to be able to keep down the minority. The result of it will be that there can never be a communal ministry there and we shall very soon (I think I shall be quite justified in my prognostication), have a political party system evolving in these two Provinces

Sir N. N. Sircar.] I do not want to interpose any questions, but I shall have to cross-examine him on these matters. I wholly deny this.

Marquess of Lothian.

9731. When you say a party system, do you mean that will go to the constituencies or the parties will be formed after the Members have been returned

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

to the Legislature?—That is difficult to say. I should think the Members will come in from the separate electorates, partly on party lines, and partly on communal lines, but once they come into the Council they are sure to combine themselves on party lines. I think when the turn of Sir N. N. Sircar comes, who proposes to cross-examine me, I shall be able to satisfy your Lordships that in Bengal we have tried to run the administration on party lines rather than on communal lines.

9732. May I ask one supplementary question on an important point? Let us take a possible line of division between town and country, merely for the purposes of illustration?—Yes, I find this division emerging and organisations being formed that will promote the division.

(After a short adjournment.)

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] Some questions were put to you on some aspects of the constituent powers. I want to draw your attention to one aspect of this question. Apart altogether from the question as to whether the constituent powers should be left in the Indian Legislatures or should be reserved for the Imperial Parliament or should be divided up, would you agree with me that a condition precedent of the modification of certain methods, for instance safeguards in the method of election and the composition of the different Legislatures and so on, should be that any change must have for its support the effective consent of the communities?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Most certainly.

9734. With regard to the methods of direct and indirect election, would you be willing to go so far as to say that there are advantages and disadvantages in support of each system, but that on the whole your inclination is in favour of a direct election?—Yes, that of the Associations I represent.

9735. May I draw your attention to one matter which I do not find referred to in your memorandum, which is this. Certain questions have been raised as to whether one method of election or another method of election will truly reflect the views of the electors and you have yourself stressed the aspect that we are seeking to travel towards a democracy. Have you considered the composition of that portion of the Legislature which will represent the Indian States? To what extent do you consider this will be in accordance with your ideal?—Well, I think in a matter like that we ought not to put any dogmatic views about the Indian States. Their representatives are here, and no doubt they will work out a scheme that will fit into our ideas of federation. At the same time, I should like to say that I should very much welcome personally any advances made in the Indian States which will bring them more into conformity with our standards in British India.

9733. Does that mean that in the Muslim electorates, on the one side and the Hindu electorates on the other, the contest will be between those members who stand, say, for the urban point of view and those who stand for the rural point of view, and that you will get a section of each communal electorate—a Muslim electorate divided between urbanly-minded people and rurally-minded people, and the same with the Hindus; and, therefore, you will get a party in the Legislature composed partly of Muslims and partly of Hindus. Is that your concept?—Yes, certainly, that would be a difference on which political parties can be based. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) That is already visible in the Punjab to-day. My friend, Chandri Chhotu Ram, leads a party of which it is said that the greater number are Muslims.

9736. From one method that you put before the Committee I was inclined to draw certain conclusions, and I want to put them to you so that you will set me right if my conclusion seems to you to be wrong as to your views. You said it may be that in course of time representatives from the Indian States may be returned by the Legislatures that may be set up in the Indian States?—I said so.

9737. And then certain communal proportions may not be observed. I rather received the impression that you did not wish that that might come about but that representatives of the Indian States should be returned by the Legislatures without that happening?—No, that is not my view. I would leave out the States entirely, but I should like to see some sort of representation from the people of the States. Just as we are trying to

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C., Dt. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL D, and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

educate our people in the methods of government and of representation wherever it is possible, I should like to see the Indian States follow similar lines. I may say, for instance, on the question of indirect election, I should have no objection to the States following any methods of their own. What I was saying mainly refers to British India and to the accepted principles there—those which were discussed and accepted by our Conference and our Associations.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9738. You would not regard that as a condition of representative government?—No; to regard that as a condition of representative government would be practically to postpone it to the Greek Kalends.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9739. May I draw attention to page 4 of your memorandum headed "B. Upper Chamber or Council of State." Some of you may have observed in the Secretary of State's evidence which you have perused a scheme which he has suggested to meet what you have put down here in a way which would be briefly this Under a system of proportional representation from the local legislatures the Muslims might get a certain number of seats. They might make up their one-third share by a few seats. The suggestion he made is that those few seats might be made up by allotment to certain Legislatures who might fill those seats by electing Muslim members, and in that election the Muslim members of those Legislatures alone shall take part, and in this way the one-third shall be made up. I see quite well that that is different from what you suggest here, but when you drew this up very probably you did not know what the suggestion was on the other side. Have you any observations to make upon that suggestion? Would that meet with your wishes?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) Well, I think it would go a certain way towards meeting our wishes, but I am not quite sure how it would work. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) May I add this. According to what the Secretary of State said, according to the reports in the papers, one finds that the Muslims according to the allocation will not get any more than 42 to 45 seats.

9740. He said 45 to 46?—He said 45 to 46, but I think he has been rather sanguine about that. I should be rather inclined to put the figure at round about 42—nearer 42 than 45, and filling up the remainder by giving the special seats and trying to make it one-third in that way. The system suggested by the Secretary of State for making up the deficiency in the numbers of Muslim members of the Council of State would not be acceptable to the Muslim organisations generally for two reasons: (1) that the method does not guarantee in the first place a one-third of the whole House: and, secondly, it cannot be said that the Muslims elected in that way would be truly representative of the Muslim ideas and Muslim claims and Muslim rights. On those two grounds I think I am right in submitting that the scheme suggested by the Secretary of State would not be acceptable to the Muslim community generally.

9741. Would you then still adhere to what you have put forward under heading B?—Well, we would strongly urge that the representations of the Muslims for the Council of State should be by the Muslim members of the various Legislatures through their separate electorates.

Dr Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9741A Voting among themselves?—Voting among themselves

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9742 With regard to sub-head (iii) under heading D, you say: "No seat should be filled by nomination"?—On that point Muslim opinion is also strong.

9743. I wish to draw your attention to this, that at present the proposal is that there shall be a small number of nominated members in the Upper Federal Chamber. I can understand from this clause you object to that small proportion being nominated, but, in case nomination is retained, in spite of your strong views that nomination should go, have you any suggestion to make with regard to these nominated members and with regard to their method of allotment?—Yes. I would say that if nomination is to be retained at all then the power of nomination should be exercised in such a manner as not to disturb the proportion of Muslims; that is to say, the Governor-General should nominate so many Muslims in order to make up their quota of the whole House.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Lord Irwin

9744. Is your objection to nomination a fear that it might upset the communal balance or on general grounds?—On general grounds, but I said simply, in answer to the question, if it is going to be retained in spite of our views, then we would have it worked that way That is our position.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9745. With regard to the franchise for women, I do not want to embark on any matters which have been the subject of a discussion which has already taken place, but may I put this briefly to you. Should I be correct in assuming that your objection is the differential qualification, and that if some qualification could be devised, provided it were practical and provided it applied both to men and women, would you have any strong objection to it merely because it increased the number of women voters?—No. We were asking only for a personal franchise qualification.

9746 I was rather under the impression from one answer that even that kind of qualification was not accepted?—No! no!

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9747. May I ask one question on that. Have you any proposal to make for some other qualification for women which would give them something like equivalent weight in the electorate to that which they would have under the White Paper?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) If certain invidious laws and customs which exist in many of the Provinces are removed, there would be no difficulty about bringing in a larger number of women on the electoral roll

9748. I am afraid I do not quite know enough to understand that answer to the question?—My point is this It is on account of certain laws and certain customs in certain Provinces that women are deprived of their right of voting. If those unwholesome laws and customs are removed then there will be no difficulty in bringing a larger number of women on the electoral roll

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9749. We are getting into a circle. We have been told, and no doubt it is true, that with a larger number of women on the electoral roll it would be easier to modify these laws But you say we must get the laws modified first and then it will be easier to get women on the roll?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) I do not admit the first proposition. It is not necessary in order to get these amended that there should be a larger number of women in the Council Chamber. So far as the Muslims are concerned probably the men are more strong on the point that these customary laws should be removed or abolished.

9750. I cannot put it on numbers, as I have not looked very carefully at the numbers, but perhaps some sort of educational qualification applied equally to men and women would better the proportion of women?—Certainly. We do not want the differential qualification Barring that, if there are any qualifications which are similar for men and women then we have not the slightest objection to raising the number of women on the electoral roll. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) Subject to the general condition that what is devised is practicable

Sir Hari Singh Gour

9751. You say on the one hand you want to amend the law and yet you say you do not want to amend the law—I do not understand your position?—We mean that we do not desire that religious laws should be interfered with by Bills in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9752. What do you mean by religious laws?—Laws which relate to matters affecting our personal customs and the religion of Muslims and so on 9753. If the law of inheritance is a religious law from the point of view of the Muhammedans, how is it possible to change the form of inheritance to give women certain property rights?—In the case of Muslims, do you mean?

9754. No, I am not speaking of the Muslims. If you have a rule applicable to all classes that religious laws should not be altered, is that to be a general rule, or do you mean that it shall only apply to the Muslims?—No, I would leave it to every community to consider for themselves. If they want their laws to be altered by the Legislative Assembly I would not have any objection to that, but so far as the Muslims are concerned I would not like the Legislature to interfere in my personal religious customs and laws.

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRĀWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASID AHMAD.

Sir Hari Singh Gour

9755. You have told us that the marriage law is a civil contract under Muslim law?—Quite so.

9756. Yet you say that the marriage law is a religious law?—The marriage contract is a civil contract, but the whole system of marriage is interconnected with religion—it is a matter of religious instruction as well.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9757. You realise that if every community set up this claim that nothing affecting religion shall be altered, no reform is possible?—I cannot say about other religions, but I do not think that there is anything in the Muslim religion which will stand in the way of reform.

9758. You realise further that if the Muhammedans set up such a claim for themselves the other communities will demand similar protection?—It is open to every community to ask for whatever protection they think necessary to protect their religion.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9759. In order to meet one small difficulty we are getting into a much larger difficulty. I think you will realise that it will perhaps be easier to devise some qualification than to wait for a modification of laws. However, probably what you have in mind is this. So far as the Muslims are concerned, you have already developed the point that under their present law women have a certain share of inheritance, but in some Provinces customary law interferes with this. But may I put it to you that people who do want to follow custom have an equal right to ask that the law applicable to them shall be safeguarded as you have to ask that your present laws shall be safeguarded, so I think we need not get into a discussion of that kind if I have your support to the suggestion that an equal qualification can be devised?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) I have already expressed our view on that.

Chairman.] Did you conclude your question, Mr. Zafrulla Khan?

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9760. I said if I had the Witness's support on that point I need not pursue this matter further. Quite right?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) To be perfectly frank, it is difficult to devise any general formula which will bring in men and women in equal numbers. But my point is that gradually with the increase of education amongst women with the improvement of their social status and with the advance in social standards it is inevitable that women will come in in larger numbers. We are not legislating for just at present or for the immediate future. We are legislating more and more with a view to normal conditions, and I contend that if some educational or other formula is adopted gradually the number of women would come up to the number of men.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9761. May I ask the witness one question on that point? What is the educational test which you suggest? I gather from your answers that to rectify the disability of women at this moment, if the qualification in respect of their husbands is withdrawn, you look to educational work and an educational test?—Yes.

9762. What is the educational test?—I will go so far as literacy, if necessary.

9763. You would take literacy?—Yes.

9764. You say "if necessary". Can you give me an answer without a qualification?—I am saying "if necessary" for this reason—that I have not consulted my colleagues and I am here speaking my own mind. I do not know how many people it would let in, but personally I should be quite prepared to accept as many people as come in under the pure literacy test. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Where it is practicable.

9765. Without requiring a school or university diploma?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) That is so.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Forgive me for pursuing this, but I am very anxious to get at the mind of the witnesses on this point.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] Certainly.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9766. May I ask whether the answer is agreed to by those who are sitting on either side of you?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) I do not know that.

9766A. May I ask them to tell us?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Well, we have no objection providing it is practicable under the conditions in India—if it is practicable to have such a huge electorate

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

as would include all the literate persons. We have to consider the area of the country and the very large number of people in the population, and we have also to consider that we are going to make a start and therefore we should not make such a start as would make the elections impossible.

9767. That is a general answer I take it—you would have no objection in principle to the literacy test?—No, not in principle provided it is practicable.

9768. Provided it is practicable?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) That is so.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9769. Those are considerations which those who are asked to put into operation the reforms will have very much in view?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Yes.

9770. May I draw your attention to page 6 of your Memorandum? I do not want to re-open matters which have been settled but there are one or two aspects of this particular question which have been raised which I want to clear up. Sirdar Buta Singh put certain questions to Dr. Shujauddin and I want to put one or two supplementary questions from rather another aspect. From the figures supplied to us one finds, and it is corroborated by the table in Appendix 3 of the White Paper dealing with provincial legislative assemblies, that so far as Orissa is concerned the only other minority which has any seat is the Indian Christian minority one seat?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) And backward areas.

9771. With regard to that I may inform you that it has been the case in Orissa that the backward areas have definite affinities with the Oriyas?—Yes.

9772. That being so may I put this aspect of the case to you? So far as this complicated and vexed question is concerned of weightage, would you agree with me that one consideration always is what kind of representation would all the minorities combined get under this scheme so that they could influence when all combined together the decisions of the majority to a certain extent?—I should like to suggest that the Muslim minority should not be treated simply like any other minority, for this reason. In Orissa locally it has very little strength, but in India taken as a whole it is a very strong body, a body even stronger than its mere figures would represent. That is why I think that a Muslim who happens to live in Orissa should not be penalised for the reason merely of his residence there from exerting his proper influence?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) Apart from what Mr. Yusuf Ali has said may I say this in addition? In deciding the question of weightage what we ought to take into consideration is not merely the numerical figures of the particular minority concerned, but also the fact as to what influence the minorities in that particular province are going to exert. I am very strongly of opinion that is a very important matter to consider.

9773. You think it is a very important aspect of the case?—It is a very important aspect of the case. That is an aspect which cannot be ignored for this reason. After all, the principle of weightage is based on the consideration that the minorities shall get some sort of effective representation or some sort of opportunity of voicing their sentiments in the particular Council concerned. If minority A, coupled with minority B and minority C in a particular province all taken together remain at a very low figure it is not possible to say those minorities have any proper share of representation. That is also a very important factor to be considered in determining the weightage to be given to any particular minority or to any group of minorities in any particular province.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9774. Will you kindly refer to Appendix 3 in the White Paper and look at the North West Frontier Province and Sind. There are few minorities there in addition to the Hindu minority?—The Muslims are in a majority there.

9775. So far as the North West Province and Sind are concerned there are hardly any minorities there beside the Hindus?—I do not quite follow your question.

9776. You stated that the absence of other minorities in a province ought to indicate that the Muslim minority ought to have more protection than otherwise. That was the point which I put to you before. What I am saying is, if you look at the North West Frontier Province under the several headings, and also the Sind Province, you will find there are

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

practically no other minorities there besides the Hindu minority?—I do not understand you. In the North West Frontier Province the Muslims are in a majority.

9777. I am speaking of the Hindus. There are hardly any other minorities than the Hindus in the North West Province and Sind?—Yes.

9778. Therefore, according to your argument, the same considerations must apply to the extra weightage of the Hindu minority?—Yes, and my contention is that they have got the same consideration.

9779. You agree the same consideration should apply?—Yes, only I say that it has been applied.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9780. May I put it to you in the North West Province the Hindus and Sikhs have been given 24 per cent. of the total representation?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Yes.

9781. And that in Sind the Hindus and Europeans have been given just over 33 per cent?—Yes.

9782. But that the total given to all the minorities in Orissa is only 8.4 per cent.?—Yes, that is a very good point.

Sir Hubert Carr.

9783. Do you think that the addition of two seats in the case of Orissa might help ultimately?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) It would help to some extent—four seats to the Muslims will help.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9784. Have you noticed also that the representatives of the majority before the Committee have said they would be glad that the Muslim representation should be raised from two to four seats out of sixteen?—I have not seen that.

9785. Do not you think the fact that that is said ought to be a prevailing consideration?—The fact that the majority in a particular province is willing to give more weightage to a particular minority should go a long way in deciding that particular point?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) It is a decisive argument, if I may say so.

9786. Let me draw your attention to sub-heading (b) on page 6 under the heading "Upper Chambers." You are aware what the proposal is as to Upper Chambers in the three Provinces, Bengal, Bihar and the United Provinces? Here you have said "There should be no Upper Chamber in Bengal." Have you any other view with regard to the other two Provinces or do you accept the White Paper proposal that there should be Upper Chambers in the other two Provinces?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) May I say this. With regard to Bengal the position is so clear because the Legislative Council and public opinion have declared themselves against a Second Chamber.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9787. Not emphatically?—Well, I will omit emphatically if you think it is too strong a word. But with regard to the United Provinces and Bihar the position is not quite the same. There are many of us who do not want Second Chambers in either of those Provinces; but we consider on the whole we should not prevent those two Provinces from having Second Chambers because there are some of us who think that Second Chambers are important and should be allowed in these Provinces. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) As a matter of fact, the United Provinces themselves have asked for a Second Chamber. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) The opinion in the United Provinces is pretty strong about having a Second Chamber, and in that respect we support the proposal of the White Paper.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9788. The United Provinces Legislative Council has passed a resolution in support of that view?—Yes, they have, and I think that public opinion is pretty strong in support of that view.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9789. With regard to nomination in the Upper Chambers of the Province, may I assume your views are the same with regard to nomination in the Upper Federal Chamber?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) Yes.

9790. May I put a further question on this question of nomination. It has been suggested that it should be open to the Governor where there are Upper Chambers, and the Governor-General in the case of the Upper Federal Chamber, to select one or more Ministers or even the Prime Minister or the Chief Minister, as the case may be, out of the nominated members. Have you any views on this question?—To that we would object most strongly.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Will you ask the witness whether he would object equally strongly if the Governor only exercised that power on the advice of the Prime Minister or his Cabinet?

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] It is rather difficult for me to explain this question. I have tried to do so because I want to understand it myself. I do not understand whether it was meant that the Prime Minister should first be selected and that he should provisionally form a Cabinet and then the Prime Minister and the Cabinet or the Prime Minister on behalf of the Cabinet should make a request to the Governor-General or to the Governor that one or more members may be added to the Cabinet from this group.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Those are two distinct proposals no doubt.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] The first one I put generally.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] The one which I put definitely to the Secretary of State, which he thought was worthy of consideration, was whether Ministers desiring a colleague who was not the holder of an elected seat should be deprived of the chance of having him—in other words, whether a nominated member could never be made a Minister even if Ministers desired him as a colleague. I did not enter into the question as to whether it would be the Prime Minister on forming his Cabinet who should ask for it or whether it should be the Ministers who should ask for it, but the point is that it would be done only with the concurrence of the Ministry. Would your objection apply if the Ministers asked for it?

Mr. Zafrulla Khan. Do you mean ministers who have already been chosen? Do you mean they have accepted their portfolios, and having done that they make the request?

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Yes.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] They make the request then to the Governor that certain persons from the nominated members should be added to the Ministry?

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Yes.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9791. I would like to know your opinion on that?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) There is this difficulty about it. According to the Secretary of State's evidence there is neither a Prime Minister nor joint responsibility of the ministers at the beginning in the Constitution. He thought that might grow up as a convention or as a custom. In that case can there be what is called a recommendation of the Ministry—there is no joint responsibility. One or two ministers might want a man and the other two ministers perhaps might not want him. How are we to judge whether the request has the unanimous consent of all the ministers?

Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan.

9792. May I clear up that point by asking one supplementary question so as to understand exactly what is meant? The Council is elected and the Governor or Governor-General sends for the representative in the Council who has the largest following and offers him the Prime Ministership and then asks him to form a Cabinet. The point is, is it open to the Prime Minister to suggest as one of his colleagues a nominated member of the Legislature?—(Mr. Suhrawardy.) I should think it would be very improper. It would be an incentive to people to try and seek nomination rather than election. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) It would cut the ground from under the feet of the elected ministers, I think.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9793. You do not wish to have for India the liberty that any Prime Minister has of forming a Government here, through the existence of our House of Lords, to secure as a colleague a man who has not gone through the process of election?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) May I submit in reply that the analogy is not quite fair? I do not think it holds for the simple reason that here in England if a gentleman is raised to the peerage and becomes a Member of the House of Lords he, ipso facto, becomes altogether independent of the Government. He is a member of the House of Lords for life. It is hereditary. His son becomes a Member after him. He can behave and vote and act in any manner he likes irrespective of the wishes of the Governor-General or the Governor for the time being. In India conditions are different. A man would be nominated only for a term and he would have this sword of Damocles hanging over his head all the time. If he at any time goes astray—

1^o August, 1933.] Mr ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

using that word from the point of view of those who nominated him—then he will lose his chances of renomination next time, and that consideration would always act to the detriment of the administration. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) In other words, he is not independent

Dr B. R. Ambedkar

9794. Would your answer be modified to any extent if these nominations which are to take place for the Upper Chamber were nominations which took place on the advice of the Ministry?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin) No, I do not think that would make any substantial difference. (Mr. Suhrawardy) There is the present method that if a person is chosen as a Minister when he is not a Member of the Council he has to seek election within six months of his appointment. If a nominated member was so chosen I think he should certainly be asked to face an election before six months

Marquess of Zetland.

9795. Arising out of Mr. Yusuf Ali's reply, may I ask him whether he is in favour of or opposed to joint responsibility of the Cabinet?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) I think if we are to work representative institutions we must have joint responsibility and a Prime Minister.

9796. Your answer was based on the assumption that you would not have joint responsibility?—I understood from the published reports of the Secretary of State's evidence that he did not contemplate joint responsibility or even the existence of a Prime Minister as a matter of constitutional arrangement. I thought he said that would be left to grow.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9797. As it has in this country?—Yes.

9798. He hoped that that convention would grow up in practice in India also?—Yes, but the difference is this. In this country the whole Constitution grew, whereas in India we are making a Paper Constitution.

9799. What the Secretary of State said was that he did not think it advisable or useful to put into an Act a provision establishing joint responsibility?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) That is what I understood.

The Archbishop of Canterbury.

9800. It was a mere matter of definition?—Yes, but where there was a convention of joint responsibility

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9801. That was the Secretary of State's hope and I think Mr Yusuf Ali has rather misunderstood the Secretary of States argument?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) I should like to see something in the instrument of instructions or somewhere laid down about it. I do not say that it should be laid down in the Constitution but without some understanding of that kind in the framework of the proposals I think we shall have difficulties.

Earl Peel.

9802. May I ask one question in regard to Sir Austen Chamberlain's point. Would your objection to that proposal take this form? In such a Ministry which included a minister drawn from the nominated members the position would be that the other ministers would be responsible to a constituency, but this particular minister would be responsible to no constituency. Does your objection take that form?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Yes

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9803. Further, if there is joint responsibility that responsibility is to the Legislature?—That is so.

9804. From which the ministers are drawn and who can remove the ministers?—Yes.

9805. Is that joint responsibility consistent with the fact that one of them is a nominated member and holds no allegiance to the Legislature?—I do not think it is.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

9806. Why not? He would be a Member of the Government and as such responsible to the Legislature, even though he were not a member of the Legislature?—Well, I think the rule should be as was suggested, that if a person not a member of the Legislature is taken into the Ministry he should seek election within a definite period.

9807. I understand that is your view, but what I was trying to put to you was that the objection raised to the other

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

suggestion is not a good objection. The ministers, whether chosen from an elected body or from the nominated members, would be equally responsible to the Legislature and would be displaceable by them?—Not if there is no full joint responsibility 9808. Why should there be no joint responsibility? There may or may not be, but assuming that the Secretary of State's hopes are fulfilled and there is joint responsibility the joint responsibility will cover the nominated member just as it does the elected member. May I have that question answered?—It seems to me that even there the joint responsibility would be different in quality. The elected man's responsibility to the Legislature arises in virtue of the fact that he is sent there by his electorate, but the man who is nominated has no position of that kind.

9809. I have no responsibility to the House of Commons in virtue of being elected, but I had a very real responsibility to the House of Commons when I was a Minister of the Crown dependent on the vote of the House of Commons?—But you were responsible to the House of Commons as a Minister because you were sent to the House of Commons by your constituents.

9810. Not at all. Some of my colleagues in the Government, as in every Government in this country, were drawn from the House of Lords. Their joint and several responsibility is equal with that of their colleagues though they undergo no election?—I quite understand that but that again is a different feature of the British Constitution. The House of Lords in England is representative of a certain section of people, the nobility, because it practically includes the whole of the nobility of England and elected members of the nobility of Scotland. That being so, he does owe his position to the fact that he is there because of his roots in the country.

9811. Not at all?—The peer is there because the peer in the old days was practically the boss.

9812. I listen to the witness with great respect when he talks of Indian conditions, but when he expounds the British Constitution he must permit me to remain of my own opinion?—That is perfectly right.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9813. May I put this consideration to you? Do you think the Ministries in the seven Provinces where no Upper Chambers are sought to be set up are likely to be defective in any way and lack talent because there would be no nominated members from which somebody resembling their Lordships could be chosen as a Minister?—I do not see that at all.

9814. Therefore you cannot see why it should be necessary that the Governor should have that help only in three Provinces out of 10?—Quite; and I do not think it is likely that Ministers will recommend people who are of the Upper House.

9815. May I draw your attention to Section VII, subhead (c) (1), "Universities," in your Memorandum? Sardar Buta Singh was putting questions to Dr Shujauddin, and he said that the suggestion that the electorate of this constituency should consist of members of the Senate or the Court was undemocratic and I put this to Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin, that under the very next head, "Commerce," surely there would be no suggestion that every shopkeeper and trader should have a vote. Is it not rather that special interests are sought to be represented under these heads, and the University being the seat of learning, the vote is given to learning rather than to education?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) I wanted to say the same thing. The mere grant of a seat to a University is not because of democratic considerations, but because it is considered desirable to have a seat of learning also represented on the Provincial Council, and if you are going to attain that end then the only possible way seems to me to be to have a constituency of people who are directly associated with learning. To give a vote to a graduate as at present of seven or 10 years' standing amounts to giving a vote to a person who in nine cases out of 10 is detached from the University and has most likely taken the earliest opportunity of forgetting what he learned there and has nothing whatever to do with the University or its conduct or administration in the future, and on those grounds I think the desirable thing to do is to give a vote to the fellows or members of the Court as the case may be.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9816. Would you in that way alter the English electoral roll?—I am not concerned with the English law. As Sir Austen Chamberlain pointed out just now, I am concerned only with India. We have sufficient difficulties of our own to tackle.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9817. You agree there are two views about this question in India?—There are two views about everything in India.

9818. Not only that, but in many Provinces the system has been at work of graduates of a certain number of years' standing choosing the representatives?—That is the present system, and I may also inform you this question was considered by the Senate of the Punjab University of which I happen to be a member, and there it was decided to ask the Government to recommend that the Punjab University should have two seats, one filled as at present by the graduates, the Member being returned by the graduates, and the other Member should be returned by its Senate.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] That is a very good illustration of two views.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9819. May I pursue that by one more question? Take the Bombay University. You are aware that the system their prevailing since the days of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms is that the graduates of a certain number of years' standing select the representative?—Yes.

9820. Are you aware that up to now the men selected have been men who have been in actual touch with the University?—I do not know that it is so.

9821. May I tell you that it is so. Therefore, your fear has not materialized as regards Bombay University, that men will get in who have no actual touch with the University?—I was saying that the electorate would have no direct touch with the University. I was not talking of the candidate returned. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) It is not only that the electorate may have no contact, but a candidate may be returned who has no contact with the University. For the Dacca University constituency a certain gentleman stood, who had no concern with the University, against a Member of the Court of Dacca, and a person intimately connected with its administration, and the gentleman who had no connection with the University at all, except as an inactive Member of the Court, and who had taken very little part in the working of the University, was returned.

9822. Under your system in those Universities where the contrary system prevails, graduates of some years' standing who have at present the vote, will be deprived of it?—But they will have the right as members of the general public in respect of other constituencies.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] But not as graduates.

Mr. R. A. Butler.

9823. The Franchise Committee on page 138 of their Report say that in many cases the Senate is largely formed by nomination. That is their objection?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) That is being altered now. The Senate is being more and more elected. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) That is a reform which ought to take place.

9824. Before you adopt your scheme?—(Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) I can only speak as far as the Punjab is concerned, and at present there is a scheme before the University for making the Senate or the Court more elective than it is at present.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

9825. May I draw attention to Section VII (f) of your Memorandum where you talk of the control of the Provincial Government over the All-India Services. I rather think you mean, although it does not expressly say so, that the Provincial Government should have control over all officers serving in the Provincial sphere?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Exactly.

9826. It was rather generally put there?—Yes.

9827. May I draw your attention to Section VII, sub-head (g) (1). "A substantial measure of Reform should be immediately introduced in Baluchistan." A consideration was put before you that the population was nomadic and there being customary laws and so on, there may be certain difficulties. Would something of this kind perhaps meet your wishes? There is, as you are aware already the Jirgah system in Baluchistan?—Yes.

9828. And the Shahi Jirgah, as it is called, performs many administrative duties?—Yes.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued]
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9829. The Jirgah may be adopted as a provincial instrument for legislation and the unit may then be knit up into the Federation at the top just as any Indian State may be knit up, although they have no local legislature and so on?—That is a very good consideration, but it would have to be considered in view of local conditions and local wishes.

9830. I am sure you are aware that there is some difference—there is bound to be a difference—with regard to the size of the Federal Legislature, and I do not think it is a matter where you could be very exact, but what would be the views of your Associations as to whether the size proposed in the White Paper is the minimum from which we should start, with the view that some time hence, when the franchise is extended, we shall be forced to extend the numbers; or would you start with something smaller and work up to it gradually?—I think the first alternative would be more acceptable, although we have not definitely considered that point.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9831. Mr Yusuf Ali, I am sorry I have to deal with questions of women's franchise again, but could you clear up one point? Am I right in concluding from your replies to various questioners that the Muslim Conference as well as the Muslim League are not opposed to the extension of women's franchise?—That is correct. (Sir Mohamed Yakub) We are not opposed at all. (Mr Abdullah Yusuf Ali) In fact, I think there is a very strong desire to do full justice to the women.

9832. And you are prepared to consider any alternative proposal that may be put forward later on which is practicable and feasible?—Certainly. In that matter some of us, as individuals, would go even very much further than our Associations, but I think our Associations would certainly welcome any feasible proposals which did not cut across the principles which we have mentioned.

9833. Mr. Yusuf Ali, arising out of the questions which were asked by Lord Zetland, am I right in concluding from the replies that what the Muhammadans of Bengal have got, according to the White Paper scheme, is not a majority but a minority in the Legislature?—Yes.

9834. That they are only 47.7 per cent?—Arranged in the Constitution, where as they ought to be a good deal more, I think 54 or 55 per cent.

9835. May I put this question to Mr. Suhrawardy: Is it possible for the Muslims of Bengal, even if they get a majority, to run the administration without the co-operation and support of the Hindus?—(Mr. Suhrawardy.) It would be totally impossible to do so.

9836. What has been your experience of the working of reforms in the last ten years?—I cannot conceive that a large and powerful minority like the Hindus—powerful both inside the Legislature as well as outside because their influence outside the Legislature and their numbers outside the Legislature will have tremendous influence—can be ignored, and it will be necessary in the formation of any Constitution that due and proper consideration is paid to their influence.

9837. Am I right in saying that no Muslim of Bengal or of India has ever said that a communal majority should rule over Bengal?—Far from it. The view of the Muslims has been that in no Province ought a communal majority to rule over the minority, and particularly in Bengal and in the Punjab it has never been conceived that there can be a government by a communal majority.

9838. You do not visualise any communal ministry in any Province of India?—I cannot say that. In some Provinces, particularly where the Muslims are in a very small minority, it might be possible to ignore their wishes, and that is the reason why we have put in a suggestion that there should be at least one Muslim Minister in every Province in which the Muslims are in a minority, but there is no Province I think in which the Hindus are in such an ineffective minority that they can be ignored in the formation of a Ministry.

9839. Our experience in the United Provinces Legislative Council has been that it has been impossible to form a communal party in the Council and every Muslim and Hindu has discouraged it. Do not you think the same conditions would prevail when responsible Government is established in all Provinces?—It has not been possible in Bengal at least to form a communal party. We have never been able to do it and it has been our experience that the Hindus and the Muslims have voted in the same lobbies on questions of separate interests, as their interests have been affected, rather than as communities.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C B E , [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9840. So in future there will be party organisations which will work on non-communal lines both inside and outside the Legislative Councils?—I sincerely hope so and, more than that, in Bengal as is well known, we have had parties in which both Hindus and Mussulmans have been members 9841. And those parties must be non-communal in their outlook?—They are non-communal in their outlook.

9842. And non-communal in their policy and programme?—Quite so.

Marquess of Zetland.

9843. If that is so, Mr. Suhrawardy, if parties in Bengal are to be formed not on communal lines at all, but, as suggested, on lines between the urban and the rural interests why is there any necessity to have separate communal representation?—The reason for that is that we ought not to leave any loophole for, if I may put it, the increase of communalism. We think that separate electorates minimise communalism. That has been our experience. We come in from different sources, through different gates, Mussulmans and Hindus. They have come and sat together in the same Chamber, and they have co-operated with each other, whereas, in the case of joint electorates, unfortunately, it has been our experience that it has led to considerable exasperation of feeling

Archbishop of Canterbury.

9844. May I just follow that question for a minute? It is just the question I was going to ask: I think you have said that you would welcome the Governments passing outside the bounds of communal origin, and forming other links with one another, but, if the electors are strictly bound by these tight bonds of community, what is their position? They will have to vote according to communal interests and desires?—It has been our experience that the points of contact between the two communities are considerable. There are points of difference too. These points of difference cannot be ignored, and it is necessary therefore to see that the separate interests of the two communities are kept in view, but, at any rate, we are apt, if I may so put it, to minimise the points of contact as well. I can conceive the Hindu elector sending in a Hindu representative on say the rural issues, and Mussulman electors sending in representatives on the rural issues. There can be no doubt that these two gentlemen when they come into the Council will combine together on certain political party lines, while, at the same time, if matters arose which definitely affected a community as a community, for instance, in the matter of services; in the matter of contracts; in the matter of education, or matters of this nature, then I would conceive that the Mussulman will see that his rights are not ignored, the Hindu will see that his rights are not ignored, and, on the other hand, this coming together and mingling on political party lines will certainly give them a certain sense of toleration, and a regard for each other's views, and a desire for compromise which at the same time conserve the interests of the two communities.

9845. The communal voters meanwhile would often be encouraged to vote on party rather than communal lines?—Yes, that is what is happening. At present there is a very strong movement on these lines that the Mussulmans are organising themselves on rural and urban lines, the Hindus are organising themselves on rural and urban lines

9846. From that it would seem that gradually the necessity for strictly communal electorates would disappear?—As soon as the mutual distrust and suspicion which unfortunately is there disappears, and I feel certain it is bound to disappear when we work with each other with a certain sense of responsibility, then there will be no reason to keep to separate electorates.

9847. Is it your view that in that case, supposing there are greater facilities for responsible Government in the Provinces, these communal tensions would be mitigated?—That is what we are hoping for. There is a risk certainly underlying it, but we are hoping that this would happen. There is a great justification, if I may so put it, for separate electorates that, as matters stand now, we are actually living in two separate compartments. We live as two peoples side by side. As a matter of fact that this is so can be proved by the fact that even in a city or a village there are quarters in which Muslims live as a whole, and quarters in which Hindus live, and, this being so, we do not know so very much of each other, and we seem to consider that under these conditions joint electorates would be a very artificial thing, whereas separate electorates will truly

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt, M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

represent the electorates as they exist at the present moment.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9848. I thought you said a few moments ago that the points of contact between the two communities were many, a few moments ago?—In the sense that all of us are interested in irrigation, all of us would be interested in health, all of us would be interested in all those beneficial works which would affect the population as a whole, totally irrespective of whether the population is Hindu or Muslim.

9849. You have a hope that out of communal majorities some day the majority will ask for joint electorates?—I think so.

9850. When do you think that such a millenium will be reached; at the end of what period?—It would depend on what kind of leaders we produce. (Sir Mohammed Yakeb.) That would come when the majority community would widen their outlook and become more tolerant.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9851. That is so, and the Muhammadans are the majority in Bengal?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) No, they are not; they are in a minority in the Legislature, and they are therefore unable to influence the Legislature.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

9852. I gather that your point is that the fact of the existence of separate electorates has not militated against the formation of non-communal parties in the Legislative Councils and the Assembly for the last 13 years?—That is so.

9853. And in the future the more points of contact that may be created and developed owing to the creation of autonomous provinces the more the communal tension will decrease?—Yes.

9854. Therefore you hope you will have joint electorates in the fulness of time?—That is so.

9855. In reply to a question asked of you, am I right in concluding from the reply you gave that the All-India Muslim Conference and the All-India Muslim League are prepared to work the reforms as embodied in the White Paper?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Yes.

9856. And, although you require modifications along the lines indicated in your Memorandum, still you are prepared to enter the Council and to work it, striving all the time to justify secure modifications in the Constitution on the lines of your memorandum to the Committee?—We do not believe in non-co-operation, operation.

9857. The Muslim community as such during the last 13 years has been co-operating with the Government against civil disobedience and supporting law and order?—Very strongly.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9858. There are many sections of the Hindu community who have done the same?—Certainly. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) And we are delighted that it is so.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9859. Am I right in concluding from a reply you gave to Lord Salisbury, that the Muslim Conference and Muslim League are not opposed to the establishment of responsible government in the Centre as outlined in the White Paper?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) No, they are not opposed.

9860. And the paragraph I am just quoting, paragraph 13 in the Introduction in the White Paper, is. "At the same time His Majesty's Government do not contemplate the introduction of the new autonomous constitutions in the Provinces under conditions which will leave Federation as a mere contingency in the future. It is probable that it will be found convenient, or even necessary, that the new Provincial Governments should be brought into being in advance of the changes in the Central Government and the entry of the States." Do you agree with this?—Yes.

9861. I was not quite clear as regards the reply you gave on the question of income tax. You are not opposed to the principle of uniformity of rate for income tax throughout India?—Not at all.

9862. Also you are not opposed to the distribution of the proceeds of the income tax among Provinces in accordance with any principles or suggestions that may be made late on after inquiry?—Provided it was equitable.

9863. And you would not be opposed to the retention even of a part of the income tax by the Central Government?—If it was absolutely necessary.

9864. You would not be opposed to it?—No (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) Speaking for Bengal I think there is a very strong feeling there that the income tax collected from Bengal should be allotted to Bengal, otherwise we should not be able to carry on.

1° August, 1933.]

MR. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

SIR MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., MR. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

DR. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

9865. In addition to the jute duty?—Certainly in addition to the jute duty. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Every Province would like to retain as much of the revenue as they could, but I think minor adjustments are possible.

Sir Hubert Carr.

9866. Did not I understand you were prepared to have certain adjustments with various Provinces of the income tax?—As I say, as a particular principle, we should like to see the income tax as a Provincial resource, but, if on a full review of the whole circumstances minor adjustments were necessary, I do not think there would be any difficulties about those.

9867. From your associations?—From my associations.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan

9868. Mr Yusuf Ali, I do not know if you have studied the part of the White Paper dealing with Federal finance?—Yes.

9869. Do you agree generally with the framework of the scheme outlined in the White Paper regarding finance?—I think it is rather sketchy myself 9870. You want it more detailed?—I should like to see more detail.

9871. I am dealing only with the principles there, not with the detail at all?—Of course the Committee has had the advantage of a very careful study of the financial question before it, and I do not know that I can add any useful remarks.

9872. You are not opposed to the general principles of the Federal finance scheme?—No, but I do not see any very definite principles in the White Paper. I should like to see something more definite, something that I could picture to myself as leading up to a good financial situation.

Lord Eustace Percy.

9873. Is not what you want not a little more principle, but a little more money?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy) May I say that we should not like to give up income tax to the Centre unless it was absolutely necessary for the financial stability of the Centre?

Dr. Shafa' at Admad Khan.

9874. With regard to the election of representatives to the Lower House, the Federal Assembly, contact with the electors will depend, will it not, partly upon the extension of the franchise, because if the franchise is extended the constituencies will be smaller in size?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) Yes.

9875. The more the franchise is extended, the more the constituencies will be reduced in size and the more contact will be increased?—Yes

9876. The Muslim Conference and the Muslim League are both of the opinion that the present method of election to the Lower House of the Federal Legislature should be maintained?—That is so.

9877. Then regarding the constituent powers about which you gave certain replies to questions that were put, am I right in concluding from your replies that you do not wish to vest the Federal Government or the Federal Legislature with complete power to amend the Constitution in any way it likes?—That is so.

9878. And that you would like the Federal Legislature to have the power only of amending parts thereof which would not be objected to by the various interests concerned?—Yes; that has already been stated.

9879. You would not have any objection to the power to reform the franchise being vested in the Federal Legislature, provided certain safeguards for minorities are observed?—Quite right 9880. Then with regard to the Advisory Committee, a proposal was made that an Advisory Committee, or a Committee should be appointed to advise the Minister regarding Law and Order. Do you think that such a Committee can really function in a matter which is strictly Executive and administrative sphere?—I think it would be very difficult, and also the delays would be so great, that probably it would defeat its own object.

9881. If a Committee like this is appointed, it will interfere not only with the broad general framework of the scheme, but also with the day to day administration of Law and Order?—It will be a regular thorn in the side of the Home Member.

9882. Regarding Federation and Provincial Autonomy, am I right in concluding that you are prepared to vest the Governor-General in his discretion and the Governor-General in Council with powers which would bring about a certain amount of co-ordination among the units of the Federation?—Oh, yes.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9883. And that these bodies will have purely advisory powers?—Which bodies?

9884. Inter-Provincial Councils or inter-Provincial bodies will be established to serve as a clearing house for an exchange of plans and co-ordination of programmes?—Yes, they must be purely advisory.

9885. Lastly, Sir Mohammed, could you tell me what the view of the Muslim community is regarding the representation of Muslims in the Federal Legislature?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) My Lord Chairman, that is a most important question, from the point of view of the Mussulmans. All that the Indian Mussulmans want is fair treatment and bare justice. They do not want to be given a share in the administration, for which they are not fully equipped. They do not want to be placed in charge of difficult and delicate offices, if they are not thoroughly qualified for them. The Muslims claim is not for spoon-feeding, but for not being kept out on the ground that they are Mussulmans. The strained relations between the Hindu and the Muslim communities, in no small measure, arises out of a desire of the young men of each community to secure Government posts. Partly owing to the greater economic pressure to which they are subject, and partly in consequence of their past history and traditions, this desire amongst the Mussulmans is a matter of life and death for my community. The paucity of careers for educated Indians has hastened the trouble. It follows that we Indians want to avoid jealousies, intrigues and incessant friction, and an effort should be made to define each community's share in public Services. The number of posts going to the Mussulmans will obviously vary from Province to Province, and it seems that in the absence of a more workable basis, we might fix it at the figure assigned to each community for the purposes of representation. It is obvious that the population basis, in this connection, would be highly unsatisfactory and misleading.

9885a. Mr. Yusuf Ali, could you supplement this reply by your own experience?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali) I think so.

9886. What would be the view of the Conference on this point?—I think the Conference strongly supports the principle that in the Services the Muslims should be represented roughly in the same proportions as they would be represented in the Legislative bodies.

Lord Irwin.

9887. You would say, I suppose, that the Muslims should only get posts if they were qualified and efficient?—Absolutely, otherwise it would destroy the Services (Dr. Shujauddin.) All we want is that a Muslim should not be kept out of office, simply because he is a Muslim.

Lord Eustace Percy.

9888. Are these proportions between the communities for posts which are filled by examination by the Public Service Officers to be forced upon the Muslims, apart from the results of the examination?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali) Of course, that raises a very difficult question. You see, already the Government of India have accepted the principle that because of certain conditions in the past, the Muslims have been so kept back that even after the testing of a competitive examination, a certain amount of weightage should be given to the minority communities, including the Muslims and the Sikhs. I think, temporarily, we should have to retain part of that weightage, but, ultimately, I quite agree that when all the communities begin working together, that crutch, as I may call it, may be unnecessary, but in matters where the selection is made at the discretion of officers, we find a tendency that where an office has a large number of Hindus, the Muslims are not taken, and that can only be remedied by fixing a definite proportion to work up to.

Earl Peel.

9889. Would that system of proportion apply in the higher ranks in the Services—the higher steps in the Services as well as to the intake from outside?—I think the higher ranks would naturally follow, if you get the inflow from the bottom.

9890. You would, therefore, not lay down any set of proportions for the higher ranks?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) There must be proportions of all grades and Services from the bottom to the top. Our experience shows that even in the matter of promotions and selections for higher grades, Mussulmans have not been properly treated.

Mr M R Jayaker.

9891. Even in the case of offices like that of a High Court Judge or High Court Chief Justice, would you make a

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

similar formula applicable?—If a Mussulman is available, who is efficient, I think the same formula would apply to any post.

9892. Subject to efficiency?—Subject to efficiency. The Mussulmans of Madras have been clamouring that there has not been a single Muslim Judge of the High Court in Madras since our friend, Sir Abdur Rahim, relinquished his office about twenty years ago. Can you imagine that in a Province like Madras no Mussulman would be available who is capable of being made a Judge of the High Court.

Sir A. P. Patro.

9893. Unfortunately, it has been so in Madras?—You could import Mussulmans from other Provinces, as they have imported them from the Punjab into the United Provinces.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

9894. I think your point is this, that the reservation of seats for minorities has not impaired the efficiency of the Service at all?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) Exactly.

9895. And that in making this demand you are not departing from the usage and the practice that prevails in almost every Provincial Government and also in the Government of India?—Quite so.

9896. And you are not violating the principles of the recommendations of the Services Sub-Committee at the Round Table Conference, which actually formulated the rule that there should be a fair and adequate proportion of minorities in the Public Services?—That is all we are contending for.

9897. You do not want anything more?—No; that is the principle for which we are contending.

Lord Rankeillour.

9898. May I ask, would you make this fundamental in the Constitution Act?—I do not know whether it can be put in the Constitution Act, but we want it definitely to be mentioned, either in the Instrument of Instructions, or wherever it is found practicable.

9899. This is one of the things you would not allow to be altered in India?—I think there is the view that if it is not actually put in the Constitution Act, it might be difficult to work it. That has to be considered by the Committee and by those who hammer out the Constitution, but I think my friend, Sir Mohammed Yakub, distinctly represents that view. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) My own opinion in this connection is, I would submit that the guarantees as regards the Services must be by Statute. Sir Samuel Hoare's evidence before the Joint Select Committee makes it quite clear: "that nothing can be inserted in the Instructions that is not within the framework of the Act", and, as Lord Reading observed, "although Letters of Instruction might be referred to by a Court of Law in trying to construe what was intended, it did not affect the position. No rights of the subject were founded upon it that could be dealt with by a Court of Law. The rights to be construed by the Court were the rights which were prescribed within the Statute itself and could not travel outside." Therefore, a mere mention in the Letters of Instruction will not do. It is, therefore, very necessary that the safeguards as regards the proportion of the Services for the Mussulmans must be by Statute. I do not want to say that the whole detail should come in the Act, but there must be such mention in the Statute as would make it possible to elaborate it in the Instructions.

Sir Henry Gidney.

9900. My Lord Chairman, may I interpose for a second? Sir Mohammed Yakub, is it, or it is not, a fact that the prevailing practice in all Services, especially those that are under the control of the Public Services Commission to-day, is regulated in the following manner: Two-thirds of the appointments are given in order of merit by competition, and one-third by nomination to adjust communal inequalities?—That is so, and this formula has done very great harm to the Mussulmans. A big majority of the Mussulmans have been placed in the same category as a small minority, say, of Sikhs, or of the Anglo-Indians or Indian Christians. If there are three vacancies, for instance, for the minor community, one goes to a Sikh, one goes to a Mussulman and one goes to an Anglo-Indian, which means that the Mussulmans, who form a very big minority in the country, are placed in the category of a very small minority; and, therefore, we want that for the Mussulmans there must be a special share chalked out.

9901. In practice, does it mean this to-day, that the 66-and-two-thirds ap-

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

pointments invariably go—I am talking with all kindness—to Hindus, and the one-third remaining by nomination is divided amongst all the minorities of India?—Yes, that is so.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] Except Parsees.

Sir Henry Gidney.] Parsees too.

Lord Eustace Percy.] They always get it in the first two-thirds?

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] If they can.

Sir Henry Gidney.

9902. Then you really think that that one-third is not enough for all the minorities, in whom the Mussulmans are included?—No, that would not be just, especially to the Mussulmans who are a very big minority. It would not be right to place the Mussulmans in the same category as the small minorities, some of whom are confined only to one Province, such as the Sikhs; who are confined only to the Province of the Punjab.

9903. Your Memorandum suggests that this proportion should be the same as in the political representation in the various Legislatures?—Quite so.

9904. Going a little further, am I right in saying that, for instance, we will take the Central Legislature, under which all the Federal subjects are controlled and All-India Services—that would mean that the Mussulmans, who have 33-and-a-third per cent. of the representation, would get 33-and-a-third of the appointments?—That is what we submit 9905. Then that leaves two other communities, broadly speaking, to be provided for; one would be the Hindus, in which are included all the Sikhs, and the other would be the Anglo-Indians and Europeans. Would you then agree to something like this: You have your political representation in the Central Legislature, as I have just said, and, with 33-and-a-third per cent. representation you would award 33-and-a-third per cent. of the appointments?—That is so.

9906. Then if you would clump the Anglo-Indians and Europeans together, they would have about 10 per cent. of that representation. Is that so, it comes to that?—Yes.

9907. And that would leave 66-and-two-thirds per cent. for the Hindus?—That is so.

9908. Do you think that would be fair, and you accept that, as a Hindu community?—Certainly, in All-India Ser-

9909. Do I follow that you want this mainly in the subordinate appointments in which you and the other minorities are generally concerned, or do you want it in all the appointments?—In all the appointments, I want it.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] May I ask, what chaos and confusion and destruction of efficiency that would mean if every minority were to be guaranteed a certain percentage of Public Services on a priori grounds?

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.] May I ask if the Witness is also prepared to advocate communal examinations—separate examinations for different communities?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] And different standards?

Mr. Butler.] May I recall the Services' Sub-Committee of the First Round Table Conference, which made a suggestion somewhat differing from this? If it would help the Committee, I would read the relevant portion?

Chairman.] If you please.

Mr. Butler.

9910. "Recruitment to the Public Services shall be made through such Commissions in such a way as to secure a fair and adequate representation to the various communities consistently with considerations of efficiency and the possession of the necessary qualifications. This part of the duties of the Public Services Commissions shall be subject in the case of Provincial Commissions to periodical review by the Governor, and in the case of the Central Commission by the Governor-General both of whom shall be empowered to issue any necessary instructions to secure the desired result," and so forth?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali) My Lord Chairman, that seems a fairly satisfactory way of putting it, except that it does not say what a fair and adequate distribution would be. All we want to do is to indicate the proportion.

Lord Eustace Percy.] May I venture to point out to the Committee on the examination that has taken place, that 33-and-a-third, plus 10, plus 66-and-two-thirds comes to more than 100?

Sir Henry Gidney.] I meant 56 and-two-thirds.

Lord Eustace Percy.] In fact, the proposal is: that very nearly 50 per cent. of the appointments by the Public

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Service Commission shall be made otherwise than by examination.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9911. Is it your proposal that appointments to public posts should be made otherwise than by examination?—No.

9912. You agree that there should be a minimum qualification for every candidate?—That is so.

Lord Eustace Percy.

9913. Otherwise, by competitive examination?—Yes.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

9914. Even now, at the present time, in the competitive examination for the United Provinces Executive Civil Services the seats for Muslims and Hindus are reserved?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub) That is so, my Lord, and I think that such a scheme can be worked in all the Provinces. We have got some such formula in Madras also, and it has been working very satisfactorily for many years. Some such formula can be framed in all the different Provinces, according to the conditions prevailing, and there can be no chaos and no difficulty about it.

Chairman.] It appears to me that this matter has been sufficiently elucidated now.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9915. Mr. Suhrawardy, how long were you in the Bengal Legislative Council?—(Mr. Suhrawardy) Since the beginning of the Reforms 9916 The Reforms began in 1921?—Yes.

9917. Was there any communal Party in the Bengal Legislative Council in the first period?—There never has been a communal Party in the Bengal Legislative Council.

9918. In the second period Mr. C. R. Das came to the Council, and he was the Leader of the Opposition?—He was.

9919. Did he not have Muslim Members in his Party?—He had 40 Members in his Party, of whom 22 were Mussulmans, and 18 were Hindus.

9920. During that period also there was no communal Party?—There was no communal Party.

9921. Coming to the third period, has there been any communal Party?—No, there has not been any communal Party, as I have stated.

9922. And there is no communal Party in the Bengal Legislative Council now?—No, not even now.

9923. And it has never been so?—Never.

9924. Even supposing that if the Muslims in Bengal had an absolute majority, which, of course, the White Paper does not provide, do you think that a purely Muslim Ministry could be formed?—I have given my opinion emphatically with regard to that, that that is a possibility that I cannot visualise.

9925. You are certain that that is absolutely impossible?—I am certain of it.

9926. What is the Muslim view with regard to the retention of the special constituencies?—The Mussulmans in Bengal have always been against the retention of special constituencies, and their view has been that, except with regard to the European constituencies—I leave them out of account because they have large interests and their population is very small—and as between Hindus and Mussulmans that it is possible for the separate interests to be expressed by persons who will come in through the general electorate.

9927. One more question Mr. Suhrawardy. I will refer you to Section XI of the Memorandum where you mention about the Services. I want you to give me an answer particularly affecting Bengal. There you have stated “to ensure the due representation of Muslims, we urge that the proportion of Muslims in the Services should reflect their proportion of representation in the several Legislative bodies.” I want you to give me an answer. What is the position of the Muslim representation in Bengal in the Services and have you any list of the Bengal Services?—I have a list here, which shows the employment of Muslims in the principal Services in the Bengal Presidency, as compared with Members of other communities, and the Services given to Muslims are extremely inadequate.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi] Will you kindly hand it in?

Sir H. Gidney

9928. What is the total number of the different important posts?—There are 459 Europeans; 1,762 Hindus; 405 Muslims, of whom 224 are in the Bengal Civil

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Service, and Bengal Junior Civil Service, and others have 64, out of a total of 2,690.

Chairman.

9929. To what period does that refer?—This was compiled some time in 1932.

Sir H. Gidney.

9930. What do you mean by "others"?—Non-Hindus and non-Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Indian Christians, and so on. Those are in the Provincial Service.

Chairman.] If any Member of the Committee or Delegates desire to cross-examine you upon that, it will be necessary, perhaps, that they should have more information as to what it contains.

Sir N. N. Sircar.] I will ask for an opportunity to test these figures. I have had no notice of this.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] I am prepared to put in the Bengal Civil List; the figures were taken from it.

Chairman.

9931. Do these figures purport to be extracts from official returns?—Yes, my Lord, the Bengal statistics.

9932. And nothing else?—And nothing else. May I point out one thing, my Lord Chairman, with regard to a suggestion that was thrown out as to the competitive examinations, that there are hundreds of thousands of appointments in which there are no competitive examinations held, and the question of competition does not enter, and yet Mussulmans are excluded from those appointments, although there are competent persons available.

Chairman.

9933. Do you desire that that Table should appear as part of the printed record?—If your Lordship pleases.

Chairman.] Sir Nripendra Sircar, you might like to take that and look at it now, if you want to cross-examine upon it. The Table is handed to Sir N. Sircar.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] If my friend wants to compare it with the Bengal Civil List, I will pass it to him.

Sir N. N. Sircar.] I have no objection to these figures; all I say is, I would like to check them

The following document is handed in.

Statement showing the employment of Moslems in the principal services in the Bengal Presidency as compared with members of other communities.

Name of Service.	Europeans.	Hindus.	Moslems.	Others.	Total.
(1) High Court Judges, permanent and additional	9	7	1	...	17
(2) Important appointments in the High Court	9	19	2	2	32
(3) District Officers, Additional District Magistrates and Joint Magistrates	25	35	2	...	62
(4) District and Sessions Judges	21	41	6	...	68
(5) Calcutta Small Cause Court Judges ...	1	5	2	...	8
(6) Bengal Civil Service (Judicial) including temporary Sub-Judges and Munsifs	340	50	...	390
(7) Indian Civil Service	114	45	4	...	163
(8) Bengal Civil Service and Bengal Junior Civil Service (Executive)	533	224	20	777
(9) Imperial Police Service	77	13	10	...	100
(10) Bengal Police Service and Inspectors of Police	123	20	18	161
(11) Calcutta Police, Assistant Commissioners and Inspectors	33	27	9	...	69
(12) Indian Service of Engineers	21	20	Nil	1	42
(13) Bengal Engineering Service (Senior and Junior)	1	144	8	1	154

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Name of Service.	Europeans	Hindus.	Moslems.	Others.	Total
(14) Electrical Engineers and Subordinates, Consulting Architects, etc. ...	11	19	Nil	...	30
(15) Indian Educational Service ...	15	10	1	2	28
(16) Bengal Educational Service	170	47	3	220
(17) Indian Medical Service (including tem- porary Medical Officers and Military Assistant Surgeons) ...	41	15	Nil	..	56
(18) Directors and Assistant Directors of Public Health ...	4	46	5	...	55
(19) District Health Officers	26	Nil	...	26
(20) Indian Agricultural Service ...	7	...	Nil	...	7
(21) Bengal Agricultural Service ..	2	21	2	...	25
(22) Indian Forest Service ...	16	6	1	...	23
(23) Provincial Forest Service	10	1	...	11
(24) Indian Veterinary Service ..	2	...	Nil	...	2
(25) Bengal Veterinary Service	7	3	..	10
(26) Finance Service — Accountant-General, Deputy Accountant-Generals, Assis- tant Accountant-Generals, etc.	16	Nil	...	16
(27) Gardener's Service ...	10	4	1	...	15
(28) Inspectors and Assistant Inspectors of Factories ...	8	4	Nil	...	12
(29) Income Tax Commissioners and Assis- tant Commissioners ...	2	3	1	...	6
(30) Meteorologist and Assistant Meteoro- logists	5	Nil	...	5
(31) Superintendents of Post Offices	25	1	11	37
(32) Customs Department, gazetted appoint- ments ...	16	10	Nil	2	28
(33) Appraisers ...	14	13	4	4	35
Total ...	459	1,762	405	64	2,690

Sir Abdur Rahim.

9934. I want to know this, Mr. Yusuf Ali. So far as the proposal for Federation is concerned, what is the Muhammadan opinion in connection with the subjects which are purely British-Indian? Could they regard with favour the administration of these subjects being in the hands of the Federation as a whole, including State representatives?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) I said in the morning that it is a very real difficulty, and it was suggested that a convention might grow up by which the Indian States would not participate in purely British-Indian subjects. Is there anything more that I can add?

9935. No; I simply wanted to know what the Muhammadan opinion was, so far as you know, on this point?—I think that is the Muslim opinion.

9936 That they would not like the States' representatives who are not concerned with the affairs of British-India?—"Would not like" is rather a strong term, because I think the Federation is coming, and it would be very difficult to exclude any consideration of British-Indian questions by the States' representatives, but, certainly, they would welcome any arrangements by which such intervention would be, either prevented, or minimised.

9937. Questions have been asked about the possibility of joint electorates. So far as Muhammadan opinion in India is concerned, do you think that joint electorates is a practical question at the present moment?—Under present conditions, it is not at all practical.

9938. Of course, there are some individual Muhammadans who do favour joint

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

electorates? Is that not so?—Oh, yes, but only a small number 9939. But the general Muslim opinion, as I understand you, is opposed to joint electorates?—That is so. (Mr. Suhrwardy.) Overwhelmingly opposed.

9940. Now with regard to communal decision, do you know that after it was announced by His Majesty's Government, very earnest attempts were made in India to substitute that communal decision by an agreed settlement among the Hindus and Muslims?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) Yes, attempts were made, but they came to nothing. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) The general Muslim point of view was very much against those attempts.

9941. Supposing that the communal decision was modified in any way, the result would be then, in the absence of agreement, that one community will be dissatisfied instead of another, or both communities will be dissatisfied?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) That is so. Of course, when you say "in any way," speaking for the Mussulmans, we are not concerned with anything that does not touch our own interests.

9942. I meant, so far as the Hindu Muslim representation was concerned that is the position?—That is so. (Mr. Suhrwardy.) May I add to that this, that I am not certain whether the Hindu community is genuinely dissatisfied with the Premier's decision. They, certainly on account of the Poona Pact position, have been trying to make some modifications, but I have here a certain document that was circulated, I think, by Sir Nripendra Sircar, at page 32, when he quotes a telegram sent by Mr. Dutt, who supports his point of view. I find there: "Premier's Award on this question is uttermost that Bengal can accept." That is to say, they did not want the Poona Pact to be modified, for they were against the Poona Pact. It would seem that, so far as the Bengalee Hindus were concerned, they did accept the Premier's Award

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9943. The language is absolutely clear. It means, so far as the Depressed Classes are concerned, they are willing to accept the decision. It is nothing to do with the Muhammadans. You know very well that the next day there were articles in the papers and magazines objecting to the proportion of seats given to the Hindus?—There were also objections in the Muslim papers. (Sir N. N. Sircar.) Certainly, but you are suggesting a grievance.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

9944. I want to know the Muslim feeling in Bengal with reference to this communal decision. Is it generally acceptable to the Muslim opinion in Bengal, in spite of the fact that their demand has not been fully satisfied?—I am afraid there has been considerable dissatisfaction, but we have stated that we are prepared to work the constitution on the basis of the decision, because we do not want this unfortunate controversy to be reopened again, which is bound to lead to a tremendous amount of bitterness once more.

9945. As regards the Lucknow Pact, is it not the fact that the Muhammadan representative at Lucknow strongly protested at the time and that the Muhammadans never accepted it in Bengal?—That is so. The Bengal Mussulmans objected.

9946. I put it to you, you know the matter was actually debated in the Legislative Council, that one reason why Mr. C. R. Das had so many as 22 Muhammadan members in his party (the Swaraj Party) was that the Muhammadans were extremely dissatisfied with the Lucknow Pact?—They were. Yes, that was one of the reasons, and there was a further reason that Mr. C. R. Das proposed another Pact in the place of the Lucknow Pact. Generally speaking, the terms were of this nature, that as between the Hindu and Muslim minorities and majorities, the representation of minorities should always be effective and adequate, totally irrespective of the number within a constituency, and he suggested as a working formula that in all the constituencies the majority community should have 60 per cent and the minority community should have 40 per cent. The constituencies in Bengal (the various local bodies, and so on) are more or less Constitutional in this manner, that in eastern Bengal there is an overwhelming Muslim population and a small Hindu population, and vice versa in western Bengal, and his suggestion therefore was that in those districts and in those local bodies where the Mussulmans were in an overwhelming majority, they should have 60 per cent. and

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

the Hindus 40 per cent., totally irrespective of the actual numbers, and the same in Western Bengal as between Hindus and Muslims that in the legislature the Muslims should have 60 per cent. and the Hindus 40 per cent. This I may point out was accepted by the Mussulmans and at a very famous meeting of the Congress at Seraj Gunj, it was also accepted by the Hindus.

9947. Mr. C. R. Das was able to draw so many Muhammadans to his party by another proposal, that was the proposal he made regarding recruitment to the Services in Bengal, and the proposal was regarding the representation, he was willing to concede to the Muhammadans. Is not that so?—Yes.

9948. That was also a part of the Pact?—That was a part of his pact, and, in order to remedy the tremendous inequality, and what we may call the concentrated injustice of the past, he suggested very favourable terms to the Mussulmans for future recruitment.

9949. Supposing the Congress decide to contest the next election, after the Constitution Act comes into operation, what do you think will be their position in the Council so far as the Hindu element of the Council is concerned. I mean will they be able to form the majority?—The majority of the Hindus?

9950. Yes, that is what I mean?—So far as that is concerned, the Congress, whatever may be its influence and strength at the present moment, is the only political body among the Hindus that is functioning in Bengal (I may say amongst the caste Hindus, if I may put it so) and it is extremely likely that they will be able to return their own members.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

9951. The Hindu Mahasabha has no influence in Bengal?—That is perfectly true; the Hindu Mahasabha has no influence in Bengal.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

9952. Since the passing of the new Act it has been under the control of the Congress party?—That is so.

9953. In the last election what was the result?—The last election was run on the joint electorate system with reservation of seats.

9954. But what is the position of the Congress party now?—The Congress party has always swept the polls.

9955. Even in the last election they secured a majority?—Even in the last election.

9956. As regards non-Congress Hindus, have they ever been able to stand against the Congress in any of these elections either to the Council or to the Corporation?—Very very rarely.

9957. I do not mean individuals; of course, individuals have got in?—Yes, but never as a party. Some individuals have got in.

9958. Supposing the proportion of Muhammadans as given by the Decision of the Government is reduced, and supposing the Congress consent, judging by past experience, is there not a chance or danger that a section of Muhammadan representatives may go over to the Congress?—I am afraid whether the Congress comes in or not, if the Communal Decision is disturbed (I do not wish to say it in any spirit of Militancy), but if the Prime Minister's decision is disturbed to our detriment, I am afraid that the Mussulmans will lose very much of their faith in British justice.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9959. If it is disturbed by giving you more?—Yes, then we shall have a higher regard for British justice than we possess at present. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) My Lord Chairman, as you have admitted a statement of the services with reference to Bengal, may I put in a printed Memorandum over the signatures of certain Muslim members of the Legislative Assembly which gives you the figures for the services as a whole, and the Muslim representation thereon.

Chairman.

9960. I think it would be very much better, if those figures are desired, that you should put them in without any other matter. Subject to the views of the Committee, I am not prepared to admit a document of that kind at this stage?—You have admitted one statement.

9961. I admitted a document which I was told contained extracts from official returns and nothing else?—This purports to be from official documents.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] If I may say so, there is a further difference. The first was a document given in evidence by the witness on his own responsibility.

Lord Irwin.] In answer to a question.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] In answer to a question that was addressed to him.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

This is proposed to be put in evidence, as the evidence of somebody who is not before us. I think we decided at an earlier stage that we were not prepared to receive memoranda of that kind.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] The India Office here will be able to supply us with these figures because questions are often put in the Central Legislature regarding the figures of employment of different communities, and it is quite possible that the India Office will be able to supply us with the figures that are necessary.

Chairman

9962 Sir Abdur Rahim, you will remember the Secretary of State is returning to the chair, and you can address your questions to him later in the year?—Amongst other signatories to this Memorandum is Sir Mohammed Yakub, who has given evidence about the services.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] He has not been asked and has not replied to any questions.

Chairman.] I hope very much the witness will accept the ruling without further comment.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9963. Sir Abdur Rahim put a question to you just now, that the Muslim opinion is against joint electorates and you said it was so. Is it not a fact that the Shiah Conference passed a resolution in favour of joint electorates?—The Shiahs are a very small proportion of Muslims, and therefore it does not affect the majority position.

9964. It is a fact that the Shiah Conference passed a resolution in favour of joint electorates?—I do not know about it.

9965. You did not hear about it?—I read something about it, but I am not precise as to the wording of that resolution.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.] Is not it a fact that at the Shiah Conference it was not passed unanimously?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9966. What is the proportion of Shiahs to the rest of the Muslim community—is it not one-fourth?—I doubt it. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) The number of Shiahs present in the Conference was very small, and the Shiah Conference does not represent the general view of the Shiahs in India. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) May I be permitted to add for the information of Sir Hari Singh Gour that even this Shiah Conference has a rival body among the Shiahs which passed a resolution in favour of separate electorates?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9967. There is a rival body to yourselves, the National Muslim Conference?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) But there are very few Members of the Muslim community in it. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) I do not think in the whole country you would get more than 50

9968. Is it not a fact that the Bengal Legislative Council passed a resolution in favour of joint electorates and several Muslims Members of the Bengal Legislative Council voted in favour of it?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Our arrangement is that I shall act as a general spokesman, but I can ask a Member for Bengal to speak specifically to Bengal questions. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) In Bengal, as is very well known, under the Lucknow Pact, the Muslims are in a very small minority. There are 39, whereas the Hindus are 56 in number, with other seats as well. In this debate the Government and I think the Europeans remained neutral, leaving the Hindus and Muslims to contest amongst themselves the question of joint electorates, and it was obvious that as the Hindus were in favour of joint electorates, the resolution was passed.

9969. May I ask the witness how many Muslims voted in favour of that resolution?—I cannot remember the figures, but I should think not more than six or seven.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

9970. Seven?—Seven. There are three Congress people who have come in and four persons who did not dare to stand as Congress candidates but who camouflaged themselves and stood as candidates of the Bengal Presidency Muslim League. As a matter of fact, they were run by the Congress and are Congress Members; consequently they owe their allegiance to the Hindu section.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9971. Various Conferences of the women of India have passed resolutions in favour of joint electorates. Is it not so?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Very few Muslim women have taken part in these

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHEED AHMAD.

Conferences, and this view does not represent the view of the majority of Muslim women in India.

9972. Has there been any Conference of Muslim women who have condemned joint electorates and have passed a resolution in favour of separate electorates?—(Dr. Shujauddin) There is no political organisation of Muslim women.

9973. Such organisations as exist have passed a resolution in favour of the joint electorates?—No

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] Such organisations which exist, in which the Muslim women are represented, have passed resolutions in favour of joint electorates?

Begum Shah Nawaz.

9974 My Lord Chairman, may I ask a supplementary question to this. That in almost all these organisations where such resolutions have been carried, the Muslim women have made it quite clear that in the absence of a settlement between the two communities, the majority of Muslim women are not prepared to agree to a system of joint electorates?—That is so; that is conclusive

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

9975. We have had the women's evidence before the Sub-Committee, and what they have said is on record. We shall hear them again very shortly. Now, is it not a fact, that the Hindu communities are in favour of joint electorates?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) I believe so. (Mr. Suhrawardy) Do you speak for the Depressed Classes as well? I do not think that the Depressed Classes are in favour of joint electorates.

9976. They have accepted joint electorates and they have always stood for joint electorates?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) What is your further question?

9977. My further question is that you have, therefore, this fact, that the Hindu community are in favour of the joint electorates, and are against separate electorates, and I take it from you that the bulk of the Muslim communities are opposed to joint electorates and in favour of separate electorates. Now whatever decision is given, whether in favour of joint electorates or in favour of separate electorates, one of the two communities must be displeased. Is it not so?—We can only speak for the Mussulmans; we cannot speak about the Hindus.

9978. But the Hindus are satisfied with the Premier's Award, because it contravenes the principle of joint electorates?—That is a matter of argument. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) More than that, may we add that there are many statements by Hindu leaders who have accepted separate electorates from time to time. (Dr. Shujauddin) And may I add further, my Lord Chairman, that only recently an attempt was made in the Punjab to evolve a formula which might be acceptable to the Mussulmans also, but a formula which would be based upon the principle of joint electorates; and after that formula was published in the Press, inviting public opinion, almost the entire body of the Sikh leaders and a large proportion of Hindu leaders rejected that formula and rejected the principle of joint electorates. I am talking of the Punjab.

9979. We are then confronted with this proposition. That the Communal Award has dissatisfied the Hindus and has partially satisfied the Mussulmans, the Mussulmans accept it. Now when you have got an Award which is not acceptable to the majority community, and is accepted, hesitatingly, we will say, by the minority community?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali) Not hesitatingly.

9980. Has been accepted unhesitatingly by your community, how can you ensure the harmonious and peaceful working of the future Constitution when this bitterness will continue on the part of the majority community, who, you admit, are superior to you in wealth and influence?—We do not admit that they are superior to us in any other thing.

9981. I never said any other thing. I spoke of wealth and influence. How do you expect that the future Constitution will work?—We think that the very bitterness is the cause why communal electorates are necessary, and, if that is so, it is unreasonable that it should be opposed, and we think that when it gets into working order, the majority community, though they may not like it, will accept it.

9982. And you admit, Mr. Yusuf Ali, that the joint electorates or separate electorates are inconsistent with the principles of democracy?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) It is not, my Lord Chairman; we do not accept it.

9983. Because it creates?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) There are democracies and

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

democracies. There is no such thing as an abstract democracy. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) May I be permitted to say that the principles of democracy as understood by Europe can never apply to India. The conditions prevailing in India are completely different from the conditions prevailing in any other part of the world, and, therefore, any Constitution which is drawn for India must be for India, and India alone, on principles devised for India, and India alone. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) We do believe that separate electorates is the best method of representation. Far from being against democracy, it is the best method of representation, and, therefore, in consonance with democracy. (Dr. Shujauddin.) May I make this remark: All the leaders of Indian Nationalism so far have been the products of separate electorates. I instance Mr. C. R. Das, and all those gentlemen who were returned to the Councils on the ticket by separate electorates, and with regard to whom it cannot be said that they were not the best advocates of Indian Nationalism, such as we understand it to be.

9984. I do not understand the relevancy of that remark?—It is not, therefore, correct to say that separate electorates are a negation of democracy.

9985. If there was a separate electorate, the best man of the Hindu community would be returned by the Hindus?—Why, therefore, should it not be assumed that the best man of the Mussulman community would also be returned by the Mussulmans?

9986. What follows is that the bigots of both communities are likely to be returned and keep up their bigotry in the Legislative Council?—That has not been our experience, so far.

9987. Now you say that there should be no weightage given to the Indian States in the future Constitution?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) Yes.

9988. On what ground would you give no weightage to the Indian States?—I think we have given the grounds because, as I stated in the morning, the entry of the States into such a Federation itself creates so many difficulties that the giving of weightage will add to the complications.

9989. Your attention was not drawn to this aspect of the question? I find that in Appendix II, Clause 7: "No weightage or other discriminatory privileges should be given to the Indian States." Would you please explain the reasons for these views?—I will explain them again, if you wish. The Indian States come in for certain reasons, but they add enormously to an, already, very complicated problem. The majority of the subjects of the Indian States are Hindus, and their coming in will already weight the whole question against us. If they are given further weightage, the weightage will be double, as far as we are concerned.

9990. Therefore, you do not wish to give the Indian States weightage, because you think it would prejudice Muslim representation in the Central Legislature?—Partly, yes.

9991. Now you say there should be a convention under which the Indian States' representatives should not vote upon questions dealing with purely British-Indian administration?—We did not say so. The suggestion was put forward and we are prepared to accept that, as far as it will go. We doubt whether it will work.

9992. I doubt it, too; therefore, we are at one on that subject. Now as regards the election direct or indirect, to the Federal Assembly, questions have been put to you whether the representatives to the Federal Assembly, and to the present Legislative Assembly, by direct elections are in any contact with the electorates, and whether, in view of the large dimensions of the constituencies in the future, there is likely to be any contact between the Members and their voters. I put it to you: Is it not better that such contact as is possible between the Member and his voters is preferable to no contact at all?—Of course.

9993. Which would be the case if the Members were returned through the medium of the Provincial Councils?—Just so, because that will produce the contact with the Provincial Councils only.

9994. Not with the voters?—Not with the voters.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

9995. Mr. Yusuf Ali, do you share the apprehensions of a certain section of people in this country that, because of communal difficulties in India, it would be unsafe to give to India a large share of responsible government?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) No.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

9996. You think that that responsibility is a cure against communalism?—I think it will tend to diminish communalism.

9997. And you entertain a very great hope that, in spite of communal electorates, in course of time responsible government will work in a spirit of nationalism?—Certainly.

9998. Will you kindly turn to paragraph XI of your memorandum? You there ask that future recruitment of the All-India Services should be placed in the hands of the Provinces and, I suppose, you want control also for the future?—Yes, All-India Services, which serve in the Provinces.

9999. I am speaking of those which serve in the Provinces?—Yes.

10,000. You desire to have control and recruitment of those services?—In the Provinces.

10,001. Do you think that provincial autonomy will work smoothly if this control is not placed in the hands of Provincial Governments?—No.

10,002. It would be a travesty?—It would.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

10,003. My Lord Chairman, I do not propose to put any questions about joint electorates and separate electorates to the witnesses. Many questions have been put already. I would like to ask Mr. Suhrawardy about this statement in paragraph VII (a)—“the well-recognised principle that no majority should be reduced to the position of a minority, or even to that of equality, has been departed from in the case of Bengal.” I will put some facts to you. I will read to you an answer given by the Secretary of State, Sir Samuel Hoare, to Question 7,467: “Is it the fact that if the 199 ordinary seats, those of the seats which are to be divided between the general and the Muslims” (which practically means the Hindus and the Muslims) “are divided according to the ratio of the adult population which I have quoted to you, that then the result would be 103 Muslim seats and 96 general seats?—(A.) If they were divided in accordance with the adult population figure did you say? (Q.) Yes?—(A.) 103 and 96; I think that is so. (Q.) If they are divided according to the total population ratio, which your officers have agreed is 54.9 to 48, then there should be 109 Muslim seats and 90 general seats?—(A.)

Yes. (Q.) What has been awarded is 119 plus such seats as they can get out of the 20 special seats.” Now, what I am asking you is this: to let the Committee have a clear idea of these figures; they are not very complicated. The Bengal Legislature, according to the White Paper proposals, consists of 250 members; is that not so?—(Mr. Suhrawardy.) Yes.

10,004. Out of that number, 31 cannot be touched either by Hindus or by Muhammadans; 25 Europeans; 4 Anglo-Indians and 2 Indian Christians?—Yes.

10,005. That leaves 219 seats altogether which can possibly be divided between the Hindus and Muhammadans?—Yes.

10,006. Of the 219 seats, 20 are what are called Special Seats, to which the Muhammadan Delegation has objection, and 199 are ordinary seats?—Yes.

10,007. So far, you will agree that between the Hindus and the Muhammadans what can possibly be divided is, 199 ordinary seats and 20 general seats?—Yes.

10,008. And you have seen the result of the calculation given by Sir Samuel Hoare?—It is a fallacy.

10,009. What is the fallacy?—The fallacy is that you should have calculated on 99 and not on 219.

10,010. I am now assuming that you want your 52 per cent. or 54 per cent., or whatever it is, of the 20 special seats?—No.

10,011. 219 is made up of 199 plus 20?—Yes.

10,012. Now, suppose you were dividing the 219 seats—even the special seats are going to be communally divided, what will be the figures according to both ratios? I have done it myself several times?—Perhaps you will give me the figures.

10,013. The first is very easy. If you take the total population basis, including the babies, that would be 219?—How many are you giving the Hindus? 54.8 to the Mussulmans and how much to the Hindus?

10,014. 54.8 to the Mussulmans?—Is it 44.8 or 43.2, or even less, I think.

10,015. No. You have been misled by Mr. Ghuznavi. You have got to add there the others?—No; the others are Indian Christians.

10,016. Take the figures given by Sir Samuel Hoare a few days ago in his examination?—May I know if in

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

"others" Europeans and Indian Christians are included?

10,017. No, "others" means other than Hindus—Jains, Bhuddists, Sikhs and so on?—I do not know that Jains have any separate outlook.

10,018. That is beside the point. I am not asking you to say whether they have the same outlook?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Will you put forward your suggestion? May I ask for the question?

Sir N. N. Sircar.] We are now dividing 219 seats, and for the sake of argument I am conceding that even the special seats have to be communally divided. If you divide 219 seats, first of all, taking the adult population basis—52 to 48.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.] The adult population basis?

Sir N. N. Sircar.

10,019. Yes?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) I think it is rather academic, because I do not know whether in any Province calculations have been made on the adult population basis—in any Province, either the seven Hindu Provinces or the four Muslim Provinces.

10,020. It has not been done?—No.

10,021. Will you now calculate on the total population basis, including the babies?—54.8—44.2?

10,022. May I put the question in this form. I am putting to you, that supposing even the special seats are taken into consideration and divided according to what you suggest is the proper way, namely, the total population basis—do not go into decimals, and things of that kind; take it at 55, 45 and so on—you have 10 seats more than you ought to have?—Before I answer that, I should certainly like to say that I have never suggested that that is the proper way, but you have asked me to divide it in that manner, and if you divide it in that manner, I suggest that there would be 120 Muslim seats possible.

10,023. Very well; it would be, so. I do not expect you to agree to the suggestion that that is the proper basis, but may I just read to you from Command Paper 3712, "Despatches from Provincial Governments in India containing proposals for Constitutional reform"?

(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) We should like to know the precise question now so that we can answer it.

10,024. The precise question is that 10 seats more have been given to the Muslims if this method of calculation is right?—That is not so, even on that basis it is not so. Ten seats have not been given. If you have 54.8, 120 seats will be the quota of the Muslims.

10,025. You are dividing 219 seats?—I am dividing 219 seats, and in that case 120 seats will be the Muslim quota.

10,026. I have to take your answer, but that is not so. You are dividing 219 seats?—55 per cent. of 219 is 120.4.

10,027. Are you aware that when this dispute was going on the European members of the Government of Bengal stated that the fair way of dividing is to divide these ordinary seats according to population basis. I will not go into the question of whether it is the adult population or total population. Are you aware of that?—In the Council or in the Cabinet?

10,028. In the despatch from the Government of Bengal, on the Statutory Commission, page 59?—Including the special constituencies?

10,029. Yes?—If they have done so, they have done a grievous injustice to the Muslims.

10,030. Are you aware of that?—No.

10,031. Are you aware that this volume publishes a note by the Muhammadan Members of the Government which begins at page 78. They also suggest that inasmuch as the special seats are likely to be mostly captured by the Hindus the ordinary seats should be divided according to population basis?—Even that I am not aware of.

10,032. I want to ask one more question. You know the communal decision provides—I am giving it in my own language—that there will be no change after 10 years unless the parties affected by it agree to a change?—Yes.

10,033. Is not that so?—Yes.

10,034. Unless you, I mean the Muslim community, are prepared to give up the special electorate and the seats which they have obtained, is there any possibility of getting any majority by the combination of all other interests in the Council?—We have not an absolute majority in the Bengal Council, and, therefore, all the other parties combined together can defeat the Muslim group should the Mussalmans ever act as a body.

10,035. May I have your opinion as to what you suggest is the proper method of finding out whether the parties are

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

agreed upon a change or not?—We hope that in 10 years time there will be a sufficient growth of the political party system by which means you will be able to find out the views of the various parties and the various groups, and you could then have all-parties conferences, and try to ascertain what are the views of the community.

10,036. You do not want anything to be put down in the Constitution as to how the change is going to be made?—It is very difficult for me to suggest any such thing. I have not considered it.

10,037. I am suggesting to you that in Bengal, although it is purported to be a temporary measure made for 10 years, by reason of this Clause, this will be perpetuated. You have a majority, 119 plus a certain number in a House of 250?—I am sorry, but you are visualising continuously the perpetuation of communal groups, and I do not visualise that at all. I think that it is quite possible within the next 10 years and if not 10 years within the next 20 years, there will be sufficient national consciousness to make a radical change in the proportions.

10,038. I submit that that is no answer to my question. If the parties agree it is quite all right, but if they do not agree, as the Provincial Legislative Council of Bengal is constituted, it would be impossible for the Hindus to get any change?—Very well; if they do not agree, there will be no change, but there is no reason why they should not agree.

Sir N. N. Sircar.

10,039. You suggested that there are no communal parties in Bengal and the Muhammadans are voting with the Bengal Councillors. Is not that so?—Yes.

10,040. There were three occasions when a deadlock was created by Mr. C. R. Das getting the salary of the Minister turned down?—Yes.

10,041. And they got the support of some of the Muhammadans, or substantial help from the Muhammadans for that vote?—Yes. I may add to that that one of those cases was when both the Ministers happened to be Muslims.

10,042. True, and the motion was moved by a Muhammadan Member?—Yes.

10,043. From that you infer that the Hindus and the Muhammadans are acting together?—Yes.

10,044. And that there are no communal rights, but it was one of those occasions when the Hindus and a section of the Muhammadans were acting together for the purpose of creating a deadlock?—They were voting together on all matters, not merely on the Ministerial matter, not merely on the question of a vote of censure against the Minister, but on all matters they were voting together.

10,045. Will you give me an idea of what you mean by "on all matters they were voting together"?—Whenever they were voting, they were voting as a political party.

10,046. I am suggesting to you—and I will not press you further—that Mr. C. R. Das had got hold of a body of Muhammadan members and they had the mind of always acting together for putting difficulties in the way of the Government and creating a deadlock, and they did not act together for any other purpose?—That is not so. They acted as a political party throughout.

10,047. Will you give the Committee one instance of any measure in which the Congress Party, led by Mr. C. R. Das, and the Muhammadans were acting together, apart from creating difficulties in the way of the Government, creating deadlocks, and so on?—If you look at the proceedings of that period, you will so find.

10,048. Can you give me an instance?—This was the ordinary work of the Council. There are resolutions, there are Bills, and there is the Budget Debate, and in all these they acted together.

10,049. For instance, when Mr. C. R. Das was there, was it cut down to zero? Then they were acting together. I would not press it further, but my point is, you cannot give the Committee one instance where the Hindoos and the Muslims were acting together for any good purpose?—Whether you call it good purpose or bad purpose—

Sir Austen Chamberlain] What conclusion, I wonder, does Sir Nripendra Sircar wish us to draw from that in relation to the new Constitution of India?

Sir N. N. Sircar.] I wish to controvert the statement that the combination has not been run on communal lines.

Sir Austen Chamberlain] Are we to infer that they will always act on communal lines under the new Constitution, except when both Hindus and Mussul-

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

mans want to break down the Government? Is that the inference?

Sir N. N. Sircar.] I am suggesting that my friend is rather optimistic; that it is not a correct statement that the Governments are not run on communal lines.

Mr. Foot.] Is it necessary always by examination to check by question a statement with which we disagree?—Is that the purpose of our questions?

Sir N. N. Sircar.

10,050. No. I said I would leave him there, if he cannot give me an instance?—(Mr. Suhrawardy.) I have definitely pointed out that they have voted all along, when that Party existed, on all matters.

Sir N. N. Sircar.] My Lord Chairman, I have no further questions to ask

Sir H. Gidney.

10,051. My Lord Chairman, before I ask any questions, with your permission, may I correct two errors into which I fell this morning? One was with regard to the advertisement in "The Times" concerning the I.M.S. I thought that Mr. Yusuf Ali was referring to the "Times" of India; I did not think he meant the London "Times". The other was when I said 66-and-two-thirds per cent. As Lord Eustace Percy corrected me; I meant 56-and-two-thirds per cent. Sir Mohammed Yakub, regarding the recruitment into the Services, would I be right if I said that at present one-third of the nominated seats for all open competitive examinations are selected only from those who have passed the examinations?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) That is so, my Lord.

10,052. In other words, they have proved that they are efficient?—That is so.

10,053. But they have not come within the allotted number by merit of two-thirds?—That is so.

10,054. The Government has tried to remedy this lately by appointing more Members of certain minority communities?—I am not sure about it. On certain occasions, they have done so.

10,055. Mr. Suhrawardy, are you aware of an Order of the recruitment rules for the Bengal Services in 1928, in which the Government of Bengal ordered that there should be 46 per cent. Muslims for the Bengal Civil Services?—(Mr. Suhrawardy.) There were certain orders to that effect, and there have been several circulars also issued by the Government of India, but our experience is that they are never acted upon.

10,056. That I was coming to. Do you complain that those Orders have not been fulfilled?—They are never fulfilled.

10,057. Could you tell us why they are not fulfilled?—I suppose there are always rules framed to circumvent those orders; somehow or other, we go round them. I have figures here which are most remarkable. For instance, figures have been checked with regard to Railways. I may point out to your Lordship that in the Railways Muslims in the Gazetted appointments throughout India are only 3 per cent. in number, and the Senior subordinate ranks, only 4 per cent., and within the last 10 years, when it is admitted that a very large number of competent Muslims have come into the field who could hold posts, not only Senior posts, but also Junior posts of clerks, and so on, we have found that the percentage of Mussulmans has actually decreased. We cannot make out why.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

10,058. In spite of the circulars?—In spite of the circulars, and any number of regulations. The Muslim Members have put forward suggestions from time to time that there ought to be an Inquiry into the matter, as to why, in spite of these Government circulars, Mussulmans are not appointed, or how these circulars are circumvented, but the Government has not, as yet, made that Inquiry. The only instance where an Inquiry was ordered was with regard to the Railways, and most remarkable figures have been placed before the Committee. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) If I may say so, my Lord Chairman, the reason why these orders of the Government are not given effect to, is that the heads of the Departments, within whose power it is to give effect to these orders, are hostile to the Mussulmans, and it is impossible for a Secretary of the Government, or a Member of the Executive Council, to look into the details of each and every appointment. It is left with the subordinates to carry out those orders, and those subordinates are hostile to the Muslims, and, therefore, no effect is given to those orders. (Dr. Shujauddin.) May I be permitted to make just one statement on this point, and that is this: with regard to the objection that is often made, and with regard to the suggestions that were made also in this Committee to-day, that qualified Muslims are not available for all these posts, and that Muslims who have gone through the competitive examination do not come forward in sufficient numbers, this is the reason why they are not appointed. As a matter of fact, the Government of India some time ago appointed a special officer to go into the question of Railway Services, and, in his Report, this special officer stated that in one Division alone of the North-West Railway, there were sufficient qualified Muslims to hold the appointments in the whole of the Railway during three particular years.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Sir Henry Gidney.

10,059. Sir Mahommed Yakub, would I be correct if I were to say that the present cry in India is more a Provincial cry: "Bengal for Bengalis, Punjab for the Punjabis, Bihar for the Biharis"?—(Sir Mahommed Yakub.) To a very great extent.

10,060. Would you think it correct if I said that in these cries, which are decided by pacts between governments and the major communities, other minor communities, such as my own, are shown no consideration at all?—I must say all the minor communities have not so far.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

10,061. May I ask whether Sir Mohammed Yakub is talking of the railway services?—Yes.

10,062. And the communities do not get their share?—I would not say that the Anglo-Indians do not get their share in the railway services, but certainly their numbers have been falling down from what they were in past years. Whether they were getting more than their share or not, is not for me to say.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

10,063. You are not opposed to the retention of a reasonable proportion of Anglo-Indians in their present employments?—No, I am not.

Sir Henry Gidney.

10,064. Are you aware of the fact that in the Postal Service of Bengal and Assam there are only .5 per cent. Anglo-Indians employed?—About that in the Postal Service.

Sir A. P. Patro.] I think the Secretary of State is going to give evidence about the Postal Service and all that kind of thing later on. If we are going into the details of the Services, I submit it is quite irrelevant at the present moment.

Sir Henry Gidney.

10,065. You do not know that, do you?—I do not know about the Anglo-Indians, but about the Muslims I can say that in the Post and Telegraph Directorate in 1925 there was no Mussulman; in 1927 there was one non-Mussulman, and no Mussulman. Superintendents, in 1925 no Mussulman; in 1927, non-Mussulmans, 12, Grand Total—12. Assistants. 1 Mussulman, 7 non-Mussulmans; Total—8; Percentage—12.5. Then Clerks. 15 Mussulmans; non-Mussulmans, 58; a total of 73. That is in the Directorate of Posts and Telegraphs.

10,066. Owing to the great importance which you attach and other communities attach to adequate representation in the Services, are you aware of the present system that obtains in the Government of India and in the Provincial Governments?—Yes.

10,067. We have discussed the present system. You have suggested employment on a political ratio of representation in Councils. You have further said that efficiency is a sine qua non for all such appointments?—Yes.

10,068. Would you take this efficiency to mean to-day education in English?—Any standard of qualification that may be prescribed.

10,069. The appointments which you and other minority communities are concerned with are generally the subordinate appointments rising from about 30 to 250 rupees a month?—Not only the subordinate appointments, but all the appointments.

10,070. Would you consent to the Committee to take into consideration the efficiency test in English?—I am quite prepared that the Committee should do that.

10,071. Are you aware that, roughly speaking, there are hundreds of thousands of such appointments in the various governments?—There are.

10,072. Then the whole of India is not in open competition for those appointments?—There is none.

10,073. Only those are eligible, who are educated up to about the secondary standard in English. Are you aware that the Census gives 2,000,000 people in India literate in English, of which, roughly, about 50 per cent. are educated up to the secondary standard; in other words, about 1,000,000 people?—I have not gone through the figures.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

10,074. Would you be prepared to accept that only those 1,000,000 people in open competition for those hundreds of thousands of jobs, and not the whole population?—I think that competition is not the proper way of recruiting in all the Departments.

10,075. Sir Mohammed Yakub, you are an old member of the Legislative Assembly. Would I be correct in saying that the greatest difficulty which faces the Government to-day, and that will face all future Governments, will be the communal appointments in the various Services?—That is so.

10,076. Would I be correct if I said that if it were not for this grab for power the Legislative Assembly would have very little work to do at Question time? Is that so?—I would not go to that extent; but I would certainly admit that a very large number of Questions in the Assembly are put relating to the proper share of different communities in the Government Services. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) We may add that much of the communal bitterness arises as to the appointments in the Services.

10,077. Would you agree with me if I said that a satisfactory solution to this important matter would lead to a much more harmonious relationship between the various communities?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) That is what I have said this afternoon in my statement.

10,078. Would you agree with me that one of the chief problems that will face the future governments is the settlement of the various communities' employment in the Services? That is quite right.

10,079. Is it for that reason that you ask in your memorandum that a Mussulman Member should be in every Cabinet?—To a very large extent.

10,080. Would you agree with me if I suggested one of the following, so far as the All-India Services are concerned?—Would you agree that to one of the Counsellors who would be given to the Secretary should be given the portfolio of general protection and supervision of the minorities in India?—I do not know. British officers have not succeeded in giving the Mussulmans their just share in the Services

10,081. Of course, you do not infer from that a Britisher would always be a Counsellor?—It is very difficult for me to go into the details of any proposal, but what I suggest is that there must be a satisfactory method by which there will be a fair distribution of the Services amongst all the communities I would not be prepared to accept any definite scheme just at this moment

10,082. Would you accept the alternative that in every Cabinet one of the Ministers should represent or protect all minority interests?—I have just given my answer, that it will be very difficult for me to commit myself to any scheme or to any proposal without going into its details and its implications, which I cannot do at this moment.

10,083. There is one more question. In paragraph XI of your Memorandum headed "Services" you say "We would call special attention to the wholly inadequate" etc., and then you say that the rights of the Muslim community should be heard through their own recognised Trades Unions and Associations?—(Mr. Yusuf Ali.) Yes.

10,084. Am I right or am I not right when I say that the reason for this request has risen from the refusal of the Government of India to recognise the Muslim Railway Association?—Quite right; that is so, and the Muslim Postal Association.

10,085. And you wish to impress upon the Committee that they should be the mouthpiece of the Muslims engaged in those services?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) We would point out, and we are very emphatic upon this, that without such recognition of communal employees' unions these various orders and circulars of the Government will continue to be circumvented and all the safeguards and figures you may put down for these Services will come to nothing—there will be nobody to keep a watch upon them and see that they are properly carried out.

10,086. You are aware of the precarious position of the Anglo-Indian and domiciled European community in the Provinces and in the Government of India Services?—Quite right.

10,087. Would you, as representing your big and powerful community, the Muslim community, agree that adequate and statutory protection should be offered the Anglo-Indian community so

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt, M.L.A., Mr H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

as to ensure it taking as good a part in the future as it has done in the past?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub) That is quite right Mussulmans do not want to do injustice to any community. In fact Mussulmans being the largest of all the minority communities should be protected adequately. Democracy means this, that all the minority communities have a fair share both in the Services and in the Administration of the country and unless all the minority communities have their share it will be no democracy but only predomination of one community.

Marquess of Lothian] Has not this question already been made quite clear to the Committee five or six times?

Lt-Col. Sir H. Gidney.] Might I go further and say that it would not be predomination, nor would it be domination, nor would it be democracy, it would be hypocrisy.

Sir Hubert Carr

10,088. I have only one question on paragraph (b) under the head "No. XI—Provincial Legislatures" of your Memorandum. You say "There should be no Upper Chamber in Bengal." Would you mind giving some reason for that?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy) There is really no necessity for an Upper Chamber as all interests will be represented in the Lower Chamber. We feel that the result of the establishment of an Upper Chamber will be that there will not be any harmonious working of the Lower Chamber, and the various parties there will come into conflict with each other very rapidly. When you have a Lower Chamber without an Upper Chamber, all the parties there will realise that they have to work harmoniously with each other. Attempts will be made, therefore, in a spirit of compromise to work with each other, but if the Upper Chamber is constituted differently from the Lower Chamber, then the result of it will be that one or the other party that may have more influence in the Upper Chamber than the Lower will always look to the Upper Chamber for the purpose of fulfilling its own objects and its own desires, and will always, therefore, be a thorn in the side of the Lower Chamber, and if the Upper Chamber is merely a reflex of the Lower Chamber, then, of course, there is no necessity for it.

10,089. Would you agree that an upper Chamber is able to extend protection to minorities?—No. There is no special reason why an Upper Chamber will be able to extend protection when a Lower Chamber will not be able to.

10,090. You will agree that most authorities give that as one of the purposes of an Upper Chamber?—Somehow or other there is an idea that the Upper Chamber is likely to be more sedate and more conservative.

10,091. And less communal?—Not necessarily.

10,092. Not necessarily?—No.

10,093. You feel that members with a higher qualification would not be those who would first lose the communal feelings which you stated earlier you hoped to see gradually decrease?—No, I do not think so. On the other hand, I think that in the rough and tumble of the politics of a Lower Chamber, there is a greater likelihood of a compromise issuing.

Mr F. S. Cocks.

10,094. Later you say in your Memorandum that you want as many subjects as possible transferred to the Provinces. Will you look at Appendix VI, List 1 of the White Paper? Are you aware that as far as the first 48 items are concerned it is contemplated that the Indian States will normally surrender their powers regarding those first 48 items?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) Yes. The question is: Will they? I do not know.

10,095. If we take it for the sake of argument that they going to, you would not propose to transfer any of those items?—No, in matters in which the Indian States give us reciprocity, it is only fair that they should have a share in the regulation of those matters.

10,096. Referring to items 49 to 64, which of those do you suggest should be transferred to the Provinces?—As I said I do not accept the dichotomy that you have proposed, but I think most of those items will naturally go to the Provinces, except Nos. 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59. I do not know that 60 need go to the centre. I do not think that 61 zoological surveys are of any political importance—63, certainly.

10,097. 63 will go to the Provinces?—63, certainly. We have said in our Memorandum that we want the regulation of justice to be in the hands of the Provinces rather than the centre.

10,098. Apart from those five rather small items, do you think that all these points would go to the Provinces?—I think so. I should have to look at it very carefully before I made a very positive statement, but that is what roughly appears to me.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 SIR MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt, M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHEED AHMAD.

10,099. On page 119, list 3: "Concurrent Questions"—how many of those items do you suggest should go to the Provinces?—It is the same thing. I should have to examine it very carefully.

10,100. These are concurrent subjects, and I want to know how many of these items you think should be transferred to the Provinces only?—In regard to concurrent subjects, I think mostly—those in which it is desirable that there should be a certain amount of uniformity and, therefore, regulative action; but as the Provinces have concurrent jurisdiction, I do not mind the centre having jurisdiction to be exercised so that they could unify and co-ordinate.

10,101. It comes to this that a very large sphere of legislation there contemplated for the Central Legislature would be transferred under your proposals to the Provinces?—Yes; and the residuary powers. Those are most important, because we do not know what they are. They arise only through experience.

10,102. All those which are not specifically mentioned should go to the Provinces?—Yes

10,103. Would not this facilitate any attempt in the future of the Provinces to split off from the Federation?—There is a danger of that in the whole scheme, but I do not think that this particular thing would make the danger worse.

10,104. You do not think that if the Provinces have larger powers and the Central Legislature have smaller powers it would strengthen the Provinces in any endeavour in that direction?—It will strengthen the position of the Provinces but so long as we get the co-ordinating authority of the Governor-General at the centre I do not think the risk is any greater.

10,105. I think you said in an earlier part of the afternoon that as good Indians you would co-operate with your Hindu fellow citizens. May I take it from that that your ideal, for the future—some distant future, to be realised one day—is that Indians will vote as Indians and not as communities?—Yes.

10,106. Is that your ideal?—Yes.

10,107. But as a matter of fact in order to safeguard your rights it is true, is it not, that it is the Muslim community which has insisted upon communal electorates?—That is right.

10,108. You regard that really as a regrettable necessity?—That is right.

10,109. In your Appendix you say that you are not in favour of any joint electorates till your rights are safeguarded. It is in Appendix I?—Our Appendix I is a resolution passed by the All-Indian Muslim Conference, which stands.

10,110. I take it you stand by it?—Yes.

10,111. On the first page of the Appendix it says: "And whereas as long as Musalmans are not satisfied that their rights and interests are adequately safeguarded in the constitution, they will in no way consent to the establishment of joint electorates, whether with or without conditions."—That is right.

10,112. What do you mean by "satisfied that their rights and interests are adequately safeguarded." How could they be safeguarded adequately in such a way that you would consent to the establishment of joint electorates?—It is a psychological question. When we feel confidence in each other that is a bigger safeguard than any paper safeguards.

10,113. You are really thinking that in process of time things will so work as you have suggested that it will not be necessary to keep up this system?—That is right.

10,114. Why is it you suggest that there should be communal electorates for the Council of State?—This has been specially insisted upon by the Muslim Conference because they feel that without it, under present conditions, they will not get representation by the sort of men they want.

10,115. At the present time it is suggested that the Council should be elected by the single transferable vote, that is, really, proportional representation?—Yes. That may give us the numbers, although that is slightly doubtful, but it will not give us the quality we want.

10,116. Will you explain why it will not?—Because naturally, so long as the feelings between the Hindu and the Muslim communities are not friendly, or are strained, so long would the majority community tend to send the sort of men who would rather go with them, than with the general feelings of the Muslim community. (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) In other words, for the same reason for which we want separate electorates in

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

SIR MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

the direct election. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) The same policy throughout.

10,117. You think they will elect somebody who is likely to sit on the fence?—Either that or worse than that, who would go with them rather than others. (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy) We see no merits in the single transferable vote.

10,118. In Clause (c) you suggest that Muslim Chambers of Commerce, wherever existing, should select their members?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) Yes.

10,119. Do you think that is necessary?—The same reason runs through it all. At present whether in universities or in chambers of commerce or in Trades Unions that communal cleavage comes in, and if we accept it in the general framework of the political machine I think logically we ought to accept it in the various roots that feed it, otherwise what we want is not attained.

10,120. Do not the chambers of commerce, at any rate large ones, consist as a rule of Hindu business men?—That is so; but look at the British Chambers of Commerce, theoretically, they are open to Indians and yet it is necessary to have Indian Chambers of Commerce. You just carry the principle a little further (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy) In Bengal, recently, the question of giving representations to a Muslim Chamber of Commerce was considered by the Delimitation Committee and the Muslim Chamber of Commerce represented its case, and it was proved there in the case of the other Chambers of Commerce, known as the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, the Indian Chamber of Commerce, and so on, there were hardly any Muslim Members in them, that they could not influence the policy of the Chambers of Commerce in those bodies, and they considered it essential for their interests to have a Muslim Chamber of Commerce. I may state that so far as Bengal is concerned the Muslim merchants form a very important section there and have a very large volume of export and import trade in their hands. After considering it very carefully, the Delimitation Committee decided to give representation to the Muslim Chamber of Commerce.

10,121. Is it not better, though, in the business world, to encourage Muslims and Hindus to work together in the same Chamber of Commerce than to accentuate differences by having their own Chamber of Commerce?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) Theoretically it would be better, but we are taking account of the feelings that actually exist.

10,122. You suggest that whenever the Muslims are in a minority there should be one Muslim Minister?—That is right.

10,123. Would you also agree that where Hindus are in the minority, there should be a Hindu Minister?—Yes; I said that this morning.

10,124. In Bengal you have admitted that you will have a majority which is unaltered by appeals to the electorate?—No, we do not admit that at all. It is one of our grievances that we have no majority.

10,125. I thought you said that in actual practice you would have one?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy) The figures which have been given in regard to it and which seem to give us an absolute majority are incorrect. We do not expect that we shall ever be able to get as many from the special electorates as have been suggested that the Muslims would be able to capture.

10,126. You deny the assumption that there will be a Muslim majority in Bengal?—Yes; there will never be an absolute majority.

10,127. Not an absolute majority over all parties?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) No.

10,128. I will not pursue that point?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy) On the White Paper as it is at present.

10,129. In your Memorandum, on the question of labour, you say you want labour to be effectively represented?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali) Yes.

10,130. Are you in favour of increasing the present representation allotted to labour on the Provincial Legislatures?—Yes, provided it does not disturb the communal balance.

10,131. Could you do that by electing additional labour members and increasing the number of the Chambers?—Something of that kind could be done.

10,132. And in the Assembly also? What about the representation of labour on the Assembly?—Yes.

10,133. It has been suggested by a previous witness that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, for labour representatives to be elected on the Council of State. Would you care for any special representation of labour on the Council of State?—Not specially, because their representation in the Lower Chamber would give them political influence, but I would not object to their being sent also to the Council of State. I do not think it is specially necessary.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

10,134. But if the Central Legislature is the body which will deal with labour questions, it is surely only right that labour should be represented on that body. Do not you agree with that?—In the Upper Chamber?

10,135. Yes. They will deal with it as well as the Lower Chamber?—Why should the Upper Chamber deal more with labour questions than the Lower Chamber?

10,136. Not more, but the point was that there would be no labour representative on it as at present constituted?—We have no objection.

10,137. In paragraph IX you speak of special Muslim Trades Unions?—Yes.

10,138. Are you trying to form special Muslim Trades Unions apart from the general Trades Unions?—I am afraid force of circumstances has compelled some of the Muslims to make their own Trades Unions. I was asked specially to represent two of them, but the Committee decided not to call a witness for those Trades Unions. It is a very sad case. It shows how impossible it is, even in such simple matters as trade and commerce and labour, to get people to work together in the present attitude in India.

10,139. It was represented to us by a witness from Trades Unions—in fact, two or three witnesses—that in their Trades Unions they had no difficulty and that Hindus, Muslims and the depressed classes all worked side by side?—That is what they say, but we have found it different and hence the necessity for forming our own Trades Unions. (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) On the other hand we have found that the general Trades Unions have definitely refused to put forward those demands which their Muslim Members wanted them to put forward, or to look after the interests of the Muslim employees, and it is for that reason that the Muslims have formed their own Trades Unions which, unfortunately, have not been recognised by the Government.

10,140. Were they economic demands?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) They were mainly demands for services and so on. You know there are telegraphic unions, postal unions and things of that kind, and there is bad blood if people are recommended not on their merits but communally. That is the main reason why these very powerful bodies have arisen. I think the Government must recognise them at some time or other.

10,141. It is a question of promotion rather than a wage question?—(Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) Promotion and recruitment (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Those are economic questions, surely. They affect the members of the Trades Union.

10,142. I want to ask you one or two questions on women's franchise. You say you object to women being given the vote in the right of their husbands?—Yes

10,143. You say you object to it because you believe a woman should have the vote in her own right?—Yes

10,144. You really take the extreme feminine point of view?—That is so.

10,145. From a practical point of view that will lead to a reduction in the women's vote?—It will at present, but I do not think it need do so perpetually 10,146. For example, you know the figures given in the Franchise Committee's Report?—Yes.

10,147. They say that in the United Provinces 414,000 women would have an independent property qualification, and 1,100,000 on their husbands' property qualification; leaving out overlapping, that would mean that with 1,500,000 total women's electorate, on that adjustment, 1,100,000 would be disqualified?—We must accept the figures as they are, but the remedy lies in some such alternative proposal as has been already discussed, such as the literacy qualification, or something of that kind.

10,148. The literacy qualification is given there, and in the United Provinces only 158,000 would pass that test?—That is so. But that is a thing which would change every year. It is changing already 10,149. What I mean is this, that the literacy test in point of numbers would not counterbalance those swept away because of the loss of the husband's property qualification?—Not straight away, but every year the position would be better. It is a great deal better now than it was three or four years ago.

10,150. If a man has a vote because he has property, why should not a woman have a vote because she has a husband?—Because her husband is not property, I respectfully submit.

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

10,151. You are aware that under the White Paper proposals as far as Provincial voting is concerned, it is estimated by the White Paper that one in seven women will get the vote—the proportion between men and women will be one in seven, but most of the lady representatives who have given evidence before sub-committees say that that is altogether optimistic and the proportion should really be one in 16?—I have no more to offer on that subject, but I think it is a radically wrong view to take that you must arrange your electorate so that a certain proportion should come in. I do not agree with that at all.

10,152. It is generally recognised that the women's vote in the Assembly would be one to 20?—I doubt that very much. I do not think it will be quite as low as that, but still, as I said, I do not accept that principle of fixing the franchise according to the number of people you get in.

10,153. You think that is an irrelevant consideration?—Yes.

10,154. Do you disagree with the Prime Minister when he wrote to the Franchise Committee and said "His Majesty's Government attach special importance to the question of securing a more adequate enfranchisement of women than the existing system which applies to women the same qualification as to men, and has produced a women's electorate numbering less than one-twentieth of the total male electorate"?—It is difficult to answer that question put in that way, but I certainly think that some of the implications in it are not those with which I would agree. I want the women to come in more and more, but I want them to come in naturally with the improvement of their social status, with the improvement of their education, and so on, I do not want to force it. (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) As they have come in here. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Yes; as is the case in England.

10,155. Do you agree or disagree with the Franchise Sub-Committee of the Round Table Conference when it said that "no system of franchise can be considered satisfactory or as likely to lead to good Government where such a great disparity exists between the voting strength of the two sexes"?—I agree to that as an abstract proposition, but I do not agree with the remedy they propose.

10,156. You agree with it as an abstract proposition but not with the practical effect?—No. What I mean is this, that such a system would be lop-sided, but the remedy would be to bring up the women so that on equal rights they could come up.

10,157. It has been suggested, I think, by some of your delegation, that the interests of men and women are not different at all. Do not you think as regards legislation affecting women and children that is more likely to be put through if there is a women's vote behind it?—Personally, I agree.

10,158. Does your delegation agree?—Our community as a whole does not think so. (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) No; we can look after the interests of the women and children.

10,159. That has been said for many generations. Would your delegation also say that your social customs will prevent many women voting?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) That is so.

10,160. Do not you think that if women had the vote they might abolish those social customs?—I think the process should be the other way. As the women will get more education the customs will go. They are going now, but I do not believe in artificially forcing the pace.

10,161. You think they will go through the spread of education but not through women having the vote?—Yes. I think education is far more important than the vote.

10,162. Do not you think women's education will be more likely to develop if women have the vote?—I do not say that.

10,163. We have been told too that women are not much affected by communal questions, and that they are really rising above it. Do you agree with that?—That is a statement made by my friend, Begum Shah Nawaz. I do not quite agree with that. (Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy.) Our experience is entirely the opposite. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) The point is that women have just come into the arena of public life and they have not the same experience of public life or of the conflict of interest between the two communities as we have. In fact, they do not go into services where there is the greatest clash between the two communities and therefore they have not any experience. In fact, they do not go into the danger zone. As they go more and more into public life and enter into the danger zone they will feel that there is a communal question between women and women also.

1^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

10,164. If you thought that the women were acting merely as a solvent of the communal difficulties, would you welcome the franchise for women?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) If I thought so, but that is a questionable proposition. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Even among the All-India Women's Conference I have heard that there is dissention amongst its members on communal lines. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Yes; everybody knows that.

10,165. Do not you think it is rather a pity with these women's organisations to force women back into communal electorates, as you suggest?—It may be a pity, but it is very necessary. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) The women of both the communities in India live in much more watertight compartments than the men. They do not come in contact with each other and they are much more conservative and orthodox than the men are.

10,166. Are women very strongly represented in the Muslim Conference and the Muslim League?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Not very strongly represented. In our community they mostly live private lives.

10,167. Is your view largely the view of the masculine side of the Muslim movement?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) Not only the masculine side, but our women also share these views. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) There are hardly any women, taking it in numbers, who have come yet into public life.

10,168. Do you agree that the political awakening of the women of India is one of the most remarkable features of modern Indian public life?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Yes.

10,169. Do you welcome it?—Personally, yes, but I think there are some people in our community who look upon it with suspicion. I think the community will certainly welcome it if it is within the spirit of the community.

10,170. One last question on fundamental rights. On page 10 of your memorandum you say you are in favour of the "necessity of providing proper safeguards for the protection of Muslim religion and culture, education, languages and law." Would you agree to amend that by saying "all religion and culture, education and languages," not merely Muslim, but of all communities?—Yes, that follows, because the Hindus being in the majority would naturally pull their own weight. We being a minority would want to protect our own culture.

10,171. Do you agree that a declaration of fundamental rights should be general rather than particular?—Yes.

10,172. Would you agree to include sex in that?—Sex is not a fundamental right. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) It can hardly be altered by legislation. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) As I said before, the interests of the sexes are the same in the political field.

Mr. R. A. Butler.

10,173. There is one question which my colleague of the Labour Party has not asked. How would you elect the members for the Lascars' constituency you suggest? Would you elect them by the roll, on the employment register, or would you elect them by trade unions?—By trade unions probably, but I am not particular in regard to details.

10,174. You have not worked out the conditions for that?—No.

10,175. You have not any established opinion on that point?—No. (Mr. Suhrawardy.) I am President of a seamen's society, and my suggestion so far as that is concerned is that their representatives should be elected by the trade unions. They are fairly well organised. There are many trade unions, and include Lascars and butlers and various ratings. (Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) As a general principle, it is a good thing that trade unions should be encouraged, because that would encourage the organisation of labour.

10,176. That is for the Federal Assembly, but with regard to the Provincial Assembly representative for the inland watermen, whom would you like to elect in that case?—(Mr. Suhrawardy.) Also by the seamen, I think. The inland mariner workers as well as the seamen did put before the Delimitation Committee their point of view that a seat should be set apart for each of them, represented by trade unions, and ultimately the Committee decided that two out of the eight seats should be set aside for representation by all the trade unions within the Province, and as the seamen's unions are the best organised they expect that they will be able to get at least one.

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

SIR MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., MR. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
DR. KHALIFA SHUJAUDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

10,177. That is for the Provinces in Bengal?—That is for the Provinces in Bengal.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,178. May I put a question first of all about fundamental rights. I gather, Mr. Yusuf Ali, that you are not satisfied with the proposal in the White Paper? I do not know whether you have it before you, but I should like to read you a few words?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Do you mind quoting the Section?

10,179. It is Section 75 of the preliminary part?—I have it.

10,180. His Majesty's Government "are satisfied that certain provisions of this kind, such, for instance, as the respect due to personal liberty and rights of property and the eligibility of all for public office, regardless of differences of caste, religion, etc., can appropriately, and should, find a place in the Constitution Act." I understand that is not sufficient for you?—That is not sufficient.

10,181. What more is it exactly that you require?—We want the protection of our culture, of our religion, of our languages, education and so on, and personal laws.

10,182. Does law as used in that paragraph in your memorandum mean personal law?—Yes

10,183. Have you considered how for the purposes of that protection you would define the culture of any body—Muslims or others?—There is a special kind of culture that has grown up through our literature and our history. We do not want to lose it. That is more or less bound up with religion, languages and personal laws. For instance, the heritage of Persian and Arabic literature would be lost if the Council passed a resolution to eliminate those subjects from education. We have been pressing for the teaching of Islamic history in the Punjab University. There was a very real danger that Islamic history might be omitted. That is the sort of thing we are contemplating. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) It was actually omitted.

Mr Zafrulla Khan.] It was omitted in the sense that it was excluded before and the Syndic directed that it should not be a subject.

Lord Eustace Percy.

10,184. Under your scheme what authority is there to compel the Punjab

University to retain the teaching of Islamic history?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) If it was in the Constitution any University or Municipality or community could be forced to do it by law. We could get an injunction against the Punjab University to stop the exclusion of Islamic history if it was in the Constitution.

10,185. No doubt you could if Islamic history was specially mentioned in the Act, but what conceivable form of words could be interpretable in that regard by a Court of Law?—I think culture would include that, though I admit there is a certain amount of vagueness, and the probability is the matter would not be decided by injunction but by an appeal to our fundamental rights less in Courts of Law than in Councils

Lord Rankeillour.

10,186. Are you thinking of ecclesiastical law in this paragraph?—Ecclesiastical law in this sense. I must explain that in India we have a large body of law applying to marriage, divorce, inheritance and so on, which is derived through religious sources, and we want to prevent that being taken away or being swamped.

Lord Rankeillour.] That is what I meant

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,187. Would the law of inheritance come within fundamental rights?—Well, in so far as it has a religious significance and is part of personal law. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) We derive our inheritance law from the Koran.

10,188. It is very difficult for some of us to follow the implications of your view of this matter. Do you think it would be possible for you to send to the Committee after full consideration a considered form of words which would do what you want, so that we might examine it?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) We represent the Muslim Conference and the Muslim League, and we should have to refer to those bodies if we were to submit a cut and dried formula; but I can explain one or two matters further. Take, for instance, the question of inheritance. Under Muslim law the daughters as well as the sons inherit—all female relations inherit in the same way as males though not necessarily the same shares. Hindu law excludes females. Suppose that the Legislative Council took it into their head to abolish this privilege in Muslim law; we should be very, very seriously handicapped—we should not like it at all—in fact it would be against all our history.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I follow that.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.] May I say this.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Perhaps I can put my question this way, and then I will give way to Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan. I merely wanted to explain the position of Muslim law at present under the Statute and not put a question.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Please go on.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

10,189. What I wanted to explain was this. Take one Province, the Punjab. Section 5 of the Punjab Laws Act, which describes what laws shall be applicable to the Province, says that in certain matters, including marriage, divorce, succession, inheritance and guardianship, Muhammadan law shall apply to the Muhammadans and Hindu law to the Hindus in default of a custom proved which may be applicable to the parties. The point I wanted to explain—I did not want to put a question to the witness—was this. This position that is stated there is applicable in almost every Province, and the object of this portion of the memorandum would be to secure that that right of the Province should not be abrogated so as to force either Hindus or Muhammadans to accept measures on matters which are specified in this Act which would contravene their right?—(Mr. Abdullah Yusuf Ali.) Those laws could be easily specified.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] They are specified.

Sir Austen Chamberlain

10,190. What you desire is a provision in the Constitution similar to the Act now existing in the Punjab which has been described?—Existing all over India.

10,191. Existing all over India, you say?—Yes.

10,192. Now I want to return to an answer which you made this morning. You spoke of having seen an advertisement in the "Times" for posts in India with a notification that only European applicants were invited to apply?—Yes.

10,193. Do I understand that that advertisement was an advertisement referring to the Indian Medical Service?—Yes, in my memory.

10,194. In the Indian Medical Service a certain proportion of appointments are reserved for Europeans, are they not?—So it appears.

10,195. And the rest are reserved for Indians?—At present the recruitment in the Indian Medical Service is only made occasionally. There are a certain number of Indians in the Indian Medical Service. In the old days there were examinations in London held regularly like the I.C.S. examination, to which it was open to any Indian or any Englishman to go, and if he passed he was taken without any question. Now the matter stands on a different footing. The Secretary of State, in order to maintain a certain percentage of Europeans in the Medical Service, recruits them occasionally, and whenever he wants to fill European vacancies he advertises in the "Times" with this wording, that only persons of "European parentage" should apply.

10,196. That is very different, if I may say so, from the impression that your earlier answer might have produced. You called attention to this matter as an instance of unfair discrimination?—Well, I think it is.

10,197. Am I not right in saying that Indians for the Indian Medical Service are recruited in India?—Some are.

10,198. Some here as well; but, rightly or wrongly, it is desired to have a proportion of Europeans in the Indian Medical Service?—That is a very different question.

10,199. Rightly or wrongly, it is the policy, and has been the policy, of the Government of India and of His Majesty's Government to have a certain proportion of European officers in the Indian Medical Service?—That is so.

10,200. Is not this what happens at the present time? If there is a vacancy in the Indian cadre an Indian is recruited and if the vacancy which is advertised is in the European cadre then a European is recruited?—I do not know whether that is so, but I am prepared to accept that as a possibility.

10,201. That would be the explanation of the advertisement, and a much more innocent explanation than the one you gave?—But I think that method is wrong.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] That is quite another thing.

1^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

Sir Hubert Carr.

10,202. May I suggest that the number of officers in the European cadre is very far short of what it is supposed to be?—I believe sometimes when the examination has been taken very few European candidates went in. There may be some justification for getting more European candidates. I am not objecting to that, but I am objecting, as a matter of principle, to a recruitment being made in that form. I think you can set apart quite easily a certain number of vacancies, but you should recruit all the people together and say so many appointments shall be reserved for Europeans, assuming that the policy of reserving a certain number for Europeans is accepted.

Sir Austen Chamberlain

10,203. That is in fact what you ask shall be the case in regard to the Services for Muslims?—Yes.

10,204. Is not that in fact exactly what the Secretary of State is doing in the advertisement to which you have taken exception, but for a different purpose?—Well, the wording does not show that 10,205. I do not say that the wording shows it. He does not in the advertisement say that he is recruiting the Indian section in India or the Indian complement of the Service from Indians, but he is needing a certain number of Europeans, and therefore he advertises for Europeans just as if you were to have the proportion set out, as you wish, in the Services for Muslims, supposing a vacancy was not among the Hindus but among the Muslims you would have to intimate that only a Muslim candidate could be accepted?—That would be all right.

10,206. But when it is applied to an Englishman it is all wrong?—No. My point is this. Where there is any reservation of that kind in the recruitment, it should be open to all people who are eligible for it, subject to the reservation of so many seats being reserved for Europeans or Muslims or Hindus.

10,207. I will only put one further question on that point. Assuming that the Secretary of State advertised because he required European officers for the European Cadre of the Service and those were the only vacancies at the moment, would it really be an advantage to the Indians to be invited to sit for that examination and to be told at the end that wherever they had come out in the examination they could not be appointed because these were vacancies reserved for Europeans?—No, but why not have one examination and then reserve so many seats for the various people?

10,208. In India or in England?—Well, in both places. The greater number of people, Indians, who are likely to go into the Indian Medical Service, are educated in England, and it prejudices them if you exclude them from the examination in England and send them back to India and then leave them to compete. I do not think there is an examination held in India

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

10,209. You have no objection at all to the principle formulated by Sir Austen Chamberlain?—No, I have no objection whatever to that, but I am objecting to the method.

Mr. Butler.] The inference that Sir Austen has now drawn from the original answer is a more accurate one than the original inference would convey.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,210. I am not sure that I follow that observation?—I merely quoted that incidentally because I think it is a wrong principle.

Sir A. P. Patro.] As a matter of fact, with regard to the British Cadre of the I.M.S., in order to fill up these vacancies the Secretary of State has been advertising these reserved places. It is not a new thing which the Secretary of State has been doing to deprive the Indians of their proportion because the proportion has been growing less and less, and therefore advertisement has been made to recruit the British recruits in order to make up the proportion of the European Cadre?—I am not disputing that, but I do think that many Indians think that that method is open to misunderstanding.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,211. Your objection is to the terms of the advertisement?—Yes.

10,212. But not to the reservation of places?—No.

10,213. There is no unfair discrimination shown in the reservation of places?—Not if you accept that policy.

10,214. That is all I want to get on that but I hope we have now got that

1^o August, 1933.]

Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C B E.,

[Continued.]

Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M L C.,

Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

matter clear. I wish next to turn to quite a different question, namely, the method of election to the Lower House of the Federal Assembly. You hold, if we were to work for democracy direct election was the only possible method to reach the goal?—That is so.

10,215. I presume you have read the Report of the Simon Commission?—Yes.

10,216. You do not agree with that?—I do not agree with everything that the Simon Report says.

10,217. I am going to put a particular passage to you and ask you whether you do or do not agree with them when they say: "If self-government is to be a reality it must be applied to political units of a suitable size, after taking into account all relevant considerations"?—Yes, I agree with that.

10,218. They further say "Representative democracy as it is understood in Britain depends for its success on the possibility of a close contact between the elector and the elected person"?—Certainly.

10,219. "Unless this is secured it is not real representation at all"?—Yes.

10,220. Do you agree with that?—I agree with that.

10,221. Then in a later passage the Simon Commission observe. "Representative institutions were devised as a means of getting over the difficulty created by the expanding size of states, and it appears to us to be in strict accordance both with the theory of representation and with the requirements of common sense to say that when the total area to be provided for is so huge that direct election would involve either impossibly large constituencies or an impossibly numerous Assembly, the solution is to be found through election by the elected"?—I agree with that only in a qualified sense as a general proposition. I do not agree with the implication in it that these constituencies are impossibly large.

10,222. To help my ignorance of Indian geography I wonder whether your knowledge of our geography would suffice. For instance, would you think that we could get an adequate representation of Wales if the whole of Wales were one constituency, the other parts of England being reduced in proportion?—That is for you to consider.

10,223. Do you know Wales?—I know Wales.

10,224. Would you think it easy for one Member adequately to represent the feelings of so large a district with so many difficulties of communication?—It is a very mountainous country and communications are not very good in the remoter parts of Wales, but if you take an area fairly large in India comparable to, let us say, four or five counties of the southern counties of England, that might give an illustration.

Sir A. P. Patro.

10,225. Take a district?—I will take a district of say 50 by 60 miles.

10,226. Or 70 or 80 or 90 miles?—Or even 100 miles by 50 miles, or something of that kind. Under Indian conditions, considering how few people are literate, I believe, that is not an impossibly large area.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,227. Why does the fact that people are not literate make it easier to collect their opinions?—No, it is because a large number of them will not have the vote—350 millions will not be voters.

10,228. If the franchise were extended you would agree that such constituencies would be impossible?—Yes.

10,229. It is only for the comparatively narrow electorate now proposed that you would support direct election if it involves such large constituencies?—I should like direct election, and, if the number is increased, I should like the number of seats to be increased.

10,230. Up to what point do you think you could increase the Lower House of the Assembly without making it unmanageable?—Well, I suppose 500 or 600 seats—you have in the House of Commons 600.

10,231. As at present proposed would you take 2,000 to 5,000 in square miles as the kind of constituency a man might reasonably cover?—Yes, perhaps a little more.

10,232. There would be many constituencies under the White Paper Scheme which would be very much larger than that, would there not?—Yes.

10,233. There would be some as large as Wales and Monmouth?—The communal constituencies would tend to be large because they are scattered but the actual number of voters in them would not be very great.

10,234. I am talking of size at the moment. The constituencies might be as much as 12,000 to 17,000 square miles?—That might be so.

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD

10,235. You think you could adequately keep touch with your constituents in a constituency extending over 12,000 or 15,000 or even 17,000 square miles with imperfect communications?—Not adequately in the sense that it is understood in England but we are only starting our system and I think we should have to be content with some defects that we would want to remedy later on.

10,236. May I put to you another quotation from the Simon Commission. They say. "Our observations tend to show that under the existing Constitution there is little contact between the two categories of representatives"—that is Federal and Provincial. They go on to say. "This is partly due to the slight connection of the Member of the Assembly after election with his constituents"?—That is quite true, but it is less and less true as time goes on.

10,237. But it is still true?—I think it is, but that difficulty is being got over as the Members learn their business and as the constituents learn their business.

10,238. Would you agree with the Simon Commission that all the evidence goes to show that at present a Member in the Assembly is not, and in the nature of things cannot be, subject to any real control on the part of his constituents?—Well, that is getting less and less true than it was. It was certainly true when it was written. There are great difficulties that we have to meet in that respect, but we have to make the best of the present situation as it exists.

10,239. You would sooner incur those difficulties and advantages than follow the recommendation of the Simon Commission with regard to election by the electorate?—Because that recommendation will not be acceptable to the people whom I represent. It is more a psychological question, is it not?

10,240. Would it be acceptable to you? Is it only your fear that you cannot persuade those whom you represent?—I think that I should prefer direct election myself, because it leads to greater and greater contact.

The Marquess of Lothian.

10,241. I want to ask you one question. Am I correct in thinking that you are in favour of the literacy qualification with regard to the vote for women?—That is one of the possible suggestions that I make in order to give a larger electorate. I do not say absolutely that I should introduce it, but that is a perfectly legitimate way of equalising the status of the sexes.

10,242. The Muslim League, or the Muslim Conference, has not expressed any view about the matter?—I do not think that they have expressed any definite view about it.

10,243. If that is not so, then obviously there is no possibility of expanding the women's vote to the White Paper proposals?—No, but I do not think that there would be any objection to that if it were practicable.

Chairman.

10,244. You ask, amongst other things, in your Memorandum for protection of your language?—Yes.

10,245. What exactly do you fear in that regard?—I said "languages" because the Muslims of India generally have a vernacular Urdu, and we are always up against difficulties because the Hindus wish to exclude that language from studies, and so on. We are very keen that our vernacular should be safeguarded. I used the plural word "languages" because we have two classical languages in which our culture is embodied, namely, Arabic and Persian. If those were excluded our religious studies would be very much prejudiced. Therefore we think that our languages should be safeguarded, that it should not be open to any Legislative Council to issue a fiat suddenly that the Urdu language need not be taught. We constantly come across suggestions of that kind. One of the difficulties in one of the Indian States was that the Urdu language was banned more or less, and it caused a great deal of friction, or trouble.

10,246. Is there a literature to which you attach value in Urdu?—We Muslims certainly think that there is a great deal of value in it.

10,247. Is there a literature?—There is a large literature. (Sir Mohammed Yakub) It is not only literature, but our religion is in the Urdu language, and because the Muslim boy is forced to read the English language if he is to get employment he cannot give sufficient time to Persian and Arabic in order to go through his religious course. Therefore under the present conditions, so long as English is

1^o August, 1933.] Mr. ABDULLAH YUSUF ALI, C.B.E., [Continued.
 Sir MOHAMMED YAKUB, Kt., M.L.A., Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY, M.L.C.,
 Dr. KHALIFA SHUJAUDDIN, LL.D., and Khan Sahib HAJI RASHID AHMAD.

the passport for getting into the Government services it is necessary that Urdu must be taught to the Muslim boys.

10,248. Can you point to any signs of an impending attack?—We have attacks every day even now. (Dr. Khalifa Shujauddin.) If I may say so, the attack is going on even now in the Punjab, and as a matter of fact certain definite proposals have been made before the Senate for excluding Arabic and Persian from the course of studies of the Punjab University, and also for minimising the use of Urdu by laying it down that henceforward Urdu shall not be the medium of instruction in the lower schools. That attack had not succeeded so far, but attempts have been made over and over again. I say so from personal knowledge.

(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) That is so in every Province. (Mr. A. Yusuf Ali.) Perhaps I may give you another instance. I was a Member of the Punjab University Committee which sat during the last cold weather, and the tendency of that Committee was to minimise the importance of the Muslim languages, and I had to write a note on the subject. It shows that it is a living question. (Sir Mohammed Yakub.) In the United Provinces also great attempts have been made to take Urdu off the curriculum of studies. In fact, there was a very big agitation in the United Provinces in 1903 when the late Lord McDonnell tried to introduce Deonagri in the Province where Urdu was being used before.

10,249. Are examinations for any public services conducted in Urdu?—(Mr. A. Yusuf Ali.) The lower services, yes. (Khan Sahib H. Rashid Ahmad.) In fact, even in Bengal.

Sir Hubert Carr.

10,250. Did Sir Mohammed Yakub say that there was not time for a Muslim boy to learn Urdu and English?—(Sir Mohammed Yakub.) I said that Arabic and Persian require a very great deal of time if they try thoroughly to learn Arabic and Persian, and in order to get his religious education the Muslim boy had to confine himself to Urdu. If Urdu is also banned then there will be nothing for him in which to get instruction in his religion.

10,251. He will have time to learn English as well?—He must have time to learn English as well.

Chairman.] We are greatly obliged to you gentlemen for the manner in which you have given your evidence. Thank you very much.

(The Witnesses are directed to withdraw.)

(Ordered: that the Committee be adjourned to to-morrow at half-past Ten o'clock.)

DIE MERCURII, 2° AUGUSTI, 1933.

Present:

Marquess of Salisbury.
 Marquess of Zetland
 Marquess of Linlithgow.
 Earl Peel.
 Lord Ker (Marquess of Lothian).
 Lord Irwin.
 Lord Rankeillour.
 Lord Hutchison of Montrose.
 Major Attlee.
 Mr. Butler.
 Major Cadogan.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.
 Mr. Cocks.
 Sir Reginald Craddock.
 Mr. Davidson.
 Mr. Isaac Foot.
 Sir Samuel Hoare
 Sir Joseph Nall.
 Lord Eustace Percy.
 Miss Pickford.*

The following Indian Delegates were also present —

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Rao Bahadur Sir Krishnama Chari.
 Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan.
 Sir Akbar Hydari.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.
 Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
 Sir Hubert Carr.
 Mr A. H. Ghuznavi.
 Lt.-Col. Sir H. Gidney.
 Sir Hari Singh Gour.
 Mr. M. R. Jayaker.
 Mr. N. M. Joshi.
 Begum Shah Nawaz.

Sir A. P. Patro.
 Sir Abdur Rahim
 Sir Phiroze Sethna.
 Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan
 Sardar Buta Singh.
 Sir N. N. Sircar.
 Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas
 Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

The MARQUESS of LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

Mr M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE, are called in and examined as follows.

Chairman.

10,252. You gentlemen representing the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha are good enough to attend this morning to give evidence. You hand in a general Memorandum marked No. 72. Mr. J. L. Bannerjee hands in No. 68; Mr. M. K. Acharya hands in 65, 66 and 70, and Mr. Deshpande hands in No. 64. Is that correct?—(Mr. Acharya.) Yes; they are as follows:—

MEMORANDUM 64. THE STATUS OF THE HINDU SANATAN DHARMA IN THE FUTURE INDIAN CONSTITUTION BY L. H. DESHPANDE.

"Does Time make Kings or King makes the Time?"

It has been proved beyond doubt that It is the King who makes the Time."

1. The Secretary of the All-India Varnashrama Swarajya Sangha has already submitted a brief summary of the views of the Sangha in his letter to the Secretary of the Joint Committee on Indian Constitutional Reform. At the very outset I beg to state that I am in full agreement with him.

2. It is true for all times that the King is not the creature of Time, but it is the King and those responsible persons around him who make the Times. It therefore follows that rulers and wise men should try to create an atmosphere which would be congenial to human society instead of they themselves becoming objects who could be swept away by the current of times. Therein lies the greatness of great men. The sages of India have propounded this view from times immemorial. The Varnashrama Swarajya Sangha was founded in 1929 by those who believe in the aforesaid views.

2^o Augusti, 1933.]

[Continued.]

3. One of the main objects of the Sangha is to promote in every way the Sanatana Dharma which is founded on the Shrutis, Smritis and Puranas and the time-honoured usages, and to protect it from all conceivable forms of aggression. The Sangha is painfully aware of the fact that these are indeed adverse times for the religiously-minded orthodox community. They had, therefore, first of all to ascertain whether there is a large bulk of Hindus who prefer to keep up the traditions of the ancient Aryan religion. Conferences were held at various places in the Bombay, Madras and Calcutta Presidencies and at Delhi since the Sangha came into being. The Sangha has nearly four hundred branches spread all over India and claims a large number of members, many of whom are persons of high educational standing and social position. The people who subscribe to the views and principles of the Sangha have firm faith in the Sanatana Dharma.

4. The Hindu religion, according to Oriental scholars like the late Lokmanya Tilak and Mr. Powagi, has been in existence for the last 8,000 years or more—the latest possible date of Rigveda. Great upheavals have taken place during this long stretch of time, upheavals about which History knows little. It is a well-known fact that Buddhism had almost entirely replaced the Hindu religion in India. In spite of all these shocks Hindu religion still survives, which abundantly proves its tenacity and the intrinsic merit of its philosophy. The Hindu religion is more of a spiritual nature and its philosophy has the power to comfort the mind which remains unsatisfied and restive even after the acquisition of all material prosperity. The Hindu religion is absolutely above doing harm to anyone. It does not hate anyone. On the contrary it endeavours to make people happy whatever their avocation in life. All these considerations weigh with the Sanatanists who form the large bulk of the masses. The Sanatanists are believers in the orthodox doctrines of the Hindu religion. Although the Sangha gathered such a large following their efforts for the furtherance of their cause fell short in as much as they were not invited to attend any of the three Round Table Conferences; nor were they given a seat among the Indian Representatives who are called by the Joint Parliamentary Select Committee for consultation, and who are at present considering the proposals of the new Constitution. It will, therefore, be realised that the Sangha has to submit its evidence under greatly handicapped circumstances. We are, however, grateful to the Committee for giving us an opportunity to present our case.

5. The first and foremost point on which the Sangha desires to lay stress is that there should be absolute freedom of faith and religious practices to every citizen. The Sanatanists have been feeling this for a long time. How and why we shall presently state.

6. There is a powerful section among the Hindus who have successfully tried and are trying to usurp this freedom through enactments of Legislature. These attempts have undermined the age-long culture and religion. The Widow Remarriage Act can be cited as an excellent example in support of my contention. If impartially observed it must be admitted that but for a few exceptions the law has almost become a dead letter. Very few widow remarriages have taken place although the law has been in force for over forty years. The educated Reformers were not slow to understand the reasons of their failure. They found that the law was only permissive. The mistake was corrected at the time of the Sarda Act. This Act was therefore made mandatory. The Hindu Reformers had a good deal of influence with the Government and it was with the assistance of the latter that the Bill could be carried through the Legislature. Its passage through the Indian Legislative Assembly was a rude shock to the religiously-minded people and the Varnashrama Swarajya Sangha is the direct outcome of the Act. Marriage, according to the Hindu religion is a Samskar—sacred rite—and not a contract. Marriage is one of the essential principles of life of the four Varnas (Brahman, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Shudra) and the four Ashramas (Brahmacharya—celibacy, Grihasta—state of married life, Vanaprastha—living in forest, Sanyasa—ascetic life). The whole system of the Sanatana Dharma is based on the principles embodied in its marriage system. The fact that the marriageable age has been tampered with by the recent legislation naturally alarmed the Sanatanists about the future of their sacred religion and filled their hearts with the fear of the possible disruption of Hindu society.

2^o August, 1933]

[Continued.]

7. It has also been expressed by some that religion is no longer needed, and that if at all necessary there should be only one religion. In their opinion religion is at the root of disunity among the different peoples of India and that inter-communal marriages is the effective solution for it. There is an association called the Youth League of India who openly preach this view. The idea might be their own, or they might have been carried away by the thoughts of Western thinkers. In this connexion I quote from India and the British by Patricia Kendall, which will amply justify my statement.

"Nationalism is dependent upon the agglomeration of the particular units of a common territory into a cohesive whole. The predominant feature of the spirit and sentiment of nationalism is the conscious conviction of the common interest and common ideals. Crystallization of that conviction has developed in every nation of the world by the intermingling of peoples in society and the fusion of the divergent stocks by marriage. The very basis of nationalism is consolidation and conglomeration."

The same author writes:

"This greater physical power (Muslims) thirty per cent of the population instead of being used as an asset to increase the stamina of the weaker people, is the cause of dissensions and feuds. Hindus do not inbreed with the stronger elements because of religious and social statutes and antagonisms."

8. The Reformers think that these religious and social statutes are a great obstruction. They therefore seem determined to remove these obstructions with the help of legislation.

9. A question is usually asked why should the Sanatanists who claim a large majority of following, be afraid of legislative acts. The answer is that the Legislatures do not consist of Hindu entirely. And it is among the Hindus only that the Sanatanists have a large following. Scarcely fifty per cent of the members of the contemplated Federal Legislature will be Hindus and the Sanatanists do not pretend that they are in a position to secure all the Hindu seats. On the contrary, Reformers, from mostly among whom are recruited the politicians, have a great hold over the rural population. And the rural population has been allotted a very large number of seats. The result is that the educated Reformers usually flood the Legislative Bodies. In spite of the staunch opposition of the Sanatanists bills are rushed through the Legislatures with the help of Muslim and other non-Hindu members. That is exactly what happened at the time of the Sarda Marriage Bill. For this reason the Sanatanists are rightly afraid of this power of the Legislatures.

10. Joint Co-parcenary System is the backbone of Hindu society. But the educated few are determined to smash the system. This is evidenced in the attempt they made in modifying the Act of Succession to the Property earned by learning. Even before the public could know what the purpose of these Bills was, they were passed into laws. These are the results, or some of the results, of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms.

11. There are Bills of like nature, even now, such as the Temple Entry Bill, before the Indian Legislature awaiting their fate. The Temple Entry Bill, if passed, will drive further the thin end of the wedge into the body-politic of Hindu community. None from among its ardent supporters, not even the mover, as I am told, have any faith in temple or God. Neither are the Untouchables for whose benefit the Bill is introduced, keen on it. The whole attempt is to ridicule the Sanatanists and force them into surrender. But the result has been otherwise. Those who would read the reports of the Conferences held at Gururwayur, Delhi and other places will find that advocates, judges, professors and many others who have received the benefit of modern education are rallying under the banner of the Sanatan Dharma.

12. The Reformers, it will appear from the review, however brief, are totally indifferent to the feelings of their co-religionists. For these reasons, among others, the Sanatanists want protection against encroachment upon their religious beliefs.

13. It must however be stated here that the zealous Reformer of to-day has, in many cases become a Sanatist tomorrow. Raja Ram Mohan Roy, the celebrated reformer of Bengal, founded a novel sect called the Brahmo Samaji, but even in that sect free marriages do not take place. The old restrictions of marriage are strictly observed in the Brahmo

2^o Augusti, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Samaj. There are several instances where persons who were staunch reformers in their prime of life have turned Sanatanists in their declining age

14. H.E. the Viceroy of India stated in reply to a Deputation on 27th of February, 1933: "When the White Paper is published it will then be open to you, if you consider that this principle of non-interference has not been adequately recognized, to represent your views to the Joint Select Committee." It was understood from the above statement that the principal of non-interference would be embodied in the White Paper in one form or the other. A Committee of ten members was thereupon appointed at the Delhi Session of the Conference of the Sanatanists to study the White Paper. The Committee found that the White Paper made no such provision in its Proposals. The Department of Ecclesiastical Affairs is made a Reserved Subject. Proposal 11 of the White Paper runs thus.

"The Governor-General will himself direct and control the administrations of certain departments of State namely Defence, External Affairs and Ecclesiastical Affairs."

15. Thus the Governor-General retains full control over the Ecclesiastical Affairs. The object of the Government presumably is to keep the Ecclesiastical Department in their own hands. It will surely not be too much on the part of the Sanatanists if they claim a statutory guarantee to prevent interference by the Legislature.

16. This demand of freedom of faith is not a new one. The Royal Proclamation of Her Gracious Majesty the late Queen Victoria had completely endorsed this principle. It is to the credit of the Government that they by themselves have never attempted to tamper with our religious rites and beliefs. But at a time when the new Constitution is on the anvil, we desire to have the necessary safeguards vouchsafed to us in the Constitution, before it takes its final form. This demand is in full keeping with the spirit of the times. Even lately, on Herr Hitler becoming the Chancellor of Germany, the independence and Constitutional rights of the German Evangelical Church were solemnly guaranteed. It is the adhesion to this solemn guarantee which is of such vital importance to-day. Every State in the world has a right to control its ecclesiastical affairs. But the State rarely, if ever, has interfered with those matters. The observance of the principle of non-interference in religious matters on the part of the Government has earned the respect of the people for their States in all countries. But our Reformers, who form the Legislatures, forget this salutary principle and indulge in disparaging the old Hindu tradition and religion and thereby cause great dissatisfaction against the Government. Surely this is not the right method of doing things.

17. Changes in the Constitution are always accompanied by guarantees for the freedom of faith. This was done at the time of the Royal Proclamation of 1858 on India. We are therefore entitled to demand such a guarantee proclaiming complete immunity from extraneous intervention as regards religious rites and observances.

18. We reply to the question as to how reforms are introduced in the Hindu religion whenever such are felt necessary by the people in the following manner—that there exists a "Vidwat Parishad" or a Council of Theologians whose duty it is to determine, with due regard to the Shrastras, the changes that should be made. And it is this body again which determines whether a particular measure affects the religious and social life or the institutions of the Hindu community.

I wish to conclude my remarks on this point in the words of the great Mahabharata.

*"Religion destroys those who try to destroy religion
And protects those who protect it."*

FRANCHISE.

In the White Paper Proposals the franchise has been both lowered and widened. Right to vote has been conferred on persons belonging to certain communities, especially backward communities. Right to vote is also given to certain educational qualifications. We desire that the same privilege be accorded to persons who have passed various examinations of Sanskrit learning which are held from time to time in the Sanskrit Pathshalas of India. To increase the number of voters in India is, in our opinion, a desirable principle indeed. And we heartily support the recommendations of the Franchise Committee which are accepted by the Government.

2^o August, 1933]

[Continued.]

VILLAGE AUTONOMY.

Our Sangha is of the opinion that without the introduction of the Village-Autonomy-System (called the Grama Panchayat) responsibility at the Centre or in the Provinces will not prove to be of much value as both the Centre and the Provinces must derive their strength from the masses, who are essentially the residents of the rural districts and villages of India.

The common property of a village should be vested in the Village Panchayats which should function on traditional lines so as to make each village an autonomous unit. The collection of revenue, settlement of village disputes, maintenance of village charities and religious endowments, etc., should be fully entrusted to the Panchayats. Such a system would help to educate the masses in the management of affairs. It is a welcome sign that the attention of the Government and the Indian politicians is attracted to the problem of village uplift. I need scarcely observe in this connection that it is a problem which deserves serious attention.

PROVINCIAL AUTONOMY.

As regards Provincial Autonomy, the Sangha is of opinion that there is an urgent necessity of a Second Chamber. A Second Chamber would help to check any hasty legislation and safeguard the higher educational, economic, cultural and religious interests of the community. Representation in the Second Chamber, we submit, should be given only to those who have substantial stake in the country. Already the White Paper has proposed a Second Chamber in the Provinces, United Provinces and Behar. As a matter of fact we feel its necessity in all the provinces which are called "the Governor's Provinces" in the White Paper. This will make the working of the Constitution stable and uniform. If Second Chambers are found desirable for the three above-mentioned Provinces, they should be found desirable for the rest of the provinces also. Even in a civilized and democratic country like England you have two Chambers. The Sangha therefore earnestly urges the introduction of the Second Chamber in all the Provinces.

FEDERATION.

The proposals of Reform contained in the White Paper fall too short of the people's expectations in so far as the responsibility given at the Centre is to come into existence on the materialisation of two things, which by themselves appear to be formidable barriers. Only after "the Rulers of States representing not less than half the aggregate population of the Indian States and entitled to not less than half the seats to be allotted to the States in the Federal Upper Chamber," consent to the scheme can the Federation take a definite shape. Even after a long period of two years the States do not seem to be determined to come into the Federation. The second essential condition is the successful working of the Reserve Bank. The present state of depression all over the world has made the task very difficult. We do not object to the coming of the Federation after a reasonable period, but that should not serve as a brake to withhold Responsibility at the Centre for an indefinite period. We desire that the Responsibility at the Centre should be given immediately. We are in favour of direct elections to both the Chambers.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion I suggest that the Governor's powers, as they are to-day by the Government of India Act of 1919, be retained. Those powers are quite capable of meeting any contingency. The amount of non-votable items should be fixed for every Province. Merit alone should make a person eligible for service in public offices. Necessary provision for safeguarding the interests of those who are already in services under covenants and conventions, should be made. Recruitment to the All-India Services should be done by the Ministers of the Central Legislature. Railway Board should be vested in the Central or Federal Government and the Reserve Bank should be under the control of the same Government. We once more emphasise the need of a statutory safeguard regarding the non-interference in religious or socio-religious rites and observances of all communities, especially the Hindus.

2^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

MEMORANDUM 65 ON BEHALF OF THE ALL-INDIA VARNASHRAM SWARAJYA SANGHA BY M. K. ACHARYA.

All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha—Sanatanist or Orthodox Hindus are deeply religious and conservative by nature; the vast bulk of them have till now kept out of all political agitation, as the same is against their traditions and culture. But the way in which the British Government during recent years have seemed to sympathise not only with the political ambitions but with the religious and social slogans which their own imperfect secular education has inculcated among thousands of middle-class Indians, and the way in which several of these Indians under plea of nationhood have been trying to destroy the Dharmic bedrock of Hindu Society—these have forced the Orthodox Hindus to organise themselves also in self-defence. This was how the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha came to be started some four years ago, pledged to the attainment of Swaraj or Self-Government on truly Indian lines, on lines consistent with India's Dharmic ideals, with the supreme law of Unity in and through Diversity for which the Sanatana Dharma or the World's Eternal Religion stands. And because the Sangha has been working on Dharmic lines, under the guidance of recognised religious heads and men of learning, therefore the Sangha has now got as many as 400 branches in the various Provinces of India; and through Conferences held not only in capital cities, but in holy places where hundreds of thousands congregate on religious occasions, the Sangha has awakened the community at large to see that the latest enemies to their cherished religion and culture hail unfortunately from among their own heterodox countrymen.

Hindus—Real and Nominal.—Real Hindus are those who have unqualified faith in the religious and socio-religious injunctions contained in sacred books known collectively as Shruti and Smriti, which injunctions have been exemplified in the lives of God-seers in every generation, and are interpreted by leaders of recognised learning and authority. Of late, however, thousands of born Hindus have lost this faith; thousands have openly dissented, thousands have practically abandoned all religion. It is thus we have Brahmo Samajists, Arya Samajists, Prarthana Samajists, Theosophists, Gandhians, and a host of nondescript people who have no respect for the old disciplinary regulations, who contract "Civil Marriages," and so on. These may be called Heterodox or Dissenting Hindus. The cleavage between these and the Orthodox or Sanatanist Hindus is widening every day, and relates, as we shall presently indicate, both to general outlook in life and to differences in religious, social and political ideals. Speaking generally, the Dissenters have no faith in the Varnashrama Dharma, or the socio-religious institutions of Hinduism; they want, in fact, to destroy the Hindu Caste system by any means in their power. The bulk of these, again, are English-educated; and many of them live in European style, while the bulk of Sanatanist Hindus do not know English, and stick to their old ways and habits. Europeans in India, however, whether on account of their totally different culture, or on account of their official or business obsessions, have regarded all Indians as Hindus who are not Muslims, or Christians, or Sikhs, or Parsis. Some of them, like Lord Meston, have verily committed the terrible blunder of ascribing to the Hindus in general, and to the Brahmans in particular, the credit or discredit for all the political agitation in India, not knowing that the bulk of Sanatanist Hindus till recently have taken no interest in politics at all. It is no doubt very difficult for the average Britisher to distinguish nominal from real Hindus. The following rough test may be suggested. All those who want to abolish all Caste distinctions, who have no scruples against inter-dining or inter-marrying with any people they like, irrespective of community, caste, or creed, all those who not merely seek to improve the social or economical condition of the depressed classes by constructive methods, but are for admitting even cow-killers and carrion-eaters, and liquor-mongers into the Temples of Caste Hindus, as recommended by the Temple Entry Bill now before the Central Legislature in India—all these, whatever their claims to honesty of conviction, are only nominal Hindus from whom verily the orthodox majority would seek protection at the hands of the British Government.

Radical Differences—The average Britisher may find no little difficulty in sympathising with the fears of the majority. It is therefore necessary to point out how the views of the majority

2^o August, 1933]

[Continued.]

differ from those of the minority radically in the following respects: (a) Religious: The majority loyally accept the fundamentals of Sanatana Dharma as handed through the ages; they attach great importance to the performance of their niitya and namittika karmas, or purificatory ceremonials prescribed both for everyday life, and on occasions like birth, marriage or death, they want to follow as strictly as possible the disciplinary regulations regarding modes of worship, whether individual or group, whether at home or in temples. The Dissenters, on the other hand, do not accept the traditional interpretation of the Sanatana Dharma, and would either interpret it in their own way, or else get rid of all religious restrictions that in their view "divide man from man." Secondly, the Sanatanists, while agreeable to peaceful persuasion or even conversion, are against any forcible changes through legislation, but the Dissenters, being generally weak in their logic, would fain employ the arm of the law against all practices they dislike. (b) Social. According to the Sanatanists, birth is not a mere accident; every man is born in that family, community or environment with which in past lives he has contracted karmic relations, and from which he has to progress in his present life as fast as he may; and in order to make that progress orderly and beneficial he must, as far as possible, conform to the disciplinary rules, or dharma, of his environment—with regard to the food he takes, the company he keeps, the trade he follows, the alliances he contracts, the worship he performs. This is the rationale of Varnashrama Dharma designed by God-seers for the orderly, functional integration of individual as well as group-life. The Dissenters, on the other hand, rebel against all these disciplinary restrictions, they are advocates of "freedom"—of promiscuous eating, and mating and living! Wherefore, while Sanatanists try to adjust themselves slowly to changing conditions of time, place and environment, the Dissenters want forcibly to break down all distinctions of caste or creed, in the holy name of "Freedom" they would fain pass laws imposing their own rule upon all! (c) Political. According to the Sanatanists the King should be the upholder of Dharma, and should receive the loyal co-operation of his subjects in so upholding. Hindu India was of old divided into a number of States—56 according to tradition—and the King and his Ministers in each State were expected to be in close personal touch with the people. For administrative purposes the village was the unit, and each village, under its own chosen Panchayat administering all the village affairs, was, and long continued to be, a tiny republic, as eloquently described by Mountstuart Elphinstone of Bombay, and Sir Thomas Munro of Madras. All this, however, is of the past. With regard to present-day politics, Sanatanist leaders do not regard Western "Democracy" as either high or efficient, they view with alarm how democracy is yielding place to dictatorship in no few Western Countries, how even in India the Congress which was long intended to be a democratic organisation has now come under an one man's dictatorship. Lastly, Sanatanists do not believe that the mere extension of the Franchise, or even Adult Suffrage will vest any real power in the hands of the people at large, especially in a country like India, where the bulk of the people are very illiterate, and cannot understand any problems outside their own rural and communal environments. The Dissenters, however, have a great glamour for Western Democracy, for the "Dominion form of Government," for "Provincial Autonomy and Central Responsibility," for Adult Suffrage and other exploded political myths!

Injustice done to the Sanatanist Majority.—It is impossible to state accurately what the numerical strength of the dissenting Hindus is, for they are not shown separately in the Census or any other Report. On the most liberal calculation they cannot be more than five millions, or between three and four per cent. of the total population; for even among the Depressed Classes—the "Scheduled Castes" of the White Paper—99 per cent. follow the old ways and have no sympathy with the Reformers. The Dissenters, however, in spite of their numerical weakness, on account of their English education, on account of the high professional qualifications and wealth of some of their leaders, on account of their quick adaptation to European ways, on account of their up-to-date methods of propaganda both in the Press and on the platform, on account of the fact that their agitation has been going on all these fifty years and more—on account of all this have secured great influence with Government, besides preponderating in the various legislatures. That was how they got Lord Irwin's Government to support them with the full "official block" of votes in favour of the Child Marriage Restraint (Sarada Act) of 1929 in the teeth of the opposition of orthodox Hindus and Muslims alike. It was by the leaders almost entirely of these Dissenters that the notorious Poona Pact of last year was concluded on the odd logic of Mr. Gandhi's life in danger! It is by leaders from among these Dissenters that the Temple Entry Bill, the Removal of Untouchability, and so on, are sought to be introduced, less to help the "Untouchables"—for very few of them want these measures—more to harm the Sanatanists! Lastly, with the solitary exception of the Maharaja of Darbhanga, there has not been a single representative of the Sanatanist majority, whether on the R.T.C.s, or on the Joint Committee; and this despite the fact that the All-India Varnashrama Swarajya Sangha through two deputations to H.E. the Viceroy—one in September, 1932, the other in February, 1933—made it clear that they were speaking on behalf of the orthodox Hindu majority; and the Viceroy himself admitted in the course of his reply to the deputation in February last. "On many important points you have your own views." We can only attribute it to our misfortune that a Government which has been anxious to ascertain beforehand the opinions and wishes of even very many small minorities, did such scant justice to over 150 millions of His Majesty's subjects. Evidently they were not aware of the cleavage in thought and ideals that had arisen between nominal and real Hindus.

2^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Demands of the Sanatanist Majority.—The All-India Varnashrama Swarajya Sangha have submitted through its two deputations, as already stated, its general protest against responsible Government on Western models, as being unsuited to Indian conditions. The Sanatanist majority strongly feel that without at least certain vital safeguards in the White Paper scheme, the recommendations contained therein may do more harm than good to the people at large of India.

A.—Problem of Depressed Classes.—Before enumerating the safeguards required, we desire to give the lie direct to one terrible scandal that our enemies seem to have circulated in Britain against us as age-long tyrants who are still opposed to any proposal to give the most elementary human rights to the so-called Depressed Classes. Every word of this statement is false. We are anxious to do everything we can to improve the condition of the Depressed Classes on sound, constructive lines; we are only opposed to the destructive propaganda of Mr. Gandhi, and the superficial methods of cheap politicians. It is upon its merits we condemn the Poona Pact, or the Temple Entry Bill. Likewise we must frankly state that the so-called political concessions granted to the "Scheduled Castes" in the White Paper may benefit a handful of vocal leaders among them in every Province, but will in no way help to remove the hunger and want of the masses at large. The Sanatanist majority, whose daily lives are cast in the closest proximity with the Depressed Classes, know their wants better, and are ready to do all they can to help these unfortunate countrymen of theirs. The Depressed Classes themselves, in the rural areas, know this well; and, therefore, follow the Caste Hindus in declining to be misled by the vocal reformers. Lastly, the problem of the Depressed Classes can never be solved satisfactorily until rural autonomy comes to be established all over India.

B.—Religious Neutrality.—(1) It is unfortunate that the Queen's Proclamation, which Indians of three generations had considered as their Magna Carta, has now become a "scrap of paper" even to British statesmen. We strongly urge that the relevant clauses of that cherished document which declared "equal opportunity" to all, and strict religious neutrality on pain of the Queen's "highest" displeasure, be reproduced in statutory form.

(2) We claim this on the very strong ground that the Indian Legislature can make no laws "affecting the Authority of Parliament" or "any part of the unwritten laws . . . whereon may depend the allegiance of any person to the Crown." The right to religious freedom and right to property are an essential part of these "unwritten laws," as declared in 29 Madras 1085, 40 P.C. On this ground the Child Marriage Restraint Act of 1929, which denies to an orthodox Hindu father the right to get the marriage sacrament of his daughter administered according to his religious tenets, namely, before she attains puberty, will, we hope, be deemed ultra vires by the Privy Council on the very first occasion when a case under that Act goes up before it.

(3) To cite another instance, the Temple Entry Bill now before the Central Legislature seeks to knock down all established canons of law relating to religious and charitable trusts. Temples are in law "religious trusts," often with "charitable trusts attached to them." "Any extension or limitation of a trust so as to exclude those who were intended to be included, or include those who were intended to be excluded, is really a breach, a serious breach of trust" (I.L.R. 33 Bombay, page 509); and "no amount of consent on the part of the public can justify a breach of trust" (I.L.R. 20 Madras, page 398). And yet it is such a serious and unjustifiable "breach of trust" that the Temple Entry Bill wants the Indian Legislature to commit, by enacting that with the consent of some fancied public the Untouchables who were originally excluded from the benefits of the Temple trusts should now be included! So, too, with regard to the charities included in the Temple trusts, the well-established principle of law seems to be that "a majority cannot control a minority" (Tudor on Charitable Trusts, pages 4 to 10). How was a Bill abounding in such huge illegalities allowed to go up before the Legislature? Was it not mainly to placate the vociferous Reformers? In the light of these experiences have the injured majority no cause to demand adequate statutory protection?

2^o August, 1933.]

[Continued]

(4) It will not suffice to require "the previous sanction" of the Governor-General to the introduction of such measures. No British statesman who goes to India as Governor-General can be expected to be familiar with all the intricacies of the religious beliefs and claims of contending parties in India; and no Minister chosen by him on general grounds can be expected to be familiar with all the intricacies of law-points that may be involved. Indeed, as the irony of Fate would have it, it was verily an ex-Minister and most learned Doctor of Laws of Madras, that at the bidding of Mr. Gandhi forgot all his laws, and adjured all his "responsibility" to his electors, and gave notice of the self-same Bill that under the Governor-General's decision had to be literally transported from Madras to Delhi!

(5) Indeed we should urge, not only that there should be no legislative interference in the religious or socio-religious rites and usages of any community, but also that every community, sub-community or individual even, so long as it, or he, does not violate any law of the land, should receive every protection from Government in the practice of its or his religion. In other words, all activities that directly or indirectly tend to excite mass fury against any religious institution or usage of law-abiding people should be sternly put down—e.g., exciting a crowd to what is called, or rather mis-called, "Satyagraha" against a temple. Wherefore, in Provincial autonomy, there must be ample safeguard for enforcing law and order, especially in times of religious excitement; and this, if not actually by "reserving" "law and order," at least by vesting in the Governor sufficient power to enforce law and order in all emergencies on his own responsibility.

C. Constitutional Brakes.—(1) There is a great conflict of cultures at present going on in India, and as already explained, a very vocal and influential, though small, minority wants to ride rough-shod on the cherished ideals of the majority. (2) In view of the huge Provincial areas, and diversity of interests therein that have a claim for protection, it is surprising how a single Legislative Chamber is recommended in the White Paper for the majority of Indian Provinces. The theoretical democracy of Indian leaders, perhaps, accounts for this. (3) Be this as it may, we are strongly of opinion that a Second Chamber is indispensable in every Province from the outset, verily in order to act as a brake on the hasty decisions of theoretical democrats in the Lower House. In this Second Chamber there must be representatives of the landed and commercial interests, of men of learning, both Eastern and Western, of all important arts and crafts, and also of all important religions and sects—for these, too, have large worldly properties and interests to be protected. (4) In the White Paper, taking, for instance, the Single Chamber recommended for Madras with a population of 45.6 millions, out of 215 seats proposed there is but one single seat allotted to the three Universities in the Province, and only six seats to Landowners, and only six to Commerce and Industry, and none at all for any Religion! Will the above 13 be able to exercise any sobering influence on what may often seem to them the blind fury of the remaining 202? (5) Even in modern England, where people are far more politically-minded, where a tenth of the diversities and clashes does not exist that prevail in India, an Upper Chamber of Lords Spiritual and Temporal is continued, and is evidently rendering no small national service, especially by way of restraining England from democracy of the Continental type. How can a Second Chamber be a superfluity in Madras or Bombay?

2^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

D. Basic Foundations—(1) The great C. R. Das, than whom modern India has produced no stauncher patriot or greater political thinker, declared, as President of the Gaya Congress in December, 1922. "If to-day the British Parliament grants Provincial Autonomy together with responsibility in the Centre, I for one will protest against it. For it will inevitably lead to the concentration of all power in the hands of the middle class. I do not believe the middle class will then part with their power. How will it profit India if in place of the white bureaucracy that now rules over her there is substituted an Indian bureaucracy of the middle class?" Surely there must have been some few Indians at least on the R.T.C.S. who had probably heard these words as they fell from Das's inspired lips. How is it then that all of them seem to have demanded only the Provincial Autonomy together with Central Responsibility, or the substitution of a brown in place of the white bureaucracy, that Das had protested against? How short the memories of men are, especially of politicians! (2) British statesmen seem to think that extended Franchise, tending to Adult Franchise, would vest real and effective political power in the hands of the masses. This theory is getting exploded even in Western Countries. In India, where the masses are hopelessly illiterate, where communal passions sway over national considerations even in the minds of educated people—as evidenced by the demand for separate electorates, reservation of seats, representation even in the services on a communal basis. How much good then will result from the extension of the Franchise, whether it may not lead to demoralisation, the future alone can decide. Nevertheless, the Secretary of State, speaking on the White Paper, declared in the House of Commons that under his new scheme he would be giving to the 230 millions of agriculturists "a chance to make their voice heard in every single matter affecting them from day to day and from year to year"! Does his scheme provide for the elected representatives meeting their electors even once a year, and ascertaining their views on any important matter? How the poet's fancy soared over the politician's facts! (3) Even the distinguished authors of the "Montford" Report were conscious that they were not laying the foundations deep, they admitted that such foundations could be laid only in the spheres of local Self-Government. "Responsible Government" wrote they "will not be stably rooted until they become broad-based, and far-sighted Indians will find no field in which their energies can be more profitably thrown than in developing the boroughs and communes of the Country." And so, "Local Self-Government" has been a "transferred subject" in charge of an Indian Minister in every Province since 1921. Has one single fully autonomous village Panchayat been established anywhere in India during the past twelve years? (4) The following figures will show how the bulk of the people in India live in rural areas, and what little local Self-Government there is to benefit them.

1921—

No. of Towns .. 2,131 ...	Population 29.8 mil ...	No. of Municipalities 749
No. of Villages 497,911 ...	Population 217 mil. ..	No. of Village Unions 9,747

1931—

No. of Towns.	Population 29.6 mil. ..
No. of Villages	Population 241.8 mil .

The reason for the colossal indifference to Rural Autonomy disclosed by these figures is simple. Educated Indians find no scope for their energies in their "boroughs and communes." (5) The conclusion is plain. Rural Autonomy will never come to be developed unless in the Constitution it is made the basis of Provincial Autonomy and Central Responsibility; that is, to say, unless the Franchise to the Provincial and Central Legislatures is founded on the Village Panchayats. The members of these Panchayats may be elected broadly on "Adult Suffrage," and vested with full powers of autonomy in administering the village affairs, subject, of course, to necessary guidance and control from above. (6) The problem is huge, very huge; but quite vital to any scheme of real Self-Government for India. The authors of the White Paper do not seem to be even conscious of this, their scheme will therefore not bring any Self-Government to the Indian masses. A scheme radically sounder will have to be evolved. (7) Yes, it is for India to discover the key to true Swaraj or as Das prophetically declared "it is for India to show the light to the world—Swaraj by non-violence, and Swaraj by the people," Swaraj by the realisation of the "Divinity deep seated in the heart of all beings." This is "the far-off divine event towards which the whole creation moves." Aum! tat sat!! Aum!!

2° Augusti, 1933.]

[Continued.]

MEMORANDUM 66. SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES ON INDIAN CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS BY M. K. ACHARYA.

I.—Religious Neutrality.

In support of the statement contained in Note (3) under the above heading in the printed memorandum already submitted, to the effect that the Orthodox majority fear that the Minority leaders after getting elected to the legislatures through purely worldly qualifications, and on purely secular issues, would afterwards abuse their powers and interfere in religious matters affecting the majority—in support of this statement, I beg to refer the Committee to the report of a communication from Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru to Mr. Gandhi, published in the Statesman of 24th February, 1933, in which the former not only expresses his sympathy with the movement for the admission of Untouchables into the Temples of Caste Hindus, but declares that the Legislature is the proper channel for forcing such "reforms" on the unwilling majority. Thus "I have not the same horror of compulsion in a matter of this character as some others have. I have been for a long time aware of the line of criticism . . . that social and religious reforms must be a matter of persuasion and not legislation. On principle I disagree with this view." In the light of such a frank declaration, will the British Parliament be justified in giving to the militant heterodox leaders power through the legislatures to interfere in the cherished religious beliefs and institutions of any community?

II—Basic Foundations of Responsible Government.

A. PROVINCIAL AUTONOMY—Even as the great C. R. Das had protested against the cheap notion that the mere substitution of Indian Ministers nominally responsible to an elected Legislature cannot mean Swaraj, even so the Congress had long complained against the artificial, heterogeneous, unwieldy and lifeless character of existing Provincial areas and administrations, and had demanded the redistribution of Provinces on a linguistic or other rational basis. For example, Bombay has an area of 151,637 square miles—five times that of Scotland, or three times that of England—and is made of four Provinces really, namely, Sind, Guzerat, Maharashtra, and Karnatak, differing very widely in physical features and climate, and in the languages, and economic and social life of the peoples. Only Sind—and that to meet the wishes of certain All-India Muslim leaders—is going to be divided from the rest of Bombay; how do the rest form one homogeneous whole? In Madras with an area again of nearly three times that of England, with a population of 47 millions speaking at least five different languages, the physical, climatic, and economic diversities are quite appalling. How can an Educational or Agricultural or Health Minister hailing, like Sir A. P. Patro, from one of the northernmost Telegu Districts, be humanly expected to be in personal touch with the educational or agricultural or sanitary requirements of a Tamil District or a Malayalam District 1,000 or 1,200 miles away from his home? The Central Provinces again with an area of 121,191 square miles—two and a half times that of England—is made up of two distinct parts, Marathi and Hindi. The "U.P." was, till 80 or 100 years back, made of four, if not five, separate States. Similarly every major Province in British India is a huge, artificial, wooden "antediluvian" anomaly. And yet among the many delegates to the R.T.C.s who thundered eloquently about immediate and full Provincial Autonomy, and Central Responsibility and all-India Federation, even among the great Congress leaders who attended the second R.T.C., how was it that none seems to have pressed for a general redistribution of the existing unwieldy, anomalous Provinces into less unwieldy and more homogeneous ones?

2^o August, 1933.]

[Continued]

The White Paper Scheme keeps up in the main the existing Provincial areas, and only provides (1) for an experimental lowering of the franchise, (2) for a mere numerical increase in the strength of Provincial Legislatures, and (3) for a mere mechanical substitution in the place of the present combination of Ministers and Executive Councillors a band entirely of Ministers—without any change in the unwieldy red-tapism of the Departments under each. How can this mere change in the personnel of the machine-drives lead to any real Provincial Autonomy? Such change can only lead to deterioration in the efficiency of administration, and to increase in its cost which must fall on the heads of the poor people at large.

B. A RATIONAL SCHEME OF SWARAJ:—

(1) Rural Autonomy.—Only that Democracy can be real that is based upon “neighbourhood consciousness” in any given area. The Village in India is the lowest administrative unit of such “integrated neighbourhood.” Wherefore complete Rural Autonomy, that is, the vesting in a Village Panchayat elected—not necessarily through the beastly ballot box—but in a general way by all the adults in the Village—must be placed in charge of the administration of all the common properties and common concerns of the Village, whether agricultural or educational, or economic, or charitable or religious, subject to general supervision, advice and control of the District Officers. This must be made the basis of Swaraj or Responsible Government in India. There is at present not a single Village Panchayat of this description anywhere in India; although according to the 1921 Census returns there were no less than 135,000 Villages with a population in each ranging from 500 to 5,000, and with a total population of 147 millions, in every one of which an autonomous Village Panchayat, if Government so desire, can be established in less than six months. Likewise by grouping together Villages with less than 500 people in each, another 100,000 Panchayats can be set up in a year or two—if attempted with faith and determination. Such widespread Rural Autonomy alone can vest any real political power in the hands of the rural millions.

(2) District Autonomy.—This if built on Rural Autonomy will greatly improve the District administration, and reduce the present red-tapism and expenditure.

(3) Provincial Autonomy.—Speaking generally—for no artificial uniformity should be enforced—the area of no Indian Province should be more than 50,000 miles—that is the area, roughly, of England, or one and a half times the area of Austria, thrice the area of Denmark or five times the area of Belgium, and each Province must, as far as possible, possess linguistic unity, and also if possible unity of economic and other interests. In such homogeneous Provinces, with a Governor in each drawing not more than Rs. 6,000 per month, with Ministers drawing not more than Rs. 1,000 per month—as I hear they do in Ceylon—with a Lower House of 100 to 120 members, and an Upper House—not a mere replica of the Lower—of 50 to 60 members, Provincial autonomy ought to be introduced, if indeed it should be a reality, and be beneficial to people at large. The increased expenditure through such redistribution will be comparatively little, and will be amply justified by the results.

(4) All-India Federation.—Only such truly autonomous Provinces—not the painted dolls of the White Paper—together with Indian States in which the Rulers and the ruled are harmoniously integrated, should form the ideal All-India Federation. In any case, whether the Central Government be Unitary or Federal, it must be responsible for the military defence, and the orderly progress and development—economic, mental and moral—of India as a whole. It will be the path of wisdom to start with the foundations at once, and to build slowly but surely and unerringly towards the ultimate goal of Swaraj or Self-Government—individual, communal, national, international. Among the many talented Indian leaders who have been the trusted advisers of His Majesty's Government, why has none put forward before British statesmen any logical, constructive scheme of Swaraj or Responsible Government for India adapted to Indian diversities on the one hand, and to world conditions on the other, which will truly benefit both India and England and indeed the world at large? Is it too late to think of any such sound scheme in the interests of all concerned?

2^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

MEMORANDUM 68. BY JITENDRALAL BANNERJEE, M.A., B.L., M.L.C., ON BEHALF OF THE BENGAL BRANCH OF THE VARNASRAMA SWARAJYA SANGHA.

Brief account of the Witness.

I am a Professor of English Literature in the Vidyasagar College, Calcutta, and an advocate of the Calcutta High Court.

Since 1926 I have been a Member of the Bengal Legislative Council—where I was elected the first time on the Congress ticket and the second time in opposition to the Congress. I was formerly actively connected with the Congress, was a member of the All-India Congress Committee and President for some time of the Bengal Provincial Congress Committee; but since 1929 I have differed from the Congress upon the issue of Civil Disobedience.

The Varnásrama Swarājya Sangha; its representative character and the necessity for its inception.

I have been deputed to give evidence on behalf of the Bengal (Provincial) branch of the Varnásrama Swarājya Sangha. The Sangha, which has been in existence since 1929, claims to represent the vast mass of the Varnásrama or orthodox Hindu population of India, and as the Hindus constitute three-fourths of the total population of the country it may be quite legitimately claimed that the Varnásrama Swarājya Sangha represents a vaster numerical mass than any other political organisation in India. With reference to the objection that the Sangha is a body of quite recent origin, I should like to offer a few observations. It may be conceded at once that, up to within a very short time, the Hindus of India, quod Hindus, had taken little active share in the political movements of the country. Two main causes may be regarded as responsible for this comparative apathy of theirs

(1) The British Government of India had given repeated and specific assurances to the people of the country that they would be left free and unmolested in the pursuit of their religion and the development of their religious institutions; and in spite of occasional, very occasional, aberrations, these pledges had been strictly and honourably fulfilled.

(2) Again, the chief political organisations of the country—and notably the Indian National Congress—had carefully held aloof from meddling with questions of religion and social polity and had confined themselves wholly to the task of political enfranchisement.

The orthodox Hindu population of India had, therefore, been lulled into a sense of security and had no reason to apprehend that any blow would be directed against matters of vital and supreme concern to themselves. But this sense of security has been rudely shattered within the comparatively short period of the last ten years. The Congress, cut off from its old moorings and captured by the blind and unreasoning followers of Mahatma Gandhi, has given countenance in an increasing measure to schemes of social and religious reform—schemes, not based upon any comprehensive view of social polity nor framed with any adequate reference to the genius, past history or real needs of the people but improvised from time to time to satisfy the passing whims of the leader of the hour. The Government also have been active parties in passing measures of legislation which were in direct violation of the pledges they had previously given and observed. This was so in the case of the Special Marriage Act of 1923, the Act raising the Age of Consent in 1925, and, specially and notably, the Sarda Act of 1929. The merits or demerits of these Acts are not now in question; I mention them only as proof that the Government are no longer in a position to afford to the Hindus that protection in the strict observance of their religious usages and practices which they had previously given. It has become incumbent upon the Hindus, therefore, to gird up their loins and to organise themselves politically, if only for the purpose of safeguarding their cherished freedom in matters of religious faith, practice and usage.

Demands of the Sangha.

I.

(A POLICY OF ABSOLUTE LEGISLATIVE NON-INTERFERENCE IN MATTERS OF RELIGION.)

In consonance with what has been said above, the first and foremost demand of the Sangha is that the Indian Legislative Councils of the future (whether at the centre or in the Provinces) shall be absolutely debarred from interfering with any question affecting the religious faith, practice, usage or institution of the Hindus * This debairment should be positive, absolute and permanent, and in making this claim we fortify ourselves by the following, among other, considerations —

2^o Augusti, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(a) Absolute non-interference in religion has been the policy of the British Government in India ever since the days of the East India Company: it is this policy, more than anything else, which has contributed to the stability and duration of British rule; and we want a guarantee for the maintenance of this policy, whatever the future form of the Government may be.

(b) Successive British sovereigns have given solemn pledges to the people of the country, reaffirming the Government's policy of religious non-interference; and we do not want that any cloud of distrust or suspicion should gather upon and impair the value of such pledges.

(c) Advanced political theory demands that the State should be regarded wholly as a secular institution and should have no power to meddle with matters of religion.

(d) The legislative councils of India are bound to be of a heterogeneous character and it is undesirable that people of an alien faith and alien modes of thought should interfere in the religious faith or practices of members of other communities.

II.

(RURAL AUTONOMY.)

Without entering into a detailed examination of the political structure adumbrated in the White Paper—viz., a federal constitution for India based upon a system of autonomous Provinces and States—I should point out that the foundation of the whole structure should be in a complete and comprehensive scheme of rural autonomy. The mere extension of the franchise is nothing, and so far as the Provincial and Central Legislatures are concerned, the franchise cannot be extended to any degree without making the whole thing cumbersome, unwieldy and unmanageable. But the people must (first) be trained in the exercise of the franchise in the rural assemblies and with reference to the management of affairs which are of direct and immediate concern to themselves. Only thus can the franchise be a reality to them; and only in this way can they—directly or through their chosen representatives—come to form the electorates of the future.

* We make this demand naturally enough on behalf of the Hindus but we shall have no objection if the same protection is claimed by or afforded to members of any other community.

III.

(THE QUESTION OF SECOND CHAMBERS.)

On this point I am at variance with the other members of the deputation. I am definitely of opinion that a Second Chamber in the provinces will be worse than useless—it will only be a source of expense, irritation, and possible constitutional deadlock—it, as seems likely, these Second Chambers are a mere replica of the Lower House with its vicious and objectionable feature of communal representation. If there is to be a Second Chamber at all in the Provinces—about the necessity for which I am very sceptical—it should be so constituted as to form a real House of Elders. The franchise should be different, the electorates should be different, and the vicious canker of communal representation should be absent altogether.

IV.

(COMMUNAL REPRESENTATION.)

In a democratic and progressive State such as India aspires to be, representation based upon communal considerations—in fact, upon any consideration except the necessary franchise qualification—is an evil and an anomaly, and as such ought to be done away with altogether. But if for reasons (which we are unable to appreciate) communal representation is thought to be inevitable, it should—both in the Provinces and at the centre—be upon a strict basis of population, with liberty for the protected minority to contest additional seats as well.

V.

(RESERVATION OF SEATS FOR THE DEPRESSED CLASSES.)

Bad as communal representation undoubtedly is, the splitting up of the Hindu community (by the political segregation of the so-called Depressed Classes from the so-called Caste-Hindus and by the reservation of a certain number of seats to be solely contested by the former) would be something still worse. And in this connection the

2° August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Sangha enters its emphatic protest against the British Government's acceptance of the Agreement, generally known as the Poona Pact, which was concluded in September last between certain leaders of the Depressed Classes on the one hand and certain followers of Mahatma Gandhi on the other. The British Government were bound by the terms of their original Award (dated the 4th August, 1932) not to vary their recommendations except upon the mutual agreement of the parties affected. This mutual agreement was never forthcoming: the orthodox Hindus as a body were no parties to the Poona Pact—their opinion was never asked and never taken; and, in these circumstances, we can justifiably urge that the Poona Pact does not fulfil the conditions for a substituted agreement laid down in the original Award, and as such ought not to be given effect to.

VI.

(BENGAL AND THE POONA PACT.)

While upon the subject of the Poona Pact, I am bound—as representative of the Bengal branch of the Sangha—to draw pointed attention to the great injustice which the Pact has done to the Hindu community of Bengal. The Bengalee Hindus are indeed the victims of a two-fold injustice. They were unjustly treated in the British Government's original Award, and that injustice has been sought to be heightened and perpetuated by the Poona Pact.

Our grievance against the Communal Award may be thus indicated:—

(1) The Award is vitiated, ab initio, by the excessive and enormously disproportionate representation granted to the Europeans and in a lesser degree to the Anglo-Indians. The Europeans form .04 per cent. of the population, they have been granted a representation of 10 per cent. of the Legislature. The disparity is so enormous that no consideration of political or commercial importance can possibly justify it. The political importance of the Europeans, such as it is, extends all over India and is not confined to Bengal; and, as for commercial importance, the English have large commercial interests in Bombay also and yet do not there enjoy that disproportionate share of political representation which has been given to them in Bengal.

(2) The excessive representation given to the Europeans has naturally reacted upon the representation given to the Hindus and Mahomedans; but this reaction has been even more unfavourable in the case of the Hindus than of the Mahomedans.

Thus, out of the 219 seats available to Hindus and Mahomedans in the proposed Bengal Legislative Assembly, the Mahomedans will get $119 + 6^*$ (from the Special constituencies) = 125, or just 50 per cent. of the whole house. This is 4 per cent. less than their proportion in the population; but the Hindus will get $79 + 14 = 93$, or 37 per cent. of the whole House, which is 7 per cent. less than theirs.

(3) The Hindus form a minority of 44.8 per cent. of the population of Bengal as against 54.8 per cent. of Mohammedans. But in every other respect—in point of wealth, education or contribution to the Exchequer—their superiority is undoubted and incontestable. And yet, so far from being given any compensation (or weightage) on account of this superiority, the scheme of representation has been so arranged that their minority in the population will be accentuated still further in their representation on the Legislature.

Starting with this initial handicap, the Hindus of Bengal have been sought to be penalised still further by the scheme of representation proposed by the Poona Pact—against which our objections may be thus summarised:—

(1) The Bengalee Hindus were utterly unrepresented at the time of the Poona Pact. Not a single Bengalee Hindu of name, note or position took part in the negotiations leading on to the Pact or was a signatory to the Pact itself.

(2) So far from the Bengalee Hindus having acquiesced in the Pact, they have—throughout and persistently—recorded their protest against it—in public meetings, by telegrams to the Prime Minister, and, lastly, by a resolution adopted in the Bengal Legislative Council.

(3) The Poona Pact, in so far as it has been accepted by the British Government, deals with the distribution of seats in the various Provincial Legislative Councils. This, it will be readily conceded, is a provincial and not an All-India matter and has primarily to be decided by agreement between the different parties in the Provinces themselves. And since the Bengalese Hindus have never been a consenting party to the provisions of the Pact, how can it be said that there has been such a "mutual agreement between the parties affected" as can entitle the British Government to modify its original Award?

* This is the minimum; in actual practice it is likely to be more.

2^o Augusti, 1933.]

[Continued.]

(4) If we apply the criteria which Government itself has suggested from time to time and which were adopted in the report of the Franchise Committee, we shall find that there are practically no Depressed Classes in Bengal—a fact which has been admitted in the official report of the last census operations.

(5) Granting that there are a handful of Depressed Classes in Bengal, their number would not exceed a million; and the reservation of 30 seats for this comparatively small number would not only be unjust and inequitable, it would be a fatal political blunder. It would cripple the Hindu community as a body and would deprive them of their legitimate share of authority and influence in the future legislature of the Province.

I may conclude my observations on this part of the subject with the remark that to regard the Depressed Classes as one entire and homogeneous unit vis-à-vis the Caste Hindus forming another entire and homogeneous unit is a fundamental fallacy arising from the natural inability of Europeans to understand the scheme of social distribution known as the caste system.

VII.

(A SANSKRIT TITLE AS QUALIFICATION * FOR THE FRANCHISE.)

An educational qualification, varying in the circumstances of the various Provinces, has been adopted in the White Paper as an alternative qualification for the franchise. We suggest that the passing of a "title" examination held by a recognised Sanskrit Association (such, for instance, as the Sanskrit Association of Calcutta or the Sāraswat Samaj of Dacca) may be included in this qualification. The standard of educational efficiency demanded in these examinations is distinctly higher than the Matriculation standard of any Indian University.

Dealing quite generally with the constitutional scheme of the White Paper, I have only two submissions to offer:—

(1) Any whittling down of Provincial Autonomy—e.g., the proposal to take away control over the Police or any portion of the Police from the Provincial Governments—will be utterly unacceptable and will jeopardize the success of the whole scheme. It will discredit the advocates of constitutional methods and strengthen the hands of those who have been persistently crying down the whole scheme as a "sham," a "make-believe" and an "eye-wash."

(2) Things must be speeded up as far as possible. Delay has already had the effect of disheartening the people and demoralising the Administration.

MEMORANDUM 70 BY M. K. ACHARYA.

The so-called Poona Pact was not, as the White Paper very incorrectly describes it, "an agreement . . . reached on the 24th of September last between the representatives of the Depressed Classes and of the rest of the Hindu Community" (page 19). It was at best a most panicky modification of the Premier's Award by the self-elected Hindu leaders and three Depressed Class leaders acting under the unrelenting coercion of a "Fast unto death" by Mr. Gandhi in the Yerawada Gaol in Poona last September. The following facts are incontrovertible.—

(1) The fast excited great stir among so-called Nationalist newspapers in India, and among a number of English-educated Indians, although the bulk of the Hindu Community regarded it as almost a sin, whatever the motive behind. Among the "educated" Hindus who were anxious to terminate Mr. Gandhi's fast somehow, the following five became signatories to the "Poona Pact," namely, Pandit M. M. Malaviya, Sir T. B. Sapru, Mr. Jayakar, Mr. C. Rajagopalachari, Sir Chunilal Mehta. Of these, excepting the first, who has since modified his interpretation of the Pact and its "implications," the other four were only nominal Hindus, who, however great personally, were not the accredited leaders of the Hindu Community. The terms of the Pact were drawn on the 24th September, probably the seventh day of the fast, cabled the same day to the Premier, and accepted by him within 24 hours, without any enquiry as to how far the "Pact" was at all "supported by all the parties affected" as the British Government's own Memorandum had demanded. (3) The general Hindu public in India knew of this Pact and its acceptance by the British Government only on the 25th evening or 26th morning of September. (4) Myself and a number of recognised Hindu leaders, some from every Province, were at the time in Simla on a Deputation to the Viceroy; and on the 26th September, after we presented our Memorandum on Constitutional Reforms to the Viceroy, and came out, we read in the day's papers about the acceptance of the Pact by the British Premier. Immediately a dozen of us handed in a signed protest to the A.P.I. and Reuter's representative in Simla. I myself left Simla that same evening; and two, three days after I discovered that our protest had been suppressed. (5) Wherefore from Madras on the 5th of October I wrote an open letter to Mr. Gandhi, entitled "Is This Alas! Soul-force?" in which I exposed the bluff of the Poona Pact. This letter was published in the "Madras Mail" of the 5th October, and in one or two other papers. (6) On the 10th of October I wrote a long letter to Sir Samuel Hoare pointing how few recognised leaders of the Hindu Community had been parties to the Poona Pact. I also enclosed a copy of our Memorandum to the Viceroy, and of our request to have some representation given to the Orthodox Hindu Majority at the third R.T.C. This must have reached Sir Samuel Hoare about the 25th of October. (7) And Sir Samuel did very kindly send me a reply dated Whitehall, 3rd of November, acknowledging receipt of my letter of the 10th October, and saying: "As regards the Poona Pact, Government's position is that it accepted an agreement which had the support of those who have always been regarded as the political leaders of Hinduism. With the development of the representative system it becomes more and more important that the leaders should correctly reflect the views of the community. . . . It would not be possible at this stage of the Constitutional discussions to bring new element into the Conference." (8) Thus in October last Sir Samuel knew as a matter of fact that the so-called Poona Pact was a bluff played upon him by eight or ten so-called leaders, and the vociferous "Nationalist" Press in India. (9) In March last a second All-India Deputation waited on the Viceroy, which categorically repudiated the Poona Pact, and demanded representation on the Joint Committee. This time I took greater care to see that Reuter's Agent at Delhi did send a Report of our Deputation to England. (10) Likewise Provincial Organisations, like those in Madras and Bombay, sent up their protests to the Secretary of State, signed in some cases by several hundreds of leaders—with copies to myself. In spite of all these open protests, the White Paper has chosen to describe the Poona Pact as "an agreement . . . between the representatives of the Depressed Classes and of the rest of the Hindu community!" (11) Lastly, a few days ago, in the printed Memorandum submitted by me to the Joint Select Committee, and to Sir Samuel Hoare, I have exposed the myth of the Poona Pact. (12) And yet, and yet, Sir Samuel Hoare in his evidence last week before the Joint Committee has persisted in designating the Pact as an agreement which satisfies paragraph 4 of the Government's Memorandum on Communal Award, that is as being "supported by all the parties affected."

2^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

I quite appreciate Sir Samuel's good intentions but are good intentions to be at the sacrifice of facts?

2^o August, 1933]

[Continued.]

SECOND CHAMBERS IN INDIAN PROVINCES.
Why they are needed—How they should be composed.

Sir Samuel Hoare in his evidence before the Joint Select Committee felt not sure if public opinion in India was distinctly in favour of Second Chambers in all Provinces, if the necessary personnel could be found for two Chambers in each, and if the Communal differences might not impair the efficient working of Second Chambers. I desire to submit the following on these points:—

A. In favour of Second Chambers.

1. The All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha, which, though started only four years ago, represents the views of 95 per cent. of the Hindu Community on all religious and political questions, and is working under recognised religious heads and leaders with large political experience in every Province, through two very huge representative Deputations to the Viceroy, one in September last, the other in March, have demanded a Second Chamber in every Province "to minimise the evils inherent in every emotional Rule of Numbers, and to safeguard the economic, cultural and religious interests of every Indian Group or Community."

2. The All-India Landholders' Association has likewise demanded an Upper Chamber in every Province.

3. The All-India European Association has done the same, I think

B. Against Second Chambers.

On the other hand a large body of English-educated Indians who, though numerically a small minority, are yet very vocal, are for radical "reform" social, political, economic, religious. These vocal people control most of the "nationalist" papers in India; they likewise predominate in the existing Legislative Councils. Nothing can be more natural than that these should be against any Second Chamber with which they will have to share their political power. This explains how, as Sir Samuel Hoare has said, "certain Provinces appear to be definitely against Second Chambers."

C. Need for Second Chambers:

1. Second Chambers are needed verily to restrain the undue enthusiasm of such extreme or radical Reformers, especially when full Provincial Autonomy is introduced.

2. Secondly, the major Provinces of British India are so huge. Bombay is three times, Madras almost three times, C.P. two and a half times, as big as England—and they are made up of so many different interests that adequate representation cannot be given to all in a Single Chamber. Thus, in Madras, out of a total of 215 seats, the White Paper provides only six seats for Landholders, six for Commerce and Industry, only one University seat for the three existing Universities, none for Oriental learning, and none for any religious institutions which also have large properties to be utilised for right ends.

D. Composition of Second Chambers

1. The White Paper recommends Second Chambers for three Provinces, but their proposed Constitution is very defective. The proposed seats and Constituencies would practically represent the same interests that are provided for in the Lower House. Such mere reduplication of the Lower Chamber is worse than useless.

2. I would suggest, in a general way, that each Upper House should provide adequate representation to the following interests in every Province (1) Landholders; (2) Commerce and Industry, (3) Learning, both Western and Eastern; (4) Religious interests, and so on.

3. Taking, for example, the present Province of Madras, with an area of 143,870 square miles, and a population of 45.6 millions, of whom 41.2 are "Hindus," 3.3 Muslims, and 1.7 are Christians, I would suggest an Upper Chamber of 70 members on the following rough scale:

A. Landholders, dividing them into 5 groups—North, North-West, Centre, South, South-West	10
B. Commerce and Industry and Labour European 5, Indian 5, Labour 2	12
C. Learning For the three Universities 12, Pandits 2, Maulvies (Arabic and Persian) 2	16
D Religion For the five Mutts Vanshnava 2, Saiva 1, Madhwa 1, Adwaita 1—5, to be elected by Temple Trustees N., N.W., C, etc., 5; to be elected by recognised Religious Associations 2—Total Hindu 12; Muslim 2, Christian 2	16
E. Administrative Experience to be elected by Retired Officials drawing pension of not less than Rs. 1,500 per annum	8
F. To be nominated by Government	8

2^o August, 1933]

[Continued.]

4. On the above rough plan, with necessary modifications to suit each Province, an Upper Chamber should be constituted in every Province simultaneously with the introduction of Provincial Autonomy.

MEMORANDUM 72. JOINT MEMORANDUM BY THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE ALL-INDIA VARNASHRAM SWARAJYA SANGHA.

The three members of the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha have each submitted a separate Memorandum of evidence. They now beg to submit this as their Joint Memorandum in order to make it clear that the points herein enumerated are those on which they are quite united, and as regards which they speak with the authority of the entire Sangha.

I.—Safeguard for Religion.

We want that our religion should be absolutely safeguarded. This can be done by enacting that the future Indian Legislatures (whether Federal or Provincial) shall be debarred from passing any measure affecting the personal law or the religious faith, practice, institutions and usages of any community.

II.—Second Chambers

We want that Second Chambers (Provincial and Federal) should be constituted on Non-Communal lines, and in such manner as to represent the learning, religion, the landed interests, and the commerce, industry, and labour of each Province, as also the administrative experience available in the Province.

III.—Poona Pact.

We want that the Poona Pact should be abrogated altogether, on the following among other grounds.—

(1) That the Orthodox Hindu Community were no parties to the Pact;

(2) That there is no justification for splitting up the Hindu Community into two such compartments as Caste Hindus and the Depressed Classes;

(3) That the only effect of the Pact will be to cripple the Hindu Community, and to rob it of its legitimate share of power and influence in the country.

In this connection we beg to point out that the Poona Pact will be specially injurious to our co-religionists in Bengal.

IV.—Franchise for Lower Chambers.

We are against an indiscriminate lowering of the Franchise in the immediate future. The bulk of our countrymen are yet untrained in the habit of working representative institutions, and the only effect of the sudden extension of the Franchise now proposed will be to produce unwieldy electorates, the voters of which, in the present circumstances of the country, cannot be expected to give an intelligent vote upon purely political issues, and so will be led into voting this way or that under the bidding of political cancanes, or under other unwholesome influences. The result may be Democracy of a sort, but it will be the negation of representative government.

Provincial Autonomy, we contend, should be broad-based on Rural Autonomy, the affairs of each village or village-group being administered by a Panchayat, Council or Board of its own. Adult Suffrage may be introduced at once in the election for these village Boards, and thus the way may be paved for the gradual extension of the system in the case of the Provincial and Federal Legislatures also.

In this connection we beg to draw attention to the serious administrative difficulties which will be experienced in the actual polling of the electorates proposed in the White Paper.

V.—Full Provincial Autonomy.

We are for full Provincial Autonomy as proposed in the White Paper.

VI.—Central Responsibility.

Irrespective of the inauguration of Federation, we want a certain measure of responsibility at the centre, subject to safeguards, such as was envisaged in the Prime Minister's statement of December, 1931.

JITENDRALAL BANNERJEE.

M. K. ACHARYA.

LAXMAN MAHADEV DESHPANDE

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,253 These Memoranda have been circulated to the Committee, and have received, I am sure, their close attention, and I shall ask my colleagues, first of all, to put any questions they may have to ask on those Memoranda. Before I proceed further, I should like to make reference to a large volume entitled "Memorials submitted by various orthodox Hindu Associations to the Joint Select Committee in London, 1933". You realise, I am sure, that it would not be practicable to cite all the Memorials upon the Note. I propose to make this volume available to such Members of the Committee and the Delegation as may desire to study it.

Marquess of Lothian.

10,254. Mr. Acharya, I notice that in your joint Memorandum, the first article is "Safeguard for Religion". "We want that our religion should be absolutely safeguarded. This can be done by enacting that the future Indian Legislatures (whether Federal or Provincial) shall be debarred from passing any measure affecting the personal law or the religious faith, practice, institutions and usages of any community". How would such provision be compatible with what is generally known as social reform?—Well, my Lord, I think that we really do not want social reform on any lines inconsistent with the fundamentals of our religion. That is the very purpose of this demand. A social reform which would be consistent with the general ideals of our religious institutions will be permitted through reference to the religious heads and with their consent. That is what is in our minds.

10,255. Would you regard an act like the Sarda Act, which deals with the question of child-marriage as incompatible with religion?—Yes, with certain fundamentals of religion, it is incompatible, and that is our opposition to it.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,256. Is there any place where the fundamentals of your religion are to be found?—Yes; every real Hindu knows them.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,257. But to give the real Hindu a chance to see them, can you refer to any books?—There are plenty of books if the orthodox Hindus would only take the trouble of getting the information they want, and they are serious.

Marquess of Lothian.

10,258. When you say: "shall be debarred", how do you propose that that should be done?—I may probably suggest a small formula that I have drawn, which I hope, probably, my colleagues also may agree to. It is something like this I may like to have on the Statute. "It shall not be lawful to introduce any measure or Bill into any Indian Legislature, except on the recommendation of the recognised Religious Heads and Organisations of the Community affected, or sought to be affected; and no such measure or Bill shall be passed, except on the vote of not less than two-thirds of the representatives in each Chamber of the community sought to be affected." Some provision like that will satisfy us, in regard to what we call safeguarding the fundamentals on one side and on the other, making some provision for introducing what may be necessary legislation suited to the adjustments, according to changes of time which will come from within.

10,259. Do you mean by that, that the Supreme Court should be empowered to have the question of any legislation passed by any India Legislature brought before it and have the power to declare it null and void on the ground that it interferes with the principles of any recognised religion. Is that the method by which you would do it?—What I suggest is that no measure will be introduced, in fact, in any Indian Legislature without ascertaining beforehand what the opinion is of the recognised religious institutions. If they are agreeable to the introduction of the measure, and if it is passed in the manner I have suggested, then there will not be opposition to it. It is, in fact, to eliminate the difficulty of afterwards going to a Court and having it declared null and void that we suggest this kind of proposal.

10,260. You mean that the religious heads in effect should be a sort of Third Chamber with a right of veto on the introduction of any legislation?—No; public opinion is asked upon all important questions that come up before they are introduced, and these are for the purposes of ascertaining the public opinion of the community sought to be affected.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,261. But public opinion is not decisive on that question?—Public opinion can never be decisive on any matter

2^o Augusti, 1933] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

under the sun, but here the question is, what the majority will say.

10,262. But under the scheme you are putting forward now, the religious head will have the power of saying that this legislation shall not be introduced, and his decision would be final on that question?—I do not understand it. There may be changes the religious heads themselves may desire to bring about

Sir Hari Singh Gour

10,263 But if the religious heads are a selfish body of men, how is the community to proceed or progress?—I cannot give any answer to the supposition that a particular class of people are selfish. The religious heads are generally far less selfish than the social reformers, not of themselves but of others, are.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,264. What religious heads would you consult?—Of the several communities sought to be affected, of the several orthodox communities.

Marquess of Lothian.

10,265. You recognise that for any proposal of this kind the religious denomination would on the Constitutional basis have to define those personages who were authorised to speak on its behalf and to forbid the introduction of any such legislation. How would you propose to establish that body?—Each Provincial Government knows who are the recognised religious heads of each community in the Province under their administration. I cannot see any practical difficulty. Every Provincial administration knows who are the religious heads of the Hindus and who are the religious organisations in that Province. Similarly, we know who are the recognised heads of the Catholic Church and the Protestant Church, and so on. They would, therefore, submit a measure to the opinion of these bodies.

10,266. You would allow the Provincial Government to determine who are the religious leaders, and give those religious leaders the right of veto on any legislation which, in their view, conflicted with their religion?—My language is not the power of veto, but the right to give their opinion upon a matter which concerns them vitally. I do not regard it as a power of veto at all.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,267 Supposing their opinion was against the introduction of a legislative measure, would you allow those who are in favour of the measure to move it in the House?—It is the business of those to try and see that they secure their co-operation.

10,268. Supposing after that trouble is taken, the religious head of one community said that a certain measure was one to which he would not give his support, would you then allow that measure to be introduced into the Legislature?—If one religious community says it, and all the others favour it, perhaps it will go through.

10,269 Supposing all the religious heads do not favour it, will you still allow the measure to be introduced?—Not at all.

10,270. Then it amounts to a power of veto, as Lord Lothian is putting to you?—You may have your own conception. Veto comes afterwards, I think it is vested in the Governor or the Governor-General. That is how I understand it.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

10,271. Is it not vetoing his previous sanction?—You may understand whatever you like.

Marquess of Lothian.

10,272 May I pass to something else? You say in the second paragraph: "We want that Second Chambers (Provincial and Federal) shall be constituted on non-communal lines, and in such manner as to represent the Learning, Religion, the Landed Interests, and the Commerce, Industry and Labour of each Province, as also the administrative experience available in the Province." Have you any detailed scheme for constituting the Second Chambers?—Yes. I have submitted a rough scheme for the Province of Madras, from which I come. I have submitted it along with my Memorandum on Second Chambers.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,273. In which paper?—Second Chambers in Indian Provinces—I think I submitted it only last week.

[Sir M. N. Mehta.] It is number 70.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,274 Pages 3 and 4 of Document No. 70?—Yes. I suggest for the Province of Madras 10 seats for the Land-

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE

holders; 12 seats for Commerce and Industry and Labour, Learning, 16; Religious heads, 16; men of administrative experience, 8; and to be nominated by Government, 8—roughly, 70. Of course, it is a very rough suggestion. I say the same may be adjusted, with the necessary modifications, for the other Provinces.

Marquess of Lothian.

10,275. Now may I pass to paragraph 4? You say. "Provincial Autonomy, we contend, should be broad-based on Rural Autonomy, the affairs of each village or village group being administered by a Panchayat, Council or Board of its own. Adult suffrage may be introduced at once in the election for these village boards; and thus the way may be paved for the gradual extension of the system in the case of the Provincial and Federal Legislatures also." I suppose you are aware that to-day there are a very small number of Panchayats in existence in India; there are only 11,770 out of 458,000 villages?—Yes.

10,276. You wish to create them?—We wish very strongly that a Panchayat should be set up in each major village or group of villages as early as possible. Till then, we suggest that probably some transitory provision may be perhaps devised, but only when these village Panchayats come in can there be anything like real representation for all the various rural people concerned.

10,277. Have you any suggestions as to the basis upon which the Panchayats should be founded?—At present the Panchayats are not at all autonomous. That is the information I have with regard to the Province of Madras, and I believe with regard to other Provinces also. The Panchayats must be made really autonomous because the village leaders know very well what are the village concerns, and they would be the best persons to help the district administration in the management of the village concerns. It will be a very intelligent adult suffrage voting there, because each community, each part of the village, knows who are its leaders almost from time immemorial. In a small group of seven, eight or ten, as the case may be, the village Panchayat members must be in charge of all the Departments of village administration.

10,278. What powers would you give the Panchayats?—I would give them the powers with regard, for instance, to what is most important to them, agriculture, village irrigation, village sanitation, village grazing grounds, village forests, and what we call, village common lands—unoccupied lands, and also minor small criminal and civil disputes that may come up among the villagers.

Sir A. P. Patro.

10,279. And burial grounds?—Yes. Sir Annepu Patro is very keen about them, he can have burial grounds also—rather burning ghats I would prefer, because we do not bury, but burn. Sir Annepu Patro forgets it.

Marquess of Lothian.

10,280. I think I am right in saying that the Franchise Committee was very interested in this proposal. May I just read you a sentence from their Report, and ask you what your opinion of it is. In pointing out some of the difficulties, the one I have already mentioned, that there are only 11,770 Panchayats out of 458,000 villages, they went on to say: "It is the general testimony of officials and others in close touch with villages that the effect of making the village itself an electoral unit would be to intensify caste factions and local feuds, and to create not harmony but discord." What would be your comment upon that?—I disagree with that view. It is the official view, and, as usual, it is very much, I think, officially managed. I do not agree with it. On the other hand, my contention is that the people from time immemorial have been accustomed to village Panchayats, and that is the only tradition that survives to-day in the villages. It will be, on the other hand, a way of getting out of communal disputes and things of that kind.

10,281. How long is it since the Panchayat was in effective operation in most of the villages in India?—That is all old history, I thought. I have not got the reference to-day, but I think every schoolboy knows it.

Mr. Foot

10,282. Mr. Acharya, I only want to put a question relating to your Memorandum which is numbered 65, your Memorandum on Indian Constitutional Reforms. You deal in paragraph A with the problem of the Depressed Classes?—Yes.

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,283 Do I understand that you and your community consider yourselves entitled to speak for the Depressed Classes?—Yes, because so far as the vast majority in the Madras Province is concerned, this is a hard and fast division between caste-Hindus and Depressed Classes which does not in reality exist. We all have the same economic and political interests together. Whatever the vocal politicians may say, this is the fact, that in the villages there is not this hard and fast division between the caste-Hindus and the Depressed Classes.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,284. Were not the Depressed Classes created by the God of Brahma?—No, they were created by the British Government, or British administrators, during the past 15 years.

Mr. Foot.

10,285. We have had a spokesman for the Depressed Classes who was here on Monday of this week, who is an officer of their organisation, and who told us that he approved the Poona Pact on behalf of his people. You are against the Poona Pact, judging from your Memorandum?—Yes.

10,286. Can you satisfy us upon your authority to speak for these Depressed Classes?—I do not claim to speak on behalf of the Depressed Classes, because I am not authorised by any, what may be called, organisation of the Depressed Classes, if there is any such organisation, to speak on their behalf, but my objection to the Poona Pact is that the vast bulk of the caste-Hindus, excepting half a dozen who signed the Poona Pact, were no parties to it at all, and there can be no pact where only one party wants it.

10,287. In your Memorandum you virtually claim, in that paragraph, that your majority "whose daily lives are cast in the closest proximity with the Depressed Classes, know their wants better, and are ready to do all they can to help these unfortunate countrymen of theirs," and you go on to speak of the Depressed Classes being misled by the vocal reformers?—Yes, that is my contention.

10,288. Do you wish the Committee to understand that those who come here as representatives of the organisation of the Depressed Classes are not qualified to express their views?—I do not know who have come, or on behalf of what organisations. For instance, in the Presidency of Madras, in the rural areas in my own district, I once represented two districts on the Legislative Assembly and I am not aware that there are any widespread organisations of the Depressed Classes, so far as I know, and the Depressed Classes' organisations are confined to, what may be called, the large cities, Madras and Bombay, perhaps, and my suspicion is that the vocal leaders are not in touch with the vast bulk of the Depressed Classes in the rural areas.

Sir A. P. Patro.

10,289. Mr. Acharaya, will you kindly tell us whether you know of the Adi Doravida Association in Trichinopoly, the Adi Doravida Association in Madura, the Adi Doravida Association in Changilpot, the Adi Doravida Association in Madras City, and the Adi Doravida Association in the Sirkars?—Quite right, consisting of not more than 100 people in each out of millions of the depressed classes populations.

10,290 How many have joined your organisation?—At least 500,000.

Sir P. Patro.] I will come to that when my turn comes.

Mr. Isaac Foot.

10,291. I have one further question to put. You speak in your Memorandum of the scandals that have been circulated in this country against the age long tyrants in India. Are we to understand that the disabilities under which these people suffer are not admitted by you?—I must know what disabilities. We are all suffering under very many disabilities in common with the depressed classes, but what special disabilities they have, I can only give you an answer if they are enumerated.

10,292. Have you acquainted yourself with the Simon Commission Report?—In a very general way.

10,293. Did you read the paragraphs of that report relating to the disabilities of the depressed classes?—I just now cannot remember it. I have read it in a very cursory way. I cannot remember it now.

10,294. From your cursory reading are you able to say if you generally approved of their statement relating to their case?—I should generally not approve. My friend will supplement it who probably

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr J. L. BANNERJEE.

knows it. (Mr. Bannerjee.) May I supplement the answer?

10,295. May I ask you then did you read the paragraph in Volume I of the Report of the Statutory Commission pointing out the position of the depressed classes?—No, that is not what I was referring to but so far as political and civil disabilities are concerned there are no disabilities from which the depressed classes suffer which have been imposed on them by the so-called higher classes. There are social disabilities which are incidental to the caste system. Every caste Hindu is subject to certain social disabilities. That is part of the system itself. It is not political and civil disability.

10,296. Would you answer the question, which is this: Did you read the statement of the Statutory Commission upon the position of the depressed classes?—No.

Mr. Isaac Foot.] Then I will not ask you anything about it.

Marquess of Zetland.

10,297. Mr. Acharya, I want to be clear what is the distinction between the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha and the All-India Hindu Mahasabha?—(Mr. Acharya.) The Hindu Mahasabha so far as I am aware represents the opinions of what I would call the heterodox Hindus, not of the orthodox Hindus. The All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha claims to speak on behalf of 170,000,000 out of 177,000,000 which is the population given in the census report for Hindus in British India and the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha claims to speak on behalf of the vast majority of 170,000,000 who are not heterodox, and who are not de-nationalised.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,298. Do you call Pandit Malaviya heterodox and de-nationalised?—He is not orthodox to-day.

10,299. He was?—Yes, before we founded our organisation.

Marquess of Zetland.

10,300. I think Mr. Jayaker asked a question which I was going to ask, but I do not know what the answer was. I was going to ask if you accepted the Pandit Malaviya as a member of the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha?—Not in what may be called the technical sense. He is a very good Hindu, and he was a leader of the Hindus for a very long time until his Congress politics came, and he tried somehow to bring about some kind of rapprochement between the orthodox and heterodox Hindus, and his Poona Pact mistake was one of those blunders for which he has openly repented.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,301. I should like you to answer Lord Zetland's question simply. Is he a member of the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha? It is a simple question which you ought to be able to answer. Is he a member or not a member?—Define what you mean by a "member"?

10,302. A member who pays his subscription?—These are western methods, paying subscriptions and signing entrance forms. We have other eastern methods.

Marquess of Zetland.

10,303. The Pandit is, or certainly would have been a member of the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha, but, as a result of the part which he played in making the so-called Poona Pact, you would outcast him, so to speak?—Practically it comes to that.

10,304. I want to turn for one moment to the question of the restrictions which you would like to see imposed upon the future Legislatures in the matter of social reform in so far as that reform might impinge upon religious tradition and practice, and so on. The question that I would put to you is this: Supposing that the restrictions which you asked for were granted, and supposing that the ancient practice of suttee was still carried on, would it then be impossible to bring suttee to an end under your scheme?—May I know what is meant by "suttee" before I can answer, because I may understand suttee in one sense, and you may understand it in another, and that is the great difficulty? Suttee, as I understand it, was never abolished. The forcible burning of widows was asati and not suttee. It was a forcible burning of widows which was abolished as I understand, and that was not sanctioned by religion. The forcible burning of widows was against religion, and was rightly put down, but I do not know what Europeans and our reform leaders may understand by suttee.

2° August, 1933] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Sir Hari Singh Gour

10,305. Would you permit the voluntary burning of the widows?—It never comes to our knowledge; it is going on to-day. When a woman voluntarily dies with her husband you never know about it.

10,306. Is it in accord with the ideals which you profess?—It is considered the highest ideal of humanity. Voluntarily dying along with a friend is a very high ideal which I would bow to.

10,307. You approve of the voluntary burning of widows?—Voluntary immolation! If a wife chooses to die along with her husband and cannot live without him I would respect her and regard her as part of Divinity.

10,308. Does she voluntarily set fire to herself or do others do it?—That is all for my friend to investigate.

Chairman.] The Committee and Delegates will realise that we shall get far more out of witnesses by question and answer in the ordinary way. We are having a round of questions. We have a very heavy day's business before us. While I have no desire to curtail the examination of these important witnesses every one in the room will understand that there is urgent reason why we should proceed as expeditiously as possible.

Marquess of Zetland.

10,309. I do not intend to pursue that subject. I think the position of the witness is perfectly clear. It is to my mind, at any rate. I will turn for the moment to another question altogether. I understand from your Memorandum and from the answers which you gave to questions put by Lord Lothian, that you are very strongly in favour of rural autonomy?—Yes.

10,310. The re-creation of the punchayat system?—Adapted to modern conditions.

10,311. Certainly. Perhaps I might address this question to Mr. Bannerjee, because it concerns Bengal. When I was in Bengal I was successful in securing the passage of a village self-government Act?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) That is so.

10,312. The object of which was to restore, so far as possible the punchayat system, subject, as Mr. Acharya says, to adapting it to modern conditions. That Act gave to small village bodies certain powers for dealing with local matters, public health, and so on, and it also established small village benches. Is that the kind of rural autonomy which you have in mind?—Yes, and at present the Province of Bengal is covered with these village unions and village boards, and it is the unanimous opinion of Government Officers that they are functioning very well. Of course, they are handicapped by one circumstance, the paucity of the resources at their disposal.

10,313. Quite so, but can you tell me, has considerable use been made of that Act? Have the village unions spread over the greater part of Bengal?—Yes, practically the whole of Bengal is covered with village unions, excepting two districts. The other 22 districts are practically covered with them.

10,314. What is your position with regard to the Provincial Council. Is it your suggestion that the members of the village unions and village boards should be the electors for the Provincial Council?—That is not what we suggest. We suggest that adult suffrage may be introduced at once for the election to these village boards, but we do not, as a matter of fact, advocate indirect election for the Provincial Councils.

10,315. You say, so far as the village unions and village boards are concerned, that adult suffrage might be brought into effect at once?—At once.

10,316. But there would be tremendous administrative difficulties in the way of adult suffrage so far as the Provincial Councils are concerned?—Yes; Provincial and Central Councils.

10,317. But if adult suffrage is practicable in the case of union boards, why is it impracticable in the case of the Provincial Councils? What is the distinction?—In the first place, these people do not understand political matters at present. They have not been in the habit of working political institutions. The ordinary political issues do not appeal to them, but matters affecting village welfare, material and individual welfare they very well understand; therefore, as far as their boards are concerned they may exercise an intelligent franchise. So far as the Provincial Councils are concerned they cannot be expected yet to exercise an intelligent franchise.

10,318. Then what do you propose should be the electorate for the Provincial Councils?—At present our idea is that the electorate should be the same as the electorate for election to the district boards—Taluk Boards as they are called in other Provinces of India. That is the qualification. The White Paper proposes that anybody who pays sixpence annually to the rates shall have a vote. We propose that anybody who pays at least one rupee shall have a vote. That is the local board qualification.

20 August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE

10,319 What would be your objection to a system under which the electors for the local boards would be the voters for the Provincial Council?—In the long run probably that would be possible. In the long run that may be a better alternative, possibly. (Mr. Deshpande.) According to the White Paper proposals in Bombay the franchise is just as it is given for the Taluk Boards, so I propose that that is what it should be in the Provincial Councils.

Marquess of Salisbury.

10,320. Mr. Acharya, I must not pretend to understand, although I speak of them with the greatest respect, the religious difficulties in India; but I am right in saying that you represent a very large body of Indian public opinion?—(Mr. Acharya) Yes, we claim to represent the whole Hindu population, except a very small percentage, probably five or six millions, who are of English education and who are reformers. All the rest we claim to represent religiously.

10,321. Although you are in favour of self-government in India, yet you are a little afraid of proceeding too much on Western lines. Is that so?—I am greatly afraid.

10,322. You prefer to proceed more upon Indian lines?—Yes, self-government upon Indian lines I would suggest.

10,323. You are conscious, when you read the White Paper, of a great many difficulties which arise as regards, for instance, the franchise, from the illiteracy of a large number of the electors?—Yes, my Lord. I am afraid, if I may speak bluntly, the Indian members who have been advising or who have been responsible for the advice contained in the White Paper, have not understood the genius and culture of India, and have not cared to demand parliamentary and constitutional institutions which will be in accord with the genius of Indian culture. The White Paper, if it is given effect to, will turn India into a fourth-rate country of Europe which is greatly to be deplored.

10,324 You think the Joint Committee ought to approach this subject with great caution and, if possible, that the reforms should be of a gradual character?—Yes, my Lord; it must be; of a kind, gradual and consistent with India's higher culture and traditions.

10,325. You see difficulties in the working of Western institutions in the franchise the illiteracy, the caste system, the size of the constituencies. All those difficulties are present to your mind?—Yes. The White Paper proposes to enfranchise fourteen per cent. of the population or 28 millions, and according to the census only eighteen million are literate. The majority of those whom the White Paper proposes now to enfranchise will be illiterate voters and will be quite ignorant of what may be called the higher aspects of All-India problems.

10,326. It is for that reason that, in answering my noble friend Lord Zetland and others, you have been pressing forward this development of village organization?—And for the further reason, namely, that as I have quoted in my Memorandum, we are against what we call any kind of democracy, which simply means the vesting of all powers in the hands of the vocal few, as against the many. The rule of the few over the many in the name of democracy is very much against what we call Indian culture and therefore due to illiteracy and to the difficulties in introducing these representative Western institutions at once and due, also, as I say, to our desire to devise some scheme which would be consistent with the higher ideals of India. I am for a very radical revision of the White Paper proposals.

10,327. When we go one step above the villages, I see you say in your Memorandum, or one of them, that you think the size of the Provinces is unduly large; that they are too big to be managed?—Yes, that is what the census says. Bombay Presidency is three times the area of England, Madras is $2\frac{1}{2}$ times the area of England; and the Central Provinces $2\frac{1}{2}$ times as large as England. I do not believe, when full power is given, any Minister who is in charge of education, agriculture, or any of the subjects with which the ordinary people are greatly concerned, will be able to keep himself in close touch with the requirements of a Province three times the area of England or five times the area of Scotland.

2^o August, 1933] Mr M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,328 All these questions of the development of village organization and the size of the Provinces have got to be settled before we arrive at the question of Federation at all?—They ought to have been settled, I think, during the past two years, if the discussions had gone on what may be called lines adapted to Indian conditions.

10,329. You do not think that after all these centuries there is such a vast amount of hurry in producing a full Federal organization at once?—I do not know how the Federal organization can come at all before the units are in existence. Before the units are in existence, I do not see how the Federation of them can come at all. That is an ideal to which we should work in the long run.

10,330. That particular difficulty has occurred to many of us.

10,331 Now you are very anxious, I see, for the establishment of Second Chambers in every Province?—Yes, because we feel that considering the kind of members that are going to be in the single Chamber proposed now, and considering the kind of electorates proposed, the many matters with regard to which hasty motional legislation may be introduced, or measures passed, these require to be carefully revised by some Chamber. In fact, as was suggested at one of the Round Table Conferences by a Member of the Justice Party, who is now Chief Minister of Madras, as a check on the hasty and panicky measures of legislation, a Second Chamber is absolutely necessary. That is the bulk of Indian opinion, except, of course, the few who want to have the monopoly of power in their own hands.

10,332. May I just ask you about one particular subject? I suppose you think it very important from the point of view of the great mass of the people, that good order should be maintained?—Yes

10,333. And, therefore, all the arrangements which are to be provided in respect of the maintenance of Law and Order are very important to the mass of the people of India?—Yes.

10,334. Have you any view as to the conditions which ought to attach to the protection of Law and Order in India?—We have very carefully thought about it among ourselves, and that is what we say, that the suggestion now contained in the White Paper, that the Governor should have the responsibility and, therefore, the power to enforce Law and Order in all emergencies should be supported wholly and, subject to that, Provincial Autonomy may be introduced.

10,335 You think it very important that the Governor should have special control of Law and Order?—Yes, the power to discharge his responsibility for Law and Order in the last resort.

10,336 So that all those safeguards, you think, are very important?—Yes. I think they are mentioned in the White Paper?

10,337. But what about the Police? In whose hands ought the Police to be?—As a kind of compromise, we have thought about it very seriously, Provincial Autonomy without the Police being in charge of a Minister will not be Provincial Autonomy. Therefore, I believe the ordinary administration of the Police, as I understand the White Paper, will be in charge of a Minister, but where emergencies arise and where in the last resort the Governor's special responsibility has to be exercised, he must be able to utilise such part of the Police as he may think necessary for maintaining Law and Order in the last resort.

10,338 And do you think he ought to have any special staff for that purpose?—My personal opinion is that there will be some special staff always, and he must, be able to get from the Minister reports from day to day of what is happening. That is a kind of arrangement with regard to the office business, and so on which is a minor matter of detail. When he has the responsibility, he must have the power. How he will exercise the power is a matter for administrators to decide.

10,339. But what you, and those you represent, are firmly resolved upon is that in the ultimate result Law and Order ought to be in the control of the Governor?—Yes, in the last resort, as a special responsibility.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,340. Does Mr. Deshpande agree with some of the answers given by Mr. Acharya to Lord Salisbury? For instance, does he agree that Parliamentary institutions and democracy being against Indian culture, should not be established?—Where have I said that?

10,341. You answered that—that democracy is against Indian culture?—I am afraid Mr. Jayaker's intelligence has misled him.

10,342. I have taken down your answer?—I did not say it was against

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Indian culture. (Mr. Deshpande.) He says he has not said so, and, of course, if he has not said so, I neither agree nor disagree.

10,343. What is your view? Is your view that democracy is against Indian culture?—I do not think so.

10,344. You do not agree with the view?—He says he has not said it.

10,345. If Mr. Acharya's view is that Parliamentary institutions are against Indian culture and traditions, you do not agree with it?—(Mr. Acharya) If I did say it, it is proceeding on wrong lines

Chairman.] The Witness seems a little uncertain as to what he said before. I will not ask the Shorthand Writer to read the answer, but I will ask you now to put one or two specific questions which the Witness can answer.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,346. Do you think that democracy and Parliamentary institutions are against Indian culture?—Certain forms of democracy and certain forms of Parliamentary institutions would be against Indian culture.

10,347. Those which are mentioned in the White Paper—do you think they are against Indian culture, and are you against their establishment?—Certain proposals of the White Paper are against Indian culture, and I am against them.

10,348. Take the scheme of the White Paper generally. Are you against its establishment in India?—I have answered the question that certain proposals are against Indian culture and do us harm. I want those proposals which are against it and which are detrimental to us, to be modified. Subject to those modifications, I will have them.

10,349. Are you against responsibility being transferred to popular Ministers, both in the Provinces and the Centre?—Responsibility to Ministers who will, in their turn, be really responsible to a popular electorate, I am for.

Lord Rankeillour

10,350. Mr. Acharya, when you speak of personal law in your Memorandum, you mean religious law, I suppose, do you not?—By personal law, we mean the law at present relating to marriage, inheritance, and things of that kind.

10,351. I understand you say it should be recognised by the Civil power? Do you mean necessarily that it should be enforced by the Civil power?—I thought the personal law, generally speaking, was being enforced by the Civil power at present.

10,352. The kind of thing I had in mind was this. Supposing there was somebody who broke the Hindu personal or religious law, you might not regard him as an orthodox Hindu, but you would not say that he should not be eligible as a representative of the Hindus in the Provincial Legislature?—That would be open to the electors to decide whether he would be a proper representative for the Legislature.

10,353. You would leave it to the electors?—It would depend upon the circumstances in each case. I would leave it to the electors to judge.

10,354. And you would allow the same for the Muhammadan community, I suppose?—I have put it for each community. The members of the community are the best judges of who will best represent them.

10,355. I did not quite understand your answer about the position of certain ecclesiastical authorities. I understood they were to be consulted upon proposed laws affecting their own communities, but they were not to have a right of veto. Do you mean they were to be advisers or not? I did not quite understand their position?—The recognised religious heads that I mentioned may not necessarily be in the Legislative Councils or Legislative Assemblies at all. The procedure is this, my Lord, that when any Bill or measure is introduced impinging upon religion, the Governor or the Governor-General in the last resort has got to give his consent. Without the previous sanction (I think this is the wording of the Act) of the Governor-General no measure can be introduced which affects religion. It is a very, very delicate thing to call upon the Governor or the Governor-General to decide once for all whether the measure affects, and to what extent it affects, and so on. It is a very difficult matter for Lord Willingdon, he himself told me. He has allowed it in order to find out, in fact, public opinion. It is a very difficult thing for a Governor at once to say whether on his own responsibility he will approve it or not approve it. Therefore, before he gives his sanction, he must consult the recognised religious leaders, as I say, and the recognised religious organisations of each community, whether they are very much against it, or what their opinion is. After getting their detailed opinions, then he will be in a better position to say whether the Bill should be introduced or not introduced, and whether he should give his sanction or not.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,356. In fact you would oblige him to consult them in order to get the authoritative opinion on the religious side, and then he must exercise his own discretion?—Quite so.

10,357. Now with regard to the question of Charitable Trusts, and so on, about entry into temples, are there written trusts in the case of most Hindu temples or are there merely traditional trusts?—All the older temples are traditional trusts as I think, but also there are huge inscriptions in the temples themselves which declare for whom and on what occasions these trusts were created; but I have not carefully studied it. My general impression is that the older the temple, the more difficult it will be to find out what will be called written trusts creating them.

10,358. Do the Courts at present interpret the effect of traditional trusts? Do they recognise them?—Probably some lawyer friends of mine can better answer it; I am not a lawyer. I believe they do.

Sir Hari Singh Gour] They do recognise them

Lord Rankellour.

10,359. And what you want is, you want the Governor to veto any law. Do you want him to have the power or the obligation to veto any proposed law that breaks the traditional trusts?—Before allowing any such Bill to be introduced, I would ask him first to consult those who would be affected.

10,360. That would be one of the questions?—At the first stage. After introducing a Bill and if the Bill is passed in the manner that I have suggested for Indians with two-thirds majority of the representatives of the community affected, then even if any new information comes to him under which he thinks that it is a dangerous law, of course, the final veto of it will always rest with him.

10,361. This is one of the sort of things on which he should consult the religious authorities?—Beforehand, even in the initial stage.

10,362. Would you allow him, if he were in any difficulty, to put a case to the Courts on a matter like this?—I should have no objection to getting the Courts' opinion also on such matters.

10,363 I am not quite sure whether you agree with a suggestion which I think Mr. Bannerjee accepted, that the Panchayats might elect a representative to the Provincial Assemblies? Do you agree with that?—I am strongly in favour of it when the Panchayats are properly constituted.

10,364. Perhaps I need hardly ask you—you have read the Schedule of Depressed Classes?—Yes.

10,365 And you do not agree with that distinction?—The Depressed Classes, which are called, I suppose, some other classes in the census, are all of very recent growth, their different associations are of very recent growth. So far as I know, I must say this, that for four years I, myself, went from village to village to the Depressed Classes in my constituency, even on this question of trying to take them into the temples. I got the consent of the religious heads to say that with some ceremonies and expiation and all that, if they gave up certain sinful acts, as we consider them, subject to all that, they might be taken into the temples. After getting the co-operation of my religious co-workers, I went into the villages and tried to do propaganda. What happened was that when I went to the Depressed Classes they said: "We want food and clothing. Give us food and clothing; we do not want temples. What we want is cheaper food and cheaper clothing. We have got our own temples and are quite satisfied." This is my experience after four years of work in trying to get the Depressed Classes into the temples.

10,366. What I was thinking of more was the question arising on preparing a register of electors. We had in evidence that there would be no difficulty in scheduling on the register anybody belonging to these scheduled castes, and marking them as so belonging?—I looked into some factors and figures in the census. I find that the literates among these classes are very small in percentage. They are called Extraneous Castes, I think, in the census of 1931. For Madras, for instance, the population is 7.2 million, and only 1.4 is the percentage of literacy. In Bengal it is a little better, 5.5 is the percentage of literacy. In the Punjab it is 0.8, and so on—the census figures give that. With this huge illiteracy, I do not believe that any scheme of franchise directly given to them would help them. They will be simply led by whatever the agents of the various candidates go and tell them.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

[Continued.]

10,367. You do not want them classed separately for electoral purposes?—They are not a separate caste at all; they are part of the Hindu community. (Mr. Bannerjee) May I say something for the purpose of supplementing that answer? There is, in our opinion, a fundamental fallacy on the line of the expression “Depressed Classes”, if by that is meant that there is some class of our Indian society called the Depressed Classes to be distinguished from the caste-Hindus. The Depressed Classes themselves are divided just like the caste-Hindus, among any number of castes. There is no common bond between these different classes. They do not inter-marry; they do not form one class so as to be entitled to be labelled as “Depressed Classes.” Consequently, between them and the caste-Hindus there is no such difference as regards interest, as sometimes there is believed to be.

Marquess of Zetland.

10,368 Is it not a fact that amongst some of these so-called Depressed Classes caste restrictions are even more rigid and more rigidly observed than they are amongst some of the higher castes?—That is perfectly correct.

Major Cadogan.

10,369. There is only one question I should like to ask Mr. Acharya. I gather from what you say in your Memorandum, that an elected representative of the people in any Legislature would have considerable difficulty in keeping in touch with, or ascertaining the views of its constituents, under existing conditions? Is that your view?—(Mr. Acharya.) Yes. In my own experience, I had only about 22,000 electors and I had attempted to meet them on certain occasions. I sometimes sent them pamphlets, and so on. It was very difficult for me to meet them and consult them on any important measure. That is my own experience with even 22,000 electors, but the area was 200 miles by 50 miles, or nearly 10 000 square miles in area, but even there I found a difficulty. Now I think, roughly speaking, the White Paper proposes to create about a lakh and a-half voters in every district I should consider it would be a very huge electorate and impossible for an average representative to come into touch with them even two or three times a year.

Sir Joseph Nall.

10,370 In your joint Memorandum, No. 72, the second paragraph, you say you want Second Chambers, both Provincial and Federal, to represent Learning, Religion, Landed Interests, Commerce, Industry and Labour I do not want to repeat a question that has been already answered. I want to be sure that you have said how you would ensure the assembly of such a body. Would they be elected or would they be nominated?—I believe they would be elected by the interests that I have specified, and in the rough scheme that I have given for Madras, they will certainly be elected. The landholders I divide them into five groups. There are about 25 districts, North, North-West, Central, South and South-West. Each group would elect two members; that is 10. Commerce and Industry: I will divide them into five areas as the Presidency is at present; that will be 10. For Learning, I give for the three Universities, 12; two for Hindu Learning and two for Muslim Learning, that will be 16, and so on

10,371. The only other question I want to ask is this. You told the committee that you believe that you represent the vast majority of the Hindu people, and you have drawn attention also to the fact that a very large proportion of those people are illiterate, and unable to understand Provincial or Federal politics. Could you say what steps the body or organisation you represent take to give some sort of elementary instruction to that great illiterate mass of your people?—Yes. I am very glad you have put that question. The illiterate Hindu who does not understand the larger political questions because they are foreign to him, understands almost innately what may be called the religious ideals of life; and upon huge religious occasions, we call them festivals, and so on, hundreds of thousands of these illiterate people gather for what are called religious purposes. For instance, a few months ago there was a great festive occasion for about 10 days; we had to put up something like 20 platforms and we had

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

20 sets of pundits talking from each platform to probably 5,000 to 10,000 people, and this was carried on for eight or 10 days at a stretch. On another occasion there were as many as 40 or 50 platforms and in Allahabad and Benares and all the various important religious places these people come in, and we have got thousands and thousands to whom we make special arrangements for enlightening them upon the work that the Sangha is doing.

10,372. But this is on special occasions and for great assemblies of the people. You have told the Committee that you attach the greatest importance to rural or village autonomy. What steps are taken in the villages under your guidance to enable the people to understand the ordinary elementary matters of Government?—We have not yet been able to go into the villages. We rather get the village people to come to us, where we deliver these partly religious and partly political lectures, but we have not gone into the villages yet and made any organisation. In fact, we consider that should be the function of the Government.

Chairman.

10,373. Have you directly interested yourself in any schemes of village welfare?—As I said, personally, my Lord Chairman, I was trying to deal with this question of the removal of untouchability on lines consistent with what I call the religious ideals. That is one thing which I tried to work personally.

10,374. You misunderstand me. Have you propagated any ideas or suggestions as regards the improvement of village sanitation, the amenity of the village, and so on?—Not yet, my Lord.

Sir Reginald Craddock.

10,375. Mr. Acharya, I understand your position as regards legislation affecting religion is based upon the Proclamation of Queen Victoria. Is that how you regard it?—Yes. I have got, in fact, Queen Victoria's Proclamation. I put it once personally to Sir John Simon when I met him. He said the Queen had issued Her commands to all those who were in authority under Her. That is the very phraseology. This is the Queen's Proclamation, which I would very much like the Committee to give special attention to: "Finally, We declare it to be Our royal will and pleasure that none be in anywise favoured, none molested or disquieted by reason of their religious faith or observances; but that all shall alike enjoy the equal and impartial protection of the Law: And We do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under Us that they abstain from all interference with the religious beliefs or worship of any of Our subjects on pain of Our just displeasure". My contention is that this Proclamation of the Queen, which almost everybody in India has heard of, should be implemented, because I contend that the powers of the British Government, or the limitations which at present the British Government is under, will certainly pass on to the new Legislatures, and if now the British Government cannot interfere and make religious laws for us, no more can the new Legislatures which inherit their powers from the British Government, make such laws. That is our contention.

10,376. I must just ask you about the Poona Pact. I understand your objection to it is that the persons who signed that Pact on behalf of the Hindus did not, as a fact, represent genuine Hindu opinion?—In fact, we never knew that there was any Pact at all coming. We only read in the papers that Mahatma Gandhi was under a fast and his friends went up to him. We read of the Pact only after it was cabled to and accepted by the British Government on the 26th September, and on that very day some of us were on a deputation to the Viceroy, and we put in our protest against it. The whole thing was concluded without any communication to the bulk of the people. Therefore, there was nothing like a pact between the two communities at all. Excepting the Pandit Malaviya, and he has since withdrawn from what are called the implications of the Poona Pact openly, excepting him, no other signatories to the Poona Pact might be said to be in touch or in close sympathy with the Orthodox Hindu majority. Therefore, we say that that Pact was no pact by the Orthodox Hindu community. In Benares there was a meeting of 10,000 people. I got a telegram on the 26th September as soon as this was published in the newspaper. It was a huge meeting held on the banks of the Ganges at Benares and it protested against the Pact, and I have myself written to the Secretary of State, as I have mentioned in my note.

2° Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,377. You have stated your belief or knowledge that the Pandit Mohan Malaviya has now departed from the view he had when he signed the Pact?—I do not know what he thought or what his intention was in signing, but he has since openly published in the papers that he does not agree with Mr. Gandhi in what Mr. Gandhi calls the implications of the Pact.

Sir Joseph Nall.

10,378. That is very different from repudiating his own signature to the Pact?—He does not repudiate his signature. He puts his own implication upon it, which is worse. He repents having led the general public to think that he was also a party to all that the heterodox reformers say about it. That is what he realizes.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,379. Has he ever withdrawn his consent to the proportion of seats given to the Depressed Classes?—That is for Mr. Jayaker to find out.

10,380. Are you aware of anything Pandit Malaviya has done by which you can say he has withdrawn his support or consent to the political aspect of the Pact, meaning thereby the Depressed Classes getting so many seats in the several Provinces?—We ourselves are not now very particular as to how many seats anybody gets. I have not objected, nor do my friends. We say the whole Pact was an unreality; it was an untruth to say the Caste Hindus were a party to it. This is not a fact.

10,381. Can you point out to the Committee any definite act or utterance of Pandit Malaviya by which you can say he has withdrawn his support from the arrangement about seats for the Depressed Classes in the several Legislatures and in the Centre?—I cannot answer that question because that question was not put by me to Pandit Malaviya when I met him two or three months ago, but I believe he would greatly modify it now.

10,382. You cannot lay your hands on any utterance by him upon which you can put that interpretation?—I can lay my hands on one utterance which leads me to believe he will greatly modify the Poona Pact if he were going to sign it to-day.

10,383. "He will modify it," but has he done so far?—Because the occasion has not arisen for him to do so

Sir Reginald Craddock.

10,384. I suppose if it had not been accompanied by Mr. Gandhi's threat to fast unto death, the Poona Pact would not have been entered into at all?—I suppose some of the signatories were anxious to save his life and perhaps the Hindu reformers thought it was their opportunity. Each signatory, perhaps from his own standpoint, was a party to it; but the chief reason given in the papers was Gandhi's life being in danger, while from the orthodox religious point of view is very sinful for a man to say he will die for this or that.

10,385. You do not approve of what is called "sitting Dharana"?—We do not approve of it for political purposes.

10,386. You know it is prohibited by the Hindu penal code?—It is prohibited by our religion. I am not a lawyer; I suppose it must be prohibited by law also.

10,387. Were you ever a Member of the Madras Legislative Council?—No, but the elections for both the Assembly and the Council took place simultaneously and some of the candidates for the local Council were also working with me. I therefore know how the elections for the local council were conducted.

10,388. You were present at the polling booths?—Yes; there were, of course, different tables put in, one for the Assembly and one for the Provincial Council. That is how it was done. I knew very well what was going on.

10,389. How did the illiterate people record their votes?—They were being brought in by the agents of the candidates and hustled in to vote for this man or that man. Very often they forgot for whom they should vote, and in many cases they asked the polling officer, in a general way, to put the mark for Mr. Acharya or Mr. Malaviya or whoever the candidate was, and they did not know for whom the mark was put in. They simply asked the polling officer to put in the marks. That is what I saw with my own eyes.

10,390. With regard to the Depressed Classes, who are now called the Scheduled Castes, the disabilities in many cases would be common to all Hindus, would they not? If someone, whether he is an Englishman or whether he is another Hindu of a lower caste, approached a man's food, that would cause him to destroy the food?—Yes; that is our Hindu conception. Our eating takes place in a very secluded place.

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE

We do not allow others to see it or to touch it. We think it is polluted if others see it.

10,391. That applies to everybody, whether he is a Hindu or a Christian?—Yes, the Orthodox Hindu will not allow even the ordinary Caste Hindu to see his food who is not a relation of his.

10,392. A good deal of the disabilities under which the Depressed Classes are said to labour are disabilities which apply to other Caste Hindus?—We do not consider them as disabilities of which anybody would complain. There is no right taken away or disability imposed. It is a necessary thing for a man to have clean food. These animal functions he must perform in as much seclusion as possible. There is no disability imposed.

10,393. What do you say about low castes not being allowed the use of village wells?—There are different wells; and amongst the caste people there are different divisions and there may be different wells for the different communities of the caste Hindus also.

10,394. Sometimes there is only one well in the village where it is difficult to get water supply?—In South India, as far as I know, there is not this difficulty. Probably from different sides of the well, each section or each community may be allowed to draw the water, not from the same part of the well, or something like that. I really do not know what conditions exist in Northern or Central India, but in Madras Presidency there is no such difficulty as paucity of wells to that extent (Mr. Bannerjee.) In Bengal the difficulty does not arise because all the Depressed Classes are allowed to draw water from the common well in common with the caste Hindus.

10,395. I know of instances where the lower castes had to go four miles for their water in hot weather, because they could not get it from the only village well?—(Mr. Acharya.) In some places all the people go three or four miles for their water. The salt water will be found in one well. The good water will be found in a well four or five miles away, and they all go for that.

Miss Puckford.

10,396. I think you said in answer to previous questions that you were in favour of indirect election to the Provincial Councils from the panchayats when properly constituted?—Yes.

10,397. Mr. Deshpande in Memorandum No. 64 under the heading of "Federation" says "We are in favour of direct elections to both the Chambers" of the Federal Assembly?—(Mr. Deshpande.) Yes.

10,398. Would not the objections which have been raised to direct elections to Provincial Councils be much greater with regard to the Federal Assembly?—I said I want direct elections to both Chambers, Provincial as well as Central.

10,399. You do not think the objections raised by your colleague are insuperable?—Yes, therefore I say that so far as the Franchise is concerned it should be kept as it is, and there is no difference between my colleague and myself, I think.

10,400. You do not think the large size of the constituencies is a bar to the member being in touch with his constituents if they are small in number?—It may happen, but there is no such difference of opinion, as I would say.

10,401. Does Mr. Acharya agree with direct election for both the Chambers of the Federal Assembly?—(Mr. Acharya.) My strong personal view is that it is a question of weighing the advantages and disadvantages. If we get the village panchayats established all over India, then the number of the village panchayats would be so many thousands, and the number of voters will be perhaps some millions, so that the objections to what is called indirect election from a small body of voters will not apply, and that will be the best way, but till then some transitory provisions will have to be adopted. It may take some years for the village panchayats to be established on that large scale.

10,402. Then you are not altogether agreed on this problem. With regard to the Second Chambers, I think there is not complete agreement on that point?—I think there is complete agreement on the Second Chambers. (Mr. Deshpande.) There is complete agreement because Mr. Acharya says it will be a long time before those rural panchayats are formed. Until then he is not opposed to direct elections.

10,403. With regard to Second Chambers I think your Association is not agreed on that point as Mr. Bannerjee does not wish to have a Second Chamber?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) That was my personal opinion, but since then we have submitted a joint Memorandum in which I have referred to the opinion of my colleagues.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,404. How far are these personal opinions, and how far the opinion of your Association?—A joint Memorandum has been submitted which represents our unanimous views.

10,405. Have they been submitted to your Association?—The Joint Memorandum was drafted only the day before yesterday, but we are in full possession of the instructions of our Association. That is what we say, that the Joint Memorandum is backed by the authority of the entire Sangha. (Mr. Acharya.) Our organisation as a body put this before the Viceroy in September last, and in March last this demand for Second Chambers, and a copy of these Memoranda have been submitted to the Secretary of State also from the organisation as a whole.

10,406. Then that is only Mr. Bannerjee's personal opinion?—Yes.

10,407. He is not supported by any other members of the Association?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) No, not at least by my colleagues. There may be a minority support in the Association. That is my personal opinion still, but that is a different matter.

10,408 Under heading A, "Problem of Depressed Classes," of Mr. Acharya's Memorandum No. 65 you say, "The Sanatanist majority, whose daily lives are cast in the closest proximity with the Depressed Classes, know their wants better, and are ready to do all they can to help these unfortunate countrymen"?—(Mr. Acharya.) Yes, Madam.

10,409. Can you tell me what steps your organisation is taking to help them, particularly with regard to education?—Yes, so far as our province is concerned, or my district is concerned, the depressed classes are mostly engaged in agriculture, and we are giving them as much help as we can. We allow them to till our lands and practically they take as much as they can take and give only the remainder to us. That is the help they want most. In the matter of education there are now village schools being established to which all are allowed to go, and we try to help. The great difficulty is how to get the little boys to go to school. If a boy goes to the field he will earn so much. In some cases we give them help, not in rupees, annas, pice, but in corn, which they want, and we help them to send their children to school in many cases.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,410. That is the only help you give to the depressed classes?—That is the only help they want.

10,411. Have you started any schools or charitable organisations for their benefit?—We have not started them for ourselves in the first instance, how can we help others? The whole thing is in the melting pot.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,412. Charity begins at home?—Yes. How can we help others?

Mr. Davidson.

10,413. I am rather puzzled to know what your organisation does represent. In one passage of Memorandum No. 70 you say you represent 95 per cent of the Hindu community?—That is my calculation.

10,414. But your organisation, I understand, has only been in existence for four years, because it says so in the same sentence?—Yes.

10,415. How do you calculate the fact that you do represent 95 per cent.?—Because the views put forward by the Association are the views that have been held, and have come down to us, and are held in common by all the Hindu Orthodox majority, which I claim to be 95 per cent., and, as I explained a little while ago, we have held meetings in every province where thousands of people have come, and where we have explained these things, and they are in full agreement with the views that have been put before them, and they are strongly backing us up in every province. In the last four years we have had as many as five huge conferences at Benares, at Calcutta and Gururwayur, where there was a great fight going on at one time, and at Delhi, and so on, and almost every month, or two months, there are huge festivals or occasions where we meet these orthodox followers of ours, and to thousands of them we explain our propaganda, and it is being accepted by them, and therefore we claim, and we have not heard anything to the contrary, that we represent the orthodox majority view. The opposition comes in from the vocal heterodox minority.

10,416. If my memory serves me, my recollection is that at the Second Round

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Table Conference Mr. Gandhi made the same claim that he did represent the whole of the Hindu population of India?—I am not responsible for what he says.

10,417. Would you accept that?—I do not accept Mr. Gandhi's claim.

Sir A. P. Patro.

10,418. May I suggest that Dr. Moonje yesterday made a claim that the Hindu Mahasabha represents 95 per cent. of the Hindu population of India?—Exactly. It is now open for the intelligent Committee here to assess the various claims. We all claim the same thing, and it is open to you to decide. I would suggest that some of you should visit India, and let there be a big conference held of the Mahasabha in some place. Let us also hold a conference and Sir A. P. Patro can visit it, and let him see how many thousands come to us, how many thousands to the Hindu Mahasabha, and how many to Congress. That will be the test.

Sardar Buta Singh.

10,419. Are you prepared to hold such a conference in Lahore?—Yes, there is a Sangha in Lahore, which is sending reports to us.

Mr. Davidson.

10,420. Would it not be possible that a great number would go to both Conferences?—I claim that a much greater number would go to us.

10,421. Turning to another subject in the last paragraph of Memorandum 66, in discussing All-India Federation, you state that in your opinion responsibility at the Centre should not be delayed, and "in any case, whether the Central Government be Unitary or Federal, it must be responsible for the Military Defence, and the orderly progress and development—economic, mental and moral—of India as a whole." By that, is the Committee to take it that you disagree with the reservation of Defence under any scheme, whether Federal or Unitary?—I do not quite follow.

10,422. It is paragraph 4 of the Memorandum dated 12th July, 1933. It is entitled "All-India Federation"?—Yes, that is what I have said. What I mean by that is that the Government must be responsible, otherwise it will be no Government.

10,423. The question I was asking was, do you mean by responsibility, a responsibility of the Ministers, without reservation to the Governor-General or the Viceroy of certain Departments?—I was referring to the All-India Federation when it came into existence, and when it did come into existence with responsible Government at the Centre, whether Federal or otherwise, it must be responsible. It has not come into existence and, therefore, I do not see how I can answer it. I was not referring to what is called the division that is drawn between the Governor-General's powers and the Legislature at all there. I was talking of the Government, as a whole, when it comes into existence.

Lord Irwin.

10,424. What you mean is that Defence would have to be a matter run by the Government of India, of whatever sort, as distinct from the Provinces?—Yes, that is what I mean, and when the full responsible Government came to be established at the Centre, that responsible Government would be responsible for the Military Defence also.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,425. That is just what you do not mean, if you read the passage?—"In any case, whether the Central Government be Unitary or Federal, it must be responsible for the Military Defence." That is what I am saying, whether it is going to be Central, Unitary Government or Federal Government, in the long run that Government will have to be responsible for the whole Government of India, including Military Defence.

Lord Eustace Percy.

10,426. Mr. Acharya, I want to understand what your practical advice to this Committee is. You are in favour of full Provincial Autonomy. Is it not so?—Subject to vesting in the Governor power to discharge his special responsibility on special occasions.

10,427. Full Provincial Autonomy as proposed in the White Paper?—Yes.

10,428. But you do not want that Provincial Autonomy to be conferred on the present Provinces?—I would not put it in that form. If the present Provinces could be redistributed and made more homogeneous, I would prefer that, but I will not wait for it. I will have Provincial Autonomy introduced pending the redistribution of the Provinces.

10,429. Do you suppose that you can have the Provinces reconstituted on the basis you propose, not more than 50,000 square miles each, after the present Provinces have been made autonomous?—I know it will be difficult. Once we start the thing, it will be more and more difficult as we go on, but still it is a kind of compromise; it is only a suggestion made. I cannot say on what lines exactly the Provinces should be divided, because I did not fully go into that question. It is only a suggestion.

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESEPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,430. But you wish the Provincial Autonomy to be conferred on the present Provinces anyway at once, do you?—Provisionally, certainly, pending the redistribution of the Provinces, which may take time.

10,431. I will pass from that point. Then in those Autonomous Provinces, you wish all representation to be based on village Panchayats?—In the long run, yes.

10,432. But immediately you wish what, in regard to the franchise?—It is a very complicated question; it will have to be very seriously gone into, because the franchise proposals contained in the White Paper are so different for the different Provinces. In a general way what I would say is that the present numbers are too huge, and there must be, probably, a great reduction by 50 per cent., as I said 18,000,000 illiterates out of 38,000,000 voters.

10,433. You wish then to have a higher franchise, but a direct franchise?—During the transitional period until the Panchayats are all established.

10,434. Then how are the Panchayats to be established?—The Panchayats may be established on adult franchise, because the villagers know their own village problems very well, and can vote.

10,435. But you point out that although local self-government has been made a transferred subject under the Montagu-Chelmsford Constitution, not a single Panchayat of the kind that you wish to see has been established?—Yes. That is due to the wrong hands in which self-government has been working all this time. I tried to introduce a kind of village autonomy Bill in the Legislative Assembly when I was a Member, suggesting the lines, but I was told it must go to the Provincial Councils, and it was not approved. Somehow the Department said it was a Provincial matter and must go to the Provinces, and could not be dealt with in the Central Legislature. It was returned to me. Therefore, the Province should be allowed to take it up seriously. If now we say in the long run or finally that the Members of the village Panchayats shall elect their representatives to the Councils, then I think everybody will hurry up and try and introduce in each Province a village Panchayat suited to the conditions of the Province.

10,436. But your franchise, to start with, is going to be the same franchise as at present, more or less?—But a little higher, more or less, we were suggesting temporarily, so as to reduce the number of voters to about half of what is now suggested.

10,437. Do you suppose that the Minister of local self-government in the Provinces in future is going to be a very different man from the Minister you have had in the past?—No. If it is definitely so put in the recommendations of this Committee that very soon the village Panchayats ought to be constituted and they should form the final franchise from which elections will take place, then I think they will all pay more attention to it, certainly.

10,438. Do you propose that any provision should be inserted in the Constitution?—Yes, that will be my humble suggestion. These being only temporary provisions, the final scheme will have to be so indicated as to provide for village Panchayats in every Province.

10,439. Do you mean that the Imperial Parliament is going to enact a Constitution only for a term of years, and is then going to enact a new Constitution?—No, I do not mean that. I think the scheme may be sketched in its entirety, subject to transitory provisions during the temporary period. The whole scheme will come automatically to work, when the conditions are developed.

10,440. Then I gathered from your answer to Lord Salisbury that you did not want responsibility at the Centre to be established until the Provinces had worked as Autonomous Provinces on the new franchise which you propose?—I said that the Central responsibility could not come, as a matter of fact, until the units were ready that will go into the Federation.

10,441. And those units must be based on your indirect franchise before Central responsibility can come into effect?—Not necessarily. That is only the improvement of the Provincial Autonomy in each Province, but provisionally, within the next four or five years, Provincial Autonomy may come into all the Provinces, and Central responsibility may come in some measure immediately. That is what we have said in our last Memorandum. Public opinion demands some measure of responsibility in the Central Government.

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,442. But am I wrong in thinking that Mr. Bannerjee appeared before us on behalf of the Hindu Mahasabha two days ago, and that the Hindu Mahasabha proposed at that deputation, that there should be immediate full responsibility at the Centre?—He has signed here this Memorandum for us, but he signed the other Memorandum, too. (Mr. Bannerjee.) May I explain my position? I did not wish to come at all as a Member of the Hindu Mahasabha Deputation. I was asked to come for the purpose of deposing only upon the Poona Pact, and I confined myself strictly to that. I did not speak upon any other subject.

10,443. You are not responsible for any other proposal?—As regards those proposals, I have no opinion. We have submitted a joint Memorandum, and that expresses my opinion.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

10,444. You referred to the Sarda Act. You were a member of the Legislative Assembly when the Sarda Bill was introduced?—(Mr. Acharya.) Yes.

10,445. And you were a member of the Legislative Assembly when the Sarda Act was passed?—Yes, along with my Honourable friend.

10,446. According to the definition that you have given here of the real Hindus, may I put it to you that the real Hindus were opposed to the Sarda Act?—Yes, they were.

10,447. And, according to the same definition, the real Muslims also opposed the Sarda Act?—Very strongly they did.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,448. Mr. Ghuznavi being one amongst them?—Yes

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.

10,449. And Sir Hari Singh Gour was amongst the others?—Yes

10,450. In spite of this opposition it was passed?—It was passed by what may be called the Government bloc votes, otherwise it would not have been passed—40 group votes.

10,451. And the nominated members?—Yes.

10,452. The White Paper provides for the new constitution where there will be no Government bloc, no nominated bloc. What is your apprehension that such Acts, which will interfere with your religion, will be passed?—Because, firstly, the new Legislatures will be quite as heterogeneous as the old Legislatures.

10,453. You say you represent 95 per cent. of the real Hindus. Why not go into the country and get yourself elected?—Because, on political matters, as I have already explained, the vast bulk of the Hindus are more or less indifferent. They are only now beginning to understand how the Legislatures are affecting their religion, and it takes a long time. The heterodox have been in advance of us in political organisation, and it takes a lot of us to combat with well organised parties that are working in constituencies on modern lines. It will take a long time. Twenty or thirty years hence we may not need them. Later on from the various Hindu constituencies the proper sort of members may come, but, in the immediate future, we, in fact, elect for the various Legislatures leading lawyers, for instance, who are eminent as lawyers and as public men, and so on, without much reference to the religious opinions they hold. That is why a good many of our heterodox countrymen become elected to the Legislatures without reference to their religious views, but from the political or property standpoint.

10,454. Does that mean the orthodox Hindu would not be able to capture a large number of seats?—A large number they will capture. The majority they will capture in the immediate future.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

10,455. You represent 85 per cent. of the Hindu community. Could you tell me if you have any women members of your organisation?—Hundreds or thousands of them, and on some of our platforms some of our learned lady sister members have spoken eloquently on old Indian ideals and modern political ideals.

10,456. Do you have their full support for this Joint Memorandum?—I believe we have.

10,457. You said in answer to a question from Lord Lothian this morning that you regard the Sarda Act as against the principles of your religion?

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE [Continued.]

—There again is a slight misunderstanding. The Legislative interference against performing sacraments is against our religion.

10,458. Any social legislation of that kind?—Legislation which interferes with the religious sacrament. If it is a question of saying a girl should not become a wife before she is 14, I and many of us personally would not have any objection, but if it is a question of saying that the sacrament of marriage, a most important sacrament for women, should not be performed until some heterogeneous people say it can be, then it is interference, and I am against it, and that is the Sarda Act. I made it perfectly clear in the Legislative Assembly in the old days.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,459. Do you mean heterogeneous or heterodox?—Both.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

10,460. Hindu law does not recognise widows' re-marriage, divorce, or women's rights of inheritance, whether as mothers, wives or daughters. Would you be so kind as to tell the Committee whether if in the future Legislatures some legislation affecting any of these matters is introduced, you would regard it as against the principles of your religion?—The Hindu religion recognises the divinity of motherhood, and every woman in the household is revered as an aspect of divinity, and that is the highest place any community can give to womanhood.

10,461. That is no answer to my question. What I want to know from you is this: You would regard any social legislation affecting any of these matters like divorce, widows' re-marriage and women's rights of inheritance as against your religion?—Each measure will have to be judged on its own merits. Some measures will conflict with religion, others will not. How can I give a general answer? Women, I believe, have rights of inheritance, and can be guardians to their minor children, and so on. I do not know exactly what is meant by such a general question as that.

10,462. Does a daughter inherit the property of her father?—If the father has no male children, I suppose she does.

10,463. Not in every caste?—These are details into which, of course, we cannot go. As I said that will depend upon each measure of legislation that is proposed.

10,464. If there is any social legislation regarding any of these measures, would your organisation be prepared to support it, or would it be against it?—If there are any measures proposed (these words "social legislation" are so very vague) which are healthy and consistent with our ideals my organisation would support them.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

10,465. I have two or three questions to ask. Is Mr. Acharya a believer in morality?—May I know what morality is before I give an answer?

10,466. What we in law call morality?—To me morality and religion go together. I cannot think of morality as any higher sanction than religion. I am a very humble and devoted supporter of religion.

10,467. You do not anticipate any conflict between religion and morality?—Right religion and right morality never conflict.

10,468. Who is to decide whether it is right religion or right morality? The Courts of Law or Priests?—In individual matters the individual would decide; in communal matters the heads of each community, and in the matter of religious organisations, the heads of such organisations.

10,469. I have had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Acharya's views about suttee. He is in favour of voluntary suttee, but he is against enforced suttee. May I know in what way voluntary suttee differs from an attempted suicide?—It is not a practical question because we have no case before us on which to judge. It will depend on the merits of each case. I have heard of an instance where a wife who lost her husband was so shocked that within three hours she simply went and lay down and was found dead. I consider that is a kind of suttee, and I honour that ideal of wife.

10,470. If she had not died would the law have taken some steps against her for an attempt to commit suicide?—I do not know if that is the law; it would be a very unfortunate law. I am no authority on it.

10,471. I will quote one or two instances and ask Mr. Acharya if he considers it to be more or less opposed to public policy or is it in favour of public policy? I believe Mr. Acharya knows the practice of human sacrifices?—They do not exist in India to-day.

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

(Mr. Bannerjee) They do not exist amongst the Hindus.

10,472. If they do exist, would he regard it as in accordance with religion, custom and usage?—(Mr. Acharya.) These are hypothetical questions. They do not exist. If they did exist I do not know what answer I should give.

10,473. Mr. Acharya, Mr. Bannerjee and Mr. Deshpande have all said (I heard it in Mr. Acharya's formula to-day) that the Legislature should not take up any law that would conflict with existing religion, practice or usage. If by existing practices a human being can be sacrificed, would Mr. Acharya regard it as a defensible proposition?—There is no such custom anywhere in India, to the best of my knowledge. (Mr. Bannerjee.) We provide for circumstances which exist or which may exist. We do not provide for circumstances which are absolutely and entirely hypothetical and which conflict with realities.

10,474. There is the practice of female infanticide. Would you regard any law prohibiting that to be against religion?—No. (Mr. Acharya.) I do not know if there is any such practice. As I say, each case will have to be judged on its own merits, with the facts before us.

10,475. How have you dared to come to England and to cross the seas?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) That is a matter for personal decision. We do not permit any cross-examination on that (Mr. Acharya.) I am prepared to answer. Ordinarily an Orthodox Hindu is not allowed to cross the seas, but extraordinarily because the higher ideals of my land are being terribly exploited by heterodox de-nationalized leaders, at the sacrifice of my personal religion I have come here.

10,476. You will have to pay some penance?—Yes. When I go to my home at Madras I shall have to perform some expiatory penance for it.

Chairman.] I ask the Committee and Delegates not to put questions which cannot add to the information of the Committee.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.] When the witness says the Legislature cannot attempt any laws which go against practices and religions, it is too large a claim.

Chairman.] I hope my friend Sir Manubhai Mehta will agree that the matter has been sufficiently investigated.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

10,477. I will go now to another question. You have quoted Her Majesty the Queen's Proclamation as a very good safeguard, and your colleague, Mr. Deshpande, begins his memorandum by saying that it is the King who makes the time and not the time that makes the King. Mr. Deshpande, in paragraph 16, says, approvingly: "It is the adhesion to this solemn guarantee which is of such vital importance to-day. Every State in the world has a right to control its ecclesiastical affairs." I therefore ask Mr. Acharya whether, if the Indian Legislature claimed to control the ecclesiastical and religious affairs of the country you would object to it?—That is not my memorandum.

10,478. I am exposing the differences in the Varnashram Swarajya Sangha?—We have submitted a joint memorandum.

10,479. I am, therefore, exposing the fact that they themselves are not of one mind?—(Mr. Deshpande.) May I explain the position? That is really so, but it is said there that the State does not interfere with such rights; the rights are not vested in the State.

10,480. You place complete reliance on the authority of the spiritual gurus; you bring them, also, into the Second Chamber. May I tell you that I have consulted one or two spiritual gurus—you know there are the five mathas—and two or three of them authorise a certain amendment in the law. I will give you one instance. As Minister of Baroda, I consulted the Shankara Charya—he was the Shankara Charya of Sharda Math at Dwarka; he approved of the raising of the marriageable age of girls. He also approved of raising the age of consent of girls. Would you regard that as authoritative?—(Mr. Acharya.) I am unable to give an immediate answer. If he did so, that is one single opinion. We shall have to find out what are the opinions of all the others.

10,481. I will give you another instance: I consulted another guru, the Shankara Charya of Jagadish Math, who was sent to gaol before but afterwards became the Shankara Charya of Jagga-nath Puri. He also advised me to take up the question of permissive early marriage in Baroda. Would you regard that opinion as authoritative?—I would suggest to the gentleman that he might circulate his questions to all the recognised religious heads in India and abide by the opinions of the majority and not get individual opinions.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,482. The opinion of individual gurus is not authoritative?—To individuals it may be, but not to the community as a whole.

10,483. Who is to decide whether the opinion of this guru is authoritative or not?—Circulate to all gurus and then find out what the majority opinion is.

10,484. You are a member of the Legislative Assembly?—I was until 1930.

10,485. Were you elected by the crowd of electors who were huddled into the polling booth?—Yes; I was elected by a general constituency and I suppose the electors were being brought in practically by some candidates or their agents to the polling booths.

10,486. You believe in village Panchayats, and you say that the village Panchayats ought to be given the indirect election first. Here, also, may I expose the difference between you and Mr. Deshpande. In paragraph 9 of his Memorandum, Mr. Deshpande says: "On the contrary, Reformers, from mostly among whom are recruited the politicians, have a great hold over the rural population"?—Our joint memorandum takes the place of our individual memoranda.

10,487. As you three gentlemen are appearing together I thought I would expose the differences amongst you three and find out whether there is any one mind amongst you three?—So far as the joint memorandum is concerned it is one mind.

10,488. Beyond that joint memorandum there is no unanimity of opinion?—That joint memorandum covers all my fundamental points.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,489. I wish to ask you three gentlemen a question to the following effect. All three of you are agreed that there should be a complete provincial autonomy as sketched in the White Paper?—(Mr. Deshpande.) Yes.

10,490. All three of you are agreed that there must be a responsibility at the centre?—Yes.

10,491. And that no measure of reforms in India would be acceptable to your association which does not immediately grant full provincial autonomy coupled with a measure of central responsibility?—That is so.

10,492. All three of you are agreed on that, and that is Clauses 5 and 6 of your Joint Memorandum. Do I take it that all of you are agreed on that point?—(Mr. Bannerjee) Yes. (Mr. Acharya.) The question has to be modified. If you will excuse my saying so, Sir Hari Singh Gour is a very old and veteran lawyer and he puts a question which is not sufficiently well expressed. Will you kindly put it again?

10,493. Yes. The question I have put to you is this: In view of the questions that have been addressed to one to you individually and in view of the replies to which you have committed yourselves, some doubt may be raised in the minds of some of us as to your combined attitude on the subject of Provincial autonomy and central responsibility in the future Constitution of India. Therefore I ask this question: What is your united and concerted view on the subject of Provincial autonomy and central responsibility in India?—Paragraphs 5 and 6 of our Joint Memorandum give the answer.

10,494. And anything that may be said to the contrary must be treated as modified by paragraphs 5 and 6 to which you adhere?—Yes. (Mr. Bannerjee.) I think there is no room for doubt as regards our opinion on those subjects. We are for Provincial autonomy and we are for a measure of central responsibility.

Major Attlee] Are you also agreed that these are "exploded political myths"? In Mr. Acharya's Memorandum they are described as "exploded political myths".

Lord Peel.

10,495. The passage to which Major Attlee is referring says "The Dissenters, however, have a great glamour for Western Democracy, for the 'Dominion form of government', for 'Provincial Autonomy' and 'Central Responsibility,' for Adult Suffrage and other exploded political myths"?—(Mr. Acharya.) I stick to it—"A great glamour for Western Democracy." What is happening in Spain to-day must open our eyes, to the danger to-day.

Mr. Jayaker.

10,496. Are they your personal views or the views of all the three of you?—What you have just quoted is my personal view.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,497. Yes, but you said just now and you have repeated it before, that, whatever may be the individual views of the

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

one or other of you, you have now produced this Joint Memorandum, over the signatures of all three of you, by which you all three stand?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) And that must be regarded as the expression of the joint view of the Sangha which we represent 10,498. That must be regarded as the joint and final view of the association you represent?—(Mr. Acharya.) There is no finality for anything under the sun.

10,499. Are you going to change?—All things under the sun change. (Mr. Bannerjee.) That is an abstract philosophical proposition with which anybody would agree

10,500. The three things in this Joint Memorandum upon which you have entered a caveat, so far as I can see, are these, first that the franchise should be limited and not extended to the extent to which it is proposed to be extended in the White Paper?—(Deshpande.) Yes

10,501. The second is that you want the establishment of a second Chamber in the Provinces?—Yes

10,502. And the third thing is that you want some safeguards for religion?—That is the first thing.

10,503. But those are the three modifications you want embodied in the future Constitution, but they are not conditions precedent to the establishment of provincial autonomy and a measure of central responsibility?—(Mr. Acharya.) The Second Chamber is an absolute necessity for provincial autonomy.

10,504. I am coming to that. Last of all you enter a caveat against the Poona Pact?—(Mr. Deshpande.) We do

10,505. Is not that the sum total of your representation?—The first two are conditions precedent, if I may say so, to the provincial autonomy and central responsibility; the others can come afterwards.

10,506. Is that your view, Mr. Bannerjee?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) That is not my personal view.

10,507. You do not agree upon that point? You agree upon what you have laid down in paragraphs 5 and 6 unconditionally?—(Mr. Acharya.) No; subject to paragraphs 1 and 2.

10,508. Is that your view, Mr. Bannerjee?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) That is not my view.

10,509. Therefore, you are not unanimous?—(Mr. Acharya.) We have discussed the matter and we have probably, even by compromising our personal convictions, come to certain opinions which we regard as points for which we have the authority of our Sangha to put them down in this final Joint Memorandum. About small individual details we may have our opinions.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,510. I understand that you, yourself, think the satisfaction of the first four points you gave is an essential for proceeding to the 5th and 6th?—No i, "Safeguard for Religion," and No ii, "Second Chambers," are conditions precedent to all legislation, whether it is provincial or all-India legislation. Those are conditions to which all new changes and new constitutional reforms are subject. No. i, namely, "Safeguard for Religion," and No. ii, "Second Chambers," are conditions precedent to provincial autonomy. No. iii, "Poona Pact," is only intended to expose how the Poona Pact was not as a matter of fact a pact between two communities, or the leaders of two communities. No. iv, "Franchise for Lower Chambers," is only a suggestion that we make; it is for you to accept it or not. Provincial autonomy is certainly subject to the establishment of Second Chambers. Safeguard for religion is a matter upon which we desire that all future legislatures in India should be conditioned.

10,511. I think I understand that answer. May I put one further question: Does Mr. Bannerjee agree with it or, if not, from what does he dissent?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) I do not dissent from that decision of the Sangha, so far as the bulk of the Hindu community as represented by the Sangha is concerned, they regard the first two as essential conditions.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,512. But not the third or fourth?—(Mr. Acharya.) The third is not a condition at all; the third, about the Poona Pact, is only an explanation of what happened.

10,513. And not the fourth?—The fourth is only a suggestion for a temporary period.

10,514. You regard the first and second as conditions precedent to the fifth and sixth?—To any constitutional reform, so to speak.

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,515. That is not clear from your Memorandum²—We are very sorry that we have not made it clear.

10,516. And Mr. Bannerjee does not agree with it?—He has said that these are the points upon which the Sangha has practically instructed us.

10,517. I will take you one by one. First of all, I will deal with the question of religion which you regard as a condition precedent?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) Yes

10,518. You say that religion should be safeguarded. Would not you give to the minority the same safeguard as you yourself ask for?—(Mr. Acharya.) Certainly.

10,519. How the minority to be protected against the oppression of the majority?—May I have an example of that.

10,520. You are talking of Hindu Societies being divided into orthodox and reform societies?—I do not know if the reform society has any existence of its own. It is made up of individuals who themselves speak about things on various occasions

10,521. You do not recognise the reform section but you recognise the orthodox section?—The orthodox section is, alone, the recognised Hindu society. The others are all heterogeneous.

10,522. Even the heterogeneous section have a right to protect themselves against the orthodox people, have they not?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) So far as religion is concerned we do not agree that there is any oppression practised upon the heterodox section of the community from which they have to be protected.

10,523. The heterodox section, rightly or wrongly, complain that they suffer from your oppression and they want protection?—Will you make out a case for oppression? It is for you to allege instances.

10,524. Unless a tribunal is constituted in which they can ventilate their grievances how are they going to ventilate their grievances?—The question is hypothetical. I want the question to be made clear by a specific instance and by reference to a particular instance of oppression

10,525. Take, for example, the case of the age of consent to which Mr. Acharya referred; the reformers want the age of consent to be raised?—(Mr. Acharya.) They have got it now.

10,526. No; they have not got it?—Nobody is prevented now from having his daughter married under the Civil Marriage Act. There is an Act now giving full freedom to the reformers—the Civil Marriage Act. There are so many Acts now.

10,527. And you want to repeal that?—We are not asking to repeal these things. (Mr. Bannerjee.) What is the oppression against which you want to be protected?

10,528. What is the freedom that the orthodox people want?—(Mr. Acharya.) We do not want interference with our views. As they have the liberty to marry their girls when they like, let us have the liberty to marry our girls at a time we consider is the proper time. We are against it being forced upon us that no father should have the right to fix the marriage sacrament of his daughter at a time he considers right.

10,529. You would not object to optional legislation?—I would not object to the father—and he at present has got it—having the option to perform the marriage of his girl when he likes.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] I am not dealing with the question of marriage but with the larger question of social reform. Very well, we will leave it at that.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

10,530. Would you allow the women to have a divorce, Mr. Acharya?—If there are large numbers who desire divorce, I will consider it then. At present they do not want it, and I am not going hypothetically to make laws for them.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,531. The question I wish to put to you about the Second Chamber is that there is a difference of opinion regarding the establishment of Second Chambers in the country, is there not?—There will be diverse opinions on all matters, but I do not think there is any large opinion in the country against Second Chambers except to this extent, that some of the present legislative council members want to have all the power themselves. (Mr. Bannerjee.) Not for the Second Chamber. (Mr. Acharya.) I believe in Madras sometime there was a resolution passed against a Second Chamber, in the Madras Council; and I think they explained it in this way that the present members want to have all the powers to themselves. On the other hand, in Madras also they have an organisation which demanded a Second Chamber.

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,532. In paragraph 1 of your joint Memorandum you say, "We want that our religion should be absolutely safeguarded. This can be done by enacting that the future Indian Legislatures (whether Federal or Provincial) shall be debarred from passing any measure affecting the personal law or the religious faith"—I want you now to mark the subsequent words "practices, institutions and usages of any community." Would it be right to say that the whole question is between what is laid down in the religious tenets and what has developed subsequently as customary practices?—I do not understand the question. What is the question?

10,533. The whole question at issue between what you call the orthodox Hindu and what you are pleased to call the heterodox Hindu is a difference of opinion regarding the fundamental religious tenets, governing the Hindu, and what has developed subsequently as a result of custom over a century, or two centuries, or whatever you like to call it?—I will not accept that.

10,534. What is the difference then?—The difference is one of fundamental mentality. To the orthodox Hindu religion is the highest thing in life; to the heterodox Hindu it is a thing to be carried in his pocket.

10,535. I am afraid I shall have to ask one or two questions in order fully to understand the difference between the orthodox Hindu and the heterodox Hindu. Your Swarajya Sangha as I know it—I have not read it anywhere, but as I know it from the agitation which is being carried on in India—is opposed to voyages abroad outside the country. Is that correct?—It is not correct.

10,536. You said that after you go back you will have to take what is called Prayaschitta and purify yourself?—That is so, but that is a personal point.

10,537. Whatever Hindu caste you represent?—There is not one law for all castes. Some are allowed to go abroad. It is only some who are prohibited. It is a question to which a single answer cannot be given.

10,538. If, therefore, it was suggested by those who are opposed to you that there should be no excommunication on the mere ground of a Hindu having gone abroad, and that on returning to India he should not be compelled to take the Prayaschitta, as you call it, would you say that that would be a right step?—It would depend upon the person who made the journey and the justification for his making it, whether it was for personal profit and all that, or whether it was for larger disinterested public considerations.

10,539. Or on the ground of health in order to consult experts in Europe?—Health is a very minor consideration to me.

10,540. Secondly, you are opposed to widow remarriage being permitted. Is that correct? I am now taking you through a few instances in order that the Committee may understand?—Once again, there are castes among whom widow remarriage is permitted, but there are others among whom it is not permitted.

10,541. Therefore, if the State passed a law that there should be no excommunication because a person in a caste has had widow remarriage, would your Sangha be opposed to it or would they favour it?—There is such a law at present on the Statute Book, and we have not raised our voice against it. (Mr. Bannerjee.) We shall not oppose permissive, but only compulsory legislation. (Mr. Acharya.) There is already a Widow Remarriage Act

10,542. Follow my question if you will. There are certain castes in which, owing to widow remarriage, the person who have contracted the marriage and the issues of those people are excommunicated?—I am not aware of it.

10,543. Will you take it from me please? Supposing there are a few castes among whom this is the custom and the State says "This is very wrong and it should be prohibited that any caste can excommunicate a widow who has married again," I am asking whether you would approve of it?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) Excommunication is a social matter; it is not a question of political disability at all, and therefore the Legislative Council as such has nothing to do with it.

10,544. The Legislative Council has a lot to do with it?—You cannot stop boycotting by legislation and therefore you cannot stop excommunication by legislation. It is a form of social punishment, and no Legislative Council can deal with it.

Mr. Y. Thombare.

10,545. It is not a question of the loss of inheritance rights?—No; he was not referring to that. If he were referring to that, it would be another matter.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,546. I was coming to that, but I am sure that Mr. Bannerjee is aware that this sort of social excommunication does put a great handicap not only upon the couple, but also upon their issue, and I am asking whether, if you are not against widow remarriage per se, your Sangha would approve of such legislation as would put these persons outside the scope of any harassment?—What do you mean by handicap so far as excommunication is concerned? I deny that excommunication imposes any handicap which the Legislative Council can possibly remove. Just as in the political field there is the boycott, and you do not press for a law to abolish the boycott, so therefore in the social field there is excommunication and every society must be left free to judge its members according to its own standards.

10,547. My Lord Chairman, as the witnesses do not intend to give a direct reply to that question, I will pass on to the next one?—I object to that comment. Whatever questions delegates may wish to ask they will ask, but I am objecting to such a comment. I object to the remark that we decline to give a direct answer. We have given as direct an answer as the very indirect question will admit. The question itself, I submit, is wrongly framed. If you were referring to the law of inheritance, I would know what answer to give.

10,548. I am coming to inheritance later on. You know that amongst orthodox Hindus there is no marked disapproval of a man of 60 marrying a girl of 15, 14 or 13 years?—(Mr. Acharya.) There is very great disapproval.

10,549. Therefore, if that were prohibited amongst castes where widow remarriage is prohibited you would approve of that legislation?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) Do you abolish such things in England by legislation? We know such things are done.

10,550. We are talking of India and Hindus, and of orthodox Hindus, of whom you claim to represent 95 per cent?—Yes.

10,551. I am asking whether it is a fact that amongst orthodox Hindus whom you represent here there is any sort of ban on a man of 60 years—I will not go higher—marrying a virgin of 12, 13 or 14 years?—There is great social disapproval of such a custom, but we certainly would ask for legislation upon that matter, as there is no legislation on such matters in any advanced country like England or America or anywhere.

Mr. Jayaker.

10,552. I will not pursue this question, but the point of the question is this I think that if what you ask for in your Memorandum were to be granted the Legislature of the future would be made incompetent to pass legislation of this character. I am putting to you a specific question: You are speaking of usages and you say that the Legislature of the future should have no right to pass legislation relating to Hindu usages?—(Mr. Acharya.) Religious usages.

10,553. Let me finish the question and then you can answer it. Supposing a Bill were brought in for the purpose of regulating those usages and preventing a man of 60 years marrying a girl of 10?—We deny that that is a usage.

10,554. Will you kindly let me finish the question? Would not your formula if it is granted make the Legislature of the future incompetent to pass this legislation?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) No; an aged man of 60 marrying a girl of 12 is not a religious or social usage. There are evils in every community.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,555. Therefore the witnesses agree that that sort of social legislation is a healthy thing and ought to be encouraged?—That is not social legislation. We shall oppose it on the ground that it interferes with individual liberty.

10,556. If during the last 200 years, not to go further backwards, the Hindus as a community have felt from generation to generation that it cannot be checked effectively except with the help of legislation, on what grounds are you opposing that legislation?—(Mr. Acharya.) On the ground that they are wrong.

10,557. What is wrong; is it the legislation that is wrong, or the practice which it is sought to stop that is wrong?—That their fundamental notions are wrong.

10,558. Whose?—All those who want to bring in such legislation.

10,559. What about those who practice it?—The practice must be put down otherwise than by legislation. (Mr. Bannerjee.) Always by public opinion, as it is here.

10,560. So that even in this case you feel that things must be left to drift for themselves all the time?—(Mr. Acharya.)

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Not at all; I feel strongly that public opinion must be aroused in such a way as to eliminate all the evils under the sun.

Chairman.] I venture to think that you have proceeded far enough into this particular topic.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,561. This is a question, I submit, where the witnesses claim to speak in the name of 95 per cent. of the Hindus, and that is a claim which I very stoutly resist. If the Joint Committee are inclined to take what they have said to-day, either in their written memoranda or in their oral evidence, as being correct, it is my anxiety to put before the Committee from their own mouths, if I can, the other side of the picture. I am quite prepared to abide by your Lordship's decision, but I submit that the major part of what they have said is unfair to the Hindus of India, and that they represent only 5 per cent., and not 95 per cent., of caste Hindus. I will go on to the next question?—(Mr. Bannerjee) My Lord Chairman, I protest against that.

10,562 You claim that you represent All-India through the Sangha. Are you aware that amongst the various castes, and especially the high caste Hindus, there is a custom of feeding the caste after one person in the family dies?—(Mr. Acharya) Yes.

10,563 You are also aware that that custom has had such a hold over the people, as you claim as a result of religious tenets—an absolutely unjustified impression, but still it is put forward as such—that if a person cannot afford to feed the caste people after the death of the breadwinner of the family or the eldest son of the family who contributes to the family's income, the family has to borrow in order to entertain the caste?—There is no such religious injunction anywhere that I know of, or custom.

10,564 I am quite sure that there is no such religious injunction but I am trying to bring out that the majority of those who are with you look upon this as a religious duty—I deny it. I deny the hypothesis.

10,565 I am trying to show that the contest between the two sections is as to what is pure religious ceremony and what has grown up as a custom. You agree that the compulsory feeding of the caste is not based on anything religious?—It is not a compulsory religion.

10,566. If it exists anywhere in any part of India, then you certainly would look upon it as based on something else than religion?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) It is entirely wrong. (Mr. Acharya.) We deny that there is any religious compulsion anywhere in India forcing such a thing.

10,567. You cannot say that, because I am speaking from personal knowledge of the various high-caste people who are in my employ, either as clerks or as cooks; they are all Brahmims, and they have themselves told me—and I can produce from my own files letters by the thousand if you want me to—that they have wanted to borrow Rs.1,000 or Rs.2,000 because if they did not, after the death of, say, their mother, spend in entertaining the caste, they would be out-casted?—What is the question? There may be many people doing many things, right or wrong or indifferent, but what is the question?

10,568. The question is that those whom you represent look upon feeding the caste after a death in the family, as a necessary part of their religious tenets?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) Nowhere in India is it regarded as a necessary part of religious tenets to feed any number of people. The hypothesis is entirely wrong, and I take it that my friend, Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, must have been let down by his employees and servants.

10,569. All that I can say is that Mr. Bannerjee is acquainted only with Bengal and that if there were anyone with the witnesses who represented certain other Provinces, Mr. Bannerjee would be contradicted by his own friends here?—Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas has no direct knowledge of any Province. I at least have direct knowledge of one Province.

10,570. I am not going to get Mr. Bannerjee to approve of my own direct knowledge. Lastly, amongst the Hindus, especially the class whom Mr. Acharya and his friends represent, the wife and the daughter have to-day practically no right of inheritance of the husband's or the father's property, even though the latter may have no other issue; they are disinherited under the Hindu custom.

Begum Shah Nawaz.] In the joint family system.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,571. They would be the strongest protagonists of the joint family system?—(Mr. Deshpande.) The daughter does inherit.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,572. Does she by will?—No, but she inherits.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] He is right about Bombay.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,573. I am talking of the prevailing custom all over India?—And particularly I am speaking of Bombay.

10,574. I did not speak about Bombay; I am talking of the general custom?—(Mr. Acharya) In Madras daughters do inherit if there are no male children; that is all I know. Lawyers can deal with these cases, but this has nothing to do with religion.

10,575. The wife is generally entitled under the joint family system only to maintenance, and even if there be an estate of several lakhs of rupees, it all goes to the nearest male branch of the deceased husband?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) What is the religion in all this?

Marquess of Salisbury.] On a point of order, I think the Committee would rather like to know how far this kind of examination really bears upon the reference which this Committee has to consider.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,576. I thought I made it clear, but in case I have not made it clear to everyone I will repeat it again: The whole contest is that there is no difference in the religious tenet part, the whole difference is what is based on religion and what has developed as custom, and I am trying to make out that the only difference of opinion between the heterodox and the orthodox sections of the Hindu community, as the witness has called them, is that the so-called heterodox section wants the customary part to be liable to change in accordance with the needs of the time. About the religious part there is no difference of opinion?—(Mr. Acharya) May I give a categorical reply to that? Any necessary change in custom which does not conflict with the fundamentals of religion will be supported by my Sangha.

(After a short adjournment.)

Mr. Acharya] My Lord Chairman, may I venture to make a preliminary statement?

Chairman.

10,577. Unless your statement refers to a question or something of that kind I would prefer that you should wait until your examination is finished?—It is something explanatory which I desire to say. A statement I made in reply to what I was asked a little time ago may be misunderstood, and I want to repeat what I said in clearer language with regard to something which was asked me as to what we meant about the condition precedent to provincial autonomy and central responsibility. What we mean is this. In our memorandum, the numbering 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 is done merely for convenience sake. We do not mean that the first or second or third must come before the fourth or fifth or sixth. What we mean is that the safeguard for religion is very essential in the new Constitution, and that Second Chambers must come along with the introduction of provincial autonomy in the new Constitution and certain measures of central responsibility. It is not precedent or subsequent, but in the new Act Second Chambers and provincial autonomy should come together simultaneously.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,578. In the morning, before we adjourned, you mentioned to the Committee the restriction on the use of wells by the Depressed Classes as they exist in Madras. Mr. Bannerjee supplemented it and said that the same restrictions did not happen in Bengal. If that is so, may I put it to you that the restriction on what these depressed classes may do or may not do, as far as wells are concerned, is a matter based again on custom and not on anything religious?—It is.

10,579. The customs vary from Province to Province?—It is finally based on the religious dictum that all people, whatever caste, who are given to unclean habits and ways, should not mix with one another. That is the final dictum, but its details vary from place to place—in fact from district to district.

10,580. Exactly. Therefore the extent to which these restrictions happen at present to exist varies from Province to Province, and the degree of restriction is not based on religion, but is based on custom?—Not the degree, not on religion.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,581. In you paper No. 70 there is a recommendation, Mr. Acharya, that religious heads should be in the Upper Chamber?—A certain number of them.

10,582. Some of them?—Yes.

10,583. I do not suppose you are in a position to say how many persons that would be to-day?—I have indicated for the Madras Province the number.

10,584. You are not in a position to say how many persons could claim to be heads of the various branches of the Hindu religion?—It is not a question of what they claim. There are certain recognised heads. We have them already recognised. It is not a new claim.

10,585. If that were so, then these religions which have been started as branches during the last century, shall we say, or during the last fifty years, would not certainly be included?—Will you give me an example?

10,586. Swami-Narayan Panth?—Is that a religious organisation?

10,587. Yes, and a very big one?—It does not obtain either in Bombay or Madras so far as I know, but I thought in the United Provinces there were some Swami-Narayan Panth organisations.

10,588. Yes, in Bombay, Gujerat, Cutch and elsewhere?—In that particular Province, if they have a large following and large properties, they will certainly be entitled to a seat.

10,589. In that Province?—Yes.

10,590. What about the Central Upper House?—They will have a seat in the Province, but as to the Upper House that is a matter of detail in working out the Constitution.

10,591. Is it a matter of detail? Your paper 70 talks of Second Chambers, Provincial and Federal?—Yes.

10,592. Therefore, for the purpose of fixing a certain number of Mutts, or whatever you like to call the religious heads who are to be eligible for that privilege, you would have to fix an all-in line?—Yes. The line would have to be prepared after close enquiry into provincial conditions.

10,593. Irrespective of how long that branch has really existed, say a century or two centuries, or a thousand years?—The length of time is not the only consideration. It is the amount of following they have and the amount of property they have.

10,594. Length of time would be one of the considerations?—Yes.

10,595. Then you must keep it open so that if a new religious Mutt is started, say within 10 years, with a crore of rupees of property given by somebody, they would also have to have a look in?—Yes.

10,596. Therefore, it will have to be an agreed list to start with and a list which can be added to on the basis of certain qualifications?—I suppose so.

10,597. Then would it not be necessary to recognise the religious heads of the nature which I have just mentioned—the Shankaracharya who admitted the latest wife of the ex-Maharajah Holkar, an American lady? She was admitted into the Hindu religion by a Shankaracharya, and therefore he, a religious head of that mentality, would also have to be taken in?—If he had a large following in any Province or in all India and if there is a large organisation behind him, certainly he will be entitled to be a voter or even a member.

10,598. Therefore, somebody will have to ascertain who has such a large following as to be admissible?—The Provincial Government is expected to do that.

10,599. You would look upon a procedure like that as a scheme which would deal with this question in an impartial manner?—Well, there may be some defects here and there as in all things under the sun—you cannot help that.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,600. You have not worked out the full details of the scheme?—No, I have not been asked to. I am not a member of the Committee.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

10,601. My point is this. All these religious heads have vested interests in the present customs being perpetrated?—I do not grant that in that form.

10,602. Let me put it to you in this way. They derive their income—and you have, of course, in mind people with large incomes—from the present ritual being followed?—In the case of a religious institution the income is a very minor consideration, not a major consideration at all.

10,603. If that were so you would not have said, as you said two minutes back, that it would all depend on the estate and amount of money they possessed?—I said that is one of the things that would come into consideration—it is not the main thing.

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,604 You do not think that their vested interests would come in for protection by them, first of all, if they had any such standing in the Legislature of the country?—They would first be guardians of religion and then only of worldly interests.

10,605. Are you aware that there have been during the last two years several instances in which these religious heads or their immediate successors have married persons converted from other religions?—I am not aware of there having been several instances—there have been some instances which have been condemned by public opinion.

10,606. And so far as those religious heads are concerned that has been condoned by them, at which their strongest supporters are very angry?—I do not understand the point. There have always been some bad sheep in every fold, I suppose.

10,607. Still you would leave the faith of the Hindu in the hands of representatives of this class?—In the absence of any better institution.

10,608. You said that the Hindus who do not agree with your Sangha are heterodox Hindus?—In a general way. I was myself one of the heterodox in the political field for many years, and so I have great sympathy with them.

10,609. Apart from sympathy, on the facts you have told the Committee as far as your Sangha is concerned there is no fixed membership, there are no fees payable by anyone, and there is no Constitution for your Sangha?—I did not say any of those things at all. What I said was that the Conferences that were held were not held on membership fees or on Conference fees, but there is a Constitution and there are organisations which levy their own fees from the members for carrying on the work of the Sangha. There are in the Provinces and districts local Sanghas all over India, but they have their own rules subject to the rules of the All-India organisation. But I never said there were no members or no subscriptions or anything of the kind at all. For the larger Conferences there are Reception Committees and members and delegates and visitors, and these have tickets also, but the huge propaganda that is carried on is not confined to the members.

10,610. I have not counted it, but this volume contains about 100 representations from all over India?—I know that.

10,611. They are in identical terms and in the same draft?—Yes.

10,612. Do I take it that these various organisations or office-bearers who have signed these papers have accounts showing their receipts from the public and the number of people who are members of each one of these organisations?—No. That strengthens my contention. This printed thing was sent out by one of the main branches—I think it was the Bombay organisation—to all the various branches we have in the country, and each branch has taken the signatures of the leading people in each area who have signed it. I believe they have their own accounts, but I am not in a position to say what accounts exactly they have.

10,613. They have sent the signatures of their leading people?—Yes.

10,614. But the majority, I find, are only the signatures of the Secretary or at most the President and the Secretary?—Those were the instructions sent to them to show it is authenticated.

10,615. Therefore, this gives no idea of how many members are members of the various organisations which have signed this?—That will not give any idea—it is only a memorial.

10,616. Could you tell me roughly how many members pay subscriptions or owe allegiance to this organisation?—Owing allegiance there are about 400 branches of perhaps at least 10,000 each, but how many on the actual rolls pay a subscription I do not know.

10,617. There may be only 10 for each, for all you know?—So far as Madras is concerned, there will be at least 1,000.

10,618. I am taking an average of the 400?—It will be at least 500 each.

10,619. You know that these various religious heads have under their control funds and the most important temples in India?—Yes.

10,620. Acharyas, as they call it?—Yes.

10,621. Have you any views with regard to the funds which are entrusted by the public to such temples and acharyas being liable to some sort of audit so that it can be ensured as far as those funds are concerned that the Acharyas use the funds for the purpose for which they are intended and the purpose for which the people gave them the money?—I am afraid the questioner does not know the basic principles upon which offerings or gifts of money are made to the Acharyas. They are made by the disciples to the Acharyas practically in order to be utilised in any way that the Acharyas may like for religious purposes. There are no public gifts at all except individual gifts by the disciples to the master, and the master is invited to make any use he likes, as was done with regard to several gifts made to Mr. Gandhi on many occasions—it was well understood that he could use them for any purpose he liked. That is the only way in which gifts are made by pupils to masters.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,622. What would your Sangha's opinion be if it was suggested that all these funds should be subject to audit and that a report and account should be published once a year?—That is a question for the Sangha and I am not authorised to give any offhand answer to it. They will consider it and pronounce their considered opinion.

10,623. I thought you were giving evidence as an accredited representative?—It was not a point raised before us.

10,624. But, surely, when you object to the Legislature interfering, I am entitled to ask this question. Supposing this was one of the points on which the Legislature felt that there should be accounts of these acharyas properly audited, what would be your opinion upon that?—It would depend upon the Sanghas and the circumstances. It may be a means for interfering in the way in which the Mutts are conducted and so forth, in which case it would be wrong. It is nothing to do with what we call religious interference.

10,625. No, but it has a lot to do with religion in so far as the money for the use of religion is concerned. The point is this. There is an underlying principle in the use of money, namely, that if you get money you must give an account of it and give an account of it to that class which gives you the money as to the purposes to which you have put it?—If it was given on that condition they would certainly give an account.

10,626. Very well?—But an unconditional gift does not require an account.

10,627. Are you aware that in Baroda State there is situated one of the most holy places, Dwarka?—Yes.

10,628. And Dwarka is held in high veneration throughout the length and breadth of India?—Yes.

10,629. Are you aware that His Highness the Maharajah, Gaekwar of Baroda, has made it compulsory for religious temples in Baroda territory to be subject to audit and to be subject to the Government under certain conditions?—I do not know the conditions in Baroda, and I do not know why the Government chose to interfere. I am not aware of the details.

10,630. I am asking you whether you are aware that there has been any dissatisfaction in the minds of the most orthodox of the Orthodox Hindus owing to some of the regulations laid down by His Highness the Maharajah, Gaekwar of Baroda's Government?—A great deal of dissatisfaction has been felt all over India, though in Baroda perhaps they are afraid to say it.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.] Still people flock to Dwarka for pilgrimages in no smaller numbers—

Lord Rankeillour.] I do not know, but it seems to me that the trend of this examination is directed towards showing that certain scandals have arisen, but whether that is so or not, how can it help the Government and our consideration of the concrete proposals in the White Paper?

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.] The noble Lord has anticipated exactly the opposite of what I have in mind. What I was trying to prove is that the audit of the accounts of religious institutions has met with no opposition from the most orthodox of the Hindus. It is a fine precedent that the Maharajah, Gaekwar of Baroda has laid down, and I was trying to find out what our friend's view was having regard to the fact that the Hindus have not protested against it. There is no scandal about it.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] What is the conclusion that you ask the Committee to draw?—How does it bear on the province of this Committee?

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.] It bears on it from this point of view. These religious heads whom the witnesses are recommending for recognition are religious heads who have a vested interest in the property of the temples. The Hindu public feel that there ought to be a very healthy check on the expenditure incurred by these people inasmuch as their personal powers over the privy purse should be restricted by some sort of arrangement, and efforts should be made, either now or in the future, to see that the money is spent for the purpose for which it is given—either charity or religious worship.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I do not follow the bearing of that on the proposals in the White Paper.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.] The proposals in the White Paper have been commented upon by the witnesses, and I am trying to point out that what they recommend will simply perpetuate the various evils with regard to which the Hindu public to-day have very strong grievances. However, I have finished my examination.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,631. May I ask you a few questions about the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha. You say it was started about four years ago?—Yes.

10,632. I suppose it is a fact that it was started because the Orthodox Hindu community was convulsed after the passing of a measure called the Sarda Act in the Central Legislature. Was not that the genesis of it?—We have set it all out ourselves in the Memorandum.

10,633. You need not bother to repeat it but just tell me if that is so?—Yes.

10,634. The main purpose of this Varnashram Swarajya Sangha is to protect what you consider your religious usages and tenets from being invaded by legislation?—That is one main purpose.

10,635. Is not that the chief purpose?—One chief purpose.

10,636. Was it not brought into existence to guard against inroads which might be made upon what you considered your religious privileges?—That is the history of it and the genesis of it.

10,637. When you mention the 95 per cent. of Hindus, I suppose, that is more or less a conjectural figure?—I never said that I took any census account of them.

10,638. It is on more or less a conjectural basis?—Yes.

10,639. The same sort of basis on which Dr. Moonje based his claim that his Organisation represented 90 per cent of the Hindus?—In one respect; I suppose the Hindus may be represented by us to the extent of 95 per cent.

10,640. It is on the same sort of conjectural basis that Mr. Gandhi says that the Congress represents the bulk of Hindu India?—You are at liberty to draw your own conclusions.

10,641. It is a conjectural basis?—I have very good and strong ground for making that statement.

10,642. Have you made any attempt to count?—As to counting, I say I have already answered that.

10,643. Therefore, I say it is a conjectural basis. Do you maintain a list of members?—We maintain a list of what are called actual members, but those who follow and who may be called supporters of the Sangha are not only members but the general Hindu Orthodox public all over India.

10,644. Therefore, your figure is based on the number of people who come to listen to your discourses?—Yes.

10,645. That is so, is not it?—Yes.

10,646. This Memorandum No. 65 which you prepared was prepared in London, I take it?—Yes.

10,647. On the 30th June, 1933?—Yes.

10,648. It was never submitted in this form to any of your Committees for their approval or sanction?—The Varnashram Swarajya Sangha organisation has given me authority—

10,649. My question is a simple one. Was this document submitted for the approval and sanction of any of your Committee? Do not get away from the question, please?—The answer is in the negative.

10,650. Therefore, this document contains many opinions for which you have no mandate?—I do not grant that conclusion.

10,651. When you say on page 3 that provincial autonomy and central responsibility, adult suffrage and Dominion form of government are “exploded political myths,” have you received a mandate from any of your organisations for saying that?—Yes, we submitted practically the same thing in almost the same words to His Excellency the Viceroy on the 26th September in Simla and on the 17th March this year. If the honourable gentleman wants it, I can read exactly what was said.

10,652. My question was, have you received a mandate to say this?—I have received a mandate to express the opinion which is contained there—not the same wording but almost the same words.

10,653. May I have an answer to my question? Have you received a mandate to say that central responsibility and Dominion form of government are things which your Association regard as “exploded political myths”?—Yes.

2° Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,654. You have?—Yes.

10,655. Notwithstanding that in the Joint Memorandum which you submitted you say in Section 6: "Irrespective of the inauguration of Federation we want a certain measure of responsibility at the centre." Is not that central responsibility?—Men raise on stepping stones to higher things.

10,656. How do you reconcile those two statements? If you say you have received a mandate to say that central responsibility is an exploded myth, how do you reconcile that with this statement in the Joint Memorandum?—We start with things as they are. We know that they are not as good as we would like them to be and we try to improve them. Taking them as they are and for the time being, we take provincial autonomy, however imperfect it may be, and central responsibility and try and work it up.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] These are your second thoughts. After mature consideration, you came to this conclusion.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,657. Which of the two am I to understand is your final opinion?—Both—there is no contradiction to my mind.

10,658. Does Mr. Deshpande agree with this view that Dominion form of government, provincial autonomy and central responsibility, and adult suffrage are "exploded political myths"?—(Mr. L. M. Deshpande.) I will tell you what my view is.

10,659. Will you answer the question? Do you agree with this view?—That is Mr. Acharya's personal view.

10,660. Do I understand that you do or do not agree with it? Why cannot you answer the question? Do you personally agree with the view mentioned here that Dominion form of government and provincial autonomy and central responsibility and adult suffrage are "exploded political myths"?—No.

10,661. You do not agree with that view?—No.

10,662. When you said this morning to Lord Salisbury that parliamentary government on western lines should be very cautiously introduced into India had you received a mandate to propound that view?—(Mr. M. K. Acharya.) Yes.

10,663. Do you agree with that view, Mr. Deshpande? Have you received a mandate that parliamentary government should be introduced on very cautious and moderate lines?—(Mr. M. K.

Acharya.) I said: "adapted to Indian conditions." You must not take half a sentence.

10,664. Do you agree, Mr. Deshpande, with the view which Mr. Acharya expressed this morning in reply to questions from the Marquess of Salisbury that parliamentary government on western lines should be introduced with great caution into India? Do you agree with that view or not?—(Mr. L. M. Deshpande.) Yes.

10,665. You do?—I do to a certain extent.

10,666. To what extent do you agree?—That it should not be taken copy to copy, but it should be adapted to Indian conditions.

10,667. My words included the words "on western lines." Do you agree that it should be on western lines?—Partly on such western lines as would suit the conditions in India.

10,668. Will you turn to Memorandum 64 and look at page 7 of that Memorandum. You say there: "We desire that responsibility at the centre should be given immediately." You do not say anything about caution there—there is no word about caution?—I never said "caution."

10,669. I put to you the question a minute or two ago: Do you agree with the view expressed by Mr. Acharya that western institutions should be introduced with caution into India on western lines, and you said you agreed. Now I put to you your Memorandum, on page 7, where you say this responsibility at the centre, which is a western idea, should be introduced "immediately." There is no word about caution there?—But I also said that it should be so as to suit the condition of India. That is what I desire to explain.

10,670. You are not in favour of caution being introduced?—I do not understand exactly what "caution" means.

10,671. Gradually—with cautious steps. Do you agree with that view or do you agree to this view that responsibility at the centre should be given immediately as stated in your Memorandum?—Yes, I agree with the view that responsibility should be given.

10,672. But the word "immediately" is here?—Yes, immediately.

10,673. That is your view?—Yes, that is my view.

10,674. Will Mr. Bannerjee turn to his Memorandum 68, page 6, in the last para-

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

graph, "Things must be speeded up as far as possible." You are in favour of speeding up?—(Mr. J. L. Bannerjee) Yes 10,675. You are not in favour of caution?—I am not in favour of delay.

10,676. Will you just turn to your chief Memorandum No. 65, Mr Acharya, on page 2. This is what you say. You are speaking of the heterodox, the dissenting Hindus. You deplore the fact in a later paragraph of their not being classed in the census separately, but I will leave that alone for the moment. You say they are not true Hindus at all, and then you describe them in about the sixth line in this way: "They want, in fact, to destroy the Hindu caste system by any means in their power. The bulk of these, again, are English educated; and many of them live in European style, while the bulk of Sanatanist Hindus do not know English and stick to their old ways and habits." Then you say: "Lord Meston committed the terrible blunder of ascribing to the Hindus in general and to the Brahmans in particular the credit or discredit for all the political agitation in India, not knowing that the bulk of Sanatanist Hindus till recently have taken no interest in politics at all." I ask you, do the Hindus whom you designate by these descriptive epithets not make up the whole of what may be described as New India?—(Mr. M. K. Acharya.) No.

10,677. Do not they make up the whole circle of men who have been the pioneers of political agitation in the country?—The answer is in the negative.

10,678. You do not think so?—I certainly deny it.

10,679. Can you point out any names of persons who have made modern India politically what it is who would not come under this category?—A good many I can remember.

10,680. Will you mention about a dozen?—Mr. Tilak and Mr. Chitta Ranjan Das, and many others.

10,681. Was not Mr. Das English educated?—In spite of his English education he was a good Hindu.

10,682. Will you please answer the question, because I cannot go on unless you answer. My questions are very simple. Was he not English educated?—I do not say that all English educated people are bad.

10,683. Was he not English educated?—I do not understand the question. How can I answer it?

10,684. You have used the expression "English educated." I am taking your own expression in your Memorandum?—Where?

10,685. It is on page 2, the sixth or seventh line from the top of the page?—I say. "The bulk of these"—that means that there are exceptions

10,686. I am using the expression "English educated." Was Mr. Das English educated?—The bulk of these are English educated.

10,687. My question is, was Mr. Das English educated in the sense that you have used the expression here?—Yes.

10,688. He was?—Yes.

10,689. Was he not dressing in European costume?—I am not aware of that 10,690. You are not aware of that?—No. Whenever I saw him I only saw him in native costume.

10,691. That was at a very late stage in his life?—Perhaps.

10,692. Therefore Mr. Das would fall under the category of the people who are mentioned here?—I do not think so, so far as I knew him.

10,693. Do you deny that these men whom you designate here have great power over the rural population?—I do not think they have any power over the rural population, but I admit they have great power over the urban population.

10,694. I am speaking of the rural population?—No, they are not in touch with the rural population.

10,695. Mr. Deshpande, do you share this view that these gentlemen who are described here have great power over the rural population?—(Mr. L. M. Deshpande) They have in the cities but not so much in the rural population.

10,696. You do not agree with that view?—No.

10,697. Will you kindly turn to your Memorandum No. 64, page 4, the second line from the top. "On the contrary, reformers, from mostly among whom are recruited the politicians, have a great hold over the rural population." How do you reconcile those two statements? There you say they have a great hold over the rural population?—I tell you the rural population mostly follow the urban, and by that way they have influence.

10,698. Have they, or have they not a hold over the rural population?—They have no direct hold on the rural population.

2° Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,699. You do not say anything about direct hold here?—I do not make myself clear.

Mr. Y. Thombare.

10,700. Still, they have a great hold?—They follow.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,701. Can we take it that your statement is substantially true that they have a great hold over the rural population?—Eventually they have.

10,702. Can we take it that it is substantially true?—As I have stated it now, I say eventually they have a hold over the rural population.

10,703. What do you mean by "eventually"?—Through the urban people.

10,704. Have they or have they not a great hold over the rural population?—Personally, I think they have not over the rural population direct, but through the urban population they have.

10,705. I take you to page 4 and to the formula which you state at the bottom of the page "Indeed we should urge not only that there should be no legislative interference in the religious or socio-religious rites and usages of any community," and so on. Do you not think that you are stating the formula too widely when you use the expression "socio-religious rites and usages of any community"?—(Mr. M. K. Acharya.) Well, you may consider so, but my difficulty is it is so difficult to draw a hard and fast line between religious and socio-religious institutions in India. The two are so wedded together.

10,706. If your formula was accepted in the terms which you have put here, do not you realise that it will make a large part of the Legislative activity of a remedial character impossible?—We may have to revise the language. I do not say this is the final language.

10,707. You do not want to stress the words here?—The substance is what I want; I am not so keen on the words.

10,708. Do I understand all you want is to protect religious tenets?—No, religious tenets, rights and institutions.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,709. Connected with religion?—Yes.

Mr. M R Jayaker.

10,710. Would you leave the Legislature power to alter the usages?—If the usage is not based on religious fundamentals I would allow it.

10,711 I am giving an instance. Do you remember there is a usage in many parts of India of people dedicating their young girls to Temples, so they really come gradually to the same condition as a prostitute? That is a religious usage. Would you allow the power to the Legislature to alter that?—It is rather unfortunate usage. I would not affect that.

10,712 You would leave the Legislature the power to alter that?—Yes.

10,713 Suppose, owing to the improved sense of morality of the public and larger and broader conceptions of women's rights some usages become more or less unsuited to the conditions of the time, would you leave the Legislature power to alter those usages?—If, in course of time, ideas change the whole thing will change.

10,714 I take it you have no objection to leave the power to the Legislature to alter such usages?—Perhaps 30 years hence it may be very desirable.

10,715 I am speaking of gradually?—I do not know.

10,716. May I take it that usages which for the moment do not accord with the public sentiment should be altered by the Legislature?—Usages which do not rest upon religious fundamentals may be altered.

10,717 Take, for instance, a usage like this I am only giving you an instance, the usage of a particular territory or a tribe that the depressed classes should halt within 10 yards of a Brahmin. Would you allow that to be altered?—No.

10,718. Supposing there is a usage of people immolating themselves underneath a car or in a procession, would you allow the legislation to make that penal?—I do not understand the question.

10,719 Supposing there is a usage in a particular community under whose influence people sacrifice themselves under a car or in a procession?—I do not allow that there is any such usage.

10,720 Supposing there was?—If there was it might be prohibited. If there was any usage that a man might throw himself against some procession—I am not sure of it—I would allow it to be prohibited.

10,721. One of the pleas on which educated India bases its claim for self-government is this, namely, that a national Government would be far more courageous and progressive in introducing remedial measures than a non-national Government would? Do you agree with that plea?—That is one of those vague statements which once appealed to me, but which I have found from my experience does not any longer appeal to me.

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,722. Since when does it not appeal to you?—Since my experience that people who make large claims do not follow their rules.

10,723. Did it appeal to you when you were a member of the Swaraj Party?—When I discovered from my experience it did not appeal to me, and I got out of it.

10,724. What was your experience?—My experience was in the innermost ranks of the Congress and Swaraj Parties.

10,725. You have the reputation in India of holding very orthodox views?—I do not know whether I have a good reputation or a bad reputation.

10,726. May I repeat to you a paragraph from the speech which you delivered opposing the Sarda Act which wanted to raise the marriageable age of a girl or woman. It was delivered in the Legislative Assembly. I will read to you one passage on page 244 of Volume 36 of the Assembly Debates which are available here. This is what you stated, Mr. Acharya, I am giving it you as typical of the views you hold which are regarded in India as very orthodox. You were commenting on a passage from the report of the Age of Consent Committee, and the passage from the Age of Consent Committee's Report is as follows: "It has been shown in paragraphs 358 to 368 in our report that early maternity is an evil and an evil of great magnitude. It contributes very largely to infantile mortality. In many cases it wrecks the physical system of the girl, and generally leads to degeneracy in the physique of the race." You ridiculed that statement?—I still ridicule it, because I think it is too wide a statement.

10,727. You think what is stated here, early marriage and maternity, is not an evil?—It does not follow from what I have said.

10,728. May we take it as typical of your views on other questions?—You are at perfect liberty to understand or to misunderstand anything I said.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

10,729. May I ask Mr. Acharya a few questions? In your scheme for Upper Chambers you have provided for a representation of Landlords and the Heads of various religions. Do you think labour should be represented in the Upper Chamber?—I have said so, I have said it must be represented.

10,730. Not in your scheme?—That is a small mistake of the typist. I have put in (2) for labour; that is quite a small mistake, but, in general, I would say there should be labour representation.

10,731. From your Memorandum, and from your evidence, I gather that you do not want any oppression being practised upon the Hindus on the ground of religion?—I do not want any oppression upon anybody.

10,732. Some women in India feel that the laws of marriage should be changed a little bit, and that they should be allowed to make divorce. Would you allow a Bill to be introduced in the Legislature on the ground that the women feel the present practice is an oppression, and they want to be free from this oppression?—I thought the question was "some women" feel. If I found that a very large majority of Indian women feel so, I would support that.

10,733. "Large" means how many?—A large majority.

10,734. So if a majority is not willing to change the law for divorce you will allow the minority to be oppressed by the majority?—There is no oppression. The minority may do as they like.

10,735. Under the present law a woman cannot take divorce, and, if you are prepared to allow her to do what she likes, you must allow a law to be passed providing for a divorce?—The present law does not allow even men to do as they like. Discipline and restriction is imposed on all people.

10,736. Supposing we have a divorce law both for men and women, or a divorce law for women only?—I have not thought about it. I know no particular answer to such questions. It has nothing to do with my religion. (Mr. Bannerjee.) If people are so keen on divorce they should go out of the Hindu fold.

10,737. I am asking whether you would allow a law to be introduced by the Indian Legislature at large?—(Mr. Acharya.) Not unless there is a very large demand for such measures. I can not say on the hypothetical assumption that a few here and there want it. I do not think any Legislator would be doing his duty in wasting the time of the Legislature in bringing in such measures for just a few people.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,738. May I take it you are in favour of the majority oppressing the minority?—If that is your conclusion. It is not my conclusion, but you are welcome to your conclusion.

10,739. About the Franchise proposals you are not in favour of either these new-fangled ideas of Adult Suffrage or the extension of suffrage?—We have said we are for adult suffrage in the lowest democratic sphere, namely, in the village.

10,740. After the village you are not in favour of it?—In the present conditions of India.

10,741. You really want the Franchise to be confined to a few propertied and educated classes?—It will not be few; if my scheme is carried out of having the village panchayats all over India there were will be several lakhs and not a few.

10,742. I am talking of the Legislatures?—The electors to the Legislatures, according to my rough scheme, in course of time would be the members of the village panchayats elected on Adult Suffrage.

10,743. Supposing the present White Paper proposals are maintained, you are in favour of the Franchise being confined to a few people?—Not a few; restricted so as to make the numbers of the electorates workable; not a few.

10,744. Supposing you and I go to Bombay and hold a meeting of people who are not likely to be enfranchised under the present proposals, say, the workers working in the Bombay textile industry, and we put before them a proposition whether they should be given a vote or should not be given a vote, what do you think would be the verdict of that meeting?—If a theoretical question like that is put everybody will certainly say he wants a vote, whether he is going to use it rightly or wrongly.

10,745. Supposing similar meetings are held in the villages and people are asked whether they would like a vote or not?—The villagers would certainly say they do not want to be bothered with things in which they have no direct concern.

10,746. Supposing this proposition is put whether they would like to have a vote or not?—I have given the answer. They would say, "Do not bother us with things which do not immediately concern us."

10,747. Are these textile workers in Bombay orthodox or unorthodox Hindus?—I do not know anything about them.

10,748. You said that out of the orthodox Hindus 95 per cent. follow your organisation. I tell you that most of the uneducated people in India are orthodox Hindus. May I ask you, therefore, whether your franchise proposals will be approved of by the 95 per cent. of the orthodox Hindus?—I believe so.

10,749. So far as the workers are concerned, you yourself have answered that they will ask for a vote?—The workers of Bombay do not form the whole of India.

10,750. The workers of Calcutta?—I do not know about Calcutta either.

10,751. What about Madras, Mr. Acharya?—In Madras the workers will want a vote in things which concern them directly.

10,752. They would like to have a vote for the Legislature if any legislation is to be passed concerning them?—I do not think in that form it has ever been put to them. I cannot, therefore, say what would be their answer.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

10,753. Mr. Acharya, do I understand you correctly, when I say that what you want is that the Legislature should not have competence to pass laws affecting what you call the fundamentals of religion?—Yes.

10,754. And that before any such law is introduced you want a sort of previous sanction obtained from heads of religious institutions?—Yes.

10,755. And, thirdly, that after it is introduced it should not become law until it is passed by a two-thirds majority?—Yes.

10,756. I want to ask you this: This two-thirds majority is to be two-thirds majority of the Hindu Members of the Legislature or two-thirds majority of the total Legislature?—Of each community sought to be affected. If it is only the Hindu community it would be only the Hindu Members. If it is the Muslim community there would be the Muslim members also.

10,757. Are you able to tell us in a defined form what you regard to be the fundamentals of your religion so that it may be possible for this Committee to know to what extent the Legislature can interfere and to what extent it cannot?—I am willing to give a very humble lecture on the fundamentals of religion if the Committee will hear me for three hours.

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,758 You could not give us a formula that we could get into a reasonable number of words for the section of the Act?—That is what I said. Dr. Ambedkar is now trying to heckle me into some kind of answer in three words. I cannot.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

10,759. I am not trying to heckle you; I am trying to understand. For legislative purposes you must give the Committee some formula which could be put into the Act so that it would be possible, both for the speaker of the House or the Governor, or whoever may be the deciding authority, and the Courts, to find out exactly whether a particular law passed by the Legislature is ultra vires of that Legislature?—I have suggested, I thought, a formula which is very workable and which I have in fact taken from some—

10,760 You merely said they are fundamentals. You leave the whole matter undecided. What are the fundamentals?—The formula I suggested was this: Before a measure affecting religion is introduced the Governor or the Governor-General should refer it to the opinion of the recognised religious heads and organisations in that Province, and after getting their opinions, and probably after modifying it so as to bring it in accordance with their opinions, it might be introduced, and all the rest is for the Governor or the Governor-General to decide.

10,761. May I take it from you that whether a certain piece of legislation affects the fundamentals of your religion or not is a matter which is to be decided by the heads of the religious institutions?—Certainly so. They are the competent judges to decide.

10,762. Mr. Acharya, you are a Brahmin by caste?—Yes.

10,763. Mr. Deshpande, you are a Brahmin by caste?—(Mr. Deshpande.) Yes.

10,764. Mr. Bannerjee, are you a Brahmin by caste?—(Mr. Bannerjee.) Yes.

10,765. Mr. Acharya, is not it a fact that in the Hindu religion nobody can be a priest unless he is a Brahmin by caste?—(Mr. Acharya.) It is not a fact.

10,766. You mean any Hindu in practice can officiate as a priest at any Hindu temple?—No, it does not mean that.

10,767. That is my question?—Please put it properly.

10,768. Whether anyone who is not a Brahmin can officiate and perform any religious ceremony?—A very simple question. Every community, sub-community or class has got its priest from that community or sub-community. A Brahmin will not go to certain communities.

10,769 I am telling you most respectfully that that is not a correct statement?—That is the truth, as far as I know.

10,770. Does Mr. Deshpande know?—(Mr. Deshpande.) It is so now. (Mr. Acharya.) A Brahmin will not officiate for certain things.

10,771. The heads of all religious institutions are Brahmins, are they not?—No. In Bombay Presidency there is a very huge Mutt which has property and all that is purely non-Brahmin.

10,772. In the main?—Some are Brahmin; some are non-Brahmin.

10,773 Is it not a fact in Bombay Presidency?—There are others also, Lingyats.

10,774. I do not want to confuse the issue. My question is this. As distinct from the Lingyats, the Jains, or the Buddhists (I am talking purely of the Hindus) is it not a fact that all these institutions are controlled by Brahmins?—There are some which are controlled by non-Brahmins even in Bombay Presidency.

10,775 There are very few?—Yes, that would be accepted; but not that the whole of them belong to Brahmins.

10,776. Now if your proposition was accepted, that the heads of these institutions should have the right to give previous sanction, it would simply mean that the whole of the destiny of the Hindu community would be in the hands of the Brahmins in charge of these institutions?—(Mr. Acharya.) It will not mean that at all.

10,777. Let me ask you a question or two about your representative character. Mr. Deshpande, in the Satara district there is a non-Brahmin party, is there not?—(Mr. Deshpande.) Yes.

10,778. The non-Brahmins of Satara and district would cover almost 90 per cent. of the total population?—Yes.

10,779. There is a very strong antagonism between the Brahmins and the non-Brahmins in the Satara district?—On certain points; not on all.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE

10,780. But on points of politics and social reform?—On points of politics.

10,781. On point of social reform?—Not so much.

10,782. Is it not true that the Brahmins and non-Brahmins have been struggling as to the equality in temples, so far as officiating is concerned?—In some districts they may have, but not in all.

10,783. But is there not a strong cleavage between the two?—Not so far as I know.

10,784. But they are, anyhow, a separate entity, carrying on a separate political life?—Yes, everybody has his own.

10,785. And you still think a few Brahmins in the Satara district would represent the non-Brahmin?—So far as I am concerned.

10,786. Do you think that you and Mr. Jadhav, the leader of the non-Brahmins, would go together on most of these points in the Memorandum?—I do not know about Mr. Jadhav; I know about mine.

10,787. Do you dine together?—Mr. Jadhav and myself, no.

10,788. In the Madras Presidency there is a Justice party consisting of the non-Brahmins?—(Mr. Acharya) There was a party some years ago. I do not know if it is as active now.

10,789. But it did exist for a year or two?—It existed for seven or eight years.

10,790. There is again a very strong cleavage between the Brahmins and the non-Brahmins in the Madras Presidency?—Not a very strong cleavage upon what might be called religious questions at all.

10,791. They have a separate organisation of their own?—I believe in the Justice party Brahmins are being admitted now.

10,792. But hitherto they were not admitted?—They are admitting even Brahmins now and, therefore, they are changing.

10,793. Would it be correct to say that you are only representing the views of the Brahmins?—Quite incorrect.

10,794. Now I want to ask you a question, Mr. Deshpande. In your Memorandum No. 64, I do not find any comment on the Poona Pact: Is that so?—(Mr. Deshpande) There is none.

10,795. Is that true?—It is true.

10,796. Mr. Archarya, in your Memorandum No. 65, apart from this one line on page 3: "It is upon its merits we condemn the Poona Pact," there is no reference to it?—(Mr. Acharya.) That was quite enough, I thought.

10,797. This joint production of yours is the latest thought, is it not?—Yes, it has come later than the others.

10,798. After the evidence of the Hindu Mahasabha was given?—No, much before that.

10,799. Why did not Mr. Deshpande put it before in your Memorandum, if as it is stated here, you had a mandate from your clients to condemn it?—(Mr. Deshpande.) I did not think that it was necessary.

10,800. There is just one other question I want to ask. You ask, in your joint production, No. 72, full Provincial autonomy and Central responsibility; I need not read that. Now, under paragraph 4, Franchise for Lower Chambers, you say. "The bulk of our countrymen are yet untrained in the habit of working representative institutions." The question that I want to ask you is this For whose benefit do you ask Provincial autonomy and Central responsibility, if you say your "countrymen are yet untrained in the habit of working representative institutions"?—(Mr. Acharya.) I would ask the Honourable Gentleman to read the paragraph more carefully The answer is there already 10,801. What is the answer?—The answer is there, if you read it.

10,802. What is the answer?—We say we are against the indiscriminate lowering of the franchise in the immediate future; the indiscriminate lowering we condemn; but making the lowering more discriminate, we are taking the next step immediately to urge Provincial Autonomy and Central responsibility.

10,803 But how can indiscriminate lowering of the franchise make your countrymen trained in the habit of working representative institutions?—That is what we say. Indiscriminate lowering will not train them.

10,804 Therefore, raise it higher up?—No, the opposite of indiscriminate lowering is discriminate lowering.

10,805. Confining it only to the Brahmins and the higher classes?—Discriminate lowering does not mean that. The White Paper says 38,000,000, I would be content with 20,000,000 or 28,000,000. That is not confining them to this class and that class.

10,806. You know in Malabar, there is a community called the Naiyadis?—Yes.

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,807. I understand that under the social customs prevailing there a Naiyadī cannot walk along the road?—He can walk along the public roads to-day.

10,808. And if he wants to sell anything, or buy anything, he has to place his goods or articles that he wants to sell some 60 yards away from the street and call out from there?—That is not correct information, so far as I know.

10,809. I give you that information?—That is not correct, I deny it. I have been for many years in Malabar, and I know Malabar better than my honourable friend.

10,810. The point I am going to ask you is something further. Assume my facts are correct?—When they are incorrect, how can I assume that?

10,811. The question is this: Supposing a law was passed making it a crime for any Hindu to prevent a Naiyadī from walking along the public street in Malabar, would you say that would affect the fundamentals of your religion?—As the honourable gentleman presumes on wrong facts, there is no such custom and there is no such law. If there were such a custom, and if there were any need for such a law, then that law would not conflict with any fundamental of religion.

Sir A. P. Patro.

10,812. Brahmasri Acharya, will you kindly tell me the meaning of "Varnashram Swaraja"? May I help you. I do not want to answer it, as well as you. What is the English rendering of "Varnashram Swaraja"?—Maharaja Sir Patro, there is no English rendering for it.

10,813. Does Varnashram Swaraja mean caste system?—It is a very inadequate translation.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] A system of four castes?—In a general way.

Sir A. P. Patro.

10,814. Swaraja is self-Government?—Varnashram Swaraja will mean self-Government consistent with the higher principles of life with regard to various stages of individual life, and with regard to various stages of groups of social organisations.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,815. Do you mean that is a translation of those words?—That is a translation of those words. I am trying to translate them as nearly as I can.

Sir A. P. Patro.

10,816. May I take it, though inadequate, as you said it is, self-Government by caste system?—It is not at all a correct rendering of it.

10,817. Then what is the correct rendering of it, in two words?—I have given it. Self-Government consistent with the higher ideals of regulation of individual life and communal life.

10,818. "Varnashram" means caste?—Varnashram means castes and stages of life.

10,819. And your Bhudeos have said caste system is based on colour?—No, they have not.

10,820. Then are you against every annotator of the caste system. Leaving that alone, on this hierarchy of caste the four castes of Brahmin is the supreme caste, is it not?—They are one caste, but I do not say the supreme caste. Each one is supreme in his own way.

10,821. He is supreme in the four castes. Now are not Brahmins called Bhudes?—Yes.

10,822. Gods of the Earth?—Yes.

10,823. That is another name for Brahmins?—Probably.

10,824. Then the Brahmin is at the head of this hierarchy, is he not?—In religious matters certainly.

10,825. Now this Brahmin occupies every position of importance in education?—No, not every position.

10,826. But all positions?—No.

10,827. What is a Brahmin, then?—A Brahmin occupies what may be called the position of the religious instructor in all religious matters.

10,828. In all secular matters the Brahmin has no power of influencing the country?—In all secular matters the Brahmin has, as Brahmin, no power at all. As an individual citizen, he may have.

10,829. Do you know that, in the Madras Presidency, the Brahmins occupy every place of importance?—I do not know it, and I deny it.

10,830. Do you know that Brahmins are only 3 per cent. of the population in the Madras Presidency?—The census report says so.

10,831. And yet they occupy every position?—They do not occupy every position; I deny it.

10,832. You will deny everything, I know; I have known you for the last 30 years. Do you know that this non-Brahmin movement came in as a protest against the Brahmin religious and social influence?—Not at all, it came in immediately after the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms, in order to placate the ambitions of a few vocal non-Brahmin leaders, of whom Sir A. P. Patro was a very conspicuous leader.

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,833. And the non-Brahmins are the majority population?—They are.

10,834. And they now have got the upper hand over this priestly class?—Not in religious matters at all.

10,835. But in all other matters affecting religion?—In all matters affecting religion, the non-Brahmins have always had a hand, but in priestly matters, they have not had a hand.

10,836. Is it not a fact that the self-respecting movement of the non-Brahmins is against the priestly influence of the Brahmins?—I do not know much about that self-respecting movement. It is confined to a few people who do not count.

10,837. In the Madras Presidency, you were one of the protagonists of Mrs. Besant in the Home Rule movement?—Yes.

10,838. You wanted Home Rule for India?—Yes.

10,839. You gave that up as useless?—I still want Home Rule for India, on the right lines.

10,840. Never mind about the right lines. You gave it up and joined the Congress movement?—I do not understand the question.

10,841. You gave up the Home Rule movement and joined the Congress movement?—The Home Rule movement I did not give it up, but I gave up following Mrs. Besant when Mrs. Besant gave up the Congress.

10,842. I am asking you, as being the living embodiment of Mrs. Besant's activities. Is it not a fact that you gave up Home Rule and joined the Congress Party?—Home Rule was part and parcel of the Congress movement of 1918.

10,843. But you said Mrs. Besant gave up the Congress?—Yes; she went out of the movement, in fact.

10,844. When did you join the Varnashram Swaraja Party?—When it was started in 1929.

10,845. And in the Madras Presidency, will you kindly tell me how many Members there are?—I have not got the list

10,846. Have you got a register?—I have not got a register or the list here.

10,847. But have you got a register of them?—Certainly, yes.

10,848. Could we cable for it and get it here?—If you wait for it, in perhaps a month's time, you will get it, certainly, because there are several branches

10,849. As a matter of fact, no such register is there; nothing of the kind; simply an individual here and there?—That is false, I deny it. My Lord Chairman, that is a downright untruth

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,850. I hope we can preserve some measure of politeness in this rather acute family quarrel?—I am not responsible for it, Sir.

Sir A. P. Patro.

10,851. Are not the Brahmins mostly literate?—That is their great privilege, and they want to maintain that privilege of being literates and placing themselves at the service of others.

10,852. And the religious teachers of other classes?—That is a duty of every Brahmin. They want to serve every other class.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

10,853. Notwithstanding whether the other classes want them or not?—If the other classes do not want them, they will not go to them.

Major Attlee.

10,854. I just want to ask you one question, Mr. Deshpande. You say there exists a Council of Theologians—is that a standing body?—(Mr. Deshpande.) Yes.

10,855. About how many are there?—I do not exactly know, but the body exists; something like 15.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,856. Where does it exist?—At Benares.

10,857. Is that accepted by Hindus as an authoritative body for laying down ecclesiastical matters?—They were elected at some Conference of the Varnashram Swaraja.

10,858. Elected by a Conference of your Organisation?—By the Members at present of the Varnashram Swaraja.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,859. It is a body created by your Organisation?—Yes.

Major Attlee.

10,860. I will ask Mr. Acharya: Is there an established body, or an individual in the Hindu community, who can lay down what is orthodox or what is unorthodox?—(Mr. Acharya.) There is a body of learned men constituted last year, with its Headquarters in Benares, who will be able to say what are the fundamentals of the Hindu Dharmic or religion.

2^o August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr J. L. BANNERJEE.

10,861. What proportion of Hindus would accept that body as authoritative?—All the Orthodox Hindus will accept it.

10,862. When you say "orthodox," what do you mean?—There are some few who rebel against all old things among the Hindus. All the Orthodox Hindus would accept their interpretation of the fundamentals of religion.

10,863. The point is this, that you want to have your religious usages protected. I want to know whether in the Hindu religion there is some repository of the faith, someone like a pope or archbishop, or church council, to whom they can refer. I understand you had one started last year?—Yes. We have the Shankara Charyas and other Acharyas that are regarded as the repositories of the faith in each sect or community.

10,864. Who was the authority before last year?—These have been from time immemorial. Last year we elected some into a body under the Sangha organisation for reference purposes. Them we brought into being as an adjunct to the Varnashrama Swarajya Sangha; but the old Shankara Charyas existed from time immemorial.

10,865. I gathered from a question before that it depended on some kind of democratic vote amongst the various authorities, as to whether certain things were orthodox or not. Was that the previous method?—No. If any question comes it will be circulated amongst the heads and their opinion will be taken.

10,866. Is there a list of accredited heads?—Yes, in every Province everybody knows who the recognised heads are, because it comes from old times. It is like the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Archbishop of York, and all these heads of bodies work together. Upon fundamentals they agree. Upon non-fundamentals they may not agree.

Mr. F. S. Cocks.

10,867. Mr. Acharya, Mr. Deshpande and Mr. Bannerjee, in your joint Memorandum you say you are opposed to the extension of the franchise as laid down in the White Paper. That is your view?

10,868. Is that Mr. Deshpande's view also?—(Mr. Deshpande.) I have stated first that I approved of it, but it is a coincidence that, instead of the word "generally," it has been printed "heartily," and there was a mistake in the print, but I did not point it out. I approve of it generally.

10,869. Do you approve or disapprove of the extension of the franchise?—I think that the present right of voting should be there. It should not be increased.

10,870. Do you agree with the proposals of the White Paper to increase the franchise?—I have stated there that at present I am against the immediate increase of the franchise. That is what I have stated now.

10,871. You are against the immediate extension?—Yes.

10,872. In your Memorandum you say: "To increase the number of voters in India is, in our opinion, a desirable principle indeed. And we heartily support the recommendations of the Franchise Committee which are accepted by the Government"?—That is what I said. The word is "generally," I said, and I meant that the increase was good, but then we had a conference and all of us were of opinion that it should be not immediately, but that the franchise should be increased by steps.

10,873. You agreed with this document but a few days later you do not?—This word "heartily" has been misprinted. I thought it was not worth while pointing it out. Under the heading "Provincial Autonomy" in my Memorandum No. 64 I say: "Already the White Paper has proposed a Second Chamber in the Provinces, United Provinces and Behar." Bengal has been omitted, so there were two mistakes, but I did not think I should correct them first; but the word "generally" ought to have been there instead of "heartily." I admit I was for the increase of franchise, but afterwards we thought it should not be immediately but by steps.

10,874. Is it your usual habit to change your mind every fortnight?—If I am convinced later by other people I have to change my opinion.

10,875. Is this an example of the views of the unchanging East? To bring up certain views and then to change them in a fortnight?—If I am convinced by other people I have to modify them.

2° August, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,876. Do the politically minded people in your Province and the neighbouring Provinces support these opinions?—I do not know whether they support me or not. I shall see when I go whether they support me or not.

Mr. F. S. Cocks.

10,877. I noted in your cross-examination just now that you are opposed to the Legislature having any power to enact laws raising the age of consent or even preventing voluntary suttee. You would be against that?—(Mr. Acharya) I cannot catch the question.

10,878. You are against the Legislature having any power to enact laws to raise the age of consent, or to prevent child marriage, or to make criminal the practice of voluntary suttee. You are against that?—I said in my answer that the forcible burning of widows was not suttee and should be abolished. I am for legislation against the forcible burning of widows. If you call it suttee you are at liberty to do so. I am for legislation abolishing suttee.

10,879. Do you know the Pandit Malaviya?—Yes.

10,880. Is he a Hindu of the most orthodox caste?—Yes, I believe he is.

10,881. Would he disagree entirely with those views you have just expressed?—You must ask him that.

10,882. Do you know of your own knowledge that he is opposed to those views?—I do not know; I believe he will support me.

10,883. Has he got a very much larger personal following than your organisation has?—I do not believe so.

10,884. How long has your organisation been in existence?—Four years.

10,885. Have you any members on the legislative bodies?—A few.

10,886. Why have you come here at all—for what purpose?—Because we felt from what we read of the report of the Round Table Conferences and from what we read of what was going on in the new Constitution, that there may be measures adopted which will affect our religion detrimentally and, which will not be in the best interests of India even from the political standpoint.

Earl Peel.

10,887. You say, Mr. Acharya, that your large party of Sanatanists have not taken any part in politics up till quite recently?—Yes, it is true.

10,888. Are they now intending to come forward as a party and run candidates and have a policy of their own?—It will take some time for us to organise in that form. It is only four years that we have been in existence. I daresay very soon we will have to put up our own candidates for the various councils.

10,889. The Act of 1919, of course, contained a very great number of provisions running in a democratic current, did it not?—Yes.

10,890. Why was it that this very big body, so large as you state it to be, did not take action when the democratic institutions were set up some years ago?—We did not realise it.

10,891. You did not realise it until the White Paper was introduced?—No; we did not realise it until the Sarda Bill was introduced. It was then we saw how the Legislatures were being used to interfere with religious usages.

10,892. Then you thought your religious customs and usages might be interfered with by the Legislature?—Still more afterwards we feared.

10,893. You have told us you dislike our Western institutions, as applied to India, because they are not suited to Indian conditions. Could you give one an idea as to what sort of constitutional scheme, quite generally, would suit Indian conditions?—Yes. I have said it in a general way; the Panchayat system is very well suited to Indian conditions, and that is the best system of democracy in the world. Having that as a basis, then having Provinces of a smaller size, not the huge Provincial areas we have now, and then a number of these Provinces joined together to reach the ideal of an All-India Federation. That will be the way in which the thing will have to be built up gradually, with the strong foundations well laid. We also say provisionally, however, in order to satisfy the expectations that have been aroused, we are for Provincial autonomy and central responsibility of a kind.

10,894. You prefer that sort of democratic government, possibly, to what many people like in India, the Government by the Princes and the States; you prefer that form of democratic government which you have just detailed?—In some respects, but in some of the States that have the panchayats and all that, I think they will be equally good.

2° Augusti, 1933.] Mr. M. K. ACHARYA, Mr. L. M. DESHPANDE [Continued.
and Mr. J. L. BANNERJEE

10,895. You say that India might as well be organised in States as in Provinces?—Yes, having the village panchayat democracy as the basis as it existed in the old days, I think.

10,896. I am looking at Joint Memorandum No. 72. May I take it that if the conditions about Second Chambers (and may I pay my tribute to your high opinion of the House of Lords) and the safeguards for religion are carried out and observed, then you are ready to accept the suggestions in Sections V and VI?—Yes.

10,897. And that that, in your view, would make those democratic ideas adaptable to Indian ideas?—In a great measure.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,898. You have repeatedly stated and Mr. Acharya has repeatedly used the expression, "the fundamentals of the Hindu religion." I want to know what are the fundamentals of the Hindu religion which you are anxious to safeguard?—I have said that unless I have three hours I cannot make myself plain.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

10,899. I would like to clear up a matter. Mr. Acharya, you stated that Pandit Malaviya has repudiated the implications of the Poona Pact. I want to ask you a question on that: Is not it a fact that Mr. Gandhi says that the Poona Pact, apart from settling the political problem, imposed a certain obligation on the Hindus to abolish untouchability and to open the doors of the Hindu temples to the untouchables?—That is what Mr. Gandhi says, I think.

10,900. The Pandit Malaviya says that is not the case: that the Poona Pact does not impose any obligation on the Hindus to do that and it is therefore that he says he does not agree with the implications of the Poona Pact. Is not that the case?—Yes, that is so.

10,901. It does not touch the political side of the matter. Mr. Gandhi says the Poona Pact imposes an obligation on the Hindus to open the doors of the temples. The Pandit Malaviya says there is no such implication at all?—Yes.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,902. Will Mr. Acharya turn to Memorandum No. 65, the words, "Swaraj or Self-Government on truly Indian lines, on lines consistent with India's Dharmic ideals, with the supreme law of Unity in and through Diversity for which the Sanatana Dharma or the World's Eternal Religion stands." Has he got any scheme of Swaraj based upon these principles of diversity and unity?—Yes; I have a book which I have handed over to some printers, and when that is out—

10,903. We must wait until your book is printed in order to find out what your scheme is?—I am quite prepared to discourse upon it if I am given three days' time.

Chairman.] Thank you. We are greatly obliged to you gentlemen.

(The Witnesses are directed to withdraw)

Mrs. P. K. SEN and Mrs. L. MUKERJI are called in and examined, as follows:—

Chairman.

10,904. Mrs. Sen and Mrs. Mukerji, you are here on behalf of the Mahila Samiti Ladies' Association, you appeared before Sub-Committee C, where you handed in Memoranda Nos. 41, 42 and 43, on which Memoranda you were examined by that Sub-Committee?—(Mrs. Sen.) Yes, that is so, my Lord.

10,905. Nevertheless, you asked to be allowed to make a statement before the main Committee and the Delegates, and the Committee and the Delegates are willing to hear you now. I should like to tell you that your memoranda, to which I have referred, have all of them been circulated to the Committee, and indeed have been in the hands of the Committee for some time, and also that the Proceedings at your examination have been before the Committee and the Delegates. I should like to add that you may presume that all in this room have applied themselves to that transcript. I understand that you wish to make a statement?—Yes. Thank you. I may now, with the permission of my Lord Chairman, be permitted to place before the Committee as briefly as possible the main points to be submitted. The need for adequate numbers. We are strongly of opinion that the most important thing to be secured in connection with the women's franchise is adequacy of numbers. Hitherto the women have formed such an insignificant proportion of the total electorate that their voting strength has been negligible. The numbers offered in the White Paper are regarded as most inadequate and have caused bitter disappointment, especially because they are so much below what we had been led to expect by the recommendations made by responsible investigating bodies such as the Simon Commission and the Indian Franchise Committee, after searching and prolonged inquiries. These bodies reported that universal adult franchise was not immediately practicable. The women whom we represent are therefore prepared to wait for adult franchise to come in the fullness of time, and to accept for the present any reasonable measure of representation, provided the numbers are sufficient to give women a real influence, and to compel the attention of candidates to our wishes. But the numbers offered by the White Paper will not do this. Nothing less than the proportion of 1 to 4½ offered by the Indian Franchise Committee will satisfy us. We earnestly hope we shall not have to go back to India to report that nothing better than the numbers proposed by the White Paper can be expected. Many women in India are hesitating between co-operation and non-co-operation. They love their country and have been attracted to non-co-operation because it has seemed to them the best way of serving it. But they will co-operate if they feel that new civic duties and the chance of managing their own affairs are opening out before them. The Government has laid much stress on the administrative difficulties of giving women a larger franchise. We venture to suggest that unrest among women may itself be a cause of serious administrative difficulties.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Mrs. P. K. SEN and Mrs. L. MUKERJI.

[Continued.]

Federal Assembly Franchise. Regarding the Federal Assembly Franchise, the White Paper proposal is admittedly no improvement on the present ratio of women to men; that is, less than one woman to 20 men. It is true that the actual numbers will be increased but it is the proportion of women voters that will influence candidates who will have to please a large electorate. Hitherto social reforms affecting women, such as those concerning marriage, custody of children and inheritance rights, have made tardy progress in the Assembly and women naturally want to have the weapon in their hands to work out their own salvation in these matters. In this respect, therefore, we feel compelled to put our demands still higher than what has been offered by the Indian Franchise Committee. We ask that the franchise for the Assembly may be given to the wives of Assembly voters. At the very least we urge that the educational test should be that proposed by the Indian Franchise Committee; that is, simple literacy for the first election. If it is thought impossible to give both these qualifications, we ask that at any rate one or other of them shall be given us.

The Provincial Franchise.—As to the Provincial Franchise, we may be permitted to repeat our two main points:—

(i) We want the simple literacy test, not so much for the sake of immediate numbers, which will be small, as for its effect in providing an automatic means of extending the franchise as education spreads. It appears that the Secretary of State sees difficulties in the way of a differential educational franchise for men and women. But we submit that there is ample justification for it on two grounds:—First very little has hitherto been done for giving educational facilities to women. Women's education has been grossly neglected, and the grants for it have been insignificant as compared to the grants for the education of men. The figures showing this disparity are already before the Committee. Secondly, there is a large number of women who are educated at home and unable to produce school certificates, but they would be able to show that they can read and write and thus satisfy the test of simple literacy. The other main point we press for is the removal of the condition about application in the case of the wife's vote. The administrative difficulties apprehended by His Majesty's Government apparently arise out of warnings from only one or two Provinces. If that be so, it would hardly be fair to make the rule as to application binding throughout all India, especially as its effect in weakening the women's electorate will be very great. As the Land Revenue Registers have all the particulars about each man's property qualification, all that is necessary to know is whether the man has a wife and whether she is of full age. We think that application might be made optional, so as to lessen the numbers about which special enquiries are necessary; and further, that the wife should be allowed to be registered either as the wife of Mr. A. B., or by giving her full name. We think that the supposed difficulty about ascertaining names has been considerably over-estimated. There may be a difficulty in some districts, but we believe it could easily be surmounted. We venture to assure the Committee that Indian women will leave no stone unturned to help to overcome the administrative difficulties which the Government apprehend. We expect that many women volunteers will be forthcoming to give help in polling booths. But we want to make it quite clear that we think the insistence on application will have much more serious effects on the strength of the women's vote than His Majesty's Government apparently realise.

2^o August, 1933.] Mrs. P. K. SEN and Mrs. L. MUKERJI.

[Continued.]

Reserved Seats for the Federal Assembly and for the Provincial Legislatures.—The principle on which the reserved seats for women have been allotted is not understood by us. Bengal, with a population of 50 millions, has been given only 1 seat for women in the Federal Assembly and 5 seats in the Provincial Legislature; while Bombay with a population (without Sind) of 18 millions, and Madras with a population of 45 millions, have been allotted a larger number of seats for women both in the Federal Assembly and in the Provincial Legislatures. We would urge that this matter should be reconsidered and justice done to Bengal. The women of certain other smaller Provinces have been given no reserved seats at all in the Federal Assembly. These are just the Provinces which need reserved seats most, as they are least likely to return women members through the ordinary constituencies.

Method of election to reserved seats.—Regarding the election to these special seats to be reserved on the Federal Assembly, we submit that the election should not be by the Provincial Assembly, but by some direct method. We recognise that large and unwieldy constituencies should be avoided. With a view to attaining this object, several alternative schemes have been suggested. Of these, we approve the method of taking as the constituency the whole or part of the capital town of the Province, or the prominent cities of the Province, by rotation, but it should be open to any woman candidate from the whole Province to stand for election. We are sorry that it is proposed to allot the reserved seats in the Provincial Legislatures on a communal basis. The organised women of India are unanimous in feeling proud that they have hitherto kept free from the communal spirit and wish very much that it should not be introduced into elections under the new Constitution. If His Majesty's Government feels pledged to retain the proposed distribution of seats between the communities, we urge that at least the method of election to these seats should be through joint electorates, including the men and women voters of all communities.

The Council of State.—As to the Council of State we submit the following points:—

(1) The qualification for membership of the Council of State proposed in paragraph 27 of the White Paper, would rule out nearly all women, as very few possess these qualifications. We ask that there may be in addition some qualification which would render at least some women eligible, who have taken a leading part in educational, social or other public work.

(2) We suggest also that one or two seats should be reserved in the Council of State for women, at least for the first two elections. The election to these seats might be by all the women members of all the Legislatures, who might form an Electoral College for the purpose. We are thankful that the Secretary of State has himself said that he thinks it most important that there should be some women in the Council of State, and we venture to hope that some suitable arrangement may be made for securing this.

We know that it has been suggested by some of the women's organisations in India that instead of the proposal to give votes to wives on their husbands' qualifications, complete adult franchise should be granted to men and women in urban areas. We wish to make it plain that we ourselves do not share the objection of these organisations to the wife's vote. We think that the wife's vote would secure a better distribution of the total women's vote among the constituencies and we should not like to see the women of the rural areas excluded from their fair share of representation.

Above all, however, we want to see adequacy of numbers, and we entreat the Committee not to let us go back to India without feeling some assurance that in some way or other His Majesty's Government is bent on securing for the women of India their fair share in the working of the new Constitution. Without this, we do not see how we are to secure the many improvements in social conditions which are most essential to the welfare of our homes and our children.

2^o August, 1933] Mrs. P. K. SEN and Mrs. L. MUKERJI. [Continued.

10,906. Mrs. Mukerji, do you desire to add anything?—(Mrs. Mukerji.) With your Lordship's permission, may I say that when I was cross-examined the other day as to the existence of communal feeling in women, I was unprepared, and I fear I did not do justice to the woman's point of view? I wish to bring before your Lordship and before the entire Franchise Committee present to-day the fact that the chief communal idea in women has for many years, say the last 50 years, since the dawn of their awakening, been a communal idea of one sex against the other. At heart all women have united no matter what community, caste or creed, in one effort to wrest from the opposite sex, who have been responsible for placing them in their present position of inequality, their social professional, legal and civic rights; and no matter if in the far future they enter the field of profession shoulder to shoulder with men in India, this communal idea will never come in, because they will have the strong sentiment that they have only risen to this status of equality by their bond of unity as sisters, irrespective of caste, creed and race. If your Lordship will permit me, there are a few other words I should like to say in regard to the social welfare work as bearing on the advancement of social welfare, if the women are well represented in all the Councils and Assemblies. I wish to add that through an oversight I omitted some of the important Associations in Bengal which are carried out conjointly by men and women. There is the Anti-Tuberculosis Association in Calcutta, which has several branches in the different localities, which is conjointly carried on by men and women. Collecting boxes are given out to all the different business firms, and monthly and yearly subscriptions are paid by all the members. There is a Leper Settlement outside Calcutta for which women collect clothing, etc.; and there is an arrangement made to visit the mentally deficient who are discharged from asylums. District Visiting in Slums is also carried out; and all this is done by men and women conjointly. There is a Bengal Women's Educational Conference of great importance which I omitted the other day, in which they have evening classes carried out by ladies, for the poor children who cannot sometimes attend the ordinary schools, especially for girls. There is also a Nurses' Guild organised by women, where the nurses are entertained weekly as a club. I simply place these few facts before you because your Lordship cross-examined me on the point of anti-malaria work, and therefore I put before you the anti-tuberculosis work which is done conjointly by men and women

Major Atlee.

10,907. I want to ask you a question, Mrs. Sen, with regard to the competence of women to give an opinion on public affairs. Does not the Indian mother in the home frequently control the home?—(Mrs. Sen.) Yes, certainly she does. She is the dominating influence in the home.

10,908. Do you think that women are as capable of understanding a political issue as their husbands?—I think they are, certainly.

10,909. One further question. I gather that you have no objection to a wife receiving a vote on the qualification of her husband?—No. I have just said that. We support that. (Mrs. Mukerji.) On the other hand, we think that there can be nothing derogatory in that if a woman is willing to live on her husband's earnings and to take his name instead of her own. I think it is rather contradictory if she objects simply to get a vote on the strength of his property qualification.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

10,910. Have you considered the qualification of annual income as suitable for increasing the number of women voters, say, an annual income of so many rupees a year earned not from landed property, but from any source—from their own labours. Have you considered that qualification at all?—(Mrs. Sen.) Yes, we have, but it only affects the working woman; the women of the middle classes or the upper classes do not earn themselves.

10,911. But the working women do?—Yes.

10,912. You would not object to the working women getting the vote?—No.

10,913. May I take it you are anxious that the working women should get the vote?—Yes.

2^o August, 1933.] Mrs. P. K. SEN and Mrs. L. MUKERJI.

[Continued.]

10,914. You are not against an annual income, from whatever source derived, as being a qualification for a vote?—We have no objection to that, but it would be very few, and it would not be the intelligent voter, it would be only the working women's vote, whereas we want also the intelligent vote.

10,915. May I ask whether you are against the working women getting votes?—No.

10,916. Have you considered the number of women that will be added to the voters' list if you make any kind of income as a qualification?—No, we have not considered that.

10,917. If I tell you that about 1,000,000 women could be added to the franchise roll, you would favourably consider such a qualification?—It is only 1,000,000. We consider the wife's vote as most suitable if we have to have special qualifications, because we would be getting 4,000,000, and this, as you say, would be giving us 1,000,000.

10,918. I am not suggesting that the wife's vote should be taken away; but as an additional qualification?—Certainly, in addition.

10,919. You are not against a working woman getting a vote?—No; we consider that they should have the vote.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,920. Do you know anything about the Varnashram Swarajya Sangha?—No.

10,921. Did you hear anything at all about it?—No.

10,922. Mrs. Mukerji, do you know anything about it?—(Mrs. Mukerji.) Do you refer to Mr Gandhi's Ashram?

10,923. No. Have the women of India any objection to the Legislature dealing with the improvement of the condition of the men and women through the medium of legislation?—(Mrs. Sen.) No, we have not.

10,924. You are pressing for it?—Yes.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,925. The Varnashram Swarajya Sangha to which Sir Hari Singh Gour refers has made a representation before this Committee that the legislation of the future should have no power to legislate with respect to socio-religious customs of the Hindu community. Do you approve of such a proposal?—No. (Mrs. Mukerji.) No.

10,926. If such a proposal were granted do you think it would largely interfere with carrying out remedial measures of reform with regard to women's rights?—(Mrs. Sen.) Certainly it would. (Mrs. Mukerji.) We think so.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

10,928. Mrs. Sen, would I be right in saying that if the minimum number of women voters, which almost all the women's organised Associations are asking for, is not accepted by the Joint Parliamentary Committee appointed by both the Houses of Parliament, almost all these organisations, which are at present devoting their energies to educational progress and social reform, will then concentrate more on agitation than anything else?—Yes, certainly I consider that likely.

10,929. Agitation for votes?—As I have already said in my Memorandum, and it has been stressed by the different organisations, that is the minimum that we can expect, what the Indian Franchise Committee has offered us; that is 1 to 4½.

Marquess of Lothian.

10,930. One of the witnesses yesterday stated that so close were the relationships between the husband and wife in India that it was adequate really to enfranchise the husband because he really represented the woman's point of view. Would you agree with that point of view?—No, I would not. I think it would be really raising the status of the wife if you gave her the vote on her husband's property qualification, because we do not consider that the husband's property is only his own. They are considered to be joint properties. We take it that way.

10,931. Am I right in saying that you think there is a definite women's point of view about social reform which requires to be represented through the medium of women's votes and women's representatives, if India is to make progress on a balanced line? Is that your view?—Yes, certainly.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

10,932. Mrs. Sen, you are a distinguished member of the Brahmo community?—Yes.

10,933. And you, Mrs. Mukerji?—(Mrs. Mukerji.) Yes.

2^o August, 1933] Mrs. P. K. SEN and Mrs. L. MUKERJI.

[Continued.]

10,934. What is the proportion of Brahmo's to the orthodox community?—(Mrs. Sen.) Very small. I do not know the exact figures, but it is very small.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

10,935 Your sentiments on this point are shared by the Hindu women who are not Brahmos?—Yes, certainly, a large majority of the Hindus.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,936. You have come here as the representatives of the women of India irrespective of community and caste and classes?—Yes. The Brahmo faith and community are all-embracing.

10,937. And you speak for them, and in their name?—Yes.

10,938. And you have received a mandate on the lines on which you have given your evidence?—Yes.

Chairman.] Thank you, we are greatly obliged to you ladies for having appeared here to-day, and for having made a very clear statement.

(The Witnesses are directed to withdraw.)

Rajkumari AMRIT KAUR, Dr. MUTHULAKSHMI REDDI and Mrs. HAMID ALI are called in and examined.

Chairman

10,939. Rajkumari Amrit Kaur and Mrs. Hamid Ali, you appeared before Sub-Committee C, and you handed in Memoranda marked 49 and 56 on behalf of the All-India Women's Conference, the Women's Indian Association and the National Council of Women in India. You were examined by Sub-Committee C in detail upon those Memoranda. Those Memoranda have been in the hands of the whole Committee and the Indian Delegation for some time, and the transcript of proceedings at the time of your examination by Sub-Committee C has also been in the hands of the whole Committee, and the Delegation and Members have had ample time to inform themselves of what you said in answer to the various questions put to you. Dr. Reddi, you were prevented from attending Sub-Committee C, but you appear now with the other ladies as responsible for these Memoranda?—(Dr. Reddi.) Yes.

10,940. At the time of your examination by Sub-Committee C it was arranged that you should have this opportunity of making a statement which I now invite you to deliver?—(Rajkumari Amrit Kaur.) We, the elected representatives of the three main Women's Organisations in India are glad that we have been given an opportunity of placing the Indian women's point of view before the Joint Select Committee. In the light of some of the questions asked of us the other day by members of the Sub-Committee before whom we were asked to appear for preliminary evidence, as also with a view to clarifying further our position as set forth in our Memorandum 2, and our recent supplementary statement bearing thereon, we wish to make a further statement, which together with the aforementioned will, we sincerely hope, meet with the earnest and careful consideration of the Joint Select Committee on Indian Constitutional Reform. Our Supplementary Statement has already given the members an idea we hope, of the representative nature of the organisations which we have the honour to represent. We would, while emphasising that these Associations have branches spread over the entire length and breadth of India (both British and Indian) also lay great stress on the democratic nature of the constitution of these organisations. In the All-India Women's Conference, for example, every delegate to our annual gatherings has to be elected by her constituency or sub-constituency in open meeting where every woman has the right to vote. These elected delegates, in their turn, elect for a period of one year the Office Bearers of the Central Committee at the Annual Sessions. The Central Committee meets twice a year, and in addition to the Chairwoman, Vice-Presidents, Secretaries and Conveners of Sub-Committees, consists of the Standing Committee members of each constituency who, again, have been elected for the year by the constituency they represent. Work is unremittingly carried on throughout the year, and a perusal of the Annual Reports of our Organisations, which we have pleasure in submitting, will apprise the members of the Joint Select Committee of the nature and wide scope of our activities. We have no subscription for our membership of millions of women, because we want every woman—however poor she may be—to feel that she is taking an active part in our meetings. We have stressed this point in order to prove that we do represent the opinion of the womanhood of India as a whole. And here, while acknowledging our immense gratitude to those men and women in Britain who have worked for our cause, we still maintain that it is we organised women of India who, by our experience and inner knowledge of the present conditions in our country, have the primary right not only of voicing the opinion of Indian women, but also of knowing what measures are most suited to ameliorate our conditions. The question of Franchise for women and their status in the new constitution of India, has exercised our minds greatly during the past three years for it is a matter that concerns in a vital manner the entire womanhood of our country. Our organisations have throughout stood for Adult Franchise, or, failing that, any system based thereon which would—after a short transitional period—lead to the goal which has been universally recognised as the ultimate desideratum. We still adhere to our opinion that Adult Suffrage is the only logical and desirable method of fairly enfranchising a whole people and, if it had been accepted, as we suggested, by means of the Group System for the first few elections, all the differential qualifications and resort to expedients divorced from basic principles, and the welter of communalism in which our country is to be further embroiled, by means of not only a cumbersome but an exceedingly expensive machinery, would have been avoided. We would still press, if we could, for a reconsideration of these proposals, for we have not been convinced that they are either administratively impracticable or financially impossible. Before any reference to the alternative proposals which we have now proffered (as Adult Franchise or any system based thereon has been definitely ruled out) we should like, briefly, to reiterate not only our unqualified disapproval of the main recommendations contained in the White Paper as touching the womanhood of India, but also prove how retrograde and unsatisfactory they are. We confess we are entirely at a loss to interpret the mentality of those responsible for these recommendations as they vary from Province to Province, and there seems to be no uniformity in them. In the case of reservation of seats for women, several Provinces have been left out altogether. Differential educational qualifications have been recommended, a lower one for the most advanced Province educationally, and higher ones for those less advanced. Even the Motor and Vehicle Tax qualification, which will enfranchise a certain number of women all over India and could enfranchise many more who might not otherwise be eligible, has been recommended for Madras only. The wives and widows of those holding, or who would have held, educational qualifications have been wholly ignored, while those of the property holders only are recommended for enfranchisement. Well might the former have a very legitimate grievance and, even in the case of the latter, the condition of application that has been laid down will eliminate them almost entirely from being enfranchised in reality. In the Lower House of the Assembly (the main House where all remedial legislation concerning the whole of India must come) a system of indirect election for women has been proposed whereby we shall, of course, never be able to return our best women. No such proposal is made for any other class or community in India. In the Upper House there seems to be no place whatsoever for women. As far as numbers are concerned, we cannot but be depressed rather than heartened when succeeding Committees and Commissions, instead of progressing pari passu with the rapid advance of India's women, have, on the contrary, taken retrograde steps. The Simon Commission recommended our ratio to men voters in the proportion of 1 to 2. The Indian Franchise Committee brought it down to 1 to 4½, and the White Paper has further decreased it to 1 to 7. We will also have you remember that this 1 to 7 is on paper, and will, in practice, work out at 1 to 15, probably, in the Provincial Councils and 1 to 20, or even less, for the Federal Assembly. It seems almost as if they are ostensibly giving with one hand on paper and taking away with the other in reality. Taking the White Paper as a whole, we are irresistibly led to the conclusion that its recommendations have been conceived in the narrow atmosphere of Provincialism rather than in an All-India spirit. The alternative proposals now proffered by us after mature consideration have appeared to us to be what we might describe as a "second best" under what is going to be a very restricted franchise for India. In the framing of them we have kept in mind six main principles:—

2^o August, 1933.] Rajkumari AMRIT KAUR, Dr. MUTHULAKSHMI [Continued.
REDDI and Mrs. HAMID ALI.

2^o August, 1933.] Rajkumari AMRIT KAUR, Dr. MUTHULAKSHMI [Continued.
REDDI and Mrs. HAMID ALI.

(1) the recognition, ab initio, of women's rightful place in the Constitution, (2) the numbers of women enfranchised, (3) the strength and quality of the woman's vote, (4) as few differential qualifications between men and women as possible, (5) the simplification of administrative difficulties in the preparation of electoral rolls, and (6) the avoidance for ourselves of entrance into the Communal arena. We are grieved to note (1) That no effort has been made by those responsible for the White Paper, to abolish sex disqualification and thereby give to women their rightful place in the future Constitution of our country. If, as we have been so often told, by those in authority, the Government is really anxious to give women free and full opportunities of service to the country, we urge that there must be a clear pronouncement, either in the Declaration of Fundamental Rights—if there is to be one—or in the Instrument of Instructions—or in whatever manner selected by them on a Statutory basis to the effect that there shall be "equal rights and obligations of all citizens without any bar on account of sex, and that no disability shall attach to any citizen by reason of his or her religion, caste, creed or sex in regard to public employment, office, or power or honour and in the exercise of any trade or calling." We are quite certain that this very natural desire on our part for a full and free recognition of our inherent right to citizenship must be conceded if we are to make a valuable contribution to the life of India in any sphere whatsoever. (2 and 3) We are naturally most desirous of placing as large a number of women as possible under the circumstances on the first electoral roll. We attach great importance—working as our Organisations are for reform in every sphere pertaining to our sex—to the numerical strength of the woman's vote. It, therefore, follows that when we are desirous of having this strength in numbers we must also, in an enormous country like India, and in the limited franchise that we are forced to have until Adult Suffrage is attained, see that it is a strength that will really count. In other words, that the woman's vote will be strong enough to enable them to return, not only women, but men of their choice to the Councils and Legislatures. This is a factor of vital importance to us when we are struggling to free ourselves from the social, educational and other disabilities under which we are suffering. Our reasons for advocating the "literacy" qualification are clearly set forth in our supplementary statement, but we feel we must bring to the notice of the Committee, that unless this qualification is given to all Provinces, women will be almost entirely debarred from coming on to the Electoral roll. We have also explained fully why we demand Adult Suffrage in Urban Areas. These, as they exist to-day, already include a large number of what are known as agricultural villages. Therefore, the contention that the Urban is going to be enfranchised at the expense of the Rural population is fallacious, and the fact that we are not asking for an increase in Urban seats in the Legislatures, is another argument in our favour. The reasons for our strong opposition to the enfranchisement of wives and widows of those holding the property qualification, are again clearly enunciated in our supplementary statement, and we do hope that the Committee will enter into our feelings with an impartial mind. For if they are, as they have repeatedly stressed, desirous of making the woman's voice heard in the future administration of India, the very limited numbers of women which are to be on the Electoral roll until such time as Adult Suffrage is attained must be those women whose vote will carry weight. (4) We have tried to place proposals that will create as few differential qualifications as possible between men and women, for that has been our standpoint from the very beginning. (5) Our suggestion that the Electoral roll for both Provincial and Federal Legislatures should be the same, will not only help to simplify administrative difficulties in abundant measure, but will also effectually decrease expenditure. This applies in equally strong measure to our proposal for Adult Suffrage in Urban areas. These are, therefore, potent arguments in favour of our proposals and will, if accepted, eliminate all the difficulties envisaged in preparing electoral rolls in the event of the wives and widows of property holders being enfranchised. (6) The Committee is fully aware of the united stand of the women of India against communal and separate electorates, as also against the reservation of seats which must, in the very nature of the White Paper proposals, be on a Communal basis. The Secretary of State in reply to a question by Miss Pickford on the 21st July, regarding reserved seats for women, said. "The communal question, of course, as she knows, does enter into the question of these women's seats very definitely." We wonder whether the full implication of this answer has been realised by the Members of the Committee, as it has by us. In practice it will mean that every woman will have to enter the Councils, or the Assembly, on a communal ticket. It follows that she will have necessarily to be loyal to that community, and in the event of any controversy arising as regards the passage of remedial legislation or any whittling down of the same which concerns the women of any particular community, the women of other communities will be debarred from giving their full support or otherwise in matters of outstanding importance to the entire womanhood of India. And, of course, we need hardly add that we shall not have the choice, of returning the women of our choice, either to our Councils, or to the Assembly. We women, are, therefore, determined not to let this spirit of separation, so highly detrimental to our national interests, enter into our ranks. Surely it must be recognised by all fair-minded people that to force us against our will into a room and tell us that the door is locked, is against all canons of justice. When the Secretary of State says that the Communal Award was forced on His Majesty's Government by all the communities in India, we would remind him, in all humility, that 47 per cent. of the population of India were never a party to it and will never accept it. It is a matter of extreme regret to us that our earnest and united and repeated demands have not met with any success. We are forced to wonder if any attempt has ever been, or ever will be made, to meet us in a spirit of co-operation. We have refused "reservation of seats" and advocated Joint Electorates from the very beginning because we were opposed to expedients on principle and did not want to find our place in the Councils of our country in a spirit of separation. We were content to have even fewer number of women in these Councils if we, at least, could keep out of the Communal tangle. Ostensibly, we are told that we are being given "reserved seats" simply because we shall not be returned in sufficient numbers to the Legislatures by the open door of election. We are confident that we will be returned, but leaving that for the moment, would it not have been possible for the British Government, if "reserved seats" had to be, to have had them through a system of direct election by joint electorates and on a non-communal basis? The British Government have openly said that they are not in favour of separate electorates, but that the inability of the manhood of our country to come to an agreement amongst themselves has forced the Communal Award on them. If they sincerely believe this, could they not stretch out the right hand of fellowship to an important half of India—may we say the better and wiser half—wiser politically, and, surely, more right morally, on this particular issue? Or must we come to the conclusion that the will to help is not there and that the womanhood of India does not really count and that woman's independence is to be sacrificed "to circumstances or to the needs of any particular community"? If the answer be in the affirmative, time alone can prove whether we women do, or do not count. All we can say is that, if the proposals contained in the White Paper are not radically altered in the light of what we have been privileged to enunciate, and if recommendations contrary in principle as well as in detail to our united demands are carried through in spite of our protests, the co-operation of the womanhood of India will certainly be alienated and there will be a country-wide agitation, the outcome of which it is difficult to forecast. We shall press forward undeterred and undaunted towards our goal, come what may, conscious of the justice of our cause and the certain hope of ultimate success, delayed though this may be by the many obstacles which seem to beset our path. Maxima est veritas et praevalabit. We appeal, therefore, in all earnestness and in all humility to the Joint Select Committee to focus the searchlight of truth on the principles underlying the demands of the womanhood of India as placed before you to-day by their elected representatives, and we sincerely pray that we may still count upon the proverbial sense of justice and fair play of Great Britain in dealing with this momentous issue.

2^o Augusti, 1933.] Rajkumari AMRIT KAUR, Dr. MUTHULAKSHMI [Continued.
REDDI and Mrs. HAMID ALI.

10,941. Dr. Reddi, do you desire to make a statement?—(Dr. Reddi.) No, I subscribe to the statement that has been made.

10,942. Mrs. Hamid Ali, have you anything to say?—(Mrs. Hamid Ali.) No; I entirely agree with the statement.

2° Augusti, 1933.] Rajkumari AMRIT KAUR, Dr. MUTHULAKSHMI [Continued.
REDDI and Mrs. HAMID ALI.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

10,943. Have you heard of the existence of a Varnashram Swaraja Sangha?—(Dr. Reddi.) Yes, we have heard of it through the Press.

10,944. Have you heard of it, Rajkumari?—(Rajkumari Amrit Kaur.) No, I have not.

10,945. Have you heard of it, Mrs. Ali?—(Mrs. Hamid Ali.) I have never heard of it.

10,946. Dr. Reddi, what have you heard about it?—(Dr. Reddi.) That it is composed of a very reactionary set of people who do not hold any modern view on many of the questions and problems that concern humanity.

10,947. Do they voice the feelings of the people of your Presidency?—Certainly not.

10,948. Do they voice the feelings of any considerable section of the people of your Presidency?—Certainly not.

10,949. One of the recommendations of that body is this. I will read it to you, and I want you to give your judgment upon its merits, and as voicing the feelings of the womanhood of India, you, the women of India. They say: "We want that our religion should be absolutely safeguarded. This can be done by enacting that the future Indian Legislatures (whether Federal or Provincial) shall be debarred from passing any measure affecting the personal law or the religious faith, practice, institutions and usages of any community." Do you subscribe to that?—I know, because I have been moving with all sections of women in our country and no section of women, to my knowledge, will subscribe to this view. This Association does not have women on their membership.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.

10,950. They say they have hundreds of thousands?—We have not heard about it. We tour about the country. We have branches in India. We have not read in the papers that there is any woman in this body.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar.

10,951. There are a number of social customs and usages in Hinduism which affect injuriously the status and rights of women, are there not?—Yes, there are. I would not call it religion. Perhaps somebody else would call it religion. It depends upon the individuals whether you call it religion or not.

10,952. You would desire the future Legislatures to pass ameliorative legislation or remedial legislation so as to remove these grievances of women?—Certainly.

10,953. And if the future Legislatures were to be deprived of the power of passing such remedial legislation, women's reform would not progress at all?—That is why we want to influence public election, and also we want to be returned to the Councils and Assemblies which are going to be law-making bodies.

10,954. Do you think if the Legislatures of the future were deprived of the power of passing such legislation, it would cause considerable resentment in the ranks of Indian women?—It would cause considerable harm.

Begum Shah Nawaz.

10,955. Rajkumari, am I right in concluding from your Memorandum, as well as from your statement, that if the rights of Indian women are safeguarded under the new Constitution, as individual members of the State, members of your organisations will be prepared to co-operate whole-heartedly in making the new reforms in India a success?—(Rajkumari Amrit Kaur.) May I ask for a little further elucidation of that question, because I have not followed Begum? I do not know exactly what she means.

10,956. I put a general question?—Yes, certainly, if our rights are safeguarded.

10,957. As individual members of the State?—Yes, if we are recognised, if our demanded and our inherent right of citizenship are recognised, of course.

Lord Irwin.

10,958. Rajkumari, in your statement several times you used the word "constituency"—the people were chosen by their constituency, sub-constituency, and so on?—Yes.

10,959. Could you give the Committee in a sentence an indication of what is the basis of the organisation, as expressed by that term?—Yes. Of course, you will find it very clearly stated in the All-India Women's Conference Report which I am submitting; but in our Provinces we have so many constituencies, and those constituencies divide themselves into so many sub-constituent areas; for instance, in the Punjab, we have what we call the Punjab Central Constituency, which includes Lahore and the surrounding districts. Then we have the Punjab East Constituency, which has its headquarters in Umballa and includes all the districts there, and then the Punjab North Constituency which would embrace Rawal Pindi and that side.

2^o August, 1933.] Rajkumari AMRIT KAUR, Dr. MUTHULAKSHMI [Continued.
REDDI and Mrs. HAMID ALI.

10,960. What I really wanted to get at was, what women are allowed to vote? Do you invite as many women as are interested in these questions to come, and whoever comes has a right to select their representative?—Yes; when we hold our meetings we place before them resolutions, having explained questions to them, of course, because a great number of women who come are really illiterate and not able to read newspapers; so we explain things to them. Then we place resolutions before them, or when it comes to electing delegates who go and vote for that constituency or sub-constituency at the annual session, every woman present has a right to vote.

Marquess of Zetland.

10,961. May I ask one question? Rajkumari, did I understand you correctly to say that the women of all communities are opposed to separate communal electorates?—Yes.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

10,962. Was not at one time the seclusion of women, the purdah, considered by many Muslim religious leaders to be a matter of religion?—(Mrs.

Hamid Ali.) It was at one time, but wrongly so. You remember in the very early stages of Islamic history purdah was not practised; it only came in later on. Purdah as it is understood in India is not a religious custom at all; it is only a customary custom.

10,963. I wanted to ask you whether, if, for instance, it was made penal for a Muhammadan woman to go out unveiled, if such a law had been in existence, and if the Government of the day had desired to remove this disability, would not the Muslim religious leaders of that time have said that this was interfering with their religion?—I have heard of such a law in Afghanistan and Persia, but I am bound to confess I have never heard of such a law in India.

10,964. You would not, therefore, allow the Legislative Authority of the Indian Legislature with regard to customs of this kind to be made dependent upon the will of any religious body?—No. I think when it is a matter of custom it should not be made into a religious question at all.

10,965. You would not make it dependent upon any particular class of religious leaders to say that this is a matter of religion and not of custom?—Certainly not.

Chairman.] We are greatly obliged to you, ladies, for having appeared before us to-day, and for having made such a clear statement. Thank you very much.

(The Witnesses are directed to withdraw)

Ordered. That this Committee be adjourned to to-morrow at half-past Ten o'clock.

DIE JOVIS, 3^o AUGUSTI, 1933.

Present:

Marquess of Zetland
 Marquess of Linlithgow.
 Marquess of Reading
 Earl Peel.
 Lord Ker (Marquess of Lothian).
 Lord Irwin.
 Lord Rankeillour.
 Lord Hutchison of Montrose
 Major Attlee.

Mr Butler.
 Major Cadogan.
 Sir Austen Chamberlain.
 Mr. Cocks.
 Sir Reginald Craddock
 Mr Davidson.
 Sir Samuel Hoare.
 Lord Eustace Percy
 Miss Pickford.

The following Indian Delegates were also present.—

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES

Rao Bahadur Sir Krishnama Chari.
 Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan.
 Sir Akbar Hydari.

Sir Mirza M. Ismail.
 Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.
 Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

His Highness the Aga Khan.
 Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
 Sir Hubert Carr.
 Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.
 Lt.-Col. Sir H. Gidney.
 Sir Hari Singh Gour
 Mr. M. R. Jayaker.
 Mr. N. M. Joshi.

Begum Shah Nawaz
 Sir Abdur Rahim.
 Sir Phiroze Sethna.
 Dr. Shafa' At Ahmad Khan.
 Sardar Buta Singh.
 Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas
 Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

THE MARQUESS of LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

The Chairman informed the Committee that he had received a letter from His Highness The Aga Khan informing him that most of the Delegates did not desire to ask for an unalterable date to be fixed for the termination of the period of consultation with the Delegation.

Mr. J. BHANDARI, Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED are called in and examined as follows:—

Chairman.

10,966. Dewan Bahadur Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya, you joined the Madras Civil Service in 1898 and after occupying various appointments in that Service became Dewan of Cochin in 1919. In 1926 you officiated as Director of Industries of Madras, and later on in the same year became a Member of the Central Public Service Commission. Since September, 1929, you have held the post of Vice-Chairman of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research. From June, 1922, to March, 1925, you held the special post of Commissioner for India at the British Empire Exhibition?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) Yes.

10,967. Mr. J. Bhandari, you are Accountant-General, Posts and Telegraphs; President of the Indian Officers' Association. You joined the Indian Finance Department in 1906. The posts which you have held include that of Additional Assistant Secretary to the Government of India in the Financial Department; Deputy Accountant-General, Central Revenues; Deputy Accountant-General, Posts and Telegraphs; Officiating Accountant-General in Bihar and Orissa and Bengal?—(Mr. Bhandari.) Yes.

10,968. Mr. Ghulam Mohammed, you are employed now in the Railway Accounts Service, and have been in that service since 1925. Before that you served in the Indian Audit and Accounts Service. Amongst other appointments that you have held are that of Assistant Director in the Finance Branch of the

3^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYABAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

Railway Board's Office, and also Deputy Secretary of the same?—(Mr. Moham-med.) Yes.

10,939. At the present time you are on foreign service with Bhopal State?—Yes.

10,970. You gentlemen are here on behalf of the Indian Officers' Association, and you hand in two Memoranda to the Committee which are marked No 51 and No. 52?—Yes. They are as follows:

MEMORANDUM 51. INDIAN OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION.

1. The Indian Officers' Association was formed and registered in 1923. The objects of the Association may be summed up as follows:—

(a) To render efficient and loyal service to the Crown and the Country.

(b) To foster a spirit of co-operation and esprit de corps among the members.

(c) To safeguard and promote the common interests of all the members of the Association.

(d) To represent to proper authorities the grievances of any member, members or class of members of the Association, as occasion may arise.

(e) To co-operate with other Associations having similar objects.

(f) And generally to do all such other acts, matters and things as may be necessary, incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects or any of them.

The Association is open to officers of the following Superior Civil Services.—

- (1) Indian Civil Service
- (2) Indian Forest Service.
- (3) Indian Educational Service.
- (4) Indian Agricultural Service.
- (5) Indian Service of Engineers.
- (6) Indian Veterinary Service.
- (7) Imperial Customs Service.
- (8) Indian Audit and Accounts Service.

(9) Superintendents and Class I of the Survey of India Department.

(10) The Superior Staff of the Geological Survey of India Department.

(11) The Superior Staff of the Postal and Telegraphic branches of the Post and Telegraph Department.

(12) The State Railway Engineering Service.

(13) The Superior Revenue Establishment of State Railways.

(14) The Superior Staff of the Mint and Assay Department.

(15) The Archaeological Department.

(16) The Zoological Survey of India.

(17) Indian Forest Engineering Service.

(18) Indian Meteorological Department.

(19) The Botanical Survey of India.

(20) The Department of Mines in India.

(21) The Controller of Patents.

(22) The Curator, Herbarium, Royal Botanical Garden, Sibpur, Howrah.

(23) General Central Service, Class I.

2. It is the only representative Association in India of the kind and includes members drawn from the various services mentioned above serving under the Central and the Provincial Governments. Its opinions and recommendations on all questions directly or indirectly affecting the Indian Officers have always received special consideration from the Government. The Association has had the privilege of giving evidence, both oral and written, before the Royal Commission of 1923 and the Indian Statutory Commission of 1928-29.

3. Before the Association makes its own submissions, it may be permitted to give a résumé of the proposals in the White Paper relating to the general conditions of service. The provisions for safeguarding pensionary rights have been discussed separately in paragraph 7 below.

As regards the persons appointed by the Secretary of State in Council, the conditions of their service, pay, allowances, discipline and conduct are at present regulated by that authority (vide Section 96 B (2) of the Government of India Act of 1919).

Among their existing rights set out in Appendix VII, Part I, of the White Paper is included the guarantee to persons appointed before the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919, of existing and accruing rights or compensation in lieu thereof (Section 96 B (2)). At present the guarantee is limited to such persons. In paragraph 182 of the White Paper, however, it is proposed that "every person appointed by the Secretary of State in Council, before the commencement of the Constitution Act will continue to enjoy all services rights possessed by him at that date or will receive such compensation for the loss of any of them as the Secretary of State may consider just and equitable." Paragraph 184 ibid further provides that "every person appointed by the Secretary of State will continue to enjoy all service rights existing as at the date of his appointment or will receive such compensation for the loss of any of them as the Secretary of State may consider just and equitable." This paragraph extends the right of compensation for the loss of career or prospects to persons to be recruited by the Secretary of State after the date of the Constitution Act.

3^o Augusti, 1933.]

[Continued.]

The corresponding proposals for officers not appointed by the Secretary of State in Council are not so clearly defined or unequivocal. Paragraph 191 of the White Paper states that every person in service at the commencement of the Constitution Act will continue to enjoy all service rights existing at that date. Paragraph 192, however, proposes that no such person serving in India in a civil capacity before the Constitution Act will have his conditions of service in respect of pay, allowance, pension or any other matter adversely affected, save by an authority in India competent to pass such an order on the 8th March, 1926, or with the sanction of such authority as the Secretary of State may direct.

4. The position that will emerge upon the introduction of the White Paper proposals will be briefly as follows —

All officers already appointed or to be appointed hereafter by the Secretary of State in Council will be effectively protected in the enjoyment of their rights. In case of loss of any of the rights, they will be entitled to such compensation as the Secretary of State may consider proper and equitable.

Officers appointed by the Governor-General in Council who are in service on the date of the Constitution will also be entitled to the continued benefit of the rules existing at that date; but the Secretary of State or such authority as may be nominated by him will have the power of modifying and amending the rules even if such modifications or amendments adversely affect the rights of such an officer. These officers in service on the date of the Constitution Act will, however, have such protection as may be afforded by the requirement that the conditions of service in respect of their pay, allowances, pension, or other matters may not be adversely affected save by an authority in India competent to pass such an order on the 8th March, 1926, or with the sanction of such authority as the Secretary of State may direct.

The effect of the White Paper proposals will thus be that officers appointed by the Secretary of State in Council will be entitled to compensation for any adverse alteration in the conditions of service rights while the others will not be entitled to such compensation.

It will be seen that paragraph 192 of the White Paper contains a provision which apparently cuts across the guarantee given in paragraph 191. Rule 9 (1) of Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules lays down that the previous sanction of the Secretary of State in Council is necessary to the making of rules which would affect adversely the conditions of service of persons already in service on the 8th March, 1926, unless the adverse modification is made with the consent of the individual concerned. This is an existing service right which is threatened with infringement as a result of the proposal at the end of paragraph 192 of the White Paper that "the sanction of such authority as the Secretary of State may direct" will be sufficient for the framing of rules to the disadvantage of this class of officers.

5. The Government of India Act of 1919 granted the right to compensation only to those officers appointed by the Secretary of State who were in service on the date of its passing, but it has now been proposed to extend it to officers who have been appointed since or who may be appointed hereafter. In 1919, the object obviously was only to safeguard the existing rights of officers then in service, but the proposal to extend this right even to officers to be appointed after the Constitution Act manifestly indicates that the framers of the White Paper do not have only that object in view.

6. The Association has been at pains to discover the reasons which have possibly moved the framers of these proposals to make such pointed distinction between officers appointed by the Secretary of State and officers not so appointed. The main reason for granting effective protection—effective because of the admission of the claim to compensation—to officers is that they should be able to perform their duties without any fear of encroachment upon their rights by any authorities, legislative or executive, that would be set up as a part of the new Constitution. This, however, does not explain the proposed distinction between officers appointed by the Secretary of State and officers not so appointed. It cannot be maintained that there is any difference in the duties that will be performed by these two classes of officers. Nor can it be maintained that the general change in the conditions of employment will be more operative in the case of the former than in that of the latter. It follows, therefore, that the measure of protection should be uniform for all officers whether appointed by the Secretary of State or otherwise who are in service on the date of the passing of the Constitution Act. Any action that fails to conform to this will prove detrimental to the esprit de corps and efficiency of the services.

3^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

7. In paragraph 186 of the White Paper it is proposed that officers appointed by the Secretary of State should have their pensions and analogous rights completely safeguarded by the incorporation of a provision in the Constitution Act that no amending rules to their disadvantage can be framed even by the Secretary of State. From paragraph 192 of the White Paper it appears that so far as officers not appointed by the Secretary of State are concerned, the existing position is that the conditions of pensions of such officers cannot be adversely affected save by an authority competent to pass such an order on the 8th March, 1926, except with the sanction of the Secretary of State. The pension rules in the Civil Service Regulations and the Superior Civil Service Rules make no difference between officers appointed by the Secretary of State and those not so appointed. The need for the security of pensions is as great in one case as in the other. Both have equal claims on Government. The Association submits that there is no reason to discriminate between the two classes.

8. The position of the Association is that under the new Constitution no distinction should be made between officers appointed by the Secretary of State subsequent to the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919, and the officers belonging to the Central Services Class I who are appointed by the Government of India. As far as officers appointed by the Secretary of State before the commencement of that Act are concerned, their rights are guaranteed in Section 96 B. As regards later recruits, however, the Association considers that in the best interests of the future administration of the country, no distinction should be made between the Services mentioned and that the ultimate control of them should be vested in the Governor-General acting on the advice of the Central Public Service Commission.

In making this request, the Association is asking for no more than what has been already promised in unmistakable terms by His Majesty's Secretary of State for India to the members of the Indian Civil Service and every other Indian Service.

My Association would invite a reference to the assurances given by the Secretary of State to the members of the Indian Medical Service as reported in the "Statesman" of the 17th June, 1932, and to the members of the Indian Civil Service as reported in the "Statesman" dated the 24th June, 1932. In addressing the members of the Indian Civil Service, Sir Samuel Hoare remarked, "(My answer to you is that the British Government is going to keep in the letter and in the spirit every contract that has been made with you as with every other Indian Service."

MEMORANDUM 52. SUPPLEMENTARY MEMORANDUM BY THE INDIAN OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION.

NOTE by Mr J. G. Bhandari, Accountant-General Posts and Telegraphs, President of the Indian Officers' Association, on the position of the Indian Audit and Accounts Service under the new Constitution.

1. The Indian Audit and Accounts Service is likely to be affected much more than any other superior service by the Constitutional changes contemplated and the position was fully explained to the Government of India by my Association in their letter dated 30th August, 1932 (Annexure A) It will be seen therefrom that with the introduction of Provincial Autonomy radical changes may be made in the future organisation of a Service which has produced a class of efficient and experienced Audit Officers with high traditions of public service, who have contributed materially to the success of the financial administration of the country. The Association would therefore strongly urge that the problem might be solved somewhat on the lines indicated in para. 6 of its letter dated the 30th August, 1932, to the Government of India referred to above.

3^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

2. An independent and efficient audit under the reformed constitution is a matter of most vital importance for the good Government of the country. If the control of the Legislature is to be effective, there must be an agency in the machinery of the country to see that the higher administrative authorities and the officers subordinate to them do not act in excess of the financial powers conferred on them by the legislature.

3. The fundamental object of the Audit Department is "to save the tax-payers' money by seeing that expenditure is not irregularly and wastefully incurred, i.e., the safeguarding of economy, efficiency, and propriety in public finance." In devising their administrative machinery, most of the Western countries have taken special pains to secure this object. A note giving a brief outline of the systems of audit obtaining in the Union of South Africa and Ireland, is attached (Annexure B) My committee trusts that the information given in the note will be helpful to the Joint Select Committee in determining the position of audit in the administrative machinery of India under the new Constitution.

Annexure A

Indian Officers' Association,
Indian Museum,
Calcutta, 30th August, 1932.

From

The Joint Honorary Secretary and Treasurer,
Indian Officers' Association,

To

The Secretary to the Government of India, Home Department, Simla.

SIR,

I am directed by the Executive committee of the Indian Officers' Association to invite your attention to paragraphs

10 and 11 of the Report of the Federal Finance Committee from which it appears that on the introduction of a Federal form of Government in the country it is proposed to transfer to the provinces the liability for audit and accounts in the various provinces. Details in reference to the proposed transfer are not available in the report and it is not clear whether the cost alone for the Audit and Accounts Service would be transferred to the provinces, the present organisation remaining unchanged, or whether the provinces will take over the entire administration of the Provincial Audit and Accounts Departments.

2. There can be no question that with the grant of provincial autonomy the legislatures of the various provinces will have full control of the revenues of the provinces and that they should exercise this control by voting grants to enable the Executives to carry on the administration of the provinces. The power of voting money "would be valueless, unless the Legislature were assured that the Executive was spending the voted money for the purpose for which it was voted. Even, therefore, if one were to set aside the possibility of an auditor finding it to be his duty to challenge an abuse of their position by high officials in applying public money to objects, the utility of which might be open to serious question from the point of view of the tax-payer, it must be evident that the control of the Legislatures would be merely nominal, if they were not assured of a powerful and independent audit, free to bring to their notice diversions of voted funds, without interference or influence from the Executive."

3. The position of audit in the administrative machinery of this country is peculiar. The fundamental object of an audit department is "to save the tax-payers' money by seeing that expenditure is not irregularly and wastefully incurred, i.e., the safeguarding of economy, efficiency and propriety in public finance." The duties of the audit department become more and more responsible and onerous with every extension of reforms and consequent devolution of powers to the authorities in India, and the efficiency of the audit under the changed conditions in India is a matter of the most vital importance both for the good government of the country and the future of present incumbents in the Service.

4. The independence of audit is also of paramount importance. As Durell points out in his well-known book "Parliamentary Grants," this feature, "the independence of the auditor's position is of the highest importance, when the need of such duties, which require impartiality and fairness is considered. He is able to draw attention to irregularities in the accounts and thus possibly bring discredit on the Executive without any danger of his position being jeopardised or his future powers restricted." The true value of an audit, independent of the executive, is not to be gauged by the irregularities which it actually discovers but by the certain effects of the knowledge that the auditor can and without fear or favour report them if they come to his notice. That knowledge constitutes in itself the most effective security against irregularity. With further extension of reforms, Audit would be invested with higher and higher responsibilities and would have to devote more attention to broader principles of legitimate public finance and to the manner in which the various Executive officers undertake their more important financial responsibilities.

3^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

5. In the scheme of full provincial autonomy anything like outside control for purposes of audit would be an anachronism. Theoretically, therefore, each autonomous Provincial Government must make its own arrangements for an audit agency, independent of the Executive, but responsible to the Legislature. Each Provincial Legislature would ordinarily pass an Exchequer and Audit Act which would recognise the position of the Principal Auditor and guarantee his salary and that of his staff. Like his English prototype, although he would not be an officer of the Legislature, he would be one of the important officers acting on its behalf. He would be appointed by the Crown and like Judges of the High Court would hold office during good behaviour.

Theoretically this seems to be an ideal arrangement, but it is open to the criticism that an audit service recruited on a provincial basis will be far less efficient than the present service constituted on an all-India basis. If the audit service is provincialised, the field for the selection of candidates in the various provinces will be very limited, and this will naturally result in a lowering of the tone and a corresponding loss in the efficiency of the service.

6. The present organisation of the service on an all-India basis under the administrative control of an officer whose position is recognised by statute and who is, so far as audit functions are concerned, independent of the Executive Government of India, has produced a class of efficient and experienced audit officers with high tradition of public service and this has contributed much to the success of the financial administration of India. The question whether the present organisation which has proved so efficient in the past should not be adopted so as to fit in with the changed conditions should engage the serious consideration of the authorities. It may at first sight seem that the very idea of an audit service recruited on an all-India basis by the Federal Government is inconsistent with the theoretical paramountcy of the component autonomous states of the Federal System in matter of Provincial financial organisation and control, but this difficulty may perhaps be solved by mutual arrangement between the autonomous Provincial Governments and the Federal Government. The paramountcy of the component autonomous states would not be impaired if the Provincial Governments were to request the Federal Government to act on their behalf in the matter of recruitment and control of the audit service through the Federal Public Services Commission. The arrangement proposed is somewhat similar to that contemplated in rule 12 of the Devolution Rules under which a Local Government has to employ a number of Indian Medical officers in such appointments and on such grounds and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State in Council. There will, however, be this difference that the number and terms of appointments in the case of the Indian Audit Service will be settled by mutual agreement between the Provincial and the Federal Governments, and so far as Provincial audit is concerned, the Principal audit officer of the Province will derive his authority from the Provincial and not the Federal Government.

7. The present organisation of the Audit and Accounts Service as a Central Service has produced a class of efficient and experienced audit officers with high traditions of public service and this in the opinion of the Executive Committee of my Association, has contributed materially to the success of the financial administration of the country. This has only been possible as Audit has been statutorily recognised as being practically independent of the Executive Government of the country. My Committee would, therefore, strongly urge that the existing efficient organisation should be utilised as far as possible in the future Administration.

3^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

8. My Committee hopes that the contents of this letter will receive a careful and sympathetic consideration at the hands of the Government of India and that, if necessary, the letter will be forwarded to proper authorities for further consideration in reference to the proposed changes in the Constitution.

I have the honour to be

Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

BAINI PRASHAD.

Joint Honorary Secretary and Treasurer,
Indian Officers' Association.

Annexure B.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

92.—1. In each province there shall be an auditor of accounts to be appointed by the G.-G. in Council

2 No such auditor shall be removed from office except by the G.-G. in Council for cause assigned, which shall be communicated by message to both Houses of Parliament within one week after the removal, if Parliament be then sitting and if Parliament be not sitting, then within one week after the commencement of the next ensuing session.

3. Each such auditor shall receive out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund such salary as the G.-G. in Council, with the approval of Parliament, shall determine.

4 Each such auditor shall examine and audit the accounts of the province to which he is assigned subject to such regulations and orders as may be framed by the G.-G. in Council and approved by Parliament, and no warrant signed by the administrator authorising the issuing of money shall have effect unless countersigned by such auditor.

132 The G.-G. in Council shall appoint a Controller and Auditor-General who shall hold office during good behaviour. Provided that he shall be removed by the G.-G. in Council, on an address praying for such removal presented to the G.-G. in Council by both Houses of Parliament. Provided further that when Parliament is not in session, the G.-G. in Council may suspend such an officer on the ground of incompetence or misbehaviour and when and so often such suspension shall take place, a full statement of the circumstances shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after the commencement of its next session; and if an address shall at any time during the session of Parliament be presented to the G.-G. in Council by both Houses praying for the restoration to office of such officer, he shall be restored accordingly, and if no such address be presented, the G.-G. in Council shall confirm such suspension and shall declare the office of Controller and Auditor-General to be and it shall thereupon become vacant. Until Parliament shall otherwise provide, the Controller and Auditor-General shall exercise such powers and functions and undertake such duties as may be assigned to him by the G.-G. in Council by regulations framed in that behalf.

IRELAND.

35 Dail Eirean, shall in relation to the subject matter of Money Bills as herein defined have legislative authority exclusive of Seanad Eirean.

A Money Bill means a Bill which contains only provisions dealing with all or any of the following subjects, namely, the imposition, repeal, remission, alteration or regulation of taxation; the imposition, for the payment of debt or other financial purposes, of charges on public moneys or the variation or repeal of such charges; supply, the appropriation, receipt, custody, issue or audit of accounts of public money, the raising or guarantee of any loan or the repayment thereof; subordinate matters incidental to those subjects or any of them. . . .

The Chairman of Dail Eirean shall certify any bill which in his opinion is a Money Bill to be a Money Bill, but if within three days after a Bill has been passed by Dail Eirean, two-fifths of the members of either House by notice in writing addressed to the Chairman of which they are members so require, the question whether the Bill is or is not a Money Bill shall be referred to a Committee of Privileges consisting of three members elected by each House with a Chairman who shall be the senior judge of the Supreme Court able and willing to act and who in case of equality of votes, but not otherwise shall be entitled to vote. The decision of the Committee on the question shall be final and conclusive.

62. Dail Eirean shall appoint a Comptroller and Auditor-General to act on behalf of the Irish Free State (Saorstát Eirean). He shall control all disbursements and shall audit all accounts of moneys administered by or under the authority of the Oireachtas and shall report to Dail Eirean at stated periods to be stated by law.

3^o August, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Article 63.

The Comptroller and Auditor-General shall not be removed except for stated misbehaviour or incapacity on resolutions passed by Dail Eirean and Seanad Eirean. Subject to this provision the terms and conditions of his tenure of office shall be fixed by law. He shall not be a member of the Oireachtas nor shall he hold any other office or position of emolument.

Note.—Parliament of the Irish Free State is called and referred to in the Constitution Act as the Oireachtas.

10,971. Do you desire to make any statement at this stage, or any corrections in your Memoranda?—(Mr. Bhandari.) No.

Chairman.] I shall give the Committee an opportunity of examining you on your Memoranda.

Sir Samuel Hoare.] I will withhold any questions.

Marquess of Reading.] May I ask one question, Secretary of State: What is the Order of the 8th March, 1926, referred to in the White Paper?

Sir Samuel Hoare.] It is the date of the Devolution Rule under which the Provinces were given certain powers over certain Civil Servants in certain Services.

Marquess of Reading.] Thank you

Mr. F. S. Cocks.

10,972. In Proposal 192, referring to the point which was raised by Lord Reading, do you wish that to be modified? Do you wish that qualification, "Save by an authority in India competent to pass such an Order on the 8th March, 1926," to be deleted or modified in any way?—No, Sir. You notice the difference between the wording of Proposals 191 and 192. Proposal 191 deals with Officers appointed by the Secretary of State, and says "Every person in those Services . . . will continue to enjoy all service rights existing." In Proposal 192, broadly speaking, the position is the same, but they go on to add after that: "with the sanction of such authority as the Secretary of State may direct." What we want is the same protection as regards pension and other conditions of service to apply to them as in the case of other servants?—(Sir T. Vijayarghavacharya.) If you omit in Proposal 192 all the words from "save by an authority" to the end it would meet our wishes.

Sir Samuel Hoare.

10,973. The effect of that is to take away something from the Secretary of State's Services. Is not that so?—The intention is to put the Central Services on the same plane as the other Services.

Marquess of Reading.

10,974. To put all the Services on the same footing?—Yes, exactly.

10,975. You want them all to be put on the same footing as those appointed by the Secretary of State in Council, for all the Services?—Yes.

10,976. And do away with the distinction made now between those appointed by the Governor-General in Council and otherwise, and those appointed by the Secretary of State in Council. That is the whole point?—That is the whole point.

Sir Samuel Hoare.

10,977. You desire to do that by bringing your protection up to the standard of the protection of the Secretary of State's Services?—No, it is only in the particular Proposal we want it, because our general idea as expressed in our Memorandum is put in the final paragraph. Our general scheme is put in the final paragraph of our Memorandum, paragraph 8. That represents the views of the Association.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,978. If you omit the words "save by an authority in India competent to pass such an Order on the 8th March, 1926," you would be withdrawing from those authorities the control over the conditions of service which they at present possess, would you not?—Read with our general principle as put in paragraph 8 of our Memorandum, it will come to this, that both sets of Services, whether appointed by the Secretary of State, or by the Governor-General in Council, will have their conditions of service affected by the same authority in the same manner.

10,979. Yes, but are they under exactly the same authority at the present time?—No, they are not.

10,980. Under the Order of 8th March, 1926?—No, they are not. We are only proposing a change in the future.

3^o August, 1933.] Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

10,981. Your Services are at present—?—Under the control of the Governor-General. What we propose is that for the future all the Services should be placed under the control of the Governor-General. What we would like is what is said in paragraph 8 of our Memorandum, that is to say, that for the future all the Services should be placed under the control of the Governor-General, the final authority should be the Governor-General advised by the Public Service Commission. That is our contention as put in paragraph 8.

Sir Austin Chamberlain.

10,982. I understand. Now may I put again the question that I put to you before. If these words, "save by an authority in India competent to pass such an Order on the 8th March, 1926," are deleted, will you not be withdrawing from those authorities a right of control which they now possess, and transferring their right of control to the Governor-General?—Yes; there is that possibility. That would be met by putting in the words, "save by the Governor-General after advice from the Public Service Commission."

Sir Samuel Hoare.] I do not think that does save it at all. I cannot see that that saves it at all.

Lord Irwin.

10,983. You would be changing the authority, would you not?—The determining authority would be the Governor-General.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,984. At the present time the authority which decides is a Provincial authority?—(Mr. Bhandari.) No, not in the case of the Central Services. (Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) They are under the Governor-General. (Mr. Bhandari.) We represent the Central Services, Class I, and some of the All-India services.

10,985. Under the Order do I understand that, as far as those for whom you speak are concerned, the Order of the 8th March, 1926, makes the Governor-General the controlling authority?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) Yes, the controlling authority, the final authority, except in respect of those officers or members of our Association who have been appointed by the Secretary of State. Our Association consists, broadly, of two classes of persons. Those members who have been appointed by the Secretary of State and members appointed by the Governor-General. There are two classes. We represent really two classes.

10,986. I am puzzled. If the authority is already the Governor-General under the Order of March 8th, 1926, it will remain the Governor-General even though these words be left in Proposal 192. If it is not already the Governor-General then you are transferring to the Governor-General a power at present possessed by some other authority?—If you will look at the last proviso you will see there is a possibility of delegation. (Mr. Bhandari.) Our objection is against the last clause, "with the sanction of such authority as the Secretary of State may direct." We do not want that the delegation should go further, that is the point.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

10,987. Is it the words, "or with the sanction of such authority as the Secretary of State may direct" that you wish deleted?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) Yes; I am sorry for the misunderstanding; it was my fault.—(Mr. Bhandari.) Only the last clause.

10,988. You wish the words, "save by an authority in India competent to pass such an order on the 8th March, 1926" to stand?—Yes, and beyond that we wish to be deleted.

10,989. And the later words to be deleted?—Yes

Sir Samuel Hoare.

10,990. May I take that a step further? What kind of posts have you got in mind? The posts will be in the Central or the Federal field. How is it possible that posts of that kind should be delegated to the Provincial authorities?—(Mr. Bhandari.) We have no idea. That clause is rather vaguely worded. We do not know what the intention is.

Marquess of Reading.

10,991. Do these words, "or with the sanction of such authority as the Secretary of State may direct" introduce something new?—Yes

10,992. Something which is not at present in existence?—Yes, that is exactly the position.

3^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

10,993. They give a wide scope to the Secretary of State which is not defined?—Yes

10,994 It is left absolutely to the discretion of the Secretary of State and that is introducing something which has not been hitherto in existence?—That is exactly the point.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.] Is it not the present position?—No, it is not.

Lord Eustace Percy.

10,995 We seem to be getting into some confusion. Section 192 of the White Paper refers to all officers appointed by all authorities other than the Secretary of State. I gather that the proposals of the witnesses refer only to Class I of the Central Services and do not refer to any officers now appointed by Provincial Governments?—Our Association does not represent that class of officers.

10,996 Your Association does not represent any of the Provincial Services?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) If you will kindly turn to the first page of the Memorandum that shows it.

10,997. You mention the Indian Educational Service? Do you mean only the All-India Educational Service?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) There is a little difficulty there. There are officers of the All-India Services who are employed under Provincial Governments. The officers of the All-India Services employed in the Provinces will come under that, but there are also purely Provincial officers recruited and employed by the Provincial Governments. Our case applies both to officers appointed by the Governor-General in Council as also to officers of the All-India Services employed in the Provinces.

10,998. But not to any officers appointed by the Provinces?—No, not the Provincial officers

Sir Samuel Hoare] Lord Eustace has brought out the point that needed to be brought out, namely, that our words cover both delegations in the Centre and delegations in the Provinces I understand the witnesses are interested only in delegations in the Centre.

Marquess of Reading

10,999. Is that quite right? Do the witnesses agree? I understand from one of the witnesses it might be delegations in the Centre and also in the Provinces, but not officers appointed by the Provincial Governments. That is what I took the answer to Lord Eustace Percy's question to be. Was not that right?—(Mr. Bhandari.) Yes, that is right.

11,000. Then it would cover more than the Secretary of State said. The superior officers are appointed by the Central Government or by the Secretary of State?—Yes.

11,001. Although they are serving in the Provincial Governments?—Yes. (Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya) Yes.

Sir Samuel Hoare.

11,002. The point is this, in a sentence If the witnesses are thinking of the Central posts, obviously those posts must be left with the Governor-General?—Yes.

11,003. There is no question of delegation there at all. If they are thinking of the Provincial posts there must be some power for delegation to the Provincial Governments?—(Mr. Bhandari.) We were thinking only of the Centre. (Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) There are also officers of the All-India Services employed under the Provincial Governments. There is a third class of officers.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

11,004. In the case of Provincial officers, are you against the Secretary of State delegating to the Provincial Government?—No.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

11,005. Do you mean the Governor-General in Council or the Governor-General at his discretion?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) We mean this Assuming that in the case of an officer of the Central Services, Class I, an order of punishment is passed upon him by the Central Government, which would mean under the future Constitution a Minister acting with the Governor-General, the final appeal we want to rest in the Governor-General advised by the Public Services Commission.

11,006. The Governor-General at his discretion?—As informed by the Public Services Commission.

11,007. Is that the view of your Association?—That is the view of our Association.

Lord Eustace Percy.

11,008 What are these officers who are appointed by the Central Government and who would I understand continue to be appointed by the Central Government, and who are not members of the Indian Civil Service?—You will find a

3^o August, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

list of such officers on the first page of our Memorandum.

11,009. I beg your pardon, surely not?—Some of them.

11,010. Those Services include a large number of provincially appointed officers?—(Mr. Bhandari.) No.

Lord Eustace Percy.] What is the class of officer which is still appointed by the Central Government?

Sir Samuel Hoare.] To give the most conspicuous example: Customs.

Lord Eustace Percy.] The Customs and Income Tax Services?

Sir Samuel Hoare.] Yes.

Lord Eustace Percy.] In so far as they are not Members of the Indian Civil Service?

Sir Samuel Hoare.] Yes

Rao Bahadur Sir Krishnama Chari.] Railway Services.

Mr. Cocks.] My Lord Chairman, on a point of order, do I understand from the Secretary of State that the words "such authority" mean Provincial Government?

Sir Samuel Hoare.] Yes, in actual practice, they do mean that.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] May I ask a question, because I thought I understood and now I feel sure I do not? What is the change which the Secretary of State intends to make? There are, as I understand, certain officers who at present will have a right of appeal to the Governor-General, and, under the Witness's proposal, to the Governor-General advised by the Public Services Commission; but the Secretary of State proposes to reserve the right to transfer some of them to the authority of the Provincial Government, excluding the authority of the Governor-General, or the Governor-General advised by the Public Services Commission. Is that so?

Sir Reginald Craddock.] Might I put a point in connection with that? I understand that whereas hitherto the Accountant-Generals and their assistants have been in the Central Service, they have now become Provincial Service Officers under the Provincial Autonomy scheme?—(Mr. Bhandari.) We cannot say what the position will be about that.

Sir Akbar Hydari.] Besides, there would be the Audit Service.

Marquess of Reading.] There must be an independent audit.

Sir Samuel Hoare.] What is intended is this, namely, that all officials appointed by the Governor-General will remain officials appointed by the Governor-General with the consequential guarantees, whether they are employed in the Centre or whether they are employed in the Provinces. It is, however, necessary to have words of this kind, because over and above that position, under the present Devolution Rules, the Governor-General and the Centre retain residual powers over the Provincial Services. Those residual powers under Provincial Autonomy would have to be delegated to the Provincial Governments, but so far as the Centrally appointed Servants are concerned, their position will remain, with the guarantees from the Governor-General, whether they are in the Centre or whether they are in the Provinces.

Lord Rankenllour.] But, surely, these last words go further than the Secretary of State's intentions. On a strict construction, they would allow the Secretary of State, would they not, in combination, presumably, with the Provincial authority to derogate from the rights of certain officers, whose rights the Secretary of State wishes to be conserved?

Sir Samuel Hoare.] If they do go further, we must have them more accurately drafted. This is not, after all, an Act of Parliament

Dr B. R. Ambedkar.] May I draw the attention of the Committee to the point raised by Lord Reading as to the present position of the power of the Secretary of State to delegate? I find under the classification Rules, Part V, in the Government of India Act, page 9, the power of delegation is at present vested in the Secretary of State. In the case of the Central Services, Class 1 and also Class 2, it is distinctly laid down, in Rule 33, that the power over these Services is hereby delegated to the Governor-General and the Secretary of State and the same clause is repeated under 37. Part V, dealing with Central Services, Class 2, so, as a matter of fact, there is really no innovation.

Mr Cocks

11,011 We have been referring up to now to officers appointed before the commencement of the Constitution Act. What are your exact proposals regarding officers appointed after the commencement of the Constitution Act?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) For officers appointed after the commencement of the Constitution Act, I should like the

3^o August, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

Governor-General to be the ultimate authority.

11,012. For all classes of officers?—All classes of officers.

Lord Eustace Percy.

11,013. All classes of centrally appointed officers?—Yes, to be appointed after the Constitution Act.

Mr. Cocks.

11,014 In paragraph 4 of your memo. you say: "The effect of the White Paper proposals will thus be that officers appointed by the Secretary of State in Council"—that is after the Constitution Act comes into being—"will be entitled to compensation for any adverse alteration in the conditions of Service rights whilst the others will not be entitled to such compensation". Who are the others?—(Mr. Bhandari) If you refer to Section 96 B (2) of the Government of India Act, you will find the others. (Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) I can state the point, if you like. It refers to officers appointed by the Secretary of State. They may be officers appointed by the Governor-General and those will not be entitled to compensation under the White Paper—officers not appointed by the Secretary of State—officers appointed by some authority other than the Secretary of State.

11,015. But you want them to have rights of compensation the same as the others?—As a matter of fact, I have drafted a few words about it. What we want is that in future all classes of officers, if they feel any alterations in their conditions of Service are likely to prejudice them, should be able to bring their case to the notice of the Public Services Commission which will go into the facts of the case, and they shall be dealt with equitably, to whatever Service they may belong.

11,016. The Public Services Commission will be the final authority, will it?—Practically, yes. The Governor-General will be the final authority, but he will act on their advice.

11,017. There is only one more question I want to ask, about something entirely different. I see your Association includes Members of the Indian Forests Service?—Yes.

11,018. Is there any truth in the suggestion which has been made to me that there is a difficulty in getting Indians into that Service?—No. I happen to have been a Member of the Public Services Commission, and for three years we recruited to the Indian Forests Service until the recruiting was stopped about one and a half years ago, and in all those years we found a very large number of Indian candidates who appeared. We put them through a very severe test, it included walking 15 miles a day, and that kind of thing, and they survived the test, our difficulty was to find enough posts to give them.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

11,019. As a matter of fact, there are a number of men who cannot find employment?—Yes.

Mr. Cocks.

11,020. It is not true that Indians are not naturally attracted by that sort of work?—No, it depends upon the temperament. It does not depend upon the race, it depends upon the persons, I think.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

11,021. May I ask one question, my Lord Chairman: In reply to Mr. Cock's question, you stated that even as regards the future recruits, you would like the final authority and the final control to be vested in the Governor-General. May I ask you whether you fear that even in the case of the future recruits, the responsible Government will not do justice to the people appointed by them?—No. My point is simply this. The first order will be passed in the case of Central officers by the Government, so that it would be wrong to give the appeal to the same authority. That is why I propose the Governor-General. It is not for any distrust of the Minister, but the Minister, having passed the original order which is appealed against, obviously it would not be right that he should hear the appeal himself, so I propose another authority, and the other authority naturally seems to be the Governor-General.

11,022. Are you aware that in no country in the world the responsible Government transfers its authority over its employees recruited by itself to any other authority?—I do not know. At once occurs to me, the case of the High Court Judges in England. The High Court Judges, I take it, are recruited by the Crown, but the Crown cannot remove them.

3^o August, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

11,023. The Crown cannot remove them. You want to be in the position of the High Court Judges?—No, I do not say that. You wanted some analogy, and I gave the nearest analogy I could think of; that is all.

11,024. It comes to this, that in the future even so far as recruits are concerned, who are not recruited either by the Secretary of State or by the Governor-General, but will be recruited by the future responsible Government, you want that they should not have the final control over the Services recruited by them?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) No, they would have the control. I only want that there should be a right of appeal to the Governor-General, because in all cases it is found desirable to have two minds instead of one. There is a chance of a miscarriage of justice, if only one mind is brought to bear upon a case, so it is right, I think, to provide for a right of appeal, and a right of appeal in the case of a Minister passing an order can only be to the Governor-General. I cannot think of any other authority.

11,025. I am sure you recognise that under the responsible Minister there will be heads of Departments. The first step will be taken not by the Minister but by the head of the Department?—No. There are cases of Central Services, Class I, of what are called gazetted officers to the Superior Services in whose case an order cannot be passed by the head of a Department; the order can be passed only by the Minister on the Report of the head of the Department.

11,026. But the Report will be of the head of the Department?—Yes; but even now there is a right of appeal. We do not want that we should be deprived of the right of appeal.

11,027. I am suggesting about future recruits—future recruits who will be recruited by the responsible Government?—I do not suggest that there is any want of responsibility in the Government or that wrong orders will be passed, but, human nature being what it is, I do think that when a man's whole career is at stake, it will be fair to give him a chance of appeal to another authority to look into the facts of the case and see whether the Minister was right in passing the order.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

11,028. May I ask a question arising out of this? The point that I want to put before you is this. First of all, I am admitting for the moment, and I think so far as I am concerned I agree with you, that there must be a right of appeal. Proceeding on that basis, I want to put to you this question first: Would you make it obligatory or would you give a right of appeal to a Civil Servant against every conceivable order passed, or would you give the right of appeal only in certain cases?—I would draft the words in the same way as the present Appeal Rules in the Public Services Commission's Rules are framed, that is to say, for instance, there are certain acts against which there are rights of appeal.

11,029. I am proceeding hypothetically generally: You would not say that in every case there should be a right of appeal?—No, in the cases where it now exists.

11,030. In certain cases, there should be a right of appeal?—Yes.

11,031. The next point I want to put to you is this. You said that having regard to human nature, it would not be proper to make the Minister an appellate authority, because he would be already the authority who would have passed the order in the first instance. I quite see the point. What I put to you is this: Supposing we had a procedure somewhat of this sort, that in those cases where the right of appeal is given to an aggrieved Civil Servant, the order of the Minister was treated as provisional only, and that in those cases where the right of appeal is given as a matter of right, it was made obligatory upon the Minister that no such order passed to the prejudice of a Civil Servant was made final unless the matter was submitted to the Public Services Commission, which had the authority to find the facts and so present a clear case, and then it is only on the findings as reported by the Public Services Commission that the order passed by the Minister was made final, would you object to that sort of procedure?—I do not think so, because finally it really gets the concurrence of two authorities, except that it is a matter of procedure for you to decide, if that is the more satisfactory way, or an appeal would be the more satisfactory way. We, personally, see no objection to what you suggest.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.] I have nothing more to add.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

11,032. May I ask your attention to Appendix No. VII to the White Paper, Part No. I, on page 120? That sets out the principal existing rights of officers appointed by the Secretary of State in Council. Now I understand from your Memorandum that your Association is open to the Indian Civil Service, and several other members of the Superior Central Services. Is that so?—There are members of it.

3^d August, 1933.] Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

11,033. Now I am asking you what is your opinion, speaking on behalf of your Association, about some of the rights which are mentioned at page 120? I will give you an instance Right No 11. "Provisions that posts borne on the cadre of All-Indian Services shall not be left unfilled for more than three months without the sanction of the Secretary of State in Council." Do you agree with the view of some of the politicians of India that in the future Constitution this right, if exercised, will cause considerable inconvenience to Provincial and Central Governments?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) I think I should vest the right in the Governor-General according to my general plan at paragraph 8 of my Memorandum.

11,034. You would, therefore, substitute the Governor-General for the Secretary of State?—Yes.

11,035. Then pass on to Right No. 13: "Sanction of the Secretary of State-in-Council to the modification of the cadre of a Central Service, Class I, which would adversely affect any office appointed by the Secretary of State-in-Council, to any increase in the number of posts in a Provincial Service which would adversely affect any person who was a member of a corresponding All-India service on 9th March, 1926, or to the creation of any specialist post which would adversely affect any member of an All-India Service, the Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment and the Indian Political Department." Have you any suggestions to make in connection with that?—Yes I would follow the same principle which I have adopted in the former case. I would vest the power in the Governor-General.

11,036. Now the next one, 14: "Personal concurrence of the Governor required to any order." I should like you to note the words "any order"—"affecting emoluments, or pension, any order of formal censure, or any order on a memorial"—would you desire a modification of these words?—This refers to the case of officers of All-India Services employed in the Provinces under the Governor.

11,037. It applies to all of them, whether they are employed in the Central Services or whether they are employed in the Provinces. I am asking you if these words "any order affecting," etc., stood, do you not think that would interfere considerably with the maintenance of full control by Provincial Governments over their employees?—I am inclined to think that that would be so, if you wanted the previous concurrence. My answer is that I would not require that previous concurrence so long as there is a right of appeal provided, for which I asked previously.

Mr M R. Jayaker,

11,038. If the right of appeal, which you just mentioned, was kept intact would you then desire a modification of this right?—I would.

11,039. In what way?—I would allow the Minister to pass the order so far as a certain number of orders are concerned—not all the orders contemplated there, but certain orders.

11,040. You would exclude administrative orders from the operation of this right?—Yes, broadly speaking.

11,041. You would restrict it to orders involving formal censure or dismissal or any thing of that nature?—Or affecting pay or pension.

11,042. But purely administrative orders you would exclude from its purview?—I would exclude purely administrative orders from the purview.

11,043. The next one "Personal concurrence of the Governor required to an order of posting on an officer of an All-India Service"—Do not you think it will seriously interfere with Provincial control?—Yes, I think it is unnecessary now.

11,044. Would you do away with it entirely?—Yes, I think in present conditions it is very unnecessary.

11,045. "16. Right of complaint to the Governor against any order of an official superior in a Governor's Province and direction to the Governor to examine the complaint and to take such action," etc. I am asking your attention to the words "any order". Do not you think they are too wide?—I really do not know what this exactly means.

11,046. Right of complaint to the Governor against any order?—There is the right of appeal, is there not?

11,047. This is not the right of appeal; it is a right of complaint?—I do not know what that means.

3^d August, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K B E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

11,048. The words are clear, "Right of complaint to the Governor against any order of an official superior". Do not you think it is a serious interference with Provincial control?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya.) I imagine it is wide in its phraseology, but I imagine some rules would be made under this to define it.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

11,049. Those rules must be consistent with the words of this clause. They could not be inconsistent?—I agree it appears to be too broad.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.] May I draw the attention of the Secretary of State to this with regard to Right No 16 in Appendix VII: It is stated in brackets that it is based upon Section 96 B (1). I find the second paragraph of that Section 96 B (1) deals with an order in a case in which an officer considers himself wronged, and not "any order", and that must be corrected if I mistake not.

Sir Samuel Hoare.] I should have thought it would have been much more convenient to defer these questions to me until I give evidence in October. I shall be quite ready to give answers to these detailed questions then.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.] I thought this clause was somewhat wider than in the Act.

Marquess of Reading.] Will you make Proposal No. 192 a little plainer to us?

Sir Samuel Hoare.] Certainly.

Marquess of Reading.] I am willing to wait until we have the Secretary of State's examination.

Sir Samuel Hoare.] I think it is much better, now that we have the three Indian gentlemen here, that they should give evidence.

Lord Eustace Percy.] This point was raised by me with Sir John Kerr, who said he understood this provision to refer to cases only of personal wrong.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.] That is so.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] It may help the Secretary of State, when he gives evidence, to meet the difficulty which is being pointed out. I have no desire to embarrass the Secretary of State, but this is the first time that we have an opportunity of having the Indian Officers' point of view and I am anxious to know, what is their opinion about the possibilities of working out such a rule. I have no desire to raise any kind of constitutional conundrums with the witnesses. One of the rights which is claimed on the part of the superior services is the right to compensation in the event of the abolition of a superior post like the Commissioner of a District. What is your view about this right?—My view is that ordinarily no claim to compensation should arise where selection posts are abolished, but where, in Lord Peel's words (I refer to the despatch which has been published) administrative changes result in a loss of selection appointments so considerable as seriously to prejudice reasonable prospects, there should be a claim to compensation. I would add to this, that in each case where an officer claims that the case falls within these words of Lord Peel, the case should be stated to the Public Service Commission and its opinion ought to be taken, whether the case really comes within those words or is merely a case of ordinary abolition.

11,050. In any case, you would not allow the claim until it was considered by the Public Services Commission?—Quite.

Lord Irwin.

11,051. You would make the Public Services Commission the final arbiter of that?—Yes, I would make the Public Services Commission the final arbiter of that.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

11,052. Speaking generally about Part I, to which I have been drawing your attention, would you desire a reconsideration of all these rights so that administrative control by Provincial Governments over their employees, even if such employees belonged to the Central Superior Services, may in no way be rendered weak?—Yes; I am voicing the Indian Officers' point of view, which is that the administration of the future government should be facilitated. The view of the Indian Officers is that, as far as possible, the new administration should be set easily on its way, and its work should be made easy, subject to rights of individual officers being protected in the way in which I have pointed out in reply to detailed questions.

Sir Samuel Hoare.

11,053. Are you aware that all these rights about which Mr. Jayaker is now asking you questions are existing rights?—Yes. This schedule is a statement of existing rights, but certain things he

3^o August, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED

pointed out in the course of his examination are not necessary.

11,054. None the less, they are existing rights?—Yes, but for the future they would not be. I mean, for Officers appointed after the Constitution Act, they would not be existing rights

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

11,055. Whatever the existing rights may be, you are clear and are expressing the view of your Association, that so far as persons to be employed after the Constitution Act are concerned, even if they are appointed by the Secretary of State, these rights require to be very carefully modified if Provincial autonomy is to be made a success?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya) Yes.

11,056. Supposing the right of appeal, which you have referred to, is kept intact and supposing the salaries, emoluments and other prerogatives of a similar nature are kept intact and the Legislature is not given the power of affecting them, would you be content to go under the complete control of the Provincial Governments?—In the case of Provincial Officers?

11,057. Those who are transferred to the Provinces?—I will put to you my difficulty. My point of view—and I think in this I represent the views of the Association—is that, so far as the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police Service are concerned, they should be recruited by the Governor-General, but on the existing basis, that is to say, I would not make recruitment for the Indian Civil Service provincial; I would make it an All-India recruitment at the Centre; but the Centre would post them to the Provinces.

11,058. But in the case of such people who are recruited at the Centre and posted into the Provinces, you would not slacken the Provincial control over them?—No, we would not slacken the Provincial control over them, subject to the appeal to the Governor-General.

11,059. Therefore, subject to that right, they would be in the same position as any other officers of the Provincial Government?—Yes

Sir Phiroze Sethna

11,060. Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya, in Clause I you say that the Association includes, amongst others, Indian members of the Indian Civil Service?—Yes.

11,061. You are aware that there is another Association known as the Indian Civil Servants' Association?—Yes.

11,062. Indian members of the Indian Civil Service are members of that body as well?—Yes.

11,063. You are aware that they have made a representation to the Committee?—Yes.

11,064. Will you tell us if the Indian members, or the majority of them, endorse the views expressed in that representation?—It is very difficult for me to say. Has Mr. Bhandari any sort of opinion? We are really not in a position to speak about it.

11,065. If you do not know it is all right?—We do not know about the other Association.

11,066. Do you know of any cases of European Officers in any of your Services who have ever complained of the treatment extended to them by their Indian superiors, and have complained in regard to their decisions in regard to their leaves, promotions, or anything else?—No. As a matter of fact, if I am allowed to say so, in Madras two years after the last new reforms came in I happened to be talking to two English Secretaries to the Government who were employed under Indian Ministers. I asked them how they fared. They said they got on very well indeed. You are referring to cases of that sort?

11,067. Yes. You, Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya, as head of your Department, must have Indian and European Officers under you?—Yes, I have.

11,068. Will you tell us, generally speaking, not of course referring to individuals, how Indian Officers compare with British Officers?—I think it is a matter of persons not a matter of races.

11,069. I said "generally speaking"?—I think there are good Indian Officers, and there are indifferent Indian Officers. There are good British Officers, and there are indifferent British Officers.

11,070. On an average would you consider the work of Indian Officers equal to that of British Officers?—Yes, certainly I would.

11,071. I take it that the relations between European and Indian Officers during their business hours are very cordial?—In my Department they are very cordial indeed.

11,072. I am talking generally not of your Department but from your knowledge?—Yes, from my knowledge they are very cordial indeed.

3^d August, 1933.]Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

11,073. Sir Tiruvalangudi Vijayaraghavacharya, you have said that your Association is open to officers of the Indian Civil Service?—Yes.

11,074. How many officers of the Indian Civil Services are members of your Association?—We have 26 regular I.C.S. members, and 4 are listed members.

11,075. How long has your Association been in existence?—Mr. Bhandari will answer all the questions about the Association. (Mr. Bhandari.) You will find that, Sir, on the first two pages of the Memorandum The Indian Officers' Association was formed and registered in 1923.

11,076. The Memorandum you have submitted to the Joint Select Committee was circulated to all the members of the Association?—(Mr. Bhandari.) It was approved by the Executive Committee.

11,077. But the tenor of it was approved by the members thereof?—Yes.

11,078. It has, therefore, the concurrence of most of the members of the Indian Officers' Association?—It has the approval of the Executive Committee and the general approval of all.

11,079. Now taking the Indian Civil Service first, is it the view of your Association that the Members of the Indian Civil Service, appointed after the Government of India Act of 1919 was passed, should not have any rights, and that they should be guided by their rights actual and accruing on that date?—(Sir T Vijayaraghavacharya.) Yes.

11,080. That is your point of view?—(Sir T Vijayaraghavacharya.) That is our point of view.

11,081. Because with the passing of the Government of India Act of 1919, they had full notice of the coming changes in the future Constitution of India?—Quite so.

11,082. They cannot, therefore, complain that they were taken by surprise, or entered into the Service on conditions of which they had not full knowledge. Is that your view?—Yes.

11,083. That is the view of the Association?—Yes.

11,084. Therefore the view of your Association is that the protection should only be limited as regards the actual and accruing rights on the date of the Government of India Act of 1919?—Yes, and as a concession, we thought that since there was this period of interregnum between the last Act of 1919 and the new Constitution Act, it would be fair to allow all the officers appointed also in the interregnum, the same rights as in 1919.

11,085. That is only as a special concession?—Yes.

11,086. Now as regards the future recruits to the Indian Civil Service (I will deal with the other members later on) the view of your Association is that their control should vest in the Governor-General, acting under the advice of the Public Services Commission?—It is so.

11,087. And that the authority of the Secretary of State over them should cease?—Yes.

11,088. That is your point of view?—Yes.

11,089. Now coming to the Superior Service, that is to say the Central Service, you want that the conditions of your Service, that is to say the Central Service, Class I, should be assimilated to the conditions of the Members of the Indian Civil Service recruited by the Secretary of State after 1919?—Yes, it is so.

11,090. That is your position?—That is our position.

11,091. In fact, that is the crux of the whole of your Memorandum?—In fact, that is the basis of our Memorandum.

11,092. You do not want any class distinction to exist?—No.

11,093. Because you think, and your Association think, that this class distinction will not bring about that harmony between various grades and classes of Services which is necessary for the efficient administration of the country?—Yes, I think you are quite right. The last sentence of paragraph 6 says: "Any action that fails to conform to this will prove detrimental to the esprit de corps and efficiency of the Services".

11,094. That is the gravamen of your complaint?—Yes, that is so.

11,095. Now will you kindly turn to Appendix VII of the White Paper to which Mr. Jayaker has drawn your attention. With the development of the self-governing institutions in the country and the necessity of economy in the administration of the country, do you think that clause 9: "Reservation of certain posts to members of the Indian Civil Service" should continue?—As regards that, the reservation of certain posts to members of the Indian Civil Service, our opinion is that the reasons for the reservation which existed in the old days do not now exist, and that the best men are to be chosen to whatever Service they belong. I am not thinking of financial reasons; I am thinking rather of the efficiency of the Public Service.

3^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

11,096. Your point of view, therefore, is that a man should not be appointed to a post because he belongs to a particular Service, but because he is fitted for the particular post to which he is appointed?—Yes, in the case of special posts.

11,097. That is your point of view?—Yes.

11,098. With Clause 9 goes Clause 10: "Determination of strength (including number and character of posts) of All-India Services by the Secretary of State in Council, subject to temporary additions by the Governor-General in Council or local Government." I take it that your point of view is that the Governor-General should be the final authority to determine the strength of a particular Service required for the administration of any branch of Government in India?—That is so.

11,099. You would like to dispense with the external authority of the Secretary of State?—That is so.

11,100. If the authority of the Secretary of State is limited in that field, you would not also have the advisers which the White Paper proposes to the Secretary of State in place of the present India Council?—That is beyond us to decide.

11,101. Then will you please turn to Clause 12: "Appointment of any one who is not a member of an All-India Service to posts borne on the cadre of such a Service only to be made with the sanction of the Secretary of State in Council." Would you retain that?—For the future we will transfer it to the Governor-General.

11,102. And leave the Governor-General to decide, in the case of selected posts, as to who should be its incumbent?—Quite so.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

11,103. Sir Tiruvalangadi Vijayaraghavacharya, you have said that you would have the Governor-General exercising control of the All-India Services instead of the Secretary of State, but that the Governor-General should act on the advice of the Public Services Commission. Is that your position?—That is our view.

11,104. Will the Governor-General, in that case, be bound by the advice of the Public Services Commission, or will he have discretion in the matter at all?—I think he should be bound by it.

11,105. We have been told that the Public Services Commission as constituted now in the Central Government in India, is unable to protect the European members of the Services. I believe you were a member of the Public Services Commission at one time, were you not?—I was a member for three years from its foundation.

11,106. Could you tell us if you know of any such feeling among the European members of the Services?—No. My experience was that both English and Indian officials trusted the Public Services Commission, and that no decision was taken upon racial lines. There are at least three instances within my personal knowledge (I think some evidence was called before you, Sir Abdur, in your Committee in Simla) where the Indians secured the acquittal of an English official, in whose case two English members wanted to confirm the orders.

11,107. We are further told that Sir Ross Barker, who was, I think, President of the Public Services Commission, expressed an opinion here that the Public Services Commission was unable to protect the rights of European Members of the Services. Do you know if that is the opinion of Sir Ross Barker?—I was not here when Sir Ross Barker was examined. I am afraid I have not read his evidence, but if he meant that it was meant to protect only English people and not All-India, I think, with all respect to Sir Ross Barker, who was my colleague for three years, I differ from him.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] Do you know that that is his opinion, that the European Members of the Public Services could not look to the Public Services Commission for effective protection.

Lord Eustace Percy.] My Lord Chairman, is it not very inconvenient to have the views of other Witnesses quoted to these Witnesses, from memory?

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.] He was not a Witness at all.

Lord Eustace Percy.] I do not object to questions arising in the course of previous examination.

Sir Hubert Carr.] I think that Sir Ross Barker gave an address to the East Indian Association.

3^o Augusti, 1933.] Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

Chairman.] I did circulate to the Committee and the Delegates a suggestion that Witnesses could have pointed out to them the Proceedings of the examination of other Witnesses dealing with subjects kindred to their own, and that they would be told that questions might be put upon that.

Mr. Davidson.] Not of somebody who was not a Witness. Sir Ross Barker did not appear before us.

Lord Eustace Percy.] I do not object to substantive points which have been the subject of former evidence being put to the Witnesses, but to ask them whether they agree with a paraphrased statement attributed to somebody who, in this case, was not even a Witness, seems to me to be rather irregular.

Chairman.] Sir Abdur, I am sure you can get us all out of our difficulty by putting your question again in another way, if necessary.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

11,108. I will put it in this way, that if anyone told us that it was Sir Ross Barker's opinion that the European Members of the Public Services were unable to obtain full protection from the Public Services Commission, I should like to know from you, so far as you know, if that is the opinion of Sir Ross Barker?—I think all Members obtain protection, and, so far as I know, Sir Ross Barker certainly did not think in my time that the Public Services Commission was a racial body. He certainly thought it was intended to protect the rights of permanent Civil Servants, whether they were European or Indian.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

11,109. Mr. Ghulam Mohammed, you have been employed in the Railway Department for seven years?—(Mr. Mohammed.) Yes.

11,110. Have you read the recommendation of the Railway Committee published as No. 3 of the Records of this Committee?—I have.

11,111. In it the following passage occurs: "The Railway authority will be empowered, subject to the powers of the Governor-General in the exercise of his special responsibilities, and subject to the safeguarding of the rights of all officers in the Service at the time of the establishment of the Railway authority, to regulate by rules or by general or special order the classification of posts in the Railway Services on State-worked lines in British India, and the methods of recruitment, qualifications for appointment to the Service, conditions of service, pay and allowances, Provident Fund benefits, gratuities, discipline and conduct of those Services." Do you agree with that recommendation of the Railway Committee?—All that I am concerned with, Sir, appearing on behalf of officers in service, is this portion of the sentence which says: "Subject to the safeguarding of the rights of all officers in the Service at the time of the establishment of the Railway authority." Our Association wrote to the Sub-Committee, whose Report is given in Record No. 3, and our views were given in detail, and we hope that if this sentence "subject to the safeguarding of the rights" means that their rights will be protected in exactly the same manner as other officers' rights in Government Service are protected, the rights as they exist to-day, then we are completely satisfied.

11,112. I am afraid I have not made it clear. What is your specific recommendation on this particular paragraph?—What we wish is this, that all officers in the superior Railway Services on the date when this new authority is instituted should have their existing rights safeguarded by the same authority and in the same manner as the other Government officers of similar status.

11,113. May I take it that all you desire is that the control exercised over you now should be continued to be exercised by that authority in future?—I will make my meaning clear, Sir. To-day the railway officers have a right to appeal to the Public Services Commission. They have certain other rights, because some of the officers are appointed by the Secretary of State. A certain number of railway officers are pensionable officers also. Again certain Services, like the Indian Audit and Accounts Service, have a right of the reservation of certain posts in the Railway Councils, and so on, and so forth. All those rights need protection and this general way that this thing is put in here may mean that this statutory authority will be the safeguarding authority. That is what we do not agree to.

11,114. That the authority should not be changed?—That the authority to safeguard the interests should be the Public Services Commission, and the Governor-General, as in the case of other officers, for railway officers who will be in Service when this body is inaugurated.

3^o August, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

ing out, but, of course, it obviously still leaves, and would leave, a good many things to the Governor-General, especially things which he says at present the Secretary of State does. As regards those matters that he would still leave to the Governor-General, does he desire that the Governor-General should exercise those powers at his discretion or that he should exercise those powers on the advice of his Ministers? The distinction is this. If, on the advice of his Ministers, then it means the decision is the decision of the Cabinet, and the Governor-General is bound to accept it. If at his discretion, it means that, after all the various stages have been gone through, consultation with the Public Services Commission, and so on, he brings his own mind to bear upon the matter, and gives the decision himself. Which does the witness desire, in those matters where he is not making the Public Services Commission's advice binding on the Governor-General?—(Sir T. Vijayaraghavacharya) In those cases I would leave it to the Governor-General in Council (I mean acting with his Ministers) to the Government.

11,135. Do you visualise this position that you desire that it should be the responsible Indian Ministry who should issue instructions of a general nature to the Public Services Commission, and with whom, as you have been using the expression, the ultimate decision should always rest, except where you would make the advice of the Public Services Commission binding on him?—Yes, general instructions as long as the Public Services Commission did not think it impinged upon their authority or position. The Ministers may issue instructions to the Public Services Commission so long as the Public Services Commission did not think such instructions trespassed or impinged upon their authority, or upon their position.

Chairman

11,136 That would be the Ministry as a whole?—Yes, the Government of India as a whole.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

11,137 If the Government (the Ministry) issued instructions to the Public Services Commission which the Commission considered trespassed on their authority—I think those were your words?—Yes.

11,138. Who would decide between the Government and the Public Services Commission?—The Governor-General.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

11,139 Then at his discretion?—Then at his discretion.

11,140. May I understand the position is this, that whatever you want finally to vest in the Public Services Commission, remains in them, and any residue that is left with regard to which you have been using the expression "Governor-General" you really mean the responsible Ministry?—Yes.

11,141 In the case of conflict ultimately the Governor-General should come in at his discretion?—Yes.

11,142 That being the general scheme, do you make any distinction between the Governor-General at his discretion and the Secretary of State?—I do not quite follow.

11,143 Do you in your mind think that whatever powers we give to the Governor-General at his discretion (ultimate powers) are powers that the Governor-General is expected to exercise in some manner divorced from the Secretary of State?—I meant the Governor-General's own personal discretion.

11,144 With regard to that may I put this to you, that the Constitutional position is this, as it is put down in the White Paper, and I do not see that there can be any escape from it, that, except when the Governor-General is acting on the advice of his Ministers he must all the time act (even when he is described as acting at his own discretion) in responsibility to Parliament which really means, in effect, to the Secretary of State, and, after I put that position to you, and you realise that position, do you want to modify anything you have said before, thinking in your mind that the Governor-General in his discretion meant whatever the Governor-General as an individual may think without reference to the Secretary of State?—Not with reference to the class of question you described. You are not thinking of individual cases of appeals, you are not thinking of individual cases of discipline, you are not thinking of individual cases of asking for relief from any adverse orders?

11,145 I am not thinking of any particular cases at all. What I am thinking of is this. What I want to put rather plainly to you is this, that wherever you have used the expression "Governor-General at his discretion" whatever you may have been thinking of is immaterial, in constitutional theory that

3^o Augusti, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

does ultimately mean the Secretary of State?—It does not modify my answer, because the Governor-General can take advice. Take the case of a conflict between the Government and the Public Services Commission, the Governor-General may be advised by even a private friend. If he chooses to take advice from the Secretary of State that is a matter of high policy into which I do not venture to trespass.

11,146. It is not a case of choosing, he will have to proceed in accordance with the rules?—Yes.

11,147. Or conventions established between him and the Secretary of State. I merely wanted to explain this to you so that you should have in mind that the Governor-General at his discretion does mean the Governor-General acting in responsibility to the Secretary of State, in effect, but when you say you would give general directions to the Governor-General on the advice of his Ministers do you mean even such directions as, for instance, the proportions of various interests and communities in the different branches of the Service and so on; that those should be settled by the Federal Government as distinct from the Governor-General at his discretion?—I think the question of communal representation in the Services or proportions of posts is a matter for the Federal Government and not a matter for a particular person, and I should not even give it to the Public Service Commission. I should make it a matter purely for the Government to decide how many men from each community they would have. It is for the Public Services Commission to give them the required number.

11,148. The Government must give the directions?—The Government must give the directions.

11,149. The Public Services Commission would make actual selection in accordance with those directions?—Yes; the Government must give directions.

11,150. The point I am putting to you is that the minorities might consider that this and similar matters related to the protection of the interests of the minorities and that, therefore, they are to come under the special power of the Governor-General, to be used at his discretion, and should not be vested in the Federal Government. Have you any observations to offer on that?—I should vest it in the Government. I would trust it to the Government.

Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan.

11,151. I understand from the answers you have given to Mr. Zafrulla Khan that in all matters affecting the services you represent you want the decision to be given either by the Governor-General acting on the advice of the Public Service Commission, which you say must be binding on him, and in the other case, by the Governor-General acting with the Minister, again whose advice must be binding on the Governor-General. May I know then how the Governor-General comes in to protect these Services? In both cases he is bound by the advice of other bodies and in both cases he must say Yes or No according to their advice. How does he come in to protect the position of the Services?—I will take a disciplinary case of an individual officer of a Central Service. The appeal would be to the Governor-General. I think in such a case where an appeal was laid to the Governor-General he would doubtless consult the Public Services Commission. He is bound to consult the Public Services Commission and to pass orders accordingly; but the Governor-General personally does come in. Assuming we take the case of an order which is obviously so wrong, or obviously so ill-supported by evidence, that it is not likely to stand the test, it is open to the Governor-General personally to confer with his Ministers and it may not even be necessary for the appeal to go. I am imagining a case where the Governor-General's personality would matter. It would not be negligible.

11,152. May I ask another question. Supposing an appeal is sent to the Governor-General which he cannot decide according to your proposal without consulting the Public Services Commission, or without consulting his Ministry: in both cases the Governor-General is forced to say Yes or No against his own discretion, but in deference to the wishes of these two bodies. Does a further appeal lie to the Governor-General to use his own discretion against this order?—No, I was not thinking of that.

11,153. Then in both cases you admit that the Governor-General, as such, has no power of protecting the Services?—He can only do so acting either with the Public Services Commission or with the Ministry?—I was thinking of this, that the formal order in appeal would run in the name of the Governor-General. It would not be the order of the Public Services Commission. It would conform to the recommendation, but it would be an order of the Governor-General; it would not be an order of the Public Services Commission.

3rd August, 1933.] Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

11,154. It would be an order of the Governor-General even though the Governor-General might not agree with it?—That would be a domestic secret which we would be altogether not acquainted with, and into which we would not pry.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

11,155. I want to know if Sir Tiruvalangudi Vijayaraghavacharya can tell me if any Medical Service has been affiliated with the Association?—(Mr. Bhandari.) Might I explain that? Among the Superior Services, we could think only of the Indian Medical Service, but, under the rules, the officers of the Indian Medical Service cannot join such an Association.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

11,156. Mr. Bhandari, in reply to a question by Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan, you agreed that the audit of Provincial Revenues should be, as far as possible, independent, consistently with Provincial Autonomy. Was that so?—Yes.

11,157. Your whole Memorandum was to set out the valuable work which has been done by the Indian Audit Service, as at present constituted, and the officers that constitution has been able to produce. You desire that Service to be continued with due reference to the grant of Provincial Autonomy?—Yes.

11,158. And you, for that purpose, desire that the position of the Provincial Audit officer, that is the Audit officer who audits the Provincial Accounts, should be one of responsibility to the Provincial Legislature?—That is so.

11,159. Therefore, you would make the Provincial Legislature the final authority to pass orders on the Audit Reports of the Provincial Auditor-General?—Constitutionally, that would be the position. An Autonomous Provincial Government must have full control over expenditure. The Council votes certain grants, and it tells the Executive: "Spend it in this manner." The Principal Auditor of the Province submits a report at the end of the year. In his report he says "The grants have been utilised thus. Here are the irregularities and here are the excesses." "The Principal Auditor will report to the Provincial Legislature and it will be for them to pass final orders.

11,160. There are two questions arising, one is that the Audit Service will be a Central Service—a Federal Service you say?—Not necessarily.

11,161. The Provincial Auditor-General would be an officer who is recruited from a Service by the Federal Government?—If you read my Memorandum, you will see that I say that, by mutual consent between the Provincial Governments and the Federal Governments, some such arrangement might be made.

11,162. How will you recruit the Audit Service? Will the recruitment be in the hands of the Federal Government, or will it be in some other hands? That is No. 1; and No. 2: After that Service has been recruited, who will have the power of deciding as to which particular officer from that Service should go to which Province?—I will tell you. In the transition stage, as I said, some sort of scheme will have to be evolved. We have got something like 130 to 140 officers in the Service; some of those are required for the Central Service, Railway Audit Service, Railway Accounts Service, Accountant-General, Revenues, Post and Telegraphs. Then we require a certain number for the Audit of the Provincial Governments. The Local Governments could easily, in consultation with the Federal Government, tell them: "These are our requirements." Each Province has one Accountant-General and 8 to 10 officers of the Indian Audit Department. What I was contemplating was that during the transition stage, say for the next 10 or 15 years till the Provincial Governments make their own arrangements, they should tell the Federal Government "We want so many officers for our purposes; give us the Chief Auditor and so many officers." They could take the officers either for a number of years or for the remaining portion of their service. This could be left to the discretion of the Provincial Government.

11,163. That is your proposal?—Yes.

11,164. But that is only with reference to the present?—Yes.

11,165. What about all these officers who will not live throughout the period of the transition?—I do not imagine they will.

11,166. How will fresh recruits be made? Would the Provincial Governments be recruiting for themselves in order to fill the Services at the end of the transition period, or would you leave it still to the Federal Govern-

3^o August, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

ment?—I would leave that question to be decided in the light of further experience. It would be a pity to throw away a Service with high traditions, which has rendered such useful Service.

11,167. Is not your position this, that, as far as possible, the present organisation and recruitment of the Indian Audit Service should remain unchanged, so far as the Audit requirements of the Provinces are concerned? That it should be one Service which is controlled at the Centre, and which sends out officers to the different Provinces for audit purposes, according to the requirements which are laid down by the Provinces. In other words, each Province will really be as if it were responsible for the loan of Services, and these officers will be what we call, without the necessary contribution, in Foreign Service or seconded from the Service. Is that what you mean?—Yes, exactly.

11,168. Then who will be able to change the officers from one Province to another?—As I explained just now, that will be a matter of internal arrangement between the Provincial Governments and the Federal Government. They can say: "Give us the Principal Auditor for five years, and so many officers," or they could say: "We will keep the Accountant-General throughout our Service, and the other officers may be changed after five or ten years." In practice, what I think will happen is that a certain number of junior and senior officers and an Accountant-General will be taken, and after eight or ten years these officers may go elsewhere.

11,169. You do not think that it will be better managed if you leave this undisturbed, leaving it in the hands of the Federal Government, and, at the same time, instead of these Provincial Audit officers, whoever they are, submitting their Audit Reports to the Auditor-General, and, through the Auditor-General to the Central Legislature, would it not suffice if these officers so recruited by the Centre, so posted by the Centre, ultimately were to submit their audit reports to the Provincial Legislature and accept their authority as final? Would that not be consistent, on the one hand, with the independence of audit, and, secondly, with the authority of the Provincial Legislatures to pass orders finally to him?—The Services will be quite satisfied with that arrangement if the Provincial Governments have no objection to it.

Lord Eustace Percy.

11,170. Sir Tiruvalangudi Vijayarghavacharya, did I hear you correctly a little while ago say that you would like the Provincial Executive Services to be recruited centrally?—(Sir Tiruvalangudi Vijayarghavacharya.) No; I meant the Indian Civil Service under the new Constitution to be recruited centrally, and not provincially.

11,171. And the Provincial Executive Service would continue to be recruited provincially?—As heretofore.

11,172. Now I think you said in reply to Sir Hari Singh Gour that you wished all posts to be filled by merit, and no posts to be reserved to particular Services?—Yes; I did not want any reservation for a particular Service.

11,173. Then you will have your Centrally recruited All-India Services and your Provincially recruited Provincial Services competing, as it were, for the same posts?—I was not thinking of the ordinary district posts, I was thinking of special posts which are now scheduled as posts which are for the Indian Civil Service, such as Secretaries to the Provincial Governments. I was not thinking of the ordinary District staff.

11,174. But what about the ordinary District staff?—The ordinary District staff would, more or less, run on the same lines as now; I was not thinking of a change.

11,175. With reservation of posts at all?—No. The ordinary District staff. There would be a certain number filled by the Indian Civil Service and a certain number filled, as now, by the Provincial Civil Services, and that will continue. I was merely thinking of special posts like Secretaries to Governments, and so forth.

11,176. Why do you object to reservation in the one case, and not to reservation in the other?—For this reason, that for special posts you require special qualities, and very often you may discover them outside a particular Service. In Madras it does often happen that the very best men are found for particular posts outside the Indian Civil Service.

11,177. But then you do not feel that reservation of posts as between two Services is, in itself, inconvenient?—In the case of special posts?

11,178. No, I say apart from special posts, you see no inconvenience in the reservation of a proportional number of posts as between two different Services?

3rd August, 1933.] Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

—No, there would be no inconvenience. As a matter of fact, it works well in practice now, and if you want to keep up the Indian Civil Service, unless you have a certain number of District posts, how could you keep it up?

11,179. I wish to ask whether you thought that that system could continue indefinitely?—I think myself it would be a very good system for India to continue to have a certain number recruited without reference to Provincial considerations.

11,180. Then may I ask this one further question: If you contemplate a continuance of Central recruitment for the Audits and Accounts Service, have you considered whether it would be possible to have Central recruitment for the whole Executive Service, leaving Provincial autonomy and control over the appointed officers, just as much as you propose to leave it in the case of the Accounts and Audits Services?—Do you mean the Provincial Executive Services?

11,181. Yes?—No. I think myself that the present arrangement under which a certain number of District posts are filled Provincially and a certain number Centrally works the best in practice. It adjusts what one may call the Provincial consideration point of view with the All-India Service point of view, and, on the whole, it would be safer and more expedient to leave it alone.

11,182. But, in fact, are not the Provincial Executive Services, taking the Provinces as a whole, mainly recruited by the Central Public Services Commission now?—Not the Provincial Executive Services.

11,183. Are not the examinations for them, as a matter of fact, held by the Public Services Commission?—No. In the case of the United Provinces alone the Public Services Committee holds the examination for the Provincial Executive at the special request of the United Provinces Government.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

11,184. There was one question I forgot to ask. I wanted to ask what would be the relation of the Provincial Auditor to the Governor, so far as he can be of help to him in discharging the special responsibility of the Governor, with regard to expenditure?—(Mr. Bhandari.) I believe the same position as that of the Auditor-General at present with reference to the Governor.

11,185. At present he belongs to a Central Service?—I mean functioning as the Auditor-General of the Province, the Governor has a right to his advice.

11,186. So the Provincial Auditor-General would have to keep the Governor also in touch with the progress of expenditure, say with regard to any big work that is going on at a pace which will inevitably involve a supplementary estimate, and so on?—Yes, certainly.

Dr. Shafa' at Ahmad Khan.

11,187. But you do not expect him to act as a sort of financial adviser to the Governor?—No, the Auditor cannot be a financial adviser.

Sir Reginald Craddock.

11,188. Sir Tiruvalangudi Vijayaraghavacharya, I should like to ask you a question or two about the present practice of the Public Services Commission. You will understand, and agree with me, I expect, that there is a difference between finding the facts as to whether an officer did, or did not, commit some shortcoming or offence and the punishment which will be meted out to him. Now under the present practice, will you suggest what punishment should be awarded to an officer or do you content yourself with the finding of facts?—(Sir Tiruvalangudi Vijayaraghavacharya.) We suggest the punishment too.

11,189. But the Governor-General, or the Governor-General-in-Council, as it is at present, is free to pass what order he pleased as to the punishment, is he not?—Ordinarily. Normally, I must say, in practice, he has followed the recommendation of the Public Services Commission, not only with regard to the finding, but also with regard to the sentence.

11,190. Has he overruled the Public Services Commission?—There is no rule; it has just been the practice.

11,191. Has he overruled the Public Services Commission?—There have been two cases to my knowledge where he has overruled the finding of the Public Services Commission. The reason he gave was that he thought that the finding was so wrong that he ought to reverse the finding.

11,192. But in the proposals that you make, that the Governor-General should act on the advice of the Public Services Commission, does that mean that you would not leave to the Governor-General power to decide what punishment should be awarded?—Yes; I would not leave it.

3^o August, 1933.]

Mr. J. BHANDARI,

[Continued.]

Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

11,193. Then that means that the entire authority of the Government is vested in the Public Services Commission?—In certain matters, in matters of individual appeals, just as in the case of the Judicial Courts, for instance. I contemplate the Public Services Commission to act as a sort of administrative Court.

Lord Eustace Percy.

11,194. But in the case of the Judicial Courts, the Crown has a power of pardon, has it not?—Yes. I have no objection to the Crown pardoning in this case.

11,195. You have no objection to the Governor remitting the sentence?—Quite so. It is only the question of punishing where they do not want to punish.

Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan.

11,196. That alters the whole situation?—No. I am not thinking of the question of reversing the finding.

11,197. Supposing the Public Services Commission recommends that a certain officer should be dismissed, is it open to the Governor-General, as such, to say no, he shall not be dismissed?—No, it is not open to him. He must pass an order of dismissal, but it may be open to him to pass a power of pardon in the circumstances in which the Crown now exercises a right of pardon. They exercise the right of pardon on the advice of the Law officers, when they feel that there are any special circumstances, for instance, if the Court's finding is wrong, or something else.

11,198. I want to clear this up. In the event of an officer being dismissed or reduced, or otherwise punished by the Public Services Commission, to which you say the Governor-General must agree, it is open then to this officer to submit a memorial or an appeal to the Governor-General for mercy, and it is open to the Governor-General then to upset that order which he passed along with the Public Services Commission?—I should not institute a procedure of that sort, which in practice might defeat the whole purpose.

11,199. Then how is the Governor-General going to exert his prerogative of mercy?—It is open to you. if you think it is liable to be abused, to delete the clause altogether.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] The Public Services Commission may recommend him to the mercy of the Governor-General, exercising the Prerogative of the Crown.

Nawab Sir Liaquat Hayat-Khan.] That they can do themselves. They need not recommend it to the Governor.

Sir Reginald Craddock.

11,200. You referred to the case of judicial courts, but you are probably aware that the local government and, of course, the Governor-General in Council, have full powers of reducing the sentence or of remitting it altogether or substituting a lower punishment for a higher one?—I would not push the analogy to that extent in administrative matters.

11,201. Under your scheme you would restrict very considerably the present powers that are exercised by the Governor-General in Council?—Yes; to that extent it would be a restriction of his powers.

Lord Rankeillour.

11,202. Just one or two questions. Might I draw your attention again to Appendix No. VII on page 120 of the White Paper?—Yes.

11,203. Might I ask if the answers given by you to Mr. Jayaker were your own opinions or whether these matters have been considered by your Association?—It represents in my belief the general opinion of the Association. Particular questions have not been put to them, but you will see the general trend of their opinion is that the Governor-General should as far as possible be the ultimate authority. In individual details I have had to work it out on my own responsibility.

11,204. I think you said it would be expedient, if not necessary, to revise these 18 points of Appendix VII, Part I, in the interests of Provincial administration?—For future recruits, I said.

11,205. You do not wish to deprive existing officers of these 18 points?—No. I do not like to deprive existing officers of their rights. Future recruits I was contemplating after the Constitution Act came in.

11,206. Did you say that officers appointed after 1919 should be in a different position with regard to their rights from officers recruited before 1919?—I said that the existing Government of India Act does make a distinction between officers appointed on the date of the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919, and others, but I said as a matter of equity, considering the doubtful period of interregnum which has passed between the passing of the old Act and the new, we were prepared to say that officers appointed after 1919 and before the new Constitution Act should enjoy the same rights as those appointed before 1919.

3^o August, 1933.] Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T. VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

11,207. You do not mind that being put into the Act?—No, I do not mind that being put into the Act.

Chairman

11,208. We are greatly obliged to you gentlemen for coming here and giving your evidence to us to-day?—(Mr. Bhandari) May I make two or three brief remarks?

11,209. Will you put your statement in?
—Yes, I will put it in. It is as follows

The State, whatever the changes in its constitution, should lay down certain principles to regulate the scales of pay, the pensionary rights and other important conditions of service of its employees, and apply such principles to all officers irrespective of their domicile. Under ordinary conditions, it is not necessary to make radical changes in the conditions of service, but it is recognised that in view of the far-reaching changes in the constitution in the Government of India, changes have to be made in the administrative machinery to fit in with the new conditions. The nearest parallel to the present case is that of the Union of South Africa when changes in the constitution necessitated changes in the conditions of service of Government Officers. In Articles 142, 143, 144, and 145 of the Constitution Act of the Union of South Africa it was clearly laid down that "any officer of the public service of any of the colonies at the establishment of the Union who is not retained in the service of the Union or assigned to that of a province shall be entitled to receive such pension, gratuity or other compensation as he would have received in like circumstances if the Union had not been established. It was further laid down, "that any officer of the public service of any of the colonies at the establishment of the Union who is retained in the service of the Union or is assigned to that of a Province shall retain all his existing and accruing rights and shall be entitled to retire from service at the time at which he would have been entitled by law to retire, and on the pension or retiring allowance to which he would have been entitled by law in like circumstances if the Union had not been established." The Association respectfully submits that any distinction between the measures of protection to various classes of officers will prove detrimental to the esprit de corps and efficiency of the services. In this connection it may not be out of place to mention that the Association gave its wholehearted co-operation to the Government of India in the retrenchment measures adopted by the Government of India, including the ten per cent. cut in the pay of the services. Even those members of the Association who could technically take their stand on their legal rights were agreeable to the proposed cut, as they realised that no question of forfeiture of rights arose in the special circumstances in which the cut was levied. In this connection, I attach herewith a copy of the cable dated 5th October, 1931, addressed to the Secretary of State for India

"W591. Calcutta 261 3 1120.

Wlt. Retaxandum London

"All India Indian Officers' Association, Calcutta, representing 23 Imperial and Central Service admit existence of grave national emergency called for policy of severe retrenchment they desire to point out that any reduction in emoluments should first be applied to allowances additional to pay and if such cuts do not yield required amount to basic pay in this view they strongly urge that concessions granted in 1924 as a result of the Lee Commission should first be withdrawn special reasons which led to grant of the concessions have now ceased to operate if after abolishing Lee Concessions it is found necessary to reduce basic pay reductions should be made in pay of all officers of Imperial and Central Services without discrimination in a financial crisis of first magnitude now facing India action of the kind contemplated by executive Government is inevitable in interests of India and the Association would wholeheartedly co-operate with Government in retrenchment measures forced on Government of India as on other governments of the world by grave economic conditions now prevalent

3^o August, 1933] Mr. J. BHANDARI, [Continued.
Dewan Bahadur Sir T VIJAYARAGHAVACHARYA, K.B.E., and Mr. GHULAM MOHAMMED.

those members of Association who are entitled to protection from Secretary of State admit that no question of forfeiture of right arises in present circumstances protection in Government of India Act was intended only against unreasonable attitude of hostile legislature influenced by political considerations no such contingency has arisen at present association is advised that protection in Government of India Act does not extend to concessions granted after 1919 any preference shown to protected services or individuals would create grave discontent among others. President."

(The Witnesses are directed to withdraw.)

Chairman] My Lords and Gentlemen of the Joint Select Committee, I propose now to adjourn until ten-thirty o'clock on Tuesday, October 3rd.

Before we rise I am sure you will desire me, on your behalf, to say "Farewell" to our friends of the Indian Delegation, and to wish them a safe and pleasant voyage to India. Some of them, much to our regret, will not, I understand, find it possible to return in the Autumn. May I therefore be allowed now to thank them most warmly for the unvarying support that they have given to this Chair. I think, too, that I shall speak for the whole Committee when I say that the experience of these past weeks has shown that the Indian Delegates have already made an essential and invaluable contribution towards the solution of the problems with which we are faced. That contribution does high credit to them, and stands as a tribute to the wisdom and foresight of those who recommended, as well as of those who decided, that representative Indians should be taken into consultation by this Committee.

Nawab Sir Liqat Hayat-Khan] My Lord Chairman, as you have just said, some of us will be leaving this country in a day or two, and our duties in India may not permit us to come back. I am therefore anxious to take this opportunity of expressing to the Joint Select Committee as a whole, and to your Lordship particularly, our sense of gratitude for all the courtesy and patience that you have shown during these deliberations. Your Lordship is a conspicuous example of the patience and the great courtesy that we have experienced every day in this room. When we arrived here some of us had doubts as to what our position would be vis-a-vis the Joint Select Committee; but our suspicions were soon set at rest when we found that in actual practice both your Lordship and other Members of the Joint Select Committee treated us exactly as their equals. We have received from your Lordship and the other Members of the Joint Select Committee every facility to make ourselves useful to the Committee, and I trust that we have been able to do something towards the common cause which the Joint Select Committee and we had to face. I am sure that when we go back to India we will certainly, all of us, be united in telling them that in meeting the Joint Select Committee we met a body which was out for co-operation and encouraged us to co-operate with them.

Sir Akbar Hydari.] And fair play.

Nawab Sir Liqat Hayat-Khan.] We are particularly indebted to the Secretary of State who has very considerably facilitated that close touch between the two halves of this Committee by going into the witness chair. I have already given expression to my own feelings on a previous occasion, and I do not apologise for repeating those feelings here. I also want to say one word, my Lord Chairman, to such members of the Committee who might be very anxious and who might feel that in solving these very great problems of India we should proceed cautiously. Let me assure them that in India itself there are several like me who feel that caution is essential; but, after studying the White Paper, and more, after examining the witnesses who appeared before us and hearing various points of view from all quarters of this room, I have definitely arrived at the conclusion that caution is very fully provided for in the White Paper itself; and I do feel most honestly that anything short of the proposals contained in the White Paper will not only disappoint moderate opinion in India, but will also go against the wishes, and, I believe, the united wishes of all your agents in India. I am talking of the local governments and the government of India. I believe that every one of them is united, that the time has come when India must receive a measure of advance somewhat on the lines of the White Paper. By cutting it short in any way you will therefore not only be denying what the Moderates believe to be their legitimate claims, but also going against the considered views of all the local governments and the government of India. In making this appeal to such members of the Joint Select Committee who want caution, I do ask them to believe they have many friends in India, but those friends in India believe that the White Paper itself provides for that. I do not believe that any further caution will either meet the wishes of a very large number of Indians themselves or of the administrators themselves, on whom you have to depend for the success of the future Constitution.

3^o Augusti, 1933.]

[Continued.]

With these words, my Lord Chairman, I want to thank you, one and all, for the great kindness and courtesy we have received from you during this period.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] My Lord Chairman, it is very likely that some of the Delegates sitting on this side of the table may not be able in the Autumn Session to co-operate with the Joint Select Committee, and on behalf of such Delegates I beg to associate myself with the remarks which have just been made by Nawab Sir Liaquat as regards the kind treatment and the courteous behaviour which your Lordship in the Chair and the other Members of the Joint Select Committee have evinced towards us during the period of our association with them. I also associate myself with the remarks made by Nawab Sir Liaquat with reference to the attitude of the Secretary of State. We are not sure, my Lord Chairman, as to what the result of our collaboration with the Joint Select Committee will be, whether we shall be able to obtain recognition of the points of view which we have put before you through our examination of witnesses and our discussions before your Lordship and your Parliamentary colleagues; but whatever that may be, I think I am expressing the sentiments of all of us on this side when I say that we shall all cherish a very pleasant memory of the brief period we have spent in association with your Lordship and your Lordship's colleagues.

Dr. Shafa' At Ahmad Khan.] My Lord Chairman, we on this side associate ourselves with what has been said by Mr. Jayaker and Nawab Sir Liaquat. It has been to us a source of inspiration to work with your Lordship and with Members of the Joint Select Committee. It would be affectation to deny that some of us had misgivings when we started our work regarding our status, but the day-to-day intercourse, the day-to-day interchange of ideas, and the clearing up of many questions and misunderstandings should pave the way for a spirit of solidarity, not only in the Joint Select Committee, but also among the Delegates. I feel that this brotherhood, if I may so use the term, is the happiest augury for the inauguration of the new Constitution, and I am convinced, my Lord Chairman, that with the great ability and the extraordinary power which the Secretary of State has shown and the great sympathy which he has manifested for our legitimate aspirations, we shall continue to work in that spirit of co-operation along with our English brethren as the safest and surest guarantee for the development of the British Empire.

Begum Shah Nawaz.] My Lord Chairman, as I am going back to India soon and my duties at home may not permit me to have the honour of coming over here again, may I associate myself with all the Nawab Sir Liaquat has said and, on behalf of the Women of India, thank your Lordship with all my heart for the kindness, courtesy and consideration which you have shown us during our work here. I would like also to thank the Secretary of State for showing so much sympathy to our cause, and may I request all the Members of this Joint Select Committee to bear in mind, when they come to their discussions, that if no Indian woman is present here at that time, we form half the population of the country. My Lord Chairman, may I be permitted to say that this association has shown me that the members are very sympathetic towards our interests, and I am sure that when the deliberations of the Joint Select Committee come to a successful conclusion, the women of India will get their just share.

Chairman.] Thank you very much

Ordered: That the Committee be adjourned to Tuesday, 3rd October, at half-past Ten o'clock.

DIE MARTIS, 3° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

DIE MERCURII, 4° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Evidence given on these days by the Secretary of State for India and his advisers is printed for convenience in Volume II^B.

DIE JOVIS, 5° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Present:

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.
Marquess of Salisbury.
Marquess of Zetland.
Marquess of Linlithgow
Marquess of Reading
Earl of Derby
Earl of Lytton.
Lord Middleton.
Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.
Lord Irwin.
Lord Snell
Lord Rankeillour.
Lord Hutchison of Montrose.

Mr. Butler.
Sir Austen Chamberlain.
Mr. Cocks.
Sir Reginald Craddock.
Mr. Davidson.
Mr. Isaac Foot.
Sir Samuel Hoare
Mr. Morgan Jones
Lord Eustace Percy.
Miss Pickford
Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.
Earl Winterton.

The following Indian Delegates were also present.—

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
Sir Hubert Carr.
Lt.-Col Sir H. Gidney.
Sir Hari Singh Gour.
Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

Mr N. M. Joshi.
Sir Abdur Rahim.
Sir Phiroze Sethna.
Sardar Buta Singh.
Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

The MARQUESS OF LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

Evidence given on this day²¹ by the Secretary of State for India and his advisers is printed for convenience in Volume II^B.

5^o Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued]

SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.B.E., MR. R. B. DUNWOODY, C B E, Mr M W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL are called in and examined

Chairman

12,055. Sir Alan Garrett Anderson, you are President of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce and Chairman of the Joint British Committee on Empire Trade of the Association, the Federation of British Industries and the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom; Chairman of Messrs. Anderson, Green & Co., Ltd., a director of the Bank of England, and Honorary President of the International Chamber of Commerce?—(Sir Alan Garrett Anderson.) Yes.

12,056 Mr. Dunwoody, you are Secretary of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce?—(Mr. Dunwoody) Yes.

12,057. Mr. Watt, you are an official of the Federation of British Industries?—(Mr Watt.) Yes 12,058 Mr P. Maurice Hill, you are of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom?—(Mr. Maurice Hill.) Yes.

12,059. You gentlemen are here on behalf of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, the Federation of British Industries and Shipowners Parliamentary Committee, and you have been good enough to hand in a Memorandum No. 74?—(Sir Alan Garrett Anderson.) Yes; the Memorandum is as follows —

MEMORANDUM 74.—JOINT MEMORANDUM OF EVIDENCE BY THE ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE, FEDERATION OF BRITISH INDUSTRIES AND SHIPOWNERS' PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

1 The present Memorandum of Evidence is submitted by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, Federation of British Industries and Shipowners' Parliamentary Committee, hereinafter referred to as "The British Trade Organisations."

2. Representation.—These Organisations are fully representative of British trade, industry and shipping, as follows.—

Association of British Chambers of Commerce representing over 100 Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, with 45,000 members, representing the trade and commerce of the country.

Federation of British Industries representing some 155 industrial trade organisations and some 19,000 industrial firms, covering all branches of British Industry.

Shipowners' Parliamentary Committee representing practically the whole of British shipping.

3. Objective of Evidence.—The British Trade Organisations are concerned in relation to the proposals contained in the Government White Paper on Indian Constitutional Reform with the commercial and economic aspect of such reform, rather than the political aspect. The present Memorandum is, therefore, confined to questions affecting the trade, shipping and general economic interests of India and Great Britain as these may be affected by the proposals in the White Paper. In particular they are directed to the questions of safeguards necessary in the mutual interest of India and Great Britain for British capital and business interests in India.

4. Safeguards against Discrimination.—Proposals for such safeguards are referred to in paragraphs 24-26 and 29 of the Introduction to Proposals and in Proposals 122 to 124 of the White Paper. The British Trade Organisations desire to submit the following observations in regard to these Proposals in particular.

5. While the British Trade Organisations do not claim special knowledge of the peculiar problems of India, they are acquainted generally with the views in regard to commercial discrimination which are held by the Association of Chambers of Commerce of India, the London and Manchester Chambers of Commerce and the British Assurance Association, and associate themselves generally with these views.

6. In the view of the British Trade Organisations it is essential that the new

5^o Octobris, 1933.]

SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B.,

[Continued.

Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

Constitution of India should contain effective safeguards against discrimination directed against British persons or corporations engaged in any form of industry, trade, commerce or shipping in India on grounds of religion, descent, caste, colour, language, citizenship, domicile, place of birth, place duration or continuity of residence or incorporation, or for any other cause. It is recognised that India must be free to regulate her business, property laws, and laws of residence and travel as her needs demand. What is essential to provide is not that British subjects and companies should be exempt from such regulations, but that they should be exempt from differential regulations. It is, however, unfair and impracticable to place upon the Governor-General or Provincial Governors the duty of preventing such differential treatment by the power of veto unsupported by provisions in the Constitution which will make such discrimination illegal. It is, therefore, essential that, as laid down in Proposal 122, the Act of Constitution should automatically render all discriminatory legislation ultra vires, except strictly such as is "necessary in the interests of the peace and tranquillity of India" as provided in the second paragraph of Proposal 122, in which case such exceptional measures should be compulsorily reserved for the Royal Assent by Order in Council after approval by both Houses of Parliament.

7. That British interests have good reason to fear discrimination has been made patent—

(1) generally, by statements made by representative Indian bodies and individuals.

Thus,

(a) The Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce have explicitly stated in a Statement dated 21st October, 1929,

"There can be no self-government in India if she is to be denied the power to devise and follow a national economic policy, including the right, if her interests required it, of making economic discrimination against non-national interests."

(b) According to the "Statesman" of 16th April, 1933, Mr. Walchand Hirachand criticising the proposals for Indian Constitutional Reform, particularly those relating to the commercial and financial safeguards, in his Presidential Address at the Annual Meeting of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry held at New Delhi on the 15th April, stated —

"I personally hold the firm conviction that no country at the present day can develop her industries without following the deliberate policy of discrimination, without excluding non-nationals in the country, and without giving substantial help, either in the form of subsidies or bounties, to those nascent industries that require careful bringing up. And I personally see no relief from any formula, howsoever worded, unless the clear right of discrimination against any non-national is vested in the country."

(2) as regards shipping, by the fact that the Coastal Reservation Bill, which would have shut out British shipping from the coasting trade of India, obtained a Second Reading in the Legislative Assembly on 20th September, 1928.

For this reason it is absolutely essential that the Act of Constitution should contain express and specific provision against discrimination in the field of shipping in accordance with the assurance given in the second paragraph of Proposal 123, and that such provision should cover both the coasting trade and the overseas trade.

8. The British Trade Organisations observe from paragraph 3 of the Introduction of the White Paper that this document is intended to set out the principles adopted by H M Government but that latitude exists not only to improve the wording but also to elaborate the proposals made therein, when translating them into the form of an Act of Constitution. They submit that the Act of Constitution should be so drafted as to make the safeguards against legislative discrimination completely watertight. Before finally expressing an opinion on the efficacy of the Proposals in the White Paper they would, therefore, wish to see the actual clauses as drafted in the Bill and, if necessary, to submit further representations on them.

9. It is further observed from paragraph 1 of the Introduction of the White

5^o October, 1933]

SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B.,

[Continued.]

Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

Paper that the policy of H.M. Government as announced to the Indian Round Table Conferences "involves the finding of a suitable basis for the conversion of the present system of Government in India into a responsibly governed Federation of States and Provinces on the understanding that the responsible Governments so established must, during a period of transition, be qualified by limitations in certain directions. These limitations, commonly described by the compendious term 'safeguards,' have been framed in the common interests of India and the United Kingdom"

10 The British Trade Organisations recall that in a speech reported in "The Times" of 7th March, 1931, Mr. Baldwin stated —

"There is a second side of the problem to which we must also give our closest attention. There is the side of British trade. We have all been gravely concerned by the boycott of British trade in India and by the methods employed. It is unnecessary to say more on that point at the moment in view of the statement issued by the Government which you have seen in this morning's papers. Suffice it to say that as a party we intend . . . to insist that in any future settlement of the Indian Constitution there shall be a fundamental provision prohibiting unfair discrimination against British trade."

They further note that in the course of his speech during the first day of the Indian Debate in the House of Lords, the Lord Chancellor said:—

"Next as to commercial discrimination. This is a matter which has caused great anxiety to the trading community both at home and in India. Discrimination may be exercised either legislatively or administratively. The basic proposal is that the avoidance of discrimination would best be achieved by specific provisions in the Constitution. Time forbids me to go into the subject, important though it is, at greater length, but the Governor-General, and the Governor of each Province — has a special responsibility given charging him with the prevention of commercial discrimination. The Legislatures will have no power to make laws of a discriminating character against any British subject, including in that term companies, partnerships or associations constituted by or under any Federal or Provincial law."

The British Trade Organisations hope that every care will be taken in drafting the Act of Constitution to give the fullest effect to these statements of policy.

11. Suggested Improvements in Proposals 122-4

The safeguards as applied to trade, industry and shipping are elaborated in Proposals 122, 123 and 124. The British Trade Organisations, while they consider that these Proposals in principle go far to meet the needs of India and the United Kingdom in providing safeguards against direct discrimination, are of the opinion that as at present drafted they are in certain respects insufficient to provide the full measure of protection which experience shows is necessary.

They, therefore, desire to offer the following observations and suggestions for their improvement and in order to give full effect to their intention.

A. Proposal 122.

(1) Proposal 122 excludes legislative discrimination on grounds of "religion, descent, caste, colour or place of birth". It is necessary to extend these words to cover also "language, citizenship, domicile, and place duration or continuity of residence" in order to close the door to discrimination on those grounds, and in particular to protect British concerns registered or operating in India and owned partly or wholly in the United Kingdom, who might otherwise be discriminated against by reason of the domicile or residence of their shareholders or directors.

(2) It is similarly desired to submit that the words in Proposal 122 "in respect of taxation, the holding of property of any kind, etc., etc.," should be extended to cover the whole range of status and civil rights.

B. Proposal 123.

(3) Taxation.—It is observed that while Proposal 122 includes protection against discriminatory taxation, Proposal 123 does not. The omission is doubtless due to an oversight, but it is of the utmost importance that it be made good. Discriminatory taxation may arise in—

5^o October, 1933]SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr R B DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P MAURICE HILL.

(a) Federal or Provincial Taxation;

(b) Municipal Taxation

(4) Double Taxation—In this connection it may be useful, quite apart from any question of discrimination in taxation, to refer to the question of double taxation. Experience since the war shows that great confusion arises and harm is done to business where several legislatures seek to tax the same income. The problem of double taxation has received prolonged consideration by the League of Nations and by individual Governments. Conventions have been prepared for the removal of this evil and in one department of commerce, viz, shipping, successful action has been taken to remove it. No less than 80 reciprocal agreements for the avoidance of double taxation in shipping have been entered into by Governments in all parts of the world. The British Imperial Economic Conference, 1923, while recommending in principle that double taxation of shipping within the Empire should be abolished, provided an interim method of relieving the hardships involved by means of a certificate of the ratio of the profits to gross earnings issued by the United Kingdom Revenue Authorities and accepted by other Governments in the Empire, including India. By this means injustice involved in taxation on a basis of profit where in fact loss has been incurred has been lessened, and wasteful expenditure of time and money in preparing unnecessary returns has been avoided.

India was, indeed, among the first to adopt the recommendations of the Imperial Conference and the system as applied to India, though limited, has worked smoothly and with good results. It is important that nothing in the Act of Constitution should be allowed to disturb or undo the arrangements thus arrived at. It is further hoped that the Constitution will be so framed as to enable India to lay a firm foundation for the ultimate total abolition of double taxation, in harmony with the existing world-wide movement to that end

(5) Onus of Proof—If it is decided to give effect to Proposal 123 in its present form, it is considered essential that the onus of proof should be on those introducing discriminatory legislation to show that corresponding discrimination exists in the United Kingdom, and not on the complainants against such legislation to prove a negative by showing that no such discrimination exists in the United Kingdom

C Proposal 124.

(6) Subsidies—

(1) Discrimination by Subsidy. It may be useful to recall the findings of the World Economic Conference in 1927 on this subject—

“The fact that subsidies are in certain circumstances held to interfere less with the liberty of trading than customs tariffs does not make it any the less necessary to lay stress on the hidden dangers inherent to this means of encouraging production and exportation. The greater the number of countries which have recourse to this practice, the more difficult would it be for other countries to refrain from following their example. Thus, the attempt to restore foreign trade to normal conditions meets with a real obstacle in the shape of subsidies.

The Conference draws the attention of the various Governments to the true nature of direct or indirect subsidies, which are merely a palliative, and expresses the hope that Governments will, so far as possible, refrain from having recourse to them.”

Similarly, at the World Economic Conference now sitting in London, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr Neville Chamberlain, stated that—

“Subsidies in export trade involve unfair competition and their adoption by one Government forced the same unsound expedient on other Governments with the result that eventually the Budgets of all the Governments concerned were burdened without any advantage being secured to the export trade of any nation. These considerations applied with particular force to shipping subsidies which in many countries had made shipping a burden on the national exchequer instead of contributing to its welfare.”

5^o Octobris, 1933] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr R B DUNWOODY, C.B.E, Mr M W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

The danger which is apprehended by all sections of British trade and industry in India from discrimination, whether direct or by means of subsidy, is well illustrated by the experience already obtained in the sphere of ocean transportation. British trade with India depends essentially upon the maintenance of ocean transport on the basis of an open freight market which alone can guarantee to commerce the best possible facilities represented by safe, efficient, regular, frequent, and economic shipping services. Such a market cannot function if subjected to the disturbing influences inherent to limitations or restrictions framed to promote a particular and immediate interest. An open freight market as required by commerce can only be maintained on an economic basis. That basis, both in India and elsewhere, was maintained in the fifty years preceding the war, a period of vast development and expansion in international trade. Since the war, however, many nations have subsidised national shipping to such an extent as to endanger the continuance of the open freight market by creating conditions which threaten to undermine the foundation of and to destroy the shipping industry in all countries. Subsidies have indeed not only been largely responsible for an over production of shipping 60 per cent. above the present-day requirement of trade, but they have contributed materially to the dislocation of trade and consequent breakdown of the money machine, the catastrophic fall in prices and the constriction of world trade. Incidentally, it is to be observed that at a time when all countries and all shades of thought are agreed that the slump in prices is the immediate cause of that constriction of trade, a comparison of the present and pre-war level in the prices of freights and wholesale commodities shows that freights are 25 per cent below pre-war, while wholesale commodity prices are only 1 per cent. below pre-war.

It is thus important, alike from the national, imperial, and international point of view, to provide against discrimination by grants, bounties or subsidies out of public funds to commercial concerns. The British Trade Organisations note that Proposal 124 brings subsidies into the condemnation of means whereby discrimination may be practised, and to some extent, therefore, closes the door to discrimination by that means. They feel, however, that the Proposal as at present drafted still leaves the door dangerously ajar to discrimination by means of subsidies, and that it is desirable that, in the Act of Constitution, that door should be closed and barred.

It is observed that Proposal 124 provides that a subsidy shall not be held to fall within the condemnation of discrimination contained in Proposals 122 to 123—

“by reason only of the fact that it is limited to persons or Companies resident or incorporated in India or that it imposes on Companies not trading in India before the Act was passed, as a condition of eligibility for any such subsidy, that the Company shall be incorporated by or under the laws of British India, or conditions as to the composition of the Board of Directors or as to the facilities to be given for training Indian subjects of His Majesty.”

It would appear that the validity of the safeguard intended in this Proposal turns to a large extent upon the interpretation of the words “resident or incorporated in India.” It is understood that Proposal 124 will be drafted to make it clear that residence includes individuals and corporations engaged in business in India, and that all companies whether registered in the United Kingdom or in India which are engaged in business in India will be placed in the same position in relation to unconditional eligibility for subsidies, etc., if they were trading in India before the Act granting the subsidy was passed.

(11) Conditions of Eligibility for Subsidies

(a) It is most undesirable in principle that there should be any outside interference with the composition of Boards of Directors. It is therefore submitted that the provision for Government approval of the composition or of the conditions of composition of such Boards should be omitted from the Act. Failing this it is suggested that the power to impose conditions as to the composition of the Board of Directors be limited to a condition requiring that a proportion—say one-third—of the Directors shall be persons of Indian race and domicile.

5^o October, 1933] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K C B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C B E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

It is regarded as important that any conditions governing the grant of subsidies should be incorporated in the Act granting such subsidy.

(b) The Commercial Safeguards Committee of the Third Conference agreed that "bounties or subsidies should be available, without distinction, to all firms or individuals engaged in a particular trade or industry at the time of the enactment authorising them is passed" It is important that this principle should be clearly incorporated in the Act of Constitution and that any ambiguity in Proposal 124 should be removed.

(c) In regard to the proposed condition that facilities be given for training Indian subjects, it is important that the word "reasonable" be inserted before "facilities" as recommended in the External Capital Committee's Report.

(d) It is not clear from Proposal 124 that a company registered in Great Britain but trading in India before the Act granting a subsidy would be protected from discrimination in the event of its subsequent registration in India. It is of the greatest importance that such a company and also a company registered in India after the passing of the subsidy Act but acquiring a business in India which existed before such Act should be deemed for the purposes of eligibility to have been trading in India before the Act

Generally

(7) Municipalities—It is necessary that care should be taken in drafting the Act to extend the safeguards so as to cover discrimination by Municipalities, Dock Authorities and other similar corporations or undertakings, whether by rules, orders, by-laws, regulations or otherwise

(8) Ports.—Similarly, it is important from the point of view of Imperial communications as well as of India, that all Bills affecting the administration of major ports in India should be subject to the prior recommendation of the Governor-General.

(9) Professions—As at present drafted it does not appear that Proposal 123 will safeguard the position of British professional men practising in India by reason of British qualifications. This should be made clear in the Constitution and in doing so the provision should be so framed as to cover ships' Masters and Officers, who should be free to practise their calling on the basis of British Board of Trade certificates as at present. In the same way express recognition is required of the existing qualifications of pilots.

12 Administrative Discrimination.—Administrative discrimination was discussed at all stages of the Round Table Conference, but the only direct reference to it in the White Paper is in paragraph 29 of the Introduction. It is admittedly difficult to deal with this danger in an Act of Parliament as it is impossible to foresee all the means which might be adopted to discriminate in practice while not actually infringing the letter of the law. Such administrative discrimination may be exercised through the medium of contracts, licences, subsidies, appointments (e.g., of pilots), etc.

Peculiar danger of discrimination is also apprehended from laws which, while on their face not discriminatory, may prescribe or authorise the making of regulations which may be so framed that British traders or shipowners cannot comply with them though Indians can, with the result that British interests would be effectively discriminated against.

In order to provide adequate protection against administrative discrimination, it is therefore suggested that provision be made in the Act of Constitution for any party who feels that he is aggrieved to have the right to apply to the Governor-General for an Enquiry, similar to those frequently appointed by Ministers in Great Britain. Such Enquiries should be presided over by impartial Chairmen, e.g., High Court Judges, who should then report to the Governor-General.

At the same time the need for preventing administrative discrimination should be emphasised in the Instrument of Instructions to the Governor-General in accordance with the policy outlined in paragraphs 24-5 of the Introduction to the White Paper. It will be noted that "the prevention of commercial discrimination" is there included among the "special responsibilities" to be imposed on the Governor-General by the Act of

5^o Octobris, 1933] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr R B DUNWOODY, C B E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

Constitution, and it is of the utmost importance that the Governor-General's task in discharging this responsibility should be assisted as far as can be done in the Act itself.

CONCLUSION.

The British Trade Organisations, while appreciating the proposals in paragraph 29 of the Introduction and Proposal 124 of the White Paper, when taken together, and of the safeguards contained in Proposals 122 and 123, submit that—

(1) In a matter of such vital moment to the commerce of India and Great Britain, no element of chance or uncertainty should be allowed to remain, but that Proposal 124 should be so translated into terms of the Act of Constitution as to make any legislative proposal or action, having the intention or effect of discrimination by means of subsidies, automatically unconstitutional and ultra vires.

(2) Full effect should be given to the intention of Proposals 122 to 124 when drafting the Act by the inclusion of the points suggested above, and any attempt to weaken these Proposals should be strongly resisted by H M. Government and by Parliament.

12,060. May I address my questions to you, in the first place, Sir Alan?—If you please.

12,061. Do you desire at this stage to extend or to make any correction in that Memorandum, Sir Alan?—No, thank you.

12,062 Do you wish to make any preliminary statement?—No, unless you wish me to go through the Memorandum.

Chairman] The Memorandum seems to me very plainly to set forth your case and I shall ask my colleagues to put any questions to you that they may wish to put.

Marquess of Zetland.

12,063. Sir Alan, your main contention in your Memorandum seems to be, I think, that the safeguards against commercial discrimination which are set forth in the White Paper are very far from being watertight. That is your main contention, is it not?—Yes.

12,064. And you make various suggestions which you think would give you greater protection. I am not going through your various suggestions because you put them very plainly, if I may say so, in your Memorandum, but there are one or two points that I would like to ask you questions on in order to make clear to my own mind exactly what it is that you have in mind. With regard to possible discrimination by means of subsidies your main contention there is I think that it would be inadvisable that conditions as to the composition of the board and so on should be laid down as a condition of the receipt of the subsidy. That is your point, is it not?—That is one point, yes.

12,065 And you suggest that if these conditions are to be retained there should be some small alteration made in them. There is one small point I would like to ask you about in connection with the change which you would like to see made in the condition with regard to the facilities given for the training of Indian apprentices, I think it is. The facilities, that is to say, that should be offered by a firm for the employment of Indians. You would like to see the word "reasonable" inserted in front of the word "facilities." My only doubt upon that point is this. Who would be the arbiter who would interpret what was a reasonable facility?—I am afraid I cannot answer that.

12,066 But it is quite obvious that when you insert a word like "reasonable" different people will take different views as to what constitutes a reasonable facility, and I presume that if these differences do arise somebody will have to decide. Have you not considered what the machinery will be by which a decision as to what was a reasonable facility would be arrived at?—I should have thought in the last resort the courts would decide what was reasonable, but what we are doing is submitting to you, who are I suppose considering the form the law should take, what are the dangers which ought to be avoided.

12,067 Yes?—One danger in discrimination is that the law should provide that apprentices might be stipulated for and we say that the word "reasonable" should be put in front of "facilities," because if you made an unreasonable demand for apprentices or anything else you would negate the whole of the other safeguards. How exactly the law will be interpreted I am afraid I cannot tell you. I am not a lawyer.

5^o Octobris, 1933.] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

12,068. Then with regard to the possibility of administrative discrimination, may I refer you to your Memorandum, paragraph 12, under the heading of "Administrative Discrimination," where you say: "Peculiar danger of discrimination is also apprehended from laws which, while on their face not discriminatory, may prescribe or authorize the making of regulations which may be so framed that British traders or shipowners cannot comply with them though Indians can, with the result that British interests would be effectively discriminated against." That appears to me to be a very forcible point. Could you give the Committee an illustration of the kind of thing which you had in mind when you drafted that paragraph?—I have not one directly in my mind, but there are in the discussions between different powers many instances of the way in which this discrimination is adopted. In dealing with two different nationalities or two different races there are many conditions which can be complied with by one and cannot by another, and it is very easy to make a stipulation that if a certain condition is complied with and you know that the native Indian can comply with it and the British cannot, in that way you can discriminate.

12,069. I quite appreciate that you could discriminate in that way. I only could not call to my own mind at the moment the sort of case in which that kind of discrimination might arise and I thought you might be able to give us an example?—No, I have not any.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,070. It is very difficult for us to see against what danger you desire us to provide if you yourself are unable to give us any illustration. I confess I cannot deny the abstract proposition, but I have no idea what would be the appropriate remedy because you have given us no illustration of the sort of thing you fear. Is it not possible to help the Committee a little more?—It would be very easy for anyone who was personally acquainted with the Indian trade to do so. I am not. I cannot give you the details about India, but there is an infinite range of subjects in which the Briton and the Indian differ; for example, diet and accommodation. If you look upon the Mercantile Marine, in diet and accommodation and all those things, entirely different conditions are required for the one and for the other. If the controlling authority desires to discriminate it has an infinite range in which it can do so by stipulating the conditions suitable to the one class of man and not suitable for the other. If the Committee would like to have detailed examples I can very easily procure them, but I am afraid I am not myself acquainted in any detail at all with the Indian trade.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Considering your answer, I see very easily how they could stipulate conditions which were sufficient to attract Indians but insufficient to attract Europeans, but that would not amount to the exclusion of Europeans because the British company, for example, provided it provided the diet prescribed for Indian conditions, could also give a diet suitable for the Indian conditions. I cannot get your case clear in my mind; that is my trouble.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,071 May I ask the witness a question with the idea of trying to clear up the point which Sir Austen has made and of which Sir Alan must have first-hand knowledge, I think? Is not the sort of example he has in mind the case that might be made in connection with the Mercantile Marine, for example, in which it was laid down by some Act in India that officers of the Mercantile Marine ships plying to India, must have an examination or a qualification by examination in India; some form of certificate instead of the present Board of Trade certificate secured only in India? Is that the kind of thing you have in mind?—That would be one. For example, in the admittance of migrants into Australia there was power to the examining person to pass them in any language and, of course, that was a facility for discriminating quite freely.

Lord Snell.

12,072. My Lord, is not Sir Alan's case this, that in coastal shipping and things of that kind the Indian authorities might prescribe living conditions and working conditions on board vessels below the standard to which British people have been accustomed and below which they could not live? Is not that the kind of thing?—Yes, that is one. The standard might be entirely suitable for the Oriental and entirely wrong for the European, but there is an enormous range

5^o Octobris, 1933] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL

Mr. N. M. Joshi

12,073. I do not understand how that goes against the European?—If it was prescribed that the ships had to be fitted in a way suitable for the Oriental sailor they would be unsuitable for the white sailors 12,074. Do you mean to say that you propose to take white sailors for the coastal traffic in India?—No, I did not say so.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.] Would that pay you?

Chairman.

12,075 Might it not be better before we go into these technicalities that you should reinforce your case by reference to those who are expert and then, if necessary, you could let us have a note upon that?—Yes.

12,076. We seem to be considering matters with which none of us are competent to deal?—I had not thought I would be asked the detail of that, but we can easily get details of that kind.

Chairman.] Does the Committee support that suggestion? (Agreed.)

Marquess of Zetland.

12,077. There is one other question also in connection with administrative discrimination. It is proposed in the next paragraph under paragraph 12 (Administrative Discrimination) that "provision should be made in the Act of Constitution for any party who feels that he is aggrieved to have the right to apply to the Governor-General for an Enquiry similar to those frequently appointed by Ministers in Great Britain. Such Enquiries should be presided over by impartial Chairmen, e.g., High Court Judges, who should then report to the Governor-General." I suppose the report of such a committee would be made in an advisory capacity to the Governor-General, and the Governor-General would then give a decision. Is that the intention of the proposal?—That was our idea 12,078 Do you suggest this procedure as an alternative to procedure in the ordinary courts?—Yes.

12,079. Why should you imagine a tribunal of that kind to be better qualified to come to a right decision than the ordinary courts. What is the reason for having the special tribunal?—The suggestion is intended as an additional safeguard. It is additional to the right of appeal to the ordinary courts, and it is suggested that if this administrative discrimination does not come under the ordinary law but still is an administrative discrimination, there should be this right to call for an enquiry as to whether it really is discrimination. That is the suggestion.

Lord Rankeillour.

12,080. Arising out of your last answer, Sir Alan, you do not suggest that this court should have any power to make an order or to come to a decision? It is merely to report?—To report, yes

12,081 I suppose you realise that these sections with which you are concerned are merely a statement of the proposals of the Government and are not put into proper drafting language?—Yes.

12,082 In the bodies you represent I suppose you have permanent legal advisers?—Some have, yes.

12,083 Would not it be possible for you to instruct them to draft clauses in proper legal form as they should appear in an Act of Parliament, carrying out your wishes? I think it would be a considerable help to the Committee if you were able to do so?—Yes, we will certainly be very glad to do so

12,084. I suppose you would realise when all is said and done, whatever provisions you may put in, the action of the Executive is a paramount consideration which possibly no statutory provisions will altogether replace?—Yes, we quite realise that

12,085 That was brought out, I think, in a Report of the Federal Structure Committee. It said "The real safeguard must be looked for rather in the good faith and commonsense of the different branches of the Executive Government reinforced where necessary by the special powers of the Governor-General"?—Yes

12,086. You are familiar with that?—Yes

12,087. You think you would have no difficulty in bringing the clauses that you wish before the Committee?—We will do our best. We will try to draft them.

5^o Octobris, 1933.] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,088. I suppose that the reason why you have suggested this special form of enquiry as an alternative to the Courts of Justice is that you think that many of the considerations which are really necessary to be borne in mind in order to produce an equitable result are not capable of an absolute legal definition?—Yes.

12,089. You are appealing rather to the sense of justice of a Court of Inquiry and the Governor-General acting on their advice rather than upon a matter of strict legal interpretation?—Yes.

12,090. That is really the point of the suggestion?—That is the point.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,091. I would like to ask Sir Alan a question in regard, first of all, to the general aspect of this Memorandum which he has submitted. Am I right in assuming that what is feared principally is administrative action causing discrimination rather than legislative action. Is that possibly what the Chambers fear?—I should have said both or either, but the one that is most difficult to prevent by words in a law is the administrative discrimination.

12,092. That is probably, therefore, the one you most fear. Would you turn to paragraph 11 of your Memorandum. Under "A" you say you want to extend the words of Proposal 122 to cover "language, citizenship, domicile, and place duration or continuity of residence." Do not you think that that would probably go further than you really want? All you are really aiming at, I suggest, is that there should be no discrimination against British citizens trading in India whether they represent companies registered in this country or in India. These words would really widen it to the whole world, would they not?—Whether they represent companies registered or domiciled, I suppose.

12,093. Your reference is purely to British companies?—Yes.

12,094. That again, if I may say so, is made clear in paragraph 11, subheading 6 (ii), under subheading (b) of "Conditions of eligibility for subsidies." You say: "Bounties or subsidies should be available, without distinction, to all firms or individuals engaged in a particular trade or industry." There the point you want to make is whether a company is registered here, or subsequently registered in India, provided it complies with a reasonable law in India, it should be equally eligible for all subsidies?—Yes.

12,095. Are you averse from a law being passed in India which requires a certain amount of Indian capital in a company operating in India or getting a subsidy in India?—No, if the law applies to all companies, and British companies are able to comply with the law, we think it is just that they should have to do so.

12,096. Nor are you opposed to a proportion of Indian directors?—We make some remarks about that, but, again, what we object to most is the discrimination. We fully realise that India must make up her own mind about what laws she passes, and, as long as those laws apply equally to both the races, then we have nothing to say.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.] My Lord, it is a little difficult, in view of the course which you have suggested and the Committee have approved, to ask questions under the important headings which appear on this part of the Memorandum, but, if I transgress, perhaps you will forgive me.

Chairman.] I must leave that to the judgment of my honourable friend.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,097. In paragraph 11 (7) under "Municipalities" you refer to the danger of discrimination by municipalities, dock authorities, and similar corporations. I only ask that, if you are putting in a new Memorandum dealing with the examples of possible discrimination, you would give us some details of what you specially refer to in that paragraph?—Yes. Of course it would be easy for anyone acquainted with the details of Indian trade to provide a number of examples, but they would not be inclusive. You must not look upon them as the whole list. In dealing with docks, the ordinary way in which discrimination can be used is to give prior claims to berths or facilities, or to the movement of your cargo. There are any number of ways in which you can help one person, or line, or race against another.

12,098. By reason, do you mean, of their being Indian companies as against British companies?—That is the danger we fear, of course.

5^o Octobris, 1933.] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

12,099 Again with regard to paragraph 11 (8) "Ports," you ask specially that any legislation affecting the administration of major ports should be subject to the prior recommendation of the Governor-General. You do not want a veto. You want a condition which will prevent any legislation being introduced about major ports without the consent of the Governor-General. Is that clear?—We try in that paragraph to emphasise the extreme importance of the major ports. They are the bottle neck of all trade, and they are so important that, when the nations of the world some ten years ago entered into a convention for the freedom of the seas, it was entitled "The Convention of Maritime Ports." If any nation desires to interfere in commerce and to discriminate the easiest place to do it is at the main great ports, and therefore we think this is of extreme importance, and should be specially watched.

Earl of Derby.] What paragraph is that?

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,100. Sub-paragraph (8) of paragraph 11, "Ports." Just as to how you want this done it appears from this that you do not suggest that the legislation should come entirely from the Federal Government, but, further than that, that it should not be introduced at all without the consent of the Governor-General. That is your recommendation?—Our suggestion is that the prior recommendation of the Governor-General is needed before legislation.

12,101. Any legislation?—All Bills affecting the administration of major ports.

12,102. Then in connection with sub-paragraph (9) "Professions," would it be correct to say that what is feared here is that again there may be some discrimination of the kind that would require professional men to have a degree only obtainable in India, or something of that kind. Is that what you have in mind?—Yes, that is what is feared.

12,103. Generally speaking, do you agree that the White Paper sets out safeguards which are intended to be sufficient, but which would not be complete enough. Is that your case really?—That is our feeling.

Sir Manubhar N. Mehta.

12,104. I would like to ask one or two questions. From the way in which arguments have been put in this Memorandum against the grant of subsidies and bounties and the quotations from several authorities it would appear that you are against subsidies and bounties altogether. Is it your demand merely that there should be no discrimination against British trading, or do you ask for no discrimination in Indian legislation at all?—No. We recognise that subsidies up to a point have been given by almost every power, and very often are required, and are often legitimate. In the last few years subsidies in various directions have, in our view, been carried much too far. They have interfered with normal commerce, and complaints are made against them not only by British commerce, but by the commerce of the whole world.

12,105. Do I understand then that the protection that you seek is not only for British trade and commerce, but also for the world commerce?—No; what we are talking of here is discrimination in subsidies.

12,106. Discrimination against whom?—Against the British.

12,107. Because the inference that would be gained from your extension to "language, citizenship, domicile and place duration," would suggest that you are asking for the elimination of discrimination against the whole world?—I am only speaking for British industry here.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,108. I understood you to say in answer to Sir Manubhai that you did not mean protection for the whole world trade, but for British trade?—Yes, I am speaking for British trade.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,109. Not only is the witness personally speaking for British trade, but, as I understand it, we are to read the whole memorandum as applying to British trade?—Yes.

12,110. Not to world trade?—No, British trade.

Marquess of Salisbury.] Does "British" include the Dominions?

Sir Manubhar N. Mehta.

12,111. That is the second question I am going to ask about the Dominions.

5^o Octobris, 1933.] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

Do I understand you correctly that your extension of Sections 122 and 124 to the Dominions implies any reciprocity in the matter?—I am only briefed to speak for British trade; I have no authority to speak for anyone else.

Sir Abdur Rahim.

12,112. I want to draw your attention to paragraph 6, pages 2 and 3. As I read it, am I right in understanding that you recognise that India is entitled to fiscal autonomy? As a matter of fact, it enjoys fiscal autonomy. What you are seeking is not to affect the fiscal autonomy of India in any way, but to guard against discrimination against British trade, subject to the fiscal autonomy of India?—That is right.

12,113. So therefore you would allow subsidies, for instance, tariffs, if necessary, in the interests of the industrial development of India?—Yes.

12,114. That is what I understood. There is one thing about subsidies to shipping India has no transport trade, ocean trade, but I think there are one or two Indian companies which have a coastal trade. Supposing there be any sort of freight and rate wars by a big capitalist company. They wage a war against small companies—unfair competition. For instance, they say: "I am going to carry passengers and carry goods on very low uneconomic rates." Now would you prohibit any legislation to put that right in protection of a struggling company?—We do not intend in this evidence to comment at all upon the power of India to make legislation providing it is not discriminatory as between British and Indian. If India in her legislative competence decides to pass a law to restrain certain competition on the ocean, or certain forms of it, I imagine it would be within her power and that is certainly not what we criticise. What we should criticise is if this legislation were framed particularly to restrain the liberties of one company which happened to be British in favour of another company which happened to be Indian.

12,115. But it may so happen. Supposing a British company which has got a sort of monopolistic position in the coastal trade, for instance, reduces its rates to an uneconomic level so as to knock out an Indian company which has just started business?—It might happen; it constantly does happen, and it happens in order to knock out not only an Indian but another British company. It is the ordinary incident of trade.

12,116. But do you not think that legislation in such cases may be necessary? I do not say in all cases, but in some cases—exceptional cases?—I should be going beyond my brief to discuss it. My brief is concerned with the discrimination of that legislation.

12,117. There might be difficulty in the interpretation of the word "discrimination" in a case like that; that is why I put it to you, if you could be more explicit?—I do not know that I can; I think I am explicit. If the legislation says that this British company is not to reduce its rates and an Indian company is to be allowed to quote lower rates, that would be discriminatory legislation. If the law prescribes the level below which no one can quote a rate, that would be open to both, not discriminatory, and of course that is one of the ways in which administrative discrimination may possibly come in.

12,118. There is only one other general question. I suppose you recognise that in matters of this sort it is more useful to have an agreement with another country than rigid legislative provisions. Rigid legislative provisions may be no protection and the matter can be negotiated by agreement. That would be better protection, would it not?—Matters of this sort being the competition between two companies, do you mean?

12,119. No; I mean as regards discrimination generally?—But I suppose this law will continue over many years. The agreement could only contemplate the facts of the moment.

12,120. But now, for instance, what is going on as regards the cotton trade? You see Japanese competition, as regard Lancashire and Japanese deputations have now gone to India endeavouring to negotiate an agreement. What I say is that in many cases agreement would be found far more useful than any sort of legislative provision like this?—Yes, I think we could quite agree that.

Sir Hari Singh Gour

12,121. Sir Alan, you have very freely made use of the expression "discrimination," but you recognise that it may be discrimination in intention or there may be discrimination in its result or in its

5° October, 1933.]

SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL

effect. We are all agreed that so far as discriminatory legislation in the first sense is concerned, namely, intentional discrimination against the United Kingdom, it is to be deprecated, but at the same time visualise to yourself a case which would be covered by the intention of the Indian Government to develop its own trade, commerce and industry in that case, you recognise the legality and propriety of the Indian Government developing its trade by the grant of bounties and subsidies, do you not?—Yes.

12,122. Now that grant of bounties and subsidies may in a sense discriminate in effect but not in intention. You have no complaint against that?—Well, it depends how far they do discriminate, I think. It is true that the grant of a tariff or a bounty or subsidy discriminates in favour of the operation conducted in India as against the operation conducted in England.

12,123. Either in England or elsewhere—say, Japan?—That is not what we are commenting upon at all, but if the law is so framed that the bounty or subsidy discriminates in favour of the operation conducted in India by a native of India as against a native of Great Britain or a company formed in India as against a company formed in Great Britain, then we say that is discrimination against which we comment.

Sir Hari Singh Gour] That is to say, you are complaining against what you have said, discrimination in intention but not against discrimination in effect if the primary purpose was the development of the industries of the country.

Marquess of Reading] May I ask Sir Hari Singh Gour how you would prove intention except by consideration of effect?

Sir Hari Singh Gour] You may prove intention by vindictive act of the Indian Legislature to punish British industries, to place them under certain disabilities. That would be an intentional discrimination, but if the primary purpose of legislation was to promote and develop indigenous industries though it may amount to discrimination in effect, it would not be obnoxious to the principle which Sir Alan Anderson and his colleagues have come here to advocate.

Marquess of Reading] The result would be the same.

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,124. Let us be clear about this.

You do not make this distinction between the intention and the effect?—I do not share the questioner's view that it is discrimination at all. If India puts a tariff on against certain goods, she does make it more difficult for a person resident outside India to sell those goods in India. That is not what we describe as discrimination. That is a tariff policy. Discrimination, in our mind, is something quite different, and the way we have tried to meet this point is on page 12, (ii) (b) "The Commercial Safeguards Committee of the Third Conference agreed that bounties or subsidies should be available, without distinction, to all firms or individuals engaged in a particular trade or industry at the time of the enactment authorising them is passed." We say it is important that that principle should be clearly incorporated.

Marquess of Reading.

12,125. That is apart altogether from intention. That is judged by the effect, is it not?—That is fact, yes.

Sir Hari Singh Gour

12,126. May I read to you a decision arrived at by a Committee of the Second Round Table Conference at page 55, paragraph 20, to the following effect "The Committee are, however, of opinion that it should be made clear that where the Legislature can determine upon some system of bounties or subsidies for the purpose of encouraging local industries, the right to attach reasonable conditions to any such grant from public funds is fully recognised, as it was recognised in 1925 by the External Capital Committee, and is recognised to-day by the practice of the Government of India itself". You have no objection to that?—No, I do not think so. I have not read it before.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,127. On that point, I wonder whether Sir Alan will allow me to ask this question: Is it not a question of the interpretation of the word "legitimate"? Would not Sir Alan consider that the word "legitimate" in the paragraph that has been read means that there must be no discrimination?—I think probably if I took that home with me and studied it, I should make the same comment as we have made about several paragraphs in this paper.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] Sir Alan, I am referring you to paragraph 7 of your memorandum; it is on pages 3 and 4.

5^o October, 1933.] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

You divide that paragraph into two parts. In the first part, you have given quotations, one from a statement made by the Federation of the Indian Chambers of Commerce, and, two, from a speech made by the Chairman of that Federation. I suppose you are aware as to the reasons why the Federation prepared and sent out copies of that statement? I may inform you that this was in reply to a circular dated the 27th July, 1929, issued by the Associated Chambers of Commerce of India and Ceylon distributed widely in this country, including, amongst others, all public bodies and Members of Parliament. The sentence which was quoted from that statement reads as follows: "There can be no self-Government in India if she is to be denied the power to devise and follow a national economic policy, including the right, if her interests required it, of making economic discrimination against non-national interests". Perhaps it would have been better, Sir Alan, for the information of the Committee if you had also inserted the sentence which immediately precedes the one that you have quoted. That sentence reads as follows: "The authors of the circular desire that India's right to self-government as declared by the British Parliament in 1917 without any reservation whatsoever, except as to the pace of the progress, should be denied to her, by making reservations which shall deprive her of the right of regulating her economic policy to suit the economic needs and conditions of the country". Similarly, whilst you have quoted the following sentence from the speech of the Chairman, namely, "I personally hold the firm conviction that no country at the present day can develop her industries without following the deliberate policy of discrimination, without excluding non-nationals in the country, and without giving substantial help, either in the form of subsidies or bounties, to those nascent industries that require careful bringing up. And I personally see no relief from any formula, however worded, unless the clear right of discrimination against any non-national is vested in the country". Here again, Sir Alan, the sentence immediately preceding that in the speech of the Chairman throws considerable light. He says: "I would like to ask what earthly chance can Indian enterprise have against the already established large scale industries and giant vested interests possessing huge reserves, accumulated experience and resources enough to wipe out all Indian newcomers unless these newcomers are protected by the Government through discriminatory powers both legislative and administrative against non-nationals". The first quotation which I give is to show that self-government as promised in 1917 implied the right to formulate the economic policy of the country as best suited to the national requirements even by reserving in the economic sphere certain privileges to its nationals to the exclusion of all non-nationals; and the second quotation which I have given from the speech of the Chairman explains the reasons for such discrimination in favour of national interests to the protection and development of indigenous industries against competition from powerful and resourceful rivals. There is no intention to discriminate against British interests qua British interests.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I do not follow the last sentence. What you have previously read and said seems to me to be in direct contradiction of the sentence with which concluded.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] The last sentence is: "There is no intention to discriminate against British interests qua British interests," just because they happen to be British.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I do not agree. That is in contradiction to what you previously read out.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] The point is that there are certain British interests which have tried to crush national industries and have prevented their growth. Against such we might ask for discrimination, but as against ordinary British interests because they are British, there is no intention of asking for any discrimination.

Earl of Derby.] Who is to judge that they are crushing it? Who is to judge that they are not engaged in perfectly legitimate competition?

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] The Federal Court or any independent body, if you like, or the Governor-General, if you like, in his discretion. We have no objection.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I understand the contention that it should be within the power of the Indian Government to establish a new industry in India, but do you claim the right to say that that new industry shall be established only by Indian Nationals?

5^o October, 1933] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] That would lead me on to another question.

Mr. Austen Chamberlain.] And that a British subject not being an Indian National shall be precluded from establishing an industry.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] I will not say that it applied to anything, but it would, according to me, to basic and key industries.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] That is clear discrimination

Sir Phiroze Sethna

12,128 In that case, I would certainly suggest discrimination in the matter of basic industries. I know that is a very difficult question to decide, but I think proper experts might be able to do so and tell us what are the basic and key industries?—I am sorry, my Lord Chairman, if our quotations were not long enough, but the additional sentences do not really vary the point we were trying to make, they only reinforce it. We were trying to show you that we had some reason to suppose that discrimination was one of the weapons which was seriously regarded as a useful weapon for the development of India by responsible people. In our view, they are mistaken, and I could join the last questioner in quite a long argument about the points he has raised. I think they are definitely wrong, in thinking that this is a wise thing to do, but anyway we think that it is most unwise and quite contrary to the general tenor of this paper to leave that power floating about when people have said that they want to use it. That is our point.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] And that power can be used and is used by British possessions in other parts of the Empire and yet you would object to India exercising that power. Even under the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act of 1914, the right of a British possession to differentiate between the different classes of British subjects is fully recognised under Section 26 (1), which reads as follows: "Nothing in this Act shall take away or abridge any power vested in or exercisable by the Legislature, or Government of any British possession, or affect the operation of any law at present in force which has been passed in exercise of such power, or prevent any such legislature or government from treating differently different classes of British subjects." I am pointing out to you that you are proposing a distinction in the case of India as compared with other parts of the Empire. In paragraph 8, you propose that the Act of Constitution should be so drafted as to make the safeguards against legislative discrimination completely watertight. I am sure you are aware that the question of commercial discrimination was considered by the Simon Commission, whose conclusions are given on page 129 of volume 2 of their Report. It may be noted that the representation of the European Association and the Associated Chambers of Commerce who appeared before the Commission was that safeguards should be provided against legislation which discriminated against particular sections of the community in matters of taxation, trade or commerce. The view, however, of the Commission was that it was not feasible to prevent discriminatory legislation by attempting to define it in a constitutional instrument.

Earl of Derby.] I do not want to be disrespectful, but really in a Committee like this we ought to confine ourselves to question and answer. A most interesting statement has been made now, and if that were submitted for our consideration, well and good, but I hope Sir Phiroze will not think me disrespectful. I should say at a time like this we want the question to be put and the answer to be given definitely and clearly.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.

12,129. With all respect to Lord Derby, the question which I want to put after having read this out to the witness is whether he still persists in the proposal that he has made in paragraph 8 to which I have referred. I was just coming to the question and I could not put the question before I read out what I have read?—Yes, I do persist in it.

12,130. In spite of that?—Yes.

12,131. The second part of paragraph 7 deals with shipping, and the Coastal Reservation Bill. The Coastal Reservation Bill, as you may be aware, was due to provocation caused by a certain large shipping company. In regard to that, you may be aware that there was very considerable opposition from the English Press in India, and the most serious objection was taken by the "Statesman," one of the leading papers in India. It will interest Sir Alan to know that the editor of that paper, Sir Alfred Watson, now in this country, in his

5^o Octobris, 1933.]

SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B.,

[Continued.]

Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

evidence before this Committee in answer to Q. 4538, observed that, but perhaps the Committee will allow me to refer to the Indian Coastal Reservation Bill which is an outstanding example of an attempt by Indians at commercial discrimination and has occupied a great part of the controversy there. "I am bound to say, speaking as a European, that the Indians have a case for a large share in their coastal shipping, and although I opposed the Bill very strongly because it savoured of expropriation, I recognise that Indian Company after Company which endeavoured to develop a coastal service has been financially shattered by the heavy combination of the British interests. In view of this, would you not agree to the Government giving some relief to Indian Shipping Companies?—No. The reference to the Coastal Reservation Bill was a second example of the intention to discriminate. The real danger there was that India might wish to discriminate. That is the reason for referring it.

12,132. If it had paid sufficient compensation to the company concerned, would you still object?—The competition between the existing companies and the new company had not as far as I am aware anything whatever to do with their nationality. That competition would have existed if a British company had tried to force its way into that trade. It is part of the ordinary economic struggle which always obtains. Therefore, I do not see that the different nationality of the owners of those companies entered into the thing at all.

12,133. I take it that you would like to leave the coastal shipping open to all foreigners?—Yes; that is our rule here and that is the rule for this country which British shipowners have constantly supported.

12,134. Is it the rule of this country in regard to their possessions elsewhere, India included?—We do not make the rule for most of those possessions; in Australia, for example, we do not make the rule.

12,135. Is it not the fact that powerful British shipping interests felt the competition of Japanese shipping on the coast of India, and made representation after the war for excluding the non-British shipping from the Indian coast? Thus the report of the Board of Trade Committee on Shipping and Shipbuilding Industries after the war stated in paragraph 314 as follows—the heading is:

"The Indian Coasting Trade." "There is, however, a strong feeling among certain of our Eastern lines that this trade should in future be reserved for British ships. We understand that already before the war the Japanese lines strove to force their way into the coasting trade by a policy of rate cutting in which they were directly assisted by the heavy subsidies paid to them by their Government. Inasmuch as the coasting trade is everywhere regarded as a domestic trade, the action of the Japanese undoubtedly caused resentment, more especially as the coasting trade of Japan is closed to foreign shipping."

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.] My Lord Chairman, is it necessary to have these long dissertations read out to us? What we want is question and answer.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] Quite true, but I cannot get an answer unless I put the facts. I have said my question is whether the British have not objected to other foreign powers trading on the coast of India. I cannot do that unless I quote chapter and verse for it.

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.] I think it is quite unnecessary to quote chapter and verse, in my humble opinion.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] I am meeting the reply from Sir Alan that they would not object. I want to show here that they have objected.

Earl of Derby.] Sir Alan has answered I do not see that we can go back upon it.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.

12,136. Sir Alan is one of the leading shipping men in this country?—May I answer the question? I see the point perfectly well. I am not aware that British shipping interests have sought to close the trade on the coast of India. It is possible they did; it frequently occurs; shipping interests are constantly seeking to limit competition in various trades. There is at the present moment quite a strong party in the British shipping trade which desires to close the coasting trade of Great Britain. They are not the majority. The majority of shipowners hold the contrary opinion. Therefore, the fact that certain shipowners sought to close the trade on the coast of India some years ago does not seem to me to affect the question.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,137. Will Sir Phiroze allow me to ask a supplementary question in connection with that which he has just put

5^o Octobris, 1933.] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

to the witness? Is the witness aware that the representations which have been referred to by Sir Phiroze Sethna were based upon the fact that the coasting trade of India, or the ships trading to India, whether British or Indian, paid Indian tax and benefited the Indian revenues, whereas foreign shipping did not?—No, I am not aware of that

Sir Phiroze Sethna.

12,138. In regard to subsidies, I think you said this country would not like to give subsidies, in answer to Sir Abdur Rahim? May I know your view on the question of subsidies to shipping companies?—This country gives subsidies for services rendered. They are supposed to have relation to the economic value of the services. They are extremely small in relation to the mercantile marine and the subsidies given by other Powers. Our objection is not to subsidies flat, without qualification, partly because we do it ourselves, partly because almost every other nation has done it in certain instances. Our objection, and the objection is shared by the mercantile marine almost in the whole world, is against the extension of that practice to such a point that it disturbs the ordinary rules of commerce, and, therefore, we have qualified the word "subsidies" in our objection with the word "uneconomic." It is a sort of code word, it means subsidies when they are carried too far. It is a matter of judgment.

12,139. On page 24, Sir Alan, there is the following sentence "Nothing in British law and practice prevents an Indian shipping company with Indian directors and staff setting up an office in London and operating round the coast of Great Britain." That sounds very well on paper, but will you not agree with me when I say that this is absolutely out of the question because of the conditions prevailing? In the first place, larger organisations would immediately start a rate war, but more than all the new company would not get a footing in the trade organisation, and for that I may refer you to the instance of one shipping company which had to wait for years, I think until 1929, when it could get admission into the Baltic. It might be said that there is nothing in the rules of this trade organisation to prevent the admission of Indian companies, but in practice it so happens that admission is not possible because you cannot find a proposer or seconder. That, I say, is a very important reason why this argument which you advance will not hold good in the case of Indians who will start companies in this country?—The difficulty in starting a new line in competition to established line is not, I believe, materially increased, because you happen to be of Indian nationality. The difficulty is that the existing lines behave precisely like people who are in a railway carriage and they think it is full and they try to keep out the newcomer. It does not matter who the newcomer is—they try to keep him out. It is therefore perfectly true that any new shipowner trying to force his way into a trade which has a conference and is established, will find great difficulties, but not I think materially more because he is an Indian. As to the Baltic, I am not aware of the exact rules appertaining to members of the Baltic, but after all most shipowners employ a broker to go into the Baltic. It is the easiest thing in the world to get all the use you want out of the Baltic even if you are not yourself a member.

12,140. It does make a difference if you are a member, however, I will not pursue that point. Just one last question on the question of municipalities. I know a question was put to you from the other side, but I do not know exactly what you would like the municipalities to do in the matter of not discriminating. Do you mean that a municipality should not lay down that it should buy Indian locally made goods in preference to others, British or foreign?—No, I would consider that that was the same as a high tariff.

12,141. I am not talking of the tariff?—I understand you are not talking of the tariff, but supposing a municipality decides that it will buy no stores for its own consumption except those manufactured within its own borders, it is open to any British company to manufacture within its borders. There is no discrimination in that. It is equivalent to a prohibitive tariff against the rest of the world. That is the same as a tariff by a country.

12,142. But you would not insist on that municipality buying for preference British goods if it can get the same goods locally made?—No; in my view it can stipulate that the goods must be locally made. If it stipulates that they must be made by an Indian and must not be made by a British company, then

5^o October, 1933.]

SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B.,

[Continued.]

Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

it gets into what I describe as discrimination.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

12,143. May I take it that your position, or the position of the commercial bodies whom you represent, is briefly stated in paragraph 6 of your Memorandum under the heading, "Safeguards against Discrimination" the main principles. I will just read that short paragraph. "It is recognised that India must be free to regulate her business, property laws, and laws of residence and travel as her needs demand. What is essential to provide is not that British subjects and companies should be exempt from such regulations, but that they should be exempt from differential regulations." That is the main principle on which your Memorandum is proceeding?—That is our point.

12,144. In other words (correct me if I am wrong) your fear is that in future India will pass legislation spitefully or unfairly discriminating against citizens of the United Kingdom?—Yes.

12,145. You have no objection if India passes rules or laws with the view of promoting its own industries if, in the working of those rules or laws, they affected more adversely British trade than Indian trade?—I have no objection, subject to these administrative points.

12,146. What you object to are laws like those that citizens of the United Kingdom shall not do certain things or shall not offer a certain tender. That is discriminating on the ground that he is a Britisher. That is what you object to?—Yes.

12,147. You would not object to laws which are regarded as necessary for the promotion of Indian trade and industry, provided no such discrimination were made against the British?—We regard India as free to regulate her business.

12,148. Take the question of the municipalities to which my friend Sir Phiroze referred a few moments ago. You were good enough to agree that if the municipality passed a resolution that its stores should be such as were manufactured within its own territory, or its own domain, you had no objection. I am pursuing that a little further. Supposing the municipality wanted to purchase cloth for the livery of its servants, and there were two companies, one British and one Indian, both trading in that particular kind of cloth (I am only taking a hypothetical case) supposing the municipality decided to purchase the cloth from the Indian company would you call that discriminating?—Yes.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] May I ask Mr. Jayaker whether he means that in both cases the cloth is made in India?

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] I am assuming that in both cases the cloth is made in India.

Earl of Derby.] And the price is the same?

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

12,149. And the price is the same?—I should say that would be discriminating.

12,150. I only want to know how far your doctrine goes?—That is my view.

12,151. You say it would be discrimination?—Yes.

12,152. Supposing the municipality of Bombay decided to purchase its stationery from an Indian stationery firm without mentioning the British, and supposing it had a contract of 25,000 rupees a month to give, if it decided to purchase the stationery from the Indian firm, would you call that discrimination?—Yes.

12,153. What would you suggest, that it should divide its patronage?—Yes, to give a fair share to both.

12,154. If it did not you would call that discrimination?—If it concentrated its business on the Indian firm.

12,155. Not an isolated act?—No. Occasionally the order would go to the Indian firm, and occasionally to the British firm, if there was no discrimination.

12,156. As far as I can gather what you are objecting to is a course of behaviour which shows a spiteful intent to ruin British trade?—I would not necessarily call it spiteful. It might be from very patriotic or nationalist intentions.

12,157. Spiteful from the British point of view, if I may say so?—It is your word, but I say—

12,158. I mean intended to run down the British firm, or the British trade?—Yes, not holding the scales level.

12,159. But what would you say to this: That instead of having watertight rules, as you say in one part of your Memorandum—you remember that?—Yes.

12,160. I think it is in paragraph 8 that you say "that the Act of Constitution would be so drafted as to make the

5^o Octobris, 1933]

Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B.,

[Continued.]

Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E. Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL

safeguards against legislative discrimination completely watertight," and, having further regard to your admission that it is so difficult to regulate discrimination in administrative acts, do not you think that safety lies, from your point of view, in leaving the matter a little fluid in the hands of the Governor-General and the Government so that adjustments or a friendly character might be arrived at, such as, for instance, that pointed out to you by Sir Abdur Rahim, of the Japanese, the Indians and the British talking over the textile question, or the agreement recently arrived at between the Scindia Steam Navigation Company and the British India Steam Navigation Company. Having regard to the way the law could be evaded, as you yourself admit, do not you think it would be better to leave it in the hands of the authorities rather than to have rules which could be evaded every day?—It seems to us that the safeguards against legislative discrimination should be watertight.

12,161. They are, as you say?—Our view is that the safeguards against legislative discrimination should be watertight. I agree that there is a large field of administrative action for which you cannot lay down hard and fast rules. I agree it is the part of wise men to get together as quickly as they can. Our men in the cotton trade out there now are a very good example of that. Let us hope they will go on doing it. Our view is that we should try to avoid these discriminations which would, in our view, be very detrimental to both nations.

12,162. Is it not better that the principle of no racial discrimination should be accepted, and that the working out of that principle should be left to the growth of a Convention between the representatives of the two countries? Accepting the principle that no racial discrimination is allowed, the working out of that principle should be left to the growth of a Convention, and to arrangements between the two countries?—We thought, and I still think, that so far as the law can go, it should be perfectly clear and watertight, and it seemed to us to put a very nasty discretion on the Governor-General unless discrimination is clearly ultra vires.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

12,163. Do not you think a too rigid statement of the law would have a repercussion in the country and create resentment which might otherwise be obviated by a friendly intercourse between the two countries?—I should not have thought so on this matter. This excludes from the authority of the Indian State a certain act called discrimination. I do not think there is anything derogatory in putting that power away from you.

12,164. The Indians will look at the Constitution of South Africa, Australia and Canada, and say that because they happen to be white men's countries Parliament has given them larger rights than they have given to British India?—I am afraid I am not a constitutional authority, but, I believe, if you look back you will find that all these self-governing Dominions have passed through various stages in which various powers were given to them. It may be that some of them had powers rather too quickly and made mistakes and hurt themselves, but, with the extra powers being given to India now (and we commercial people are wholly on the side of this progress in liberal self-government), it seems to us that, just as certain apples were once forbidden, here is a thing which ought to be forbidden, and that both sides ought to realise that discrimination between the two races is a very dangerous and bad weapon which ought not to be used.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

12,165. May I put to you a paragraph from a Report by the late Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford. I do not wish to tire the Committee, it is quite a short paragraph. Do you agree with this view "Clearly it is the duty of British commerce in India to identify itself with the interests of India, which are higher than the interests of any community, to take part in political life; to use its considerable wealth and opportunities to commend itself to India, and having demonstrated both its value and its good intentions, to be content to rest like other industries on the new foundation of government in the wishes of the people. No less is it the duty of Indian politicians to respect the expectations which have been implicitly held out, to remember how India has profited by commercial development which only British capital and enterprise achieved; to bethink themselves that though the capital invested in private enterprises was not borrowed under any assurance that the existing form of government would

5^o October, 1933]

SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B.,

[Continued.]

Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MATRICE HILL.

endure, yet the favourable terms on which money was obtained for India's development were undoubtedly affected by the fact of British rule; and to abstain" (this is the most material thing I should like to invite your attention to) "from advocating differential treatment aimed not so much at promoting Indian as at injuring British commerce" Might I say that your sentiments are very nearly those—Who had to abstain?

12,166. The Indian had to abstain.—I think that is our view.

12,167. The kind of discrimination which you think should not be allowed is that discrimination which is intended not so much to promote Indian interests as injuring British interests. Is not that your attitude in the whole of this memorandum?—Yes, I think so, but we have tried to indicate that in promoting Indian industry, in our view the Government must give an equal chance to the various firms located there whether they happen to be Indian or British, and there is a distinction made sometimes in the use of the word "Indian." That paragraph might be interpreted in two ways.

12,168. It means native Indians?—We would say if the Government of India desires to have industry located in India, doing its work in India, it is perfectly entitled to do it, but it ought to give an equal chance to all the firms engaged in that business.

12,169. I quite follow that principle. Supposing the British interests had entrenched themselves in India (the motor trade say) with a very strong commercial side in a very strong position, and, supposing the Government of India decide that in future the motor trade should start in India, it may be because a war was imminent with Afghanistan or with some other country, and they decided that the industry in motor cars and aeroplanes, in which the British company had entrenched themselves for, say, 100 years, or 50 years, should be developed, would you prevent the Indian Government from subsidising its own industry, having regard to those conditions? There is no equality at all. There is a strong British industry established there and entrenched for 50 years. The Indian Government wish to develop the motor trade having regard to the contingency of a war. Would you prevent the Indian Government subsidising its own industry in such circumstances?—Certainly our evidence would condemn that. We should say it would be discrimination. It would be for the Indian Government to make a special case for that. If they had agreed that discrimination is bad, that is condemned. That is discrimination definitely. Can you make some piece of discrimination white? That is the question, is it not?

12,170. What you complain of is unfair discrimination. Is this discrimination unfair?—I have not said "unfair." I have said "discrimination."

12,171. In one or two places in your Memorandum you have suggested that what you were afraid of is unfair discrimination?—No, discrimination is what we are afraid of, and what we wish to avoid. If the Indian Government, contemplating doing this sort of thing, came and consulted me I would say, "Why are you afraid of employing this British factory? All the men in it will be your men. It will be exactly the same from the point of view of national security as the other factory you propose to set up. Why alienate all this industry which is doing exactly the kind of work you want? It is a mistake." That is what we would say.

12,172. Are not there industries in the United Kingdom in which the policy of the State is to subsidise those industries which are called key industries?—Located in Great Britain, but not, I think, with only British capital.

[Marquess of Reading.] I understood Mr. Jayaker to be putting a question on the policy of India subsidising its own nationals, so that is really a distinction between Indian and British

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

12,173. I am only pointing out that discrimination has to be unfair before it is stopped. Would you call the case I put to you a case of unfair discrimination?—I call it discrimination.

12,174. You would penalise all discrimination?—Yes.

12,175. Fair or unfair?—Yes.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] Although it was intended for the purpose of developing India's nascent industries, infant industries, key industries?

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] When Mr. Jayaker speaks of key industries, nascent industries and infant industries, he means a non-existent industry?

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] Yes.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,176. What I understand Sir Alan to reply is, "I have no objection to the

5^o October, 1933]

SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K C B ,

[Continued.]

Mr R. B. DUNWOODY, C B E , Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

Indian Government subsidising such an industry, or confining the purchase to goods made locally in India, provided there is no discrimination on the ground of race between the firms by whom those goods are manufactured, or from whom they are purchased"—Yes, that is right.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] But, Mr Jayaker, if I understand his question aright, suggests that it is necessary to Indian defence not that the things should be manufactured in India, but that they should be manufactured in India by Indians exclusively I do not follow the argument.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker] Supposing an industry was started in India by an Indian, and there was already a very strong combination of British interests pursuing the same industry

Sir Austen Chamberlain From outside India?

Mr M. R. Jayaker.] No, in India, established in India; and supposing, having regard to certain contingencies, like war and others, the Indian Government of the future decide to give a subsidy to the motor industry on the ground that it was just beginning to raise its head, would you call that unfair discrimination?

Earl of Dery] It is not a new industry

Marquess of Reading] I find myself confused by the question, because I understood your point to be in both cases not subsidising the industry merely, but subsidising Indian nationals in the industry

Mr. M. R. Jayaker] Subsidising the activities of a new company started by Indians.

Marquess of Reading.] That is to say, you may have a motor industry conducted by British people in India, but, when you talk of a nascent industry, you mean an industry which is to be started by Indians in India for the purpose of manufacturing the same goods, and you want to subsidise the Indians in starting an industry which may be able to compete with the same industry which has been established by British people in India.

Mr M R Jayaker.

12,177 Yes. There may be some contingency like a war?—I should certainly call that discrimination. It is a good example of it.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Perhaps I may be permitted to say that I am in the same difficulty as Lord Reading I cannot follow the question Mr. Jayaker concluded his last question by saying: "Supposing the Indian Government felt it necessary as a matter of defence." How can it be of importance to defence? I can understand how it can be of importance that the goods should be manufactured in India, and liable to no interruption in transport, but how can it be of importance that they should be manufactured by one man in India rather than another?

Mr M R Jayaker] I can conceive it as a possibility that the Government might think that Indians can be relied upon better in times of stress and trouble than a non-Indian?

Sir Austen Chamberlain] Than an Englishman

Mr. M R Jayaker] Than an Englishman.

Sir Austen Chamberlain] Do I understand the question to be that you want in such a case the right to discriminate in favour of the Indian and against the Englishman?

Mr. M. R. Jayaker] It is not in favour of the Indian as such. I am pointing out one of the exceptional cases in which an Indian Government may decide to subsidise a branch of industry which is in Indian hands

Earl of Derby.] Which is in competition with a British firm?

Mr M R. Jayaker] It cannot be in competition, because the British rival is so powerful

Sir Austen Chamberlain] A subsidy is given in order to enable it to compete with another branch of the same industry which is in India

Mr M R Jayaker] But the British branch is so powerful

Sir Austen Chamberlain] Is there any doubt that that would be discrimination?

Mr M R Jayaker.

12,178. What is Sir Alan's opinion about it?—It appears to me to be a very good example of discrimination.

12,179. In paragraph 11 (A) you refer to Proposal 122. Are you aware that that proposal applies not only to residents of the United Kingdom, but to all British subjects from whatever part of the British Empire. Proposal 122, as it is worded, applies to every British subject, including the British subject in New Zealand, Australia and South Africa. Are you aware of that, Sir Alan?—Yes As I said I am briefed to

5^o Octobris, 1933.] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

speak for the British—the United Kingdom

12,180. Therefore you are not against India having the right to adjust her relations with other parts of the British Empire, just as her self-respect would demand?—I have no right to express any opinion about that.

12,181. I was only asking because you said that Proposal 122 should be extended to cover “continuity of residence.” You would not desire that that should be insisted upon? Would you give a New Zealander who came to India eight days ago the same rights as you would give a British firm which came to India 50 years ago?—My Lord Chairman, I am afraid I am being asked to go beyond my brief. I am only entitled to speak for the commerce of the United Kingdom.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] I am only asking you upon the proposal you put upon paper.

Earl Winterton.] I do venture to suggest that that is rather an important point. As Sir Alan is aware, and ex-Viceroy's present are also aware, this question is constantly coming up, and I hope Sir Alan will be permitted to say a word about it. I do hope Sir Alan will discriminate in giving his evidence, if I may say so, and will not use the words “British subjects” as applying to South Africa, Australia or New Zealand. The two things are quite different. Can it not be made clear in some way in the Memorandum that he is only speaking on behalf of British subjects in this country? It is a very important distinction for reasons which it would be wrong of me to go into now.

Witness.] It is certainly the fact.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] If Sir Alan will say that his comments relate to British subjects in the United Kingdom I will not pursue it any further.

Chairman.

12,182. I understand you do say so, Sir Alan?—I do.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

12,183. Then at page 9 I understand that what you say (correct me if I am wrong) is that adopting bounties and subsidies has proved unsound?—It has been carried much too far.

12,184. But you are not against a commercially backward country like India giving bounties up to a certain point?—It is within the discretion of every country, I think; it must be left there.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] To pursue that point once more, at page 12, paragraph 2 (a), you are against any restrictions about the composition of Boards of Directors, I understand. May I just ask your attention, Sir Alan, to this, that the conditions which are mentioned in the proposals are taken from the Report of a Committee appointed by the Government of India in 1925 on which members of the Government of India, a commerce member and a finance member, and other Britishers served along with British Indians, and one of the recommendations they made was this—I will just read the recommendation; it is a short one “Where definite pecuniary assistance, such as a bounty, is granted to any particular undertaking, we consider that discrimination is feasible, and we agree with the Fiscal Commission and the Legislature that no such assistance should be granted to any company, firm or person not already engaged in that industry in India unless (I) reasonable facilities are granted for the training of Indians, and (II) in the case of a public company unless (i) it has been formed and registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, (ii) it has a share capital the amount of which is expressed in the memorandum of association in rupees, (iii) such proportion of the directors as Government may prescribe consists of Indians.” May I tell you that this has been the policy of the Government of India for the last eight or nine years. It has found expression in the report of a Committee of which important Britishers, including members of the Government, were members, and this is at present the policy which the Government of India pursues. Would you say that it should all be gone back upon under the new Government?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] Sir Alan has admitted that. I quoted that very passage.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

12,185. Let Sir Alan reply?—Our view is that it is most undesirable in principle that there should be any outside interference in the composition of Boards of Directors. We all feel that, the less interference there is the better. Then we say “It is therefore submitted that the provision for Government approval of the composition or of the conditions of composition of such Boards should be omitted from the Act. Failing this it is suggested that the power to impose conditions as to the composition of the Board of Directors be limited to a condition requiring that a proportion—say one-third—of the Directors shall be persons of Indian race and domicile." I think that expresses our views as clearly as I can 12,186 May I take it that you are not against that?—We are against it. We ask first of all that it should not be done. If it is done we ask that it should be done to a limited extent 12,187 But you would not wish the future Government of India to forfeit certain rights which they are enjoying at the present moment?—What we mean is that it would be an unwise policy for the Government.

5° Octobris, 1933] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr P. MAURICE HILL.

12,188 Then, coming to page 13, you are speaking of professional men practising in India. I suppose that would be on the principle of reciprocity. You would agree to that, would you not? You say "British professional men practising in India." It must be on the fair basis that professional men are allowed to practise in India on the same basis as Indians here?—I am afraid that you have got me off my beat there. I do not know what the exact rules about doctors, for example, are. What we are suggesting is that the British qualification should be accepted in India, and you say, "Is that reciprocal? Would the Indian qualification be accepted in Great Britain?" I am afraid I cannot answer you at all 12,189 What would be a fair arrangement according to you?—I think ultimately you would try to have the same qualification in both places. The nearer we could get together the better. We were thinking largely of ships' officers and so on.

12,190. That is to say that British qualifications should be recognised in India?—Yes

12,191 But supposing you applied that to all of the professions—take lawyers for instance. If British qualifications are to be accepted for allowing a lawyer to practise in India, do you not think that Indian legal degrees should be accepted in England too?—I am afraid there you have me beyond my brief too. Lawyers are not part of my constituents.

12,192 Now you say that it would be wrong for India to insist upon her own qualifications in laying down some conditions for registration. Are you aware that only about a fortnight ago the Australian Government in inviting tenders for their Airship Service which they are just commencing to run insisted on all the pilots to be employed on these airships holding Australian qualifications?—No, I was not aware of that 12,193 It was published in the newspapers here, and the Australian Government said that in the case of all those companies who were to ply their airships between Australia and other countries all the pilots, engineers and wireless people, if they wanted Australian support and subsidy, must have men who have qualified themselves according to Australian tests. What would you say to that if India had such a test? Would you call it discrimination?—I think if the test were open to British as well as to Indian people and was not so arranged as to shut out the British people, then it would not be discrimination. I think it would be quite within the power of India to say, "We desire to satisfy ourselves that our Air Service is conducted safely, and these are our tests"

Lieut.-Col. Sir H. Gidney

12,194 My Lord Chairman, I want to ask a few questions of Sir Alan. Sir Alan, would I be right if in a sentence I said that the two underlying points in your Memorandum are (1) safeguarding and (2) discrimination?—Safeguards against discrimination, yes

12,195. In your Memorandum you have asked for an additional safeguard. Do I gather from that that you consider the safeguards in the White Paper are not adequate?—Yes

12,196 Then you say on page 3 (6) of your Memorandum that it would be unfair and impracticable to put the onus of this duty upon the Governor-General and the Governors?—Yes

12,197 If you will refer to page 6 of your Memorandum, in which, after quoting the speeches of Mr. Baldwin and the Lord Chancellor, you want safeguards as are stated in these two speeches—you would be satisfied with them?—Yes

12,198. May I refer you to the White Paper, page 41, paragraph 18 (e), which gives special responsibilities to the Governor-General regarding commercial discrimination?—Yes

12,199 I also refer you to page 55, paragraph 70 (d), which gives the Governors the same power of special responsibilities?—Yes

12,200 I take it that you are quite familiar with paragraphs 122, 123 and 124 of the White Paper?—Yes.

5^o Octobris, 1933.]SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
MR. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., MR. M. W. WATT and MR. P. MAURICE HILL.

12,201. Do you or do you not think that in these paragraphs of the White Paper the same protection is given to the prevention of commercial discrimination as is embodied in the two speeches you have quoted and which you are prepared to accept? Is there any difference in fact or in substance?—We thought there was a difference and we tried to point out what we thought was the difference in this evidence

12,202. Will you tell the Committee exactly what in your opinion is the difference?—It appears in the evidence. The objection to putting the burden upon the Governor-General and the Governors we have stated on page 3. The comments we have to make about paragraphs 122 and so on appear on pages 7, 8 and 9.

12,203. In other words, do you mean to imply or do you fear that the future Federal Government would be so constituted and so administered that the Viceroy is likely to be influenced by the political pressure of his Ministers?—I do not know that I have to make any opinion upon that. I think the Governor-General is placed in a very invidious position when he has to take this action, and, in our view, it would be better that the Constitution should make the action which we hope will be avoided illegal.

12,204. Then, further on, entertaining this fear, you suggest on page 14 of your Memorandum that in cases of commercial discrimination there should be appeals and a Court of Inquiry established?—Yes.

12,205. Do you mean by that that in all cases of commercial discrimination you would prefer that they be made justiciable and appealable to the Federal Court or to some other Court, or a special ad hoc Committee of inquiry?—If the discrimination is administrative and is not prevented by an Act, they can apply for an inquiry. If it is illegal and contrary to an Act, they must go to the Courts and they must go to the proper Court defined in the Act.

12,206. On page 7 of your Memorandum, in commenting upon paragraph 122 of the White Paper, will you tell the Committee exactly what value you place upon language, citizenship, domicile, etc., in the paragraph? I take it you want them included in paragraph 122 of the White Paper?—These are all of them possible reasons for discriminating. The domicile of the Company is a very obvious reason, in fact, all of them are possible reasons. All we are trying to do is to make the words convey the meaning of those speeches we have quoted.

12,207. Then what exactly do you think is the difference between the civic rights and is the status of the Indian and the European in India to necessitate its incorporation in paragraph 122?—I do not see the words

12,208. They are in paragraph 8 (2), page 7, of your Memorandum—status and civic rights?—We mean that to include everything. We think the words in respect of taxation and so on are too limited. That is the meaning of that phrase

12,209. Now with regard to municipalities, certain questions have been asked you regarding the ordering of certain goods by municipalities. Are you aware of the case in Calcutta when the Calcutta Corporation made in practice a very invidious distinction and in which they refused to accept British goods and ordered that German goods were to be accepted in the shape of gas mantles for their lights?—No

12,210. That was so and that was certainly a discrimination. Now I want to ask you about the Professions. You are aware that in England you have a Board of Trade controlling a standardised examination for your ships' officers?—Yes

12,211. And you are aware that no shipping company will accept anyone in its employ as an officer unless he possesses a certificate?—Yes

12,212. You are also aware, I think, that this is demanded in India?—Yes

12,213. And I may tell you that every Presidency in India has its own standard of such examinations which does not quite come up to the Board of Trade, and that no one who does not qualify for that standard is eligible for employment in their ships?—I am afraid I cannot answer that, I do not know about it.

12,214. In this connection would you be in favour of something similar to the Indian Medical Council Bill, which is based on reciprocity, being established in India regarding the employment of A.I. Indian officers and engineers on your ships?—I do not know the Indian Medical Council Bill.

12,215. The Indian Medical Council Bill has just been passed, and it is based mainly upon reciprocity. You would be in favour of reciprocity, would you not?—I should be in favour of reciprocity, and I think it would be a great help if we could have the men passed to the same tests in these different parts of the British Dominions, and then you could exchange.

5^o October, 1933.] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K C B, [Continued
Mr R B DUNWOODY, C B E, Mr M. W. WATT and Mr. P MAURICE HILL

12,216 If an Indian obtains an English Board of Trade certificate, does a British shipping company employ him as an officer?—I cannot tell you I do not know whether there are Indian officers.

12,217. I ask you that because we have talked a lot about discrimination, and I might tell you that there is no British shipping company I know of that will accept anyone but a Britisher as an officer on its ships coming to England or going to India or Australia. Would you class that as real discrimination?—No, I do not think so I should suppose it was selection I think they imagine they get better service from those men. They employ Indians in many functions I am not aware about the actual staffing of the ships I have no ships in that part of the world myself, and I am not aware whether there are any such officers, but I do not think their reason for not employing them is because they are Indian, it is because they think they get better service from these other men whom they do employ.

12,218 Although the man passes the same examination in England?—You do not pick a man because of the examination he has passed.

Mr M R. Jayaker

12,219 It is very easy to cloak discrimination under that formula?—Yes, I agree it is very easy.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,220 Do I understand that the Witness is accepting the statement that no British shipowner employs an Indian in officer's rank?—No, I am saying I do not know.

12,221. You are not accepting that statement?—No, I simply do not know.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

12,222 May I ask one or two questions? You state, Sir Alan, that you are speaking here from the point of view of business people and not as a politician. May I ask, therefore, your opinion, whether as a business man you think that the British trade and commerce in India will prosper more by constitutional restrictions than by the good will of the people of India?—Undoubtedly the most important thing you can have is the good will of the people you are trading with.

12,223 Do you not think that by telling Indians to their faces day after day that you have no confidence in them and putting in the Constitution restrictions showing that want of confidence there is a danger of your losing the good will of the Indian people?—I should not have thought so I should say that this was a large extension of confidence and that it was very wise to draw a line short of things which you knew would undermine confidence on both sides and be bad for trade.

12,224. Then I will ask you another question. You stated only a few minutes ago that you feared that there would be some kind of administrative discrimination against British companies in India in ports if the administration of the ports passed into the hands of Indians. You said that that may happen in the case of allocating berths in the docks?—No, I stated that that was the way in which administrative discrimination could be applied in the ports.

12,225. That may take place?—Yes, it may take place.

12,226. And it may take place because the administrators happen to be Indians?—I did not say that, but it might, of course.

12,227. You did not say that, but that is the implication. May I ask you now who are the present administrators of these chief Indian ports—Indians or Britishers? Have you any information upon that point?—I believe the larger ones are port trusts, but how exactly the port trusts are constituted I cannot tell you. I can easily get the information for you I think there is voting power to the users.

12,228 Before I put my next question, I give you this information, that most of the controlling authorities in Indian important ports are Britishers. Now after I have given that information to you, may I ask you what protection the Indian shipping companies have had so far in this matter? Do Indian shipping companies complain that simply because the administrators happen to be Europeans there was this discrimination against them?—No. As far as I am aware, there has been no discrimination and no complaint of it.

12,229 May I ask you why you complain of the administration of Indian administrators²—I have not done so. I have suggested that discrimination should be abjured—that there should not be discrimination. I have not said that Indian administrators would discriminate in the ports, but I have said that the ports could be used very readily for that purpose, and I have given reasons in my evidence for thinking it necessary to abjure this power of discrimination.

5^o Octobris, 1933.]SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued
Mr R B DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL

12,230. But if it is not on racial grounds that you fear discrimination, may I ask on what grounds you fear discrimination on account of the new constitutional proposals?—You will get the grounds stated in these statements by various important Indian people and in some of the questions of your colleagues to-day.

12,231. I will leave that point and I will ask you another question with regard to ports. You ask that previous sanction of the Governor-General should be necessary for changing or amending the present Port Trust Acts. Now if it is the present position that most of these Port Trusts are at present dominated by British interests, if the Indians desire that as they are asking for self-government in political organisations there should be self-government in port administration, how can that be done? Is it not legitimate for the Indians to expect to get these ports into their own hands?—I think the major ports are all of them in the hands of Port Trusts.

12,232. Which are at present dominated by Britishers?—Which are, I think, dominated by the people who use them—the traders. Exactly what their franchise is I cannot tell you. But it seems to me it is worked very well. I do not think there is any discrimination.

12,233. It is true it has worked very well from the British point of view, but it has kept out Indians?—With great respect, I have never heard any complaint about discrimination against Indians, and I should have thought it most improbable.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.] I do hope the Witness will make it clear that he is not accepting the statement that the constitution of the present Port Trusts in India is largely British or excludes Indians in any way.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.] I say they are dominated by Britishers.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.] I challenge that statement.

Lord Eustace Percy.] My Lord Chairman, is it desirable that we should have statements of facts made by members of the Committee and have no opportunity to challenge them at all?

Mr N. M. Joshi.] I am quite prepared to have the statement challenged.

Earl Winterton.] May I put a further point, and it is this. What is the practical effect of asking a question of a witness when he repeatedly says he cannot answer it? The witness has previously said he is not in a position to answer it because he has not got the knowledge necessary to give the answer.

Lord Snell.] Was not Mr. Joshi trying to help Sir Alan by giving him what he thought was correct information, and then asking him a question?

Mr Hari Singh Gour.

12,234. He was trying to jog his memory?—You cannot jog my memory, because I have never known.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

12,235. There are certain industries in India such as the coastal shipping industry which at present are largely in the hands of Britishers. I hope the fact will not be challenged at least in this matter. Do you agree with the fact in the first place?—That most of the coast lines in India are British-owned?

12,236. Yes?—I believe that is true.

12,237. Now I want you to help us. We are desirous that Indians should have an entrance in this line. How would you advise us to get an entrance into this line?—It is scarcely part of my evidence, and if you come to me in my office in the City, I would be delighted to talk to you about it, if you are a shipowner seeking entrance; but it is a matter of ordinary commercial competition.

12,238. Then I will ask you one or two questions on page 7 of your memorandum. You said there that Section 122 is not quite enough for your purpose. Section 122 makes discriminatory legislation as regards any "profession, trade, business or occupation, or the employment of any servants or agents, or in respect of residence or travel within the boundaries of the Federation" null and void. It takes away the power of the Indian Legislature as regards discrimination—"discrimination based upon his religion, descent, caste, colour or place of birth." You want now this latter list to be extended by adding the words "language, citizenship, domicile, and place, duration or continuity of residence" Not only that, but you want this section to be extended not to the trades and other purposes mentioned, but to the whole range of the status and civil rights That is what you state Now the question which I want to ask you is this you do not want any legislation making discrimination on the ground of language, on the ground of continuity of residence, in the matter of the status and civil rights If I give you an instance of legislation which is likely to be passed, suppose a provincial legislature passes legislation as regards the constitution of a municipality, stating that any person who resides within the boundaries of a municipality for one year will have a right of vote and no others, do you think this is discrimination on the ground of continuity of residence?—No The vote is contingent on a term of residence. Is that it?

5^o October, 1933] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr R B DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr M W WATT and Mr P MAURICE HILL.

12,239 Yes?—I would not say.

12,240. You say no discrimination on the ground of continuity of residence?—No, I would not say that.

12,241 May I take it that you withdraw it?—No, I do not follow your suggestion, but I do not think it covers your point.

12,242 Then how can legislation be passed if we accept your suggestion?—My suggestion is to give a more accurate interpretation of the meaning We do not think that these words that are in the clause already cover the idea

12,243 Then I will ask you another question about language. It is quite desirable, or at least some governments may consider it to be desirable, that the police in any city should have a knowledge of the language of that city, and if legislation is passed that nobody who does not understand the language of that city should be given a post in the police of that city Will that be a discrimination on the ground of language?—No, I should not have said so 12,244. If our clause is worded according to your suggestion it will come quickly to difficulty?—No, I do not think so I think the Police appointment depends on fitness to hold his employment. He is obviously unfitted to hold his appointment if he cannot talk the language of his customer.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.] But your point is that there should be no discrimination on the ground of language.

Marquess of Reading

12,245 Is not the discrimination of which you are speaking political discrimination?—Yes and "in respect of holding of any business or employment"

Mr. N. M. Joshi.] Not only the employment and trade but even to status.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] You are dealing with employment.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

12,246 I am dealing with employment. I will not ask any more questions on that at all. In answer to some of the questions you stated that you would like to get the position of equality on the ground of reciprocity Do I understand you quite correctly?—Yes, I think so 12,247. So if in Great Britain there is any legislation which says that only British-born subjects are employed you would regard that as discriminatory legislation in Britain, would you not?—Yes, I should think so.

12,248 Then you will join us or help us in appealing to your Parliament to amend that legislation or to repeal it?—I should like to be given an example

Mr N M Joshi.] I will tell you now, if it is necessary, that even in India Indians are discriminated against as regards their employment in certain positions I recently returned from India, where I had to listen to question and answer in the Indian Legislative Assembly. In India there is a department called the Cipher Bureau in the Foreign Office of the Government of India, in which it is only British-born subjects who are employed We asked questions why Indians should be discriminated against in India and we were told that that is British legislation, that in the Cipher Bureau British-born subjects alone could be employed. If there is such legislation in Great Britain, do I take it that you will help us in getting such legislation repealed or amended?

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.] I do not think there is any legislation. It is really a rule which is established by the Foreign Office.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.] My question is, it is on the ground of reciprocity, that they demand that there shall be no discrimination, certainly we are entitled to ask the witnesses whether they will agree to the repeal or amendment of any such legislation if it exists in Great Britain.

5^o Octobris, 1933.] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.] It does not exist.

Earl Winterton.] There is no such legislation.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] This is a purely hypothetical question about legislation which does not exist.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.] My Lord Chairman, the Members of the Committee say it does not exist. It may not exist, but my information is very recent from replies given in the Legislative Assembly, that this is on account of a rule discriminating against Indians in their own country.

Sir Hubert Carr.

12,249. There are just two points I wanted to put to Sir Alan Anderson. Some questions were put to you by Sir Abdur Rahim with regard to your preference for gaining protection from discrimination by agreement rather than by legislative enactment. I rather gathered that you favoured that, but am I right in saying that at the present time there is no body in India with which you can make such an agreement which would be binding on the future constitution? I mean, that no agreement made to-day between the Government of India and the Government of Great Britain, or between the merchants of Great Britain and the Government of India would be binding in the future upon the Government of the new constitution?—That is so, I suppose. I understood those questions to refer to trade agreements between merchants on the one side and merchants on the other and my answer was not intended to belittle the need for administrative protection against this danger, but I agree that the most important thing of all is to live at peace with your colleagues and neighbours and therefore these traders should try to get together and settle their differences.

12,250. That, in fact, discrimination was not a question which could be settled between traders?—No, not at all.

12,251. Have you ever accepted the principle that British firms working in India, or with India, should be treated, or even accounted as non-nationals? So many questions seemed to me to be put to you on the basis that the British trader is a non-national and therefore he may be discriminated against. But has not it been the contention of commercial bodies that in commerce and industry they cannot be treated as non-nationals and that they stand on exactly the same footing as Indian-born merchants in all matters of commercial legislation?—That is another and very concise way of putting our whole case.

Sir Hubert Carr.] Thank you. I want to be quite clear on it.

Lord Snell.

12,252. Sir Alan, if we could assume that for the purpose of establishing a new industry in India it was decided to put on a subsidy in order to put it on its feet, would a shipping company that had previously carried the goods that had been made regard that as discrimination against British traders?—India gives a subsidy to a new company for doing what?

12,253. For creating a new industry to give it a start?—A new cotton mill in India.

12,254. What you like?—Would the shipping company that used to carry the cotton goods out to India say that was discrimination?

12,255. Or carry goods to India?—No, I should say not.

12,256. You would not carry it to that extent. In regard to the protection of an industry, an indigent industry, suppose that any other country, Britain or any other, were to enter upon a policy of dumping in India and protection was undertaken against that: would that be considered as discrimination in Sir Alan's interpretation?—No. That would be a measure of protection. It would be analogous to tariff protection.

Mr. F. S. Cocks.

12,257. You have said several times that you wanted to add to Proposal 122 the question of domicile. You also added in reply to a question that by that you meant domicile in the United Kingdom. Is not that covered in your view by No 123 sufficiently?—No, it did not seem to us that it was. I admit that I am not a skilled draughtsman, but we considered these clauses very carefully. We read them in conjunction with the expressions of intention and we did not think that No 122 used the correct words to express the meaning.

12,258. You notice in Proposal 123 it says: "The Federal Legislature . . . will have no power to make laws subject-

5^o Octobris, 1933] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL

ing any British subject domiciled in the United Kingdom," and so on?—Paragraph 122 is. "no power to make laws subjecting in British India any British subject in respect of taxation, the holding of property of any kind, the carrying on of any profession, business or occupation, or the employment of any servants or agents, or in respect of residence or travel within the boundaries of the Federation, to any disability or discrimination based upon his religion, descent, caste, colour or place of birth" Our feeling was that by using those words you almost permitted discrimination for certain other causes which were quite easy to think of and we have put down a few of them

12,259 That is domicile in the United Kingdom?—Yes.

12,260. Is that not covered by the next proposal, 123?—Our feeling was that you wanted both; you wanted those words of domicile in 122 as well as the mention of them in 123.

12,261. You seem a little afraid in your memorandum that there would be discriminatory legislation. Of course, you have followed the discussions at the Round Table Conference. You remember the statement at the Second Round Table Conference, the statement that came from the report of the All-Parties Conference which said that it is inconceivable that there could be any discriminatory legislation even You have borne that in mind, of course?—Yes, we just want to have that carried out

12,262 You speak on page 12 of your memorandum of an alleged ambiguity in proposal 124, will you explain that a little? What is exactly the ambiguity to which you refer?—Paragraph 124 says that a subsidy is not condemned as discrimination solely because "It is limited to persons or companies resident or incorporated in India, or that it imposes on companies not trading in India before the Act was passed, as a condition of eligibility for any such grant, bounty or subsidy, that the company shall be incorporated." It does not cover the case of the company that was carrying on business in India before the Act was passed unless that company is included in the word "resident." We comment on ambiguity in the interpretation of the word "resident," and that I understand has a particular and special meaning and would not cover the company whose headquarters was in London, but carried on business in India. It is not incorporated in India, and it is not in that technical sense resident in India 12,263 When you say in clause (b) of your memorandum on page 12 that "bounties or subsidies should be available to all firms or individuals engaged in a particular trade or industry at the time of the enactment," you mean, of course, trade or industry with India, do you not?—Yes.

12,264. Upon the question of shipping subsidies, you say that you think they have been carried much too far and that you want to prevent their increase, but do you not think that that is really a question for negotiation and discussion rather than to be incorporated in the Act?—They are mentioned here merely as an instance of the way in which discrimination could be applied, and then we do rather enlarge about them because they have been much talked of lately, but merely to show how easy it is to slide from a quite proper subsidy into discrimination by means of subsidy

12,265 You do not say the Indian Government should not give any subsidy at all to the mercantile marine?—No, we say it should not discriminate by subsidy.

Earl Winterton.

12,266 I have only two questions to ask Sir Alan, my Lord Chairman. Referring to the bottom of page 15 of the memorandum in which you deal with your views upon proposals 122, 123 and 124, I suppose, Sir Alan, it would be broadly true to say that there is no safeguard of the kind in order to enable British shipping to carry out its legitimate purpose in the case of any of the self-governing Dominions, in fact the position is rather the other way?—That is so.

12,267. It is in fact the complaint of British shipowners that in the case of Australia certainly and possibly in the case of South Africa, there has been rather discrimination against shipowners by reason of local legislation?—There is no discrimination of oversea trade.

12,268. Coastal trade, I mean?—There is a law in Australia with regard to coastal trade which does not discriminate against British owners, but which is impossible to be complied with by people who do not specialise in that business. It is quite a different thing, it is not discrimination.

12,269. It has the effect of hampering them?—No It has the effect of shutting out, for example, my company which comes from England to Australia, but it does not shut out British-born people from setting up a company in Australia and trading there.

5^o October, 1933.] SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

12,270. I was dealing with the case of British shipping and companies who were doing business with Australia. I understood it was a complaint that they were being hampered?—Oversea shipowners wish that Australia would repeal the coastal clauses of her Navigation Act and allow them to trade on her coast.

12,271. That being so, you will agree that these proposals 122 to 124 go a great deal further from the point of view of giving legitimate opportunity to British shipping than that which exists in the case of Australia, for instance?—It is true that these proposals no longer apply to Australia. Australia has passed through that stage.

Earl Winterton.] I was only dealing with the effect of it

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

12,272 Before my right honourable friend passes to the next question, will he allow me to ask a supplementary question on the last question that was put? Do I understand from your answer that you agree that there is discrimination in the way suggested against British companies which operate purely in Australia?—No

12,273. Or is it your point that there is a discrimination in effect against companies trading from England to Australia, but not against British companies which might be set up and not already set up to trade round the coast of Australia?—There is no discrimination. There is a law which, in effect, separates the coasting trade in ships from the overseas trade in ships, and it operates just as much against the Australian owner as it does against the owner from Great Britain who is prevented from trading on the coast and it is equally open to either the Australian or the British shipowner to operate either on the coast or overseas.

Earl Winterton.] I think I can short-circuit my noble friend's question by a question that was made clear by the previous answer. I was talking purely, of the case of a British company in this country such as the great company that Sir Alan is associated with and doing business with Australia. Then I pass from that to ask you this. That being so, it being as I understand agreed by Sir Alan, that these proposals do give much greater protection, or give more opportunity, these to British steamship companies domiciled in this country than is the case in Australia.—

Lord Eustace Percy.] Why do they? I thought that was the point of Sir John's question. As I gather the provisions in the White Paper and the provisions asked for by Sir Alan would prevent discrimination between the Indian and the Englishman operating in India, but they do not guarantee equal treatment to the English shipping company trading from England and the Indian domiciled in India.

Earl Winterton.] Yes, they do. The answer is that my noble friend is wrong. The answer is that he is wrong, if I may give the answer. It is exactly what they do do. I say it is so. I do not want to enter into an argument now upon that point. I should be prepared when given permission to do so to satisfy both my noble and my right honourable friends that they are wrong in that.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.] No doubt there will be an opportunity for discussion upon that, but I wish to make it clear that the witness has not agreed with that statement.

Chairman.] Perhaps it may be dealt with in the discussion that will follow the appearance of the witness later on.

Earl Winterton.] Yes

Witness.] I did not want to burden you by enlarging this evidence too much, but we have prepared a paper on legislative powers of the Dominions, because this question of their gradual extension was very interesting to us. If you wish, we would circulate that. As to your question, I cannot tell you exactly what are the legislative powers either of India or of Australia, but in this particular, Australia has passed an Act for the government of their local trade and local shipping, and it is open to anyone to come under that Act, whether he is British, foreign, or Australian, so that it is something quite different from this discrimination which we have been talking about.

12,274 My last question is this. In view of this situation, this general Empire situation, and applying the considerations to India, without disagreeing with the contentions contained in paragraph 12 and the Conclusion of your Memorandum (which, indeed, I have no right to do in asking questions) from the point of view of British shipping (because, as Sir Alan knows I believe, a great deal of the Indian shipping trade with this country, and its profitability or otherwise, is affected by conditions in Australia as well) is not the best way to seek fair treatment for British shipping to endeavour to arrive at an agreement with the various Governments of the Empire so that a convention may be obtained which will give the fair treatment which you seek to carry out by legislative enactment under the White Paper proposals, and which you have not got in some parts of the Empire to-day? —No. I should have thought when you are extending the legislative powers of any great mass of humanity it was very wise that you should say in clear terms how far you thought they should go in certain directions. We have tried to indicate certain things which we believe it would be very unwise for them to do—discrimination being the one we have been talking about. I believe that that should be definitely excluded, and it has been said in a number of speeches that that was the intention. We submit to you that the words do not quite carry it out. That is our whole story. I agree, always, it is very important for us to put our heads together as traders and try to arrive at agreements.

5^o October, 1933] Sir ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr R B DUNWOODY, C.B.E, Mr M. W WATT and Mr P. MAURICE HILL

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.

12,275. I want to put one very simple question. From what you have heard here this afternoon have your fears as to the risks under the proposed new constitution, of discrimination against British interests in commerce and British interests in shipping, been allayed?—No.

12,276. Then you consider that your safeguards are still necessary?—Yes.

Lord Irwin.

12,277. May I ask one question to make clear Sir Alan's attitude with regard to subsidies arising out of something he said to either Sir Phiroze Sethna or Mr Jayaker? Let us assume that India is anxious to develop Indian shipping. What would be his view of the propriety or impropriety of India offering a subsidy to shipping companies and accompanying it with a condition that the subsidy should only be payable to companies of not more than, we will say, a maximum tonnage of so much. Would he take the view that that was a fair thing, as in terms it implied no discrimination between Indian and British, or would he and those with him take the view that that would in fact be a matter for an inquiry by the Governor-General? —I understand that this is an invitation to people of enterprise to tender for a certain service, and it is limited to people whose ships are below a certain tonnage?

12,278. I had rather in mind those whose fleet was below a certain tonnage? —In that way existing shipowners could be cut out from competition? Really, it would be totally ineffective. If an existing shipowner wanted to go in for it he could float a new company, and the real heart of the question is whether discrimination, if it is carefully cloaked, remains discrimination, is it not? and that is the difficulty. We all realise there is great difficulty. If there is a serious desire on the part of a great nation to discriminate, then they will find some way of doing it, but it is very important I think (and we submit this to you) to keep it permanently before them that it should not be done, that it is not part of the bargain, and that they, as honest people, have decided that they will not do it. In our view, speaking as business people, it is a great mistake to do it, and in this case you have taken of a shipping company, there is nothing on earth to prevent the enterprising Indian man from starting his own ships and competing in the trade, any more than there is to stop the Briton or the Dane or the Norwegian. Competition will be against him, but not at all because he is Indian (that is the difficulty foreseen in some of the questions) and I think the danger we are up against in the British Mercantile Marine is that we may soon be seeking for protection from people who pay lower wages. It is rather the other way round.

Sir Reginald Craddock

12,279. There is only one point I wanted to mention. In your Memorandum, under the heading of "Conditions of Eligibility for Subsidies," you say later on that you do not like interference with the composition of boards of directors and that at an rate such interference should not extend beyond a requirement that one-third of the directors should be persons of Indian race and domicile. But, as a matter of fact, as I think you recognise, those conditions of eligibility are not applicable to companies that were trading in India.

5^o Octobris, 1933]SIR ALAN GARRETT ANDERSON, K.C.B., [Continued.
Mr. R. B. DUNWOODY, C.B.E., Mr. M. W. WATT and Mr. P. MAURICE HILL.

before the Act was passed. It is in sub-paragraph (d) that you make reference to that point. Do I understand it correctly that when you speak of the Act granting the subsidy you mean some later Act, whereas in Proposal No. 124 I can see that there might be subsidies granted, although the power to grant them might be taken in an Act. How would you limit that time which would exclude you from the disability? How would you define it?—I am afraid I have not grasped the question.

12,280 You say in sub-paragraph (d): "It is not clear from Proposal 124 that a company registered in Great Britain but trading in India before the Act granting a subsidy would be protected from discrimination in the event of its subsequent registration in India." I was not quite clear as to exactly what cases you were contemplating, because this eligibility for subsidies does not involve an exclusion in the case of companies that were trading in India before the Act was passed. I am not quite certain of your point there?—I am afraid I have not quite grasped the question.

12,281 I wanted you to explain quite what you meant by. "It is not clear from Proposal 124 that a company registered in Great Britain but trading in India before the Act granting a subsidy would be protected from discrimination in the event of its subsequent registration in India"?—Because its subsequent registration in India would make it a new company.

12,282. Although it had been trading in India before the Act. Is that your contention?—That is our reading of it.

12,283. You want that to be made clear?—Yes.

12,284. The other limitation which you suggest is that, if a company subsequently acquires a business in India which existed before the Act, the same exemption should apply to the firm or company that acquired that business?—Yes.

12,285. Those are the two points on which you think that Proposal 124 does not go far enough?—Yes.

Sir Reginald Craddock.] I just wanted to be quite clear that I understood the meaning of that.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.

12,286 I wanted to clear up some of the questions I asked earlier in my examination. When I asked Sir Alan if he was aware of shipping companies who did not employ any but British officers, I referred to shipping companies in England who traded with India, and I particularly referred to both the P & O. and the B.I., which companies refuse to employ any but British officers, especially when steamers are altered from an Eastern to a Western coast route and their Indian and Anglo-Indian employees are put on Eastern coast ships and are not sent to England. That is a clear case of racial discrimination which I have brought to the notice of the Government of India and the B.I. Co. in Calcutta. In a case of a Chief Engineer doing excellent service in a B.I. Eastern coastal boat, the moment the boat is sent to England and alters its line, the one who is not a Britisher is put on an Eastern coast ship and not sent to England. It is a very flagrant case of racial discrimination which is being practised largely by the B.I. and which I have in vain brought to the notice of the Government of India. It is only natural that with racial discrimination there you cannot expect to avoid racial discrimination in other things, if you practice it?—I cannot say whether the B.I. do that or do not. I do not know. If they do I cannot say it is racial. It is probable that the native Indian has his home and headquarters in India; he is not used to a cold climate; for many reasons it may be undesirable to send him on that voyage, but I should be arguing with a complete lack of knowledge if I argued it.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.] I just wanted to explain my position.

Chairman.] We are very greatly obliged to you gentlemen for having provided us with this Memorandum and for having appeared before us.

(The Witnesses are directed to withdraw.)

Ordered, That the Committee be adjourned to to-morrow at half-past Ten o'clock.

DIE VENERIS, 6° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Present :

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.
 Marquess of Salisbury.
 Marquess of Zetland.
 Marquess of Linlithgow.
 Marquess of Reading.
 Earl of Derby.
 Lord Middleton.
 Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.
 Lord Irwin.
 Lord Snell.
 Lord Rankeillour

Lord Hutchison of Montrose
 Sir Austen Chamberlain.
 Mr. Cocks.
 Sir Reginald Craddock.
 Mr. Davidson.
 Mr. Isaac Foot.
 Mr. Morgan Jones.
 Miss Pickford.
 Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.
 Earl Winterton.

The following Indian Delegates were also present —

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
 Sir Hubert Carr.
 Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.
 Sir Hari Singh Gour.
 Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.
 Sir Abdur Rahim.
 Sir Phiroze Sethna.
 Sardar Buta Singh.
 Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

The MARQUESS of LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL, C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr. Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL are called in and examined as follows:

Chairman.

12,287. You gentlemen are good enough to appear before us on behalf of the Indian Empire Society. Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce, you were Revenue and Judicial Commissioner in Baluchistan, from September, 1929, to October, 1930, and Gazetted Chief Commissioner, Baluchistan, from that date to your retirement in March, 1931?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) Yes.

12,288. Lieut.-Colonel Sir George MacMunn, you were Quarter-Master General in India from 1920 to 1924, and I see that you visited India again in 1933. Mr. Waris Ameer Ali, you were District and Session Judge in the United Provinces and you retired in June, 1929. Mr. O. C. G. Hayter, you served in India in the Indian Police in the Bombay Presidency from 1896 to 1925. Mr. Justice Le Rossignol, you were a Judge in the High Court in the Punjab from 1919 to your retirement in 1926. Mr. Lyall, you were Officiating Commissioner in the Bhagalpur Division from 1915 to 1920 and Commissioner from that date to your retirement in 1926.

Apart from the General Memorandum No. 77, which you have been good enough to furnish, Colonel Bruce hands in Memorandum No. 78, Mr. Lyall, No. 80; Mr. Waris Ameer Ali, No. 81; Mr. Hayter, No. 82; and Mr. Justice Le Rossignol, No. 83?—Yes; the memoranda are as follows.—

MEMORANDUM 77—GENERAL MEMORANDUM.

Though our general testimony must be general in character we would respectfully point out to the Joint Select Committee that coming as we do from diverse parts of India where conditions are often very different, it is impossible that our experience should be identical on every point. I think it will be agreed, therefore, that any representations or evidence we have to give must be given with reference to the areas and services with which we have respectively had to deal. That being the case we have deemed it necessary to add memoranda dealing with the special problems of our respective fields.

6^o October, 1933]

[Continued]

Generally speaking.—

While we are in favour of increasingly associating Indians in the administration of the country whenever and wherever possible, we hold that the degree to which this can be done must be subordinated (1) to the welfare of the masses (2) to the conscientious discharge by the British nation of its stewardship of the vast continent of India and (3) to justice to the commitments undertaken by the British nation.

We yield to nobody in our desire to honour scrupulously all pledges given to India. We maintain, without fear of contradiction, that these pledges have never been unconditional. To act as if they were is, in our opinion, a direct breach of faith to the Indian masses as well as to the British nation, and a betrayal of our stewardship.

History teaches us that there never has been a Sovereign power active throughout India except the British. The benefits this power has conferred on its teeming millions, the safety engendered by enforcement of Law and Order, the development of Schools, Railways, Irrigation Canals with British capital and British lives have been testified to by historians of all nations.

In our view the original lines on which Indians were more closely associated with the Government of their country were correct; selection and promotion by proved merit.

The decline commenced from the day when British politicians endeavoured to endow India with democratic government. This policy has to our certain knowledge been imposed from England against the advice of the Services. The general body of the Services in India has watched with anxiety and misgiving the enforcement of a policy which those of us most closely concerned with District administration knew could only bear the fruit it has—a widening breach between communities, the rapid decay of good government and Law and Order, the growth of parties bitterly antagonistic to British rule.

We regard all safeguards as worthless. They will lull the nation into a false sense of security and provoke in the opposite party the antagonism they cannot control.

The only reality is "Power". If that is retained safeguards are not required.

We ask the Committee to advise that Parliament shall not divest itself of power to vary hereafter the constitution of India, and that the power so retained should not be a bare sufficiency but have an ample reserve. Such power can be retained by an insertion in the Act of the right of Parliament to resume control in whole or in part.

This demands an adequate British element in all the key services of India, and especially the Judiciary, the Police, Irrigation, the Railways, the Post and Telegraphs and the Medical Services.

The condition of the peasantry in Russia and China to-day is strictly comparable to that of India when we took over. Let us see to it that we do not inaugurate a constitution which may bring India to a like plight.

Some may talk of taking the "risk" of granting India a full-fledged democratic constitution, but we would ask them to remember that the risk is not theirs. The peace, safety and contentment of 350 millions, and the invested lives and capital of our country—investments made on the faith of the British nation—these are at stake.

Were there apparent in the principal organised political party of India to-day any real recognition of partnership, our misgivings as to the experiment might be less. They are, if possible, rendered more profound by the chaotic world conditions of to-day and the fact that too many of the advanced politicians of India to-day appear to be inspired by unreasonable animosity.

The finances of India are already strained to the utmost by the experiments of the past ten years—to such an extent that Parliament has acquiesced in the reduction of the pay of members of the administrative Services—even against contractual obligations and involving the reduction of activities beneficial to the people in many departments.

6^o October, 1933]

[Continued.]

MEMORANDUM 78 BY LIEUT.-COLONEL C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E.

I think it will be admitted that the most vulnerable portion of the great Indian Empire is its north-west frontiers, for these are the very ramparts of the City of India, and if the ramparts fall, the City must fall also.

If that be true, then it may equally well be so that on the true solution of the frontier problem in its relationship with India Proper, may rest the fate of this great sub-continent. Has this fact and what bearings the lessons of the frontier have on the problem been taken sufficiently into consideration?

HISTORICAL.

It would certainly seem from the lessons of the frontier, if not from the lessons of history, that any administration which subordinated the welfare of the masses to political considerations always failed and caused needless suffering to the people as a whole, whereas any administration which kept the welfare of the masses as the supreme test always succeeded.

Even on the frontier, therefore, if these two interests clash, we seem faced with "the very clear and very grave alternative, to back the politically minded class or the interests of the masses, to stand by the masses or to persist in a policy of concessions."

If a study of the past is necessary to discern the future it would seem that the lessons of history, the lessons of India and of the frontier show that the results of the two alternatives are not matters of conjecture, but facts, which prove conclusively that the welfare of the masses must always be the supreme test.

Not deterred, however, by these lessons we carried on in India a policy of concession and drove many men "who had previously been prepared to stand by us on to the other side for their own protection."

For instance, on the frontier, when a certain Mullah was asked why he had joined the opposition, he answered that "nowadays only those who give trouble are of any importance; loyalty does not pay."

(Note.—Even as far back as 1901, Sir John Rees wrote in his "Real India"—"There is no doubt, however, that the opinion is widespread that agitation pays and the writer has frequently heard the 'Honours List' discussed by Indian gentlemen with the remark 'only the Natives who worry or oppose Government are remembered by it on these occasions—loyalty does not pay.'"

A father of one of the Red Shirts wrote that his son had been compelled to join the Red Shirt Army and could not a government job (sic) be procured for him? The gist of his letter was that there was little peace for anyone who was neither a Government servant nor a Red Shirt.

Whatever may have been the results of concessions on the rest of India, with which it is not my province to deal, their effects on the frontier and its tribes was certainly disastrous.

The concessions made have been clearly set forth in "The India we saw" and elsewhere but, to show what effect this policy had on the frontier, it might be as well to put down briefly the more important ones in chronological order, as only thus can the cumulative effects be clearly gauged.

In spite of non-co-operation and the fact that there had been a deterioration in the services and consequent suffering to the people after the late Reforms we continued the policy of concession.

(a) In 1927, although the statutory period of 10 years had not expired "doubtless in response to great pressure from Indian politicians Government anticipated the appointment of a Commission" Major Cadogan in "The India we saw.")

Whether this decision was wise or not, it was looked upon as a surrender.

(b) At the time the Commission was appointed, the question as to whether Indians should, or should not, be included was raised and it was decided that they should not be.

(c) When it was suggested that Indians would be prepared to co-operate with the Commission, provided a Round Table Conference was agreed to, this suggestion was also rejected as outside the range of practical politics.

(d) Once again, however, was agitation to succeed where constitutional methods had failed as Congress "were sagacious enough to realise that by avoiding compromise with the Commission they were more likely to exact concessions... the subsequent capitulation of the Home Government in face of this defiance proved how correct had been their assumption." (Major Cadogan.)

(e) And exact further concessions they did as Round Table Conference was to succeed Round Table Conference. In spite of the scenes which accompanied the tour of the Simon Commission and which in the opinion of many of the officials were unnecessary, Congress and all that it stood for, continued in their rebellious attitude. Indeed the only reason for their overtures, shortly before the departure from India of the Commission, was due to the fact that the Moslems had broken away from them (Major Cadogan).

6° October, 1933]

[Continued

(f) Then followed the Gandhi agreement by which, in the opinion of many, the waning prestige of Mr. Gandhi was not only revived but very much strengthened.

(g) Once again agitation appeared to have succeeded where constitutional methods had failed, the climax being reached when "at the dictates of Congress" not even one of the members of the Commission was appointed to the Round Table Conference

(h) This was followed by what was looked upon by many as the still further surrender over the phrase "Dominion Status."

These, I think, are admitted facts which those who run may read and there certainly seem many other examples from our own and other nations' history—Egypt, Ceylon, Cyprus, Morocco, Syria, China and others.

What is happening in Egypt is of great consequence to Britain; what has happened and is happening in China and other places may not be of such great consequence—though it is of vital consequence to the masses in these countries—but this at least cannot be said of India where it is admitted that the welfare of the masses must be our first consideration and one that cannot be repudiated without dishonour to ourselves.

THE NORTH WEST FRONTIERS.

Turning now from the general to the particular

What of the North West Frontiers of India which have been described as "one of the few places on the earth's surface where we British can take a knock-out blow"?

Protected on two sides by the sea and on its North Eastern Frontiers by the impenetrable barrier of the Himalayas, the history of India, for generations past—more especially before the coming of the British—tended to centre round its North West Frontiers. The great chain ramparts of the City of India, the passes its gateways, through which have swept in endless succession mighty invading armies. The history of these invasions has been the history of India throughout the ages, as well as the history of the frontier, where in addition, clan ever warred against clan for the mastery. The tidal wave ever advancing and never receding drove the tribes ever eastward, until the plains of Hindustan were reached, where wealth and better-living gradually sapped their energies, causing them in turn to fall victims to their cousins from the hills.

Devastated by inter-racial wars, a prey to the ambitions of rival principalities and powers, ravaged by famine and pestilence; groaning under the tyranny of caste India had lain at the mercy of the more virile races of the north who swept down the passes and would almost certainly have continued to do so had not the slow but sure advance of the British dammed the flood and brought peace and justice to that distracted land.

Are not both the Hindus and ourselves rather inclined to forget that this dam was British, or at least constructed by the sweat and toil of British Engineers, and that the flood waters are still there, only waiting to be unloosed?

"The strength of a wall is neither greater nor less than the courage of those who defend it." Undermine and weaken that dam and there is great danger that, like their own mountain streams, dry and silent for the most part, save when storms crashing on the hills bring them down in wild spate, the tribal storm will again burst and the torrents sweep down with irresistible force on to the plains of India. For the frontier tribes are sitting on the fence waiting and watching; waiting as they have ever done for any signs of weakness on the part of the authorities. "When the Sarkar goes," said one of the Mahsud tribal headmen, "will you lead us when we march on Delhi." This may have been said in jest, but many a true word has been said in jest

Let those who doubt my word as to the possible results of any weakness listen to the answer of the Hindus of Dera Ismail Khan to a number of Congress and Swarajist leaders, who had come to visit the frontier and were expecting them to cry loudly for Reforms, "We happen to be up against facts," they said, "We know that only a year or so ago, owing to a slight weakening of authority, trans-frontier raids into the district numbered more than one a day. All the Hindus fled from their villages into the walled towns and hardly dared to leave their houses. Raids, robbery and kidnapping were rife. Now there is once again peace and security and no raiding. Reforms? We want no reforms which are likely to weaken the administration. What we want is a strong government and if necessary more British officers." Facts and realities are very convincing. And is it not rather significant that where the Hindus are in a minority they should wish for strong government rather than self-government.

6^o Octobris, 1933]

[Continued]

Here, on the frontier, two distinctly divergent policies have been tried, called the Sandeman and Close Border systems respectively. After 35 years spent in close and almost daily contact with the tribes, who inhabit this great borderland, and in constant touch with their problems, I have come away with the strongest conviction that the only form of administration which has proved successful in the past, or is likely to do so in the future, is one which, while conforming in the main to Western standards, is built up on the existing frameworks of the tribal organisation.

Such a policy was Sandeman's and such, as already shown, was the policy of Lords Cromer and Kitchener, and of Marshal Lyautey, and I would dare to say of every great Colonial administrator.

Sandeman's was a policy of "peaceful penetration," generally at the request of the tribes themselves, an administration built on the tribal organisation and allowing of the participation of the tribesmen therein. It was a policy which led to the development of the country and its resources for the benefit and well being of the tribesmen. In short it was a policy of civilisation built on the rock of Justice—Justice to the poor and oppressed—and one which therefore completely fulfilled the supreme test, the welfare of the masses.

Sandeman's success was due more than anything else to the fact that he looked upon the problem almost entirely from the tribal point of view and was ever seeking for the tribesmen's welfare.

The Close Border system on the other hand, had again and again failed because it looked upon the problem from a purely selfish point of view, allowed justice to yield place to expediency, and refused to take over control, without which the moral and material benefits, of which the tribesmen were so sorely in need, could not be given them. It left the tribesmen in a state of anarchy and failed to recognise that these men are only governable so long as they are convinced of their ruler's power to govern as well as his desire for their welfare. The tribesmen across the border despised such a policy because of its weakness while those inside the districts despised it because it failed to give them security and justice. It was a policy which had called forth from the late Lord Lytton the scathing criticism that it was "neither becoming to a Great Power, humane, nor even economical." It failed because it allowed the welfare of the people to be subordinated to other considerations and shirked its moral obligation, and the outcome of its failure was seen again and again on the frontier and culminated in the recent troubles in Peshawar and on its borders.

The cornerstone of the frontier administration, as elsewhere in India, is the District Officer, working in the closest co-operation with the Police and Frontier Constabulary in the Districts, and across the border with the Political Officers. Every tribe across the border is to a great extent dependent on the settled districts for many of the necessities of life. It is therefore in the districts that pressure can be brought to bear effectively on the tribes, if they misbehave themselves. This however postulates not only a complete and intimate knowledge of the tribes by both the District and Political Officers and all other parts of the machine, but also the very completest co-operation between them.

And behind the Civil forces stands the Army and the Air Force. There is a close connection between the Army and Police in India proper, but nowhere is this connection so close or so essential as it is on the frontier. But, in ordinary times, it is the Civil and Political authorities and Police who are responsible for the maintenance of the peace of the border. Law and order are not, and must never be, a military duty. The Military and Air Force should never be called in until all else has failed, and when, without them, the Civil authorities cannot function properly. For just as in the sagacious words of the late Lord Lytton "the best political officer is not he who puts down raids but he who has no raids to put down" so is the case with the calling of the Army and the Air Force—the best political officer is he who has the least occasion to call on them for assistance.

6^o October, 1933.]

[Continued.]

In addition to these functions the civil authorities and the civil forces are in ordinary times the eyes and ears of the fighting forces and their main centre of "Intelligence." In short the responsibilities of the various parts of the machine as regards the peace of the border and their functions may thus be summed up.

In ordinary times it is the District and Political Officers, working through the Police and Civil forces, who are solely responsible for this, with the Military and Air Force always ready to assist them should necessity arise; and in times of trouble to support them and in conjunction with them, deal with internal revolt and external aggression.

The Scouts, across the border, ready in peace to give effective support to the tribal leaders, the tribal "Khassadars" (levies) and to assist the Civil authorities in maintaining peace.

The Frontier constabulary to protect the settled districts from raiding and co-operate with the political authorities and scouts across the border, and with the Civil authorities and Police inside the districts.

The "Khassadars" (tribal levies) responsible with their headmen, through whom they are enlisted, and on whom the main responsibility rests, for the maintenance of law and order amongst their own tribes. The amount of success they can achieve is greatly dependent on the support they receive which in turn is dependent on control.

The main object of the Civil and Political authorities in peace time must therefore be to have a policy which will cause the least dislocation in time of war. It must consequently be aimed at bringing the tribes in on our side, by making them our friends instead of our enemies, so that both the Army and the Air Force will be able to concentrate every available man and machine, without having to fritter away their resources on a long line of communications.

The aeroplane supplements, extends and facilitates the action of the military forces and vice versa, but, in ordinary times, neither can, nor indeed should, control the tribes. Control at such time is, and perforce must be, the work and responsibility of the Civil Authorities. In other words, each part of the machine supplements, extends and fulfils the work of the other. All have their limitations and it is only by the closest co-operation that the best use can be made of them. In war time the roles become more or less reversed, as the control gradually shifts to the fighting forces.

The only effective weapon of tribal control is a system such as Sandeman's, carried out by the right officers, who have the interests of the tribes at heart, and who know and sympathise with them. You cannot control the tribesmen by fear only.

It was a policy which, when tried in Waziristan, in spite of the forebodings of false prophets, immediately proved successful and even earned from "The Times" the attestation that "the hopes that inspired the policy have been fulfilled. It seems the Pathan can after all be Sandemanized."

On the one side of the picture therefore you have Baluchistan and Waziristan, where, in spite of serious crime having increased to an alarming extent in practically every Province in India, there, almost alone, was a steady decrease.

Has the steadfastness with which Baluchistan has withstood the storms and convulsions, which have been troubling India, no lessons for us to-day? Has the fact that, in spite of its bordering on Sind, one of the most disturbed portions of India, it has remained loyal, as witnessed to by Mr. Cadogan when he wrote "the indigenous tribes seemed perfectly contented . . . so . . . the Commission decided to leave them to their own devices—an excellent decision" nothing to teach us?

It was indeed an excellent decision, but it is hard to say how long the Baluchistan Chiefs will remain contented when they see their opposite numbers in the N.W.F.P. drawing large salaries on the Councils and Assemblies. May they not argue that these were obtained by agitation and that though their loyalty may have paid their tribesmen as a whole it certainly has not paid them? Indeed there are not wanting signs that this is already occurring. You have Waziristan, formerly the firebrand of the frontier, "contentedly quiet" because the new policy, following in the footsteps of Sir Robert Sandeman's in Baluchistan, has been aimed at furthering the moral and material welfare of the tribesmen.

And on the other side you have what? The Close Border system with its increase in violent crime, culminating in a general contempt for authority, and the debacle in Peshawar. Our preliminary duties being administrative rather than political, the supreme test of any Reform must be whether they will conduce to the security, happiness and welfare of the masses for whom Great Britain has assumed responsibility. Even on the frontier, there is, and can be, no other test. It is useless to ignore facts or "to adopt a conclusion best suited to our own ends" The facts remain impervious to such pressure and in the end always assert themselves

6^o Octobris, 1933]

[Continued]

If then we are to save ourselves, and what is far more important, India's silent millions, we must face the facts and first of all see what the results of the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms have already been on the masses and then try and visualise what the effects on them will be of the present White Paper proposals. Much is being said about the minorities but far too little about the masses.

Owing to the weakening of control due to concessions, as well as to the faults inherent in the Close Border system, increase in violent crime in the Peshawar district assumed such unprecedented dimensions that murders alone increased to one a day and the collection of revenue almost entirely ceased. It was this state of lawlessness and the failure to take adequate action against the Red Shirts which eventually culminated in the debacle in Peshawar and the rising of the Afridis. This was due in the opinion of an eye-witness, to a failure on the part of the local administration to enforce law and order "and a neglect on their part" to appreciate the real nature of the Red Shirt and City movements.

Under such a system as Sandemans the Red Shirt movement could never have come into being. For, had it done so, it would have meant a complete abrogation of the power of the tribal headmen and indeed a break up of the whole system.

At the time the Red Shirt movement was at its zenith "The Times" with a complete lack of knowledge of the psychology of the Pathan, went so far as to say that "the Red Shirts have established themselves so firmly (the underlining is mine) that over large areas the King's writ does not run." Yet, so little firm really was their seat that, at the very first show of strength on the part of the authorities, the movement more or less collapsed, thus showing that the local officers who prophesied that such would be the case, were right.

Even "The Times" admitted that since stronger action had been taken there had been a decided improvement and this was certainly the opinion of the same eye-witness in Peshawar, when he pointed out that "within a week the whole atmosphere of the Peshawar district had changed, within a fortnight conditions had reverted, at least superficially, to those that had prevailed before the first organisation of the Rural movement."

On the frontier it has indeed been proved again and again that the weaker the policy the greater is the bloodshed; that he who is ready to draw the sword is the one who is least likely to have to do so. There indeed we cannot afford to forget Lord Roberts warning that "these tribes are not our own flesh and blood and their loyalty is the outcome of their belief in our invincibility and in our power and will to defend them" and give them justice. Shatter that belief and you do so at a very great cost.

Indeed the improvement in the situation on the frontier—and probably in India as well—is due more than anything else to a recognition on the part of the district officers, the Police and the great mass of the people that the Government intended to support its officers in the maintenance of law and order. To argue otherwise, or to say that it is due to conciliation, is, I believe, to ignore the significance of the improvement as well as to fail to read the lessons of frontier and Imperial history.

Yet, even in the inflammable frontier, instead of building on the tribal organisation, and rebuilding and repairing it, where necessary, we are steadily occupied in undermining it still further. Sir Henry Dobbs pointed out that "Civil officials were mostly educated Orientals brought up in towns, who had a great dislike and suspicion of the tribes, the tribal organisation and the tribal chiefs and more often than not were out to destroy them by every means in their power." Sir William Barton gave much the same warning and in addition pointed out the extreme dangers of handing over the portfolio of law and order to an Indian Minister as, without the control of British officers the system would immediately collapse.

If this be true then are we wise in assisting them to do so. The Frontier Crimes Regulations were built up on the tribal organisation and tribal customs. Yet at a time when there was a wave of lawlessness all over India, when, in addition to Peshawar, serious crime is the Kohat and Dera Ismail Khan districts had risen by 123 per cent., we, experimentally at least, did away with these regulations in two of the frontier districts and talked of doing away with them in the remaining districts as well. Was it any wonder if many of the law-abiding citizens said that it was yet another concession to agitation?

6^o Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued.]

LESSONS OF THE FRONTIER.

Let me now sum up very briefly the lessons of the frontier:

I. The supreme test, as always must be the welfare of the masses.

II. The essentials of any policy which will pass this supreme test are —

(i) It must be a policy built on the existing frameworks of the tribal organisation and tribal customs and worked through the tribal headmen

Note.—As Marshal Lyautey pointed out "In every country there are existing frameworks. The great mistake for a European people . . . is to destroy these frameworks. Bereft of its armature the country falls into anarchy . . . In every society (and in every tribe there is a ruling class, born to rule, without which nothing can be done. Enlist that class in your interests."

Such a policy was Sandeman's on the frontier and such were the principles on which all successful administrators on the frontier have worked.

(ii) The only real safeguard for the welfare of the masses, as witnessed to by the Hindus of Dera Ismail Khan, is the reality of British control as it is their mainstay in obtaining justice. Justice has indeed been the corner stone of our Empire, as exemplified by Sir Arnold Wilson's delightful story of the two Arabs arguing as to who would win the Great War "If the English lose" said the one "then Justice will disappear from the Earth." "If that be true," said the other, "he English will win because God will not allow justice to depart from the world"

It was because the Close Border System refused to recognise that without British control justice could not be secured that it failed, as I believe we shall fail in India if in any scheme of reforms we allow the maintenance of law, order and justice to pass out of our control, thus forgetting the great Chatham's dictum, "I will be responsible for nothing I do not control."

The Close Border also failed because it did not make adequate use of the headmen or really enlist them on our side. It worked far too much through "middlemen" and allowed them and a few headmen to usurp too much power. By ignoring the majority of the tribal leaders, it weakened their power for good, though not for evil. Having weakened their power it then accused them of being useless and argued that the tribal organization had broken down. It had not broken down. It was a case of a bad workman complaining of his tools.

(iii) No considerations, political or otherwise, can therefore be allowed to override the welfare of the masses. Our own Imperial history, and more especially the history of the North-West Frontiers of India, has proved conclusively that such a policy is foredoomed to failure

(iv) The welfare of the masses being dependent on control. Control on the frontier postulates the completest co-operation between the District and Political authorities, the Police and other civil forces, and, in the last resort, of the Army and the Air Force.

(v) Proper control can however only be exercised by those officers who have an intimate knowledge of the tribes and their customs; those officers who are in sympathy with them, for as Sandeman said, "On the frontier a man has to deal with the hearts and minds of the people and not only with their fears."

(vi) There is a close connection between the Army and Police in India, but nowhere is this more necessary or essential than on the frontier

(vii) In ordinary times the Army is greatly dependent on the District and Political officers, in conjunction with the Police and Civil forces for its "intelligence" This again calls for the closest co-operation between them.

(viii) Inadequate co-operation between the Civil officers and the Police invariably leads to increase in crime, as well as to a risk of internal disturbances, to which in the frontier must be added the far more dangerous one of tribal disturbances and unrest.

6^o Octobris, 1933][Continued]

If, therefore, the peace of the border is to be kept, and law and order maintained, the closest co-operation between the Civil and Political authorities and the Police is absolutely essential as well as between them and the Army and Air Force. Nothing must be done in any way to weaken that co-operation without the gravest risks of disaster

(ix) As the tribesmen for the most part are poor—taxation must be light. This has always been laid down by all great administrators as absolutely essential. Nothing must therefore be done to add too much to their burdens

These then seem to be the tests and the essentials necessary for any policy or administration to be successful on the frontier.

How far then have the Reforms passed these tests and carried out these essentials.

RESULTS SO FAR OF THE REFORMS ON THE FRONTIER

(1) Although it may be argued that the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms did not affect the frontier, it is surely significant that in whatever districts a policy of weakness and concession to agitation was adopted, as a result of these reforms, it immediately led to lawlessness and suffering to the people, whereas in those districts where it was not adopted peace continued to reign.

(2) The policy of weakness played into the hands of the politically-minded and the "middlemen" (against whom the late Lord Lytton, Sir Robert Warburton and other frontier officers had given such stern warnings) who for the most part were out to destroy the tribal organisation and weaken the power of the tribal leaders and thereby render impossible the carrying out of the only system which has proved uniformly successful with these tribes.

(3) By playing into the hands of the infinitesimal minority of politically-minded it also weakened the power of the District officers—the very corner-stone of the administration — and greatly weakened the prestige of the Government.

(4) By weakening the power of the District officers and by concessions to agitation it caused an unprecedented increase in serious crime. By doing away with the Frontier Crimes regulations at a time when every support was necessary to the District Officer in maintaining law and order it further clipped their wings and made their task more difficult

(5) It was this policy which was the direct cause of the rise of the Red Shirts.

(6) The weakness with which these disruptive movements were dealt with still further undermined the power of the executive officers, as well as the power and influence of the natural tribal leaders, and was the direct cause of the Afridi invasion into Peshawar.

(7) "The statistics of communal riots" wrote Major Cadogan, "prove beyond cavil or dispute that it was only the prospect of self-government that acted as a restorative to the rivalries of the two communities." (Hindus and Muhammadans.) It was this prospect and the policy of weakness, which played into the hands of the politically-minded and thereby accentuated these rivalries that were the causes of much of the communal trouble on the frontier, the riots in Kohat and disturbances in Peshawar, Dera Ismail Khan and other districts. As Major Cadogan so truly points out, "This incompatibility is the big basic fact in the situation. To deny that fact is impossible; to ignore it a catastrophe."

(8) The peace of the border being dependent on the closest co-operation between the District and Political authorities, the Police and Civil forces, the Army and the Air Force, and the districts being the places where pressure can very often effectively be brought to bear on the tribes, I view with great misgiving the separation in the control of the frontier agencies and the Districts. It must eventually adversely affect this essential co-operation, for the prerequisite of the application of that pressure is that both the District and Political officers should have a complete and intimate knowledge of the tribes and how they live, move and have their being. Any officer who has had to deal with the frontier problem on both sides of the border will admit that complete, or even adequate, co-operation between District and Political officers has not been too easy to maintain. This separation must make it more difficult, and as the requisite knowledge decreases and the cleavage spreads, it cannot help but make the maintenance of the peace of the border more difficult.

(9) As the Municipal and District Boards on the frontier are still under the influence of the District officers, the deterioration, which has been so marked in the reports from other parts of India, has not been so great. At the same time it would be idle to say that the result of the weakening of the power and influence of the district officers, has had anything but a bad effect. Communal hostility and jealousy have increased and too many cases which come up before the members are dealt with from this view point, very often to the detriment of the problems which especially affect the welfare of the masses.

6^o October, 1933]

[Continued

(10) I have neither had the time, the means, nor the opportunity to go into the financial side of the frontier problem; nor am I a financier. But I believe I am right in saying that there has been a large increase in the expenditure on administration during the last decade or so. Far from this having led to any greater efficiency the reverse has been the case. Weakening of control has led to inefficiency, inefficiency to corruption and nepotism, as well as to injustice and, as already pointed out, to an increase in violent crime and consequent suffering to the masses. The savings made to meet the increase in expenditure have too often been made from those very services which tend most to the welfare of the masses. For, as Major Cadogan pointed out, "Whenever we endeavoured to discuss the problems which really matter health, education, and other nation building services, they (the Central Legislative) were not really interested."

(11) In short the results of concessions to agitation, the outcome of the Reforms, have in every case failed to stand the supreme test of the welfare of the masses and have on the contrary added much to their sufferings, by an increase in lawlessness and crime.

(12) The lessons of history, the lessons of the frontier and the facts seem therefore to show that whenever and wherever the welfare of the masses has been the supreme test and nothing has been allowed to stand in the way of achieving that goal, such a policy has always succeeded; that whenever and wherever we have pandered to agitation and have allowed the supreme test to be overridden by political considerations, such a policy has always failed; that a policy of propitiation "which has bred the notion that it is not so much co-operation but coercion that exacts concessions" and the consequent relaxation of British control has always led to the same results—deterioration of the services, corruption and nepotism, a steady increase in crime in spite of increase in expenditure and great suffering to the law-abiding masses.

THE PROPOSAL TO HAND OVER THE CONTROL OF THE POLICE AND THE COURTS.

With these facts before us and seeing the results so far achieved by a policy of concession, can we not judge how far the proposals contained in the White Paper will conduce to the welfare of the peoples of the frontier.

There is not a Police officer, I think, who will not admit that the support and co-operation of the District officers is absolutely essential if they are to carry out their work properly and maintain law and order. The greater the support and co-operation, the greater the peace. To transfer the control of the Police, the mainstay of the District administration, much further weaken the power and influence of the District officers and render that support and co-operation more and more difficult to maintain. It will thus weaken the power of the district officer in his relations with the Police, it will also weaken the power of the police on whom the District Officer so much depends for the peace of the district and the welfare of its people.

Not only the close liaison between the District Officers and the Police be affected, but also between both and the Political Officers. Furthermore, the equally essential co-operation between the Army and Police, which, on the frontier at least is so dependent on the District and Political Officers, will gradually cease to exist.

The peace of the border being absolutely dependent on the closest co-operation between every link in the chain—District and Political Officers, Police and other Civil Forces, tribal leaders and tribal levies, and the Army and the Air Force, we cannot afford to weaken any link in the chain, without courting disaster, for the strength of a chain is in its weakest link.

But under the proposal to transfer the Police to the control of an Indian Minister there is not one link in the chain which will not be weakened, if not shattered. By this I do not mean to throw aspersions on to any Indian minister as such, but it is useless not to face the facts. It would require the qualifications of a Gabriel and a Michael rolled into one to carry out the responsibilities of such an office to the satisfaction of all the various Committees. I cannot believe that in his heart of hearts there is a single Hindu on the frontier who, whatever he may say in public, does not privately view such a transfer with the gravest misgivings. The same apprehensions undoubtedly exist in the minds of the great mass of the people.

6^o Octobris, 1933]

[Continued.]

It is no exaggeration to say that "the successful working of every proposal in the White Paper—and more—will depend on the efficiency, contentment and impartiality of the Police."

Just as on the frontier we can never afford to forget Lord Roberts' warning that "these tribes are not our own flesh and blood and their loyalty is dependent on their belief in our invincibility and in our power and will to defend them" and give them justice, neither can we do so when considering any reforms.

Shatter that belief and if the history of the frontier and the recent events in Peshawar teach us anything they teach that we do so at a very great cost. So most surely is it the case with the Police. Their loyalty has been due to their complete trust in the impartiality of their British officers and their belief in their power and will to defend them. It has also been due to their belief in the same impartial treatment "as between creeds and castes, sects and parties."

The confidence of the people in the police, as well as in the Judiciary, has been due to the same causes. Their only real safeguard, as it is the only real safeguard I know of for the peace of the border, has been the reality of British control and it is this that has been the cause of their confidence.

The confidence of both has been shaken and I am convinced that neither the Police, who are being transferred without having had any real say in the matter, or the masses of the people, view the possibility of such a transfer with anything but the gravest misgivings.

Knowing how, even on the frontier, ex-soldiers and other Government servants were sometimes victimised "not necessarily by any open act or series of act" but by insidious means which are only understandable to those who know the East, I can see little hope that, once their confidence in our ability and will to defend them has been shattered, they will not become the plaything of political and communal factions.

Their morale shattered, their confidence gone, and the confidence of the people in the force on which their welfare so greatly depends, the doors of lawlessness and anarchy will be opened wide.

"In politics experiments generally lead to revolution" once said Disraeli. Experiments may possibly be tried in India proper, although even there the attendant risks are very great, but to try them on the frontier where if anywhere it should be a case of "Tamper not with the civil order where the fires of destruction lie so close beneath the surface," and against the warnings of history, would seem to be nothing short of madness.

The peace of the border dependent on the closest co-operation between all the links in the chain we have already weakened every link. And now not content with this we propose to run the risk of shattering probably the most important link of all—the Police force.

Yet the tribes on the frontier are sitting on the fence waiting and watching, as they have ever done, for the slightest signs of weakness on the part of the authorities for "Let the central authority for whatever cause become weak, or be believed to have become weak and the fringe celebrates it with an orgy of self will, for the tribesman, with his rifle at his side, is governable only so long as he is convinced of his rulers power and will to govern, as well as that rulers desire for his welfare."

BERTRAM THOMAS

MEMORANDUM 80 BY MR. F. F. LYALL, C.I.E.

I desire to make my personal note as concise as possible.

Views of the Civil Service and Police.

Unfortunately there has been a tendency, accentuated during the last 10 years, for the Civil Service to get divided into sets—the Secretariat man and the District Officer.

It has further been unfortunate that the Secretariat Officer has, with comparatively rare exceptions, not had to go back to Districts from time to time where he would come up against the realities of administration outside the headquarters stations.

The Secretariat is constantly being affected by the political impulses which are sent out from England, and it soon became patent that Secretariat life, with all its amenities of society, comfortable houses and absence of direct responsibility for the maintenance of law and order and the daily drudgery of administration work, were only open to those who could see eye to eye with the policy laid down in England that democratic institutions were to be introduced and developed.

6^o October, 1933.]

[Continued]

The District Officer almost to a man warned the Government that the policy inaugurated was fraught with terrible danger. It led to a situation where British administration was openly attacked and vilified, mass meetings were held, communal jealousies roused and District Officers in many cases ordered not to take action in regard to prominent offenders, but to deal only with the lesser fry responsible for disturbances.

It was inevitable in these circumstances that the District Officer should see more eye to eye with the Police than with the Secretariat, and that the whole administration has not already broken down is a marvellous tribute to the loyalty of the Indian Police to their Officers and to the co-operation between District Officials in the Mufassal.

I sketch this general outline merely to put on record my emphatic belief that it is not correct to say that these reforms have the support of the overwhelming mass of official opinion in India.

I may add that I have made it my business recently to discuss the present situation with Officers who have just returned from Behar, Orissa and Bengal. The loneliness of a Bengal Officer and the courage required to administer a Bengal District at the time when James Peddie and Douglas were murdered is beyond imagination. As a body we all recognised that our lives might at any time be taken, and, while we regarded this as merely an incident of our daily service, so long as the sacrifice was to be in support of the welfare of the masses of India, to my certain knowledge large numbers of Englishmen have resigned as the only means by which they could bring home to the British Government that they were not prepared to be exposed to such sacrifice when the policy being put into force was a surrender of power to a small and hostile minority of the educated classes.

I may add that I have been assured by Bengal Officers that the change since the restoration of law and order has been miraculous, but to me it seems futile to have taken this stand if it is only to lead to a legalised surrender to those very forces which brought about the massacre at Cawnpore.

I desire further to place on record that the majority of Indians who are supporting these reforms are convinced in their heart of hearts that they have gone far further than the dictates of prudence would allow. Here too, owing to the policy that has been adopted, there has been a great deal of moulding of Indian opinion, all tending to a profession not a conviction of support of the White Paper policy.

Those of us who have spent their lives in India know that every day we are told by people that the view they publicly profess is one which they have to profess either from fear or from disinclination to confess that Indians have not yet become a nation at all, still less a nation old enough to take over the reins of government of a vast Continent like India.

It is my personal belief that the responsibility for shaping India's destiny must lie for at least the next 50 years with this country, and political clamour is the least of all justifications for our surrendering that responsibility. If the responsibility is ours it follows inevitably that we must keep powers to discharge that responsibility, and this I emphatically assert cannot be done under this White Paper scheme.

As regards voting, I have seen these elections in their infancy and have heard of their developments. In no sense could they possibly achieve what the ballot box is supposed to confer on a free people. Intimidation, bribery and the influences of social boycott are unashamedly resorted to, and as District and other officials come more and more, as they must come more and more, under the influence of electoral majorities, these evils will grow at an alarming pace. Such standards of the baseness of all corruption as do exist in India are imposed by the standard of the Englishman and they will survive only as long as he is there, whether as a superior or as a colleague in seeing them put into effect.

I have no hesitation in asserting that the practical sympathy and service of a joint Indian and British team which administered India up to the period when these reforms were introduced have achieved and will achieve infinitely more in attaining the prosperity, contentment and happiness of the Indian Continent than all the idealism which it is now sought to substitute for them.

6^o October, 1933]

[Continued]

It has been asserted that even a halt in the present policy will so embitter the Indian nation that it is impossible to do anything but hand over more power. It is the firm conviction of practically every District Officer and Policeman that were the Government to state the simple truth that the history of the past 10 years has been one of failure, and that, before any further devolution is resorted to, they propose to exact proofs of goodwill and co-operation from Indian politicians and break any organisation which openly asserts its intention of breaking all connection with the British Empire, we should rally to our side a vast number of loyal Indians who know that their safety and contentment are inseparable from a guiding and directing control by this country in the affairs of India.

MEMORANDUM 81 BY WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S. (retired), late District and Sessions Judge, Agra and Oudh.

The twin supports upholding the elementary decencies of civil government in India are the Law Courts and the Police. As part of the impending constitutional changes, it is proposed to transfer these departments to the control of Ministers in the Provinces subject to elected legislatures. The peace and good order of the Indian countryside depend far more on the efficient, smooth, and impartial working of the Courts and the Police, than is usually realised even by those who have lived for long periods in Indian towns. The Law Courts bulk far more in the life of the average Indian peasant than they do in that of the British working man. The Revenue Courts deal with many matters such as recording of title and tenure, boundary disputes, surveys, etc., which in these Islands would not come into Court at all; the Civil Courts deal with the many transactions of a community where banking is in its infancy; while the Criminal Courts deal with many disputes of a tortious character that arises among an over-crowded rural population. They also deal with the many serious crimes that arise from the actions of professional or hereditary criminals, or the unfortunate acts of excitable people living in a climate of extremes. The elementary needs of the average rural Indian (forming nine-tenths of all the population) are the just, reasonable and speedy settlement of disputes; protection from extortion or oppression by petty office holders, landlords, usurers and others; protection from personal enemies, from the activities of local bullies (cutters of other people's crops and graziers therein, etc.), and from violent criminals. For a period varying from 75 to 150 years, the British Indian peasant has been accustomed to expect standards of British justice in the Courts, and to the actions of a police force which, if not perfect, has improved beyond measure, and compares favourably with those of many Western countries. It is a tribute both to Britons and Indians that the nine-tenths of Indian officers presiding in the Courts, and the vastly greater proportion of Indian officers and men in the Police, have in great measure responded to modern demands. Of late years in some provinces, Indian gentlemen have satisfactorily held charge of the Police Department, but they were not subject to removal from office by a vote of the House. It will be a totally different matter when an elected Minister, possibly a professional politician, holds charge subject to a vote of a House, elected by as yet untrained voters exposed to the gusts of popular prejudice and passion, and to the intrigues which will be rife to support one side or the other, either in personal disputes or in quarrels between communities.

It must not be forgotten that the administration of justice and the maintenance of public order have for thousands of years in the East, been considered a peculiar duty of the Sovereign. There is nothing analogous to the popular duties of maintaining the King's peace imposed by the British common law. There are no Watch Committees in Indian local bodies, with the duty of controlling the local constabulary. In fact crime has always been so far-reaching and widespread, even before the days of railways and roads, that such bodies would be unable to function.

6^o Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued]

Under the proposed form of provincial autonomy, Indian Ministers will be pestered in the numerous ways known in the East by litigants with a vote, or remotely related to a voter possessing the slightest influence with the local member. He will also be pestered by the relations, friends, and supporters of anyone unlucky enough to come into contact with the criminal law; or possessing a tenant, servant, or relation who comes under the notice of the Police.

What will be the result? The majority of conscientious Indian presiding officers of Courts will find serious difficulty in dealing with cases where they realise that someone has gone behind their backs to the Minister, who will not hesitate to accuse them of partiality. The Indian officer running counter to a Minister's or a Member's wishes, will probably find his promotion blocked by a black mark against him on some vague allegation that he has had no chance of refuting. He will in the nearer future find himself transferred "in the public interest" to an unhealthy and unpopular station where he dare not take his family. In other words it will require a man with a very strong mind to run the risk of countering any person with a political pull.

What will be the effect on the common people? It will be found useless by any of them to go to law against, or to resist a claim by any one with a political pull. The strong man, or one with powerful or turbulent friends, will take the law into his own hands, and murder and arson will be the result. As for the weaker, their name is legion. Their resentment will simmer to boiling point, which will be reached far sooner among British Indian peasants accustomed to the old British standards, than among the long suffering and feudally loyal subjects of States such as Kashmir and Alwar. Each of these States with small populations required the intervention of the best part of a brigade of troops, and the resumption of the administration by highly trained British officials, to cope with popular outburst against maladministration and extravagance. Where will these officials be found in future?

The result of the transfer of control over the Police to an elected Minister as opposed to an Executive Counsellor, will be even more rapid and disastrous. On the civil Police, scattered in stations by tens or dozens at about 20 or 30 miles distance, depends the surveillance and control of the very dangerous and lawless class of criminal that has always existed in the East. Every traveller in India, from the Chinese pilgrims to those in the early days of British rule, remarked on the insecurity of life and property outside the large towns, owing to the persistence of criminals, who often sanctified their depredations by murder in honour of the Hindu god of destruction Shiva and his consort Kali. The same tendencies persist to-day. It is stated with reason that even now in many parts a serious reversion is taking place in the matter of the security of life and property. If the criminal Courts do not function the Police are helpless, however honest and efficient they may be. If the Police do not function, the criminal Courts are equally helpless. When both even partially break down, the social order will collapse.

It will be said that the ultimate safeguard, the Army in India, is to be retained by the representative of the Crown. It has been forgotten that the Indian portion of the Army is drawn from the peasantry, and will be very seriously affected by resentment amongst their peasant relations directed against the paramount power, which will be considered as allowing this state of things to come to pass. There is, moreover, every likelihood that the Army will be mobilised to stop the infiltration of border raiders, which no amount of air action will be able to block, as was shown at Peshawar in 1930. Internal communications will have to be preserved, and for this the co-operation of the Police is essential, but will not be forthcoming from a demoralised force.

Nor will such "intelligence" as is required to restore order in the immense tracts of rural India. Nor can an army restore the morale of or recreate an expert cadre of civil officials such as is absolutely necessary for the daily needs of administration among the many and varied peoples of India, with different laws, customs, and tenures.

In addition to the danger of rapid paralysis, is that of malignant disease of the body politic by a return to the administrative habits and standards of former days. I would be the last to decry the devoted and honest services performed under often unimaginable conditions of housing and office accommodation by my Indian fellow countrymen and fellow officers. But it must always be remembered that there is as yet in India no such common standard of conduct as is imparted, perhaps, by the British Public or Secondary school. and that there are weaker vessels amongst all nationalities and in all walks of life. A relaxation of discipline, and demoralisation higher up, will have a most adverse effect upon such men. Even a forecast of it has already produced serious results in some of the Courts of my former province, and it is solely owing to the magnificent discipline and esprit de corps of the Police force that grave deterioration has not yet commenced in it for the same reason.

6° Octobris, 1933]

[Continued.]

I conclude by venturing on the opinion that the transfer of the control of the Courts and the Police, whether in the form of "the direction of policy," or in addition by interference with the internal discipline, promotion, and posting of personnel; can only lead to the collapse of the twin props of the social order at a nearer date than many expect, with widespread and disastrous consequences to the Empire. The reply will be that if this is withheld, it will not mean full provincial autonomy. I can only assure the Committee that many Indian gentlemen who are loudest in clamouring for full provincial autonomy in response to the fashionable captions of the day, in private express extreme apprehension of the consequences of the present policy if carried to its logical conclusion. The compromise suggested in the Simon Report, the appointment of an official not liable to fall with the Cabinet to hold charge of these departments, does not seem sufficient to meet the case. He will be neither one thing nor the other. He will be harried by disappointed Members of the legislature, and will have pressure brought to bear on him by a Governor presumably ignorant of Indian conditions, to satisfy the claims of individuals or a section of the House. In other words he will be just as much subject to the consequences of intrigue as an elected Minister. With all respect, the only solution seems to be the definite reservation of control over these departments to the Governor. It is suggested that the appointment of a Deputy Governor, be he British or be he Indian, an expert district as opposed to Secretariat official from one of the Imperial services; will be of immense advantage to assist a Governor from England without knowledge of Indian conditions in the control of these departments, and to officiate for him when he is absent from headquarters or on leave.

If the Governor of a Province is not in charge of the Police force, he will be unable to get any official information on events likely to affect the public peace and other branches of police work, except by the acquiescence and with the co-operation of the Minister in charge of the portfolio. He may thus be kept in complete ignorance of situations which would lead to dangerous repercussions.

The Governor's eyes and ears will thus be his Private Secretary and A.D.C.'s.

The whole machinery of the provincial administration apart from these functions, would be transferred to elected Ministers. It is surely not too much to ask them to rest content with this for the time being, and with the inclusion of the great and ancient land Revenue system intimately affecting every one of the population; pending such time as the new system has been proved to function with reasonable efficiency and honesty, and until the effect of the addition of large numbers of voters, and the possible access to power of the Congress in certain Provinces, had had time to be observed. A collapse in other branches of the administration will not have the same far-reaching and disastrous effect as the collapse of the essentials of the social order.

In submitting the above memorandum to the Joint Select Committee I am actuated by no other desire than the greatest good of the greatest number of the common people of India of all nationalities and creeds, whom I have served for long, with whom I have had unusual opportunities of friendly association, and amongst whom in their own countryside every spare moment of my time was spent.

A forebear of your deponent entered India as a conqueror along with a blood-thirsty army, others took part in terrible events during the anarchy between the fall of the Moguls and the foundation of British rule. His one desire is that his fellow countrymen should not be in danger once more of a repetition of a tithe of the horrors which beset India a century ago, and which are now driving China to distraction.

6^o Octobris, 1933]

[Continued.]

MEMORANDUM 82 BY Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER.

The inability of India to support a system of Law and Order on a democratic basis does not result from failings a character of the Indian peoples but from geographical and historical circumstances, as in many lands, which have operated against the growth of a common united police sense or power of co-operation. The chief factors have been the development of very numerous castes (including the persistence of various tribes as tribal castes) and the Islamic invasions. Apart from comparatively few enlightened individuals, men are concerned only about wrongs done to those of their own creed, caste or tribe. A common feeling against aggression, outside these limits, only applies to some extent to the village unit, of which there are over half a million in India. Villagers do resent attack upon any of their own village, whatever their caste, by those of another village. It is only within the village that an indigenous police system exists and that only in some Provinces. It was not found possible to co-ordinate this element with the regular police forces introduced after 1860, nor with the local so-called self-governing bodies on an English pattern introduced some twenty years later, which had no concern with Law and Order at all, and have none to this day. Thus, the present proposal to entrust Law and Order to Ministers responsible to elected majorities imposes something new, from above and from outside, for which the peoples of India have had no training, no education, no experience. Moreover it is bound to shake the confidence of the people in the expectation of impartial justice, and incline them to take the law into their own hands in an unconstitutional sense.

In spite of all the difficulties in training and maintaining a vast police force, which should be true to its duty, under officers who begin their career in a country quite strange to them, it is undoubted that the people as a whole have been glad of the police under the British system. This is wholly due to the confidence people felt in impartial treatment, as between creeds and castes, sects and parties. When a police station is closed, all the people of the neighbourhood protest. Even where there are but a couple of constables, of no high standard, these have the reputation of agents of a supreme impartial power, which gives them a value to the people immeasurably greater, perhaps, than that of their personal ability. Nothing strikes a police officer more than this fact.

Once it becomes part of the mind of the people that power and influence has passed to the elected men of a communal majority, all this confidence of the ordinary inhabitants in impartial action will vanish, and the fear felt by dacoits and other criminals for this impartial justice will vanish also. Dacoity, Thagga, cattle-theft and other crime has often been carried on by gangs under the protection of influential persons. There can be no safeguard against this, if local power and prestige decays. Instructions to the Governors will not avail. The people will know nothing of them. They will be made to feel, by many interested persons, that the small groups of policemen in wide areas (perhaps wild areas), who used to mean so much, no longer mean anything. If the people feel that, the police no longer will mean anything, and no instructions to Governors will cause them to mean anything.

To impose the exotic arrangement of "responsibility," remotely and incomprehensibly, from above is no way to teach the people to identify themselves with police administration. The only right way is to teach them locally, from below.

The objections to transfer from a police officer's point of view are, briefly—

1. The force will suffer from political interference. Hindu and Muslim politicians have already made requests for a definite proportion of recruitment for their co-religionists.

2. Reputation for impartiality will be lost and with it the confidence of the people.

3. Indian politicians constantly speak as if police were not a "nation-building" department—quite the contrary of our feeling in England. On this account, elected majorities will starve the police of funds and will not be concerned to maintain efficiency.

4. The difficult duty of correct police work on the numerous borders between provinces, States or portions of these, will become impossible, if action has to conform to policies varying or conflicting according to the nature of the political elements which influence them, instead of an

6^o October, 1933]

[Continued]

"All-India" policy at present. For instance, the police of Ambala would obey a Government dominated by Muslims, while their neighbours, the police of Saharanpur would obey a Government dominated by Hindus. This danger applied also to the Punjab district of Gurgaon and the Alwar State.

5 Taking the separation of military and police control as proposed, and the suggestion in the Statutory Commission's Report, Vol. II, Para. 213, it seems that police might well be overwhelmed while the Government of India was beginning to consider whether troops ought to be sent to support them.

6. Conversely, whereas police here tofore have given the Army valuable assistance in emergencies, in recruiting, in guarding communications, and above all in intelligence, their officers will not be able to promise this when the force has passed under a provincial political influence—it may even be that it is to correct this influence that troops are set in motion.

Many doubts and objections to the transfer of Law and Order have been expressed by Local Governments and by Committees elected by the Legislatures or by Members of these. See Statutory Commission's Report, Vol II, Paras 40 and 41.

MEMORANDUM 83 BY MR. JUSTICE LE ROSSIGNOL

The White Paper scheme is a gamble on hopes bearing little relation to facts. It is an enormous and incautious advance in the direction which has led India into great unhappiness.

If facts are faced—and before they can be faced, they must be made known—then only can a viable constitution be devised for India.

1. The White Paper ignores or eludes the following facts. Since the introduction of the Reforms, the administration in India is less efficient, more corrupt and far more expensive. These results are directly traceable to the introduction of the democratic system and the diminution of the British element.

It is not sufficiently known or appreciated that wherever in British India Indians have been entrusted with self-government, the results have almost invariably been disastrous. I need mention only Benares, the affairs of which for years past have been a by-word, and Lahore, whose newly elected President in 1929 exposed in self-defence the scandalous state of things obtaining at that date.

2. Representative Government without an informed honest and interested electorate must be a farce, but in India votes are openly bought and sold. One unsuccessful candidate told me that an additional outlay of Rs.5000 would have converted his failure into success.

3. It is not known or if known not recognised, that honest Indians pray to be protected from their connections and to be posted far from the place of their origin. They have to withstand temptations to which the Englishman is not exposed.

4. The selected Indian, in general, makes an excellent official or judge provided that he has a superior to keep him in the right path and supply the requisite stimulus. Only brilliant exceptions achieve success in the higher ranks. I have known many an excellent subordinate come to grief when given independent power.

5. "Indian Unrest" is an unreal and fictitious thing; it exists only where the politically minded foregather in the towns, in the villages it does not exist. Its main habitat is the Press.

6. The better class of Indian does not want democracy. I know two Indian High Court Judges who will resign if placed under a Minister. These men were not like others I can think of, struggling lawyers appointed through favouritism, etc., but brilliant advocates who exchanged a very lucrative practice for the much smaller emoluments but greater dignity and authority of the Bench.

On the policemen, a much maligned official, reposes the whole administration; if his prisoner to-day is his minister of the morrow, he knows that the minister will not forget him—and he is right.

I regard the proposal to transfer the police and the judiciary to a minister with the greatest apprehension and, I make bold to say with all respect, so does the vast majority of officials now serving. Dyarchy was a failure largely because Ministers rightly or wrongly were suspected of favouring their co-religionists. Like a tribunal, a govern-

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

ment must not only be impartial, but must also be thought so.

The White Paper sacrifices the welfare of millions of poor men to placate a voluble urban minority, at present incompetent for the task for which they clamour. It also ignores the rights of the British in India; except the aboriginal tribes, all others are "aliens" in India and though the British arrived there some time after the Bengalis, Madrasis, etc., they have done far more for India than any of their predecessors. The entity "India" is not an Indian but a purely British product; without the British cement India as one whole cannot subsist.

In fine, India is a country of poor men requiring a cheap and simple government; it cannot afford democracy which is notoriously expensive and wasteful. In France at this very moment there is a great outcry against the corruption, favouritism and extravagance of the administration. The Indian does not want a vote, he does not know what to do with it, so he sells it. The White Paper hands him over to the political adventurer.

Many crimes have been committed in the name of liberty; my only desire in writing the above is to save the poor Indian from tyranny.

12,289. I understand that General Sir John Shea is prevented from attending to-day?—Yes.

12,290. Are we to address ourselves in the main to you, Colonel Bruce? Is that the arrangement?—Yes.

12,291. No doubt your colleagues, if they desire to answer any questions or a part of any question will do so. Unless you tell me otherwise, I assume that you desire that the Committee should examine you over the whole range of these Memoranda. Is that so?—My Lord Chairman, all the various Members of the Deputation have come from various parts of India, so, perhaps my colleagues may be allowed to reply to questions where they would be possibly able to answer them better than I could, if I may say so. Would that be convenient? That is to say, supposing a question were asked on military problems, I would probably refer to General Sir George MacMunn.

12,292. Please make your own arrangements as you think best?—Thank you.

12,293. Do any of you Gentlemen desire to extend or to correct any of these Memoranda at this stage?—There are a few clerical mistakes on my Memorandum.

12,294 Unless you think those sufficiently important to detain the Committee now, perhaps you would hand them in later on?—Yes. There is only one that I think is of any importance at all, it is on page 16. Instead of "Committees," which is a clerical error, it should be "communities." That is in Memorandum No. 78, paragraph 56—"the various Committees" should be "various communities."

12,295. Do you desire to make any statement before you are examined, Colonel Bruce?—Not specially, I think.

12,296. Does No. 77, which is called a General Memorandum, represent the view of the Society as a whole?—Generally, but most of us have come from very different parts of India, and it was difficult to put it shortly.

12,297. I want at this stage to ask one question, Colonel Bruce. I see in Memorandum 77, in the final paragraph, you say, "The decline"—that is, I suppose, the decline in the efficiency of the Government. Is that what it means?—That is what is meant.

12,298. I am dealing with the last paragraph on the last page of Memorandum 77. You say, "The decline commenced from the day when British politicians endeavoured to endow India with democratic Government." Can you give me approximately the date on which British politicians took that course?—There, we are referring, I think, to about the last 14 or 15 years. I could not give the date exactly. I refer entirely to the Frontier; it is the only place I know, and, it was more or less, from that date. It is very difficult to give the exact date—the date at which, if I may say so, certain concessions were given which had a very great effect. It might be said that actually the Reforms did not affect the Frontier, but the policy of concessions, adopted as a consequence of those Reforms, I think had the result which I have given on pages 13 and 14 of my Memorandum. That is, in so far as the Frontier is concerned. In so far as

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General SIR GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

India proper is concerned, I think Mr. Justice Le Rossignol, Mr. Lyall and Mr. Waris Ameer Ali would be able to give better evidence on that point than I could.

12,299. When you say the democratic system of Government, you are thinking there of the representative system?—Not so much so, because on the Frontier, especially in Baluchistan, there is a democratic system, but it is built from the bottom. That is what is known, I think, as the Sandeman System. That is built on the frameworks of the tribal organisation, and, to a certain extent, one might call it a democratic system, but it is built from the bottom.

12,300. That is the indigenous system?—That is the system, which, as a matter of fact, Sir Robert Sandeman did not claim ever to have invented; he claimed to be the disciple of Edwards and Nicholson; but that was a system which one might almost call a democratic system. I think perhaps the easiest way I can put it is to refer to the change of which I spoke on the Frontier. As I say, Mr. Justice Le Rossignol and others would give that evidence better in so far as India proper is concerned. I was frankly amazed with the change I noticed when I went back to Kohat in 1921. I had been away then 6½ years in Baluchistan, and, as to the extent to which our prestige had fallen (I think Sir John Massey and General Sir Andrew Skeen would bear me witness) the tribal area was infested by outlaws; they numbered anything to 300. Raiding, robbery and kidnapping were the order of the day.

12,301. But, you see, you have given me from the district with which you are most familiar an example of the very difficulty which I feel, namely, that of discovering the day on which this, as you think, prime error was committed?—Yes.

12,302. The democratic system in that district according to you was indigenous?—Not in Kohat. It is Baluchistan that I referred to. I went from Baluchistan to Kohat.

12,303. As regards the district with which you are most familiar can you tell me the occasion or the date on which you think what you regard as an error, namely, the introduction of democratic government, was committed?—When I went to Kohat. A determined effort had to be made, as I thought, to deal with the outlaw menace and to find out what was the cause of the trouble. I had come there from Baluchistan, so I date this as May, 1921. I considered that the fault, if I may say so, lay with the weakening of the frameworks, as to which Marshal Lyautey, if I may quote him, stated "In every tribe there are existing frameworks, to do away with which must lead to anarchy." I think it was because a distinct axe had been put at these frameworks that the result was a state of lawlessness. The effort that was now made was to resuscitate and repair the influence of the headman which had been distinctly weakened. If I may be allowed to give a very few statistics, I think they will show that probably that was very greatly the reason. Whereas in 1919 and 1920 kidnapped persons had numbered 161 and 100 respectively, in 1921 and 1922 they fell to 37 and 17 (I am only taking the more serious crimes). Murders, which had been 101 and 86 in 1920 and 1921 fell to 47. Dacoities from 68 to 27 and in the following year to 15; and out of the 300 outlaws no less than about 260 were either killed, surrendered or were captured, and the Judicial Commissioner was good enough to describe the results as practically constituting a record. The same results occurred in Dera Ismal Khan.

12,304. You are dealing now with the very special problems of the Frontier districts?—Yes; I know no others.

12,305. Have you yourself experience of other parts of India?—No. I have served my time on the Frontier for 35 years and my father before me for 35 years. My only other, if I may call it so, civil work at all, was famine duty in the Bhil country in 1899.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,306. My Lord Chairman, I do not want at this stage at any rate to ask any questions on the separate Memoranda, but I should like, if I could, to get a clear idea of the general position taken up by these gentlemen who are before us to-day in common. Am I right in supposing that the implication of the

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HATYER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

paragraph about which the Lord Chairman has been questioning you, is that you think the conditions in India have deteriorated from the time of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms?—Insofar as the Frontier is concerned?

12,307. No. I do not want an answer which deals only with the Frontier. You have submitted a general memorandum?—Yes; I agree.

12,308. And your colleagues agree?—Yes.

12,309. That is really without pledging you to a particular day?—It is quite impossible to put a particular day.

12,310. Without pledging you to a particular day the general view of the witnesses is that a deterioration set in from the time of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms. Is that so?—Yes.

12,311. Do I understand that you are therefore opposed to any further progress upon the same lines as those Reforms?—Not in the association of Indians which has been going on. That would naturally continue as it has been doing for years past. I do not know whether that is what you refer to.

12,312. Is your view that any Indians associated in the Government of India should be selected by the Government and owe their position solely to their appointment by the Government?—I think selection has been very successful, and I view the other rather with misgiving. I think we all do.

12,313. I am only trying to find out exactly what your general attitude is?—Yes.

12,314. As I understand from your answers and from your Memorandum you are opposed to the establishment of representative Government in any form in any part of India? Is that so or not?—In advance of the present position. I think we want to go very slowly and to feel every step.

12,315. You regret the change which has already taken place in that direction, and attribute the deterioration which you perceive to that change, as I understand?—I regret it from the point of view of the masses in India who have suffered very much from lawlessness. This I put down to concessions.

12,316. Then am I right in saying that you regard the whole system of the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms as a mistake in the interests of the people of India?—The result on the poor people I consider was very bad.

12,317. And you are unwilling to see any extension on those lines at the present time?—On those lines.

12,318. Or on any lines which involve the choice of members of the Indian administration by the people of India as distinguished from a system of selection by the Governor?—It is a little difficult for me to answer that. I should prefer if I might (because that system is more down-country) that Mr. Justice Rossignol and Mr. Lyall should answer because they have seen it.

12,319. Perhaps one of them would be good enough to answer my question. I may perhaps be allowed to repeat that what I am trying to get is your general view of the course which Indian reform should or should not take—not a view particular to a special province or to a special service?—That is rather my difficulty that India is so very different, and I have served only in one part; but, generally speaking, that is our view.

12,320. Would one of the gentlemen you have named try to answer my question?—(Mr. Justice Le Rossignol.) Mr. Lyall and myself consider that India in its present condition is not fit for any further extension of the democratic principle; that is, at the present moment; because we have not an interested and an informed electorate, and, if you have not an informed electorate, then democratic government is a mere farce.

12,321. Then the evidence you have come to offer is not really in support of detailed amendments to the scheme of the White Paper, but is in opposition to the very principles of that scheme?—Yes. (Mr. Lyall.) I should like to qualify that to a very small extent indeed. I consider that when this democratic system was introduced into India it made it inevitable that the point of view put before the electorate should be anti-Government, and from that period there has grown up a constant increasing attack upon Central authority. All of us who have been in India are most desirous of implementing the promises that were made to India. At the same time most of us have held the opinion that in implementing these promises we should see the results of the action taken, and.

6^o October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General SIR GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

where those results would seem to show that there had been dangers and pitfalls which must be avoided, we think that action ought to be taken either to slow down or to change the steps that have been taken.

Earl Winterton.] May I interpose? It is following the usual practice. If the practice is to be reversed I will adhere to it. I only want to get clear what the answer to the question was.

Chairman.] I think it is for the convenience of all that supplementary questions should be asked. Perhaps the noble Lord will put his question.

Earl Winterton.

12,322. I understood Sir Austen to ask the previous witness whether he accepted the White Paper or not, and the previous witness gave an answer. Then Mr. Justice Le Rossignol answered, and one of the witnesses, Mr. Lyall, said he would like to qualify that, but I understood his answer to refer to the present system. When he talks of slowing down he means the present system and not the White Paper?—In my opinion the White Paper is a further development of the present system in a direction which is markedly dangerous.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,323. Am I right then in finally concluding that no amendments of the White Paper scheme could make it acceptable to you? You think it is inherently based on wrong principles, and no minor modifications, or even considerable amendments would make it acceptable to you?—That is going a very long way. We recognise that a very great deal has been done up to date in India, but we have to accept the fait accompli whatever it is, and, although many of us do have these profound misgivings as to the introduction of the electoral system in India, we consider that in its further application the very greatest circumspection should be used in seeing that no further step is taken without being sure that the last one is on sure ground.

12,324. I am still left in doubt as to what is the general attitude. Are you pleading for a further experience of the present system before any changes are made?—I should say most certainly.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I think that is as far as I ought to question the witness.

Lord Irwin.

12,325. Pursuing that, if I may, a little bit from another angle, the view of the Indian Empire Society, which the witnesses represent, is that from their point of view it is difficult to put up any proposal more practical to the Committee this morning than that they should look with caution upon any suggestion of extending the present system?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) The Indian Empire Society which we represent has already put up suggestions, but the general attitude is as you describe it—to go slow.

12,326. You do not feel the difficulty, from your point of view, in what seems to be a position perhaps that makes, from your point of view again, the worst of both worlds. Your papers very forcibly suggest that the democratic system, as Sir Austen has invited you to follow him in pointing out, is at the bottom of the trouble in India, meaning worse administration, and so on?—(Mr. Lyall.) I think most of us frankly think that it is, but we have to accept facts as they are.

12,327. The only point that I was putting to you is this, that on the assumption that the democratic system means a worse administration, and that the present establishment of the democratic system, if I may use the phrase, does not seem to give any great political satisfaction to Indians, are we not in the unhappy state of making the worst of both worlds? We have, from your point of view, very bad administration. We have also great absence of political contentment. Ought we not, on that argument, to make up our minds which we want, and do one or other?—(Mr. Justice Le Rossignol.) We should not forget the interests of the masses. That is our reply.

12,328. That I entirely appreciate, but that would seem to me to be a good argument from your own point of view for not being too much affected by the political aspect. However, I must not pursue that further. You say in the General Memorandum (No. 77) "We regard all safeguards as worthless." Might I ask Colonel Bruce, or whichever of the witnesses will answer, the question, what is the ground that leads them to make so positive an assertion?—(Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce.) Mr. Hayter

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

would like to answer that. Mr. Hayter was in the Police. (Mr. Hayter.) I think that security in India for peace really depends entirely on moral and psychological factors, and that if such a state of affairs came about that the public confidence of the people all over the country was shaken in the power of governments and their impartiality there would be, I might say, such a landslide of psychological feeling of a very dangerous kind that nothing that could be called a mechanical measure would have any effect, and I regard the safeguards as all mechanical measures. They might be very well thought out in themselves and of the best kind in that sense, but their effect would not reach the people and prevent their confidence in the continuance of peace from disappearing altogether.

12,329. Why I was a little puzzled with that statement was because of the assertion that is made three lines lower down that the only reality is power; and it occurred to me as I read it that if the Crown is reserving, as is proposed under the White Paper, the Defence Forces, and if those are under the hand of the Crown Representative, it would seem to me that there was a pretty substantial backing for what you call the mechanical safeguards?—If I may say so, in my view and in my experience, whatever power there were, it must depend upon the general feeling of the people all over the country. (Mr. Lyall.) Might I amplify that, Sir? We do not think that power is purely military power nor that mere military power directed by a Viceroy can ever have an adequate effect in the administration of India. We think that the power must vest right through the whole of the administration, giving the Viceroy information and knowledge and contact with the vast continent that he has to rule, whereas the military power is only a thing that is called in when grave dangers occur; but we should like the reality of power to be left in the British Representative for a further period of years and very strongly vested in him.

12,330. In other words, we come back there, do we not, to the same kind of argument that you were developing in reply to Sir Austen Chamberlain?—(Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce.) Yes.

12,331. I have only one other question, my Lord Chairman. I was a little uncertain as to what was meant by the next paragraph, paragraph 9 of Memorandum No. 77, in which you say "We ask the Committee to advise that Parliament shall not divest itself of power," etc., and you conclude by saying: "Such power can be retained by an insertion in the Act of the right of Parliament to resume control." It will not have escaped your notice that the White Paper does include a very definite provision that would operate in the event of a breakdown of the constitution Proposal No. 55. Does that not go any way to meet the point you have in mind?—(Mr. Lyall.) We think that before that stage is reached there will probably have been a most dangerous denudation of power, a most dangerous throwing off of power to an extent more than is safe.

12,332. In other words, that before you had reached what might properly be called a breakdown in the constitution a state of affairs might have arisen in which things would evidently be moving badly and Parliament ought to do something about it?—Yes.

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.

12,333. I should like to ask Mr. Justice Le Rossignol one or two questions in connection with his Memorandum No. 83. Paragraph 2 says: "Representative Government without an informed, honest and interested electorate must be a farce, but in India votes are openly bought and sold. One unsuccessful candidate told me that an additional outlay of Rs.5,000 would have converted his failure into success." What I would like to ask you is: Is that an isolated instance, or have you knowledge from your experience of other similar cases?—(Mr. Justice Le Rossignol.) That is one definite instance that was brought to my notice, but that is the general opinion throughout the Punjab.

12,334. You have not got any corroboration of any others?—No.

12,335. Merely general opinion?—Yes. As I was on the judicial side, of course, I was not interested in these matters. I was not brought into contact with election matters very closely.

12,336. In the third paragraph it says: "It is not known or if known

6^o October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

not recognised, that honest Indians pray to be protected from their connections and to be posted far from the place of their origin." Protection from what?—Protection from their connections.

12,337. But for what—on what ground?—Because they wish to be protected from what is known as "sifarish," that is, importunities. Their friends and relatives and friends of their relatives come to ask them for favours which they cannot legitimately grant.

12,338. Demands for concessions?—Yes.

12,339. I would like to ask Mr. Lyall one or two questions. In paragraph 4 of Memorandum 80 it states that "mass meetings were held, communal jealousies roused and District Officers in many cases ordered not to take action in regard to prominent offenders, but to deal only with the lesser fry responsible for disturbances." Does that imply that the orders came from Simla?—(Mr. Lyall.) Yes.

12,340. Do you know of any definite instances to that effect?—I do.

12,341. Would you give one of them?—Shortly after I returned to India after the War there was a circular sent round by the Government of India saying that District Officers were not to deal with Mr. Gandhi.

12,342. Mr. Gandhi was not in your Province?—That is perfectly true. He however toured all over India and on several occasions did a great deal in our Province. The point that I wished to make in regard to that was that District Officers were not allowed to deal with the law as the law irrespective of personalities, but had to subordinate the absolutely impartial administration of justice to personalities. That was my objection.

12,343. But did that prohibition or instruction apply simply to Mr. Gandhi?—Mind you, it is a very long time ago, I have not seen the memorandum since, but my memory is that it mentioned him particularly and certain other leaders who were either referred to generically or otherwise by name.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

12,344. In what year was that circular issued?—I imagine it was about 1921 or 1922.

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.

12,345. On page 2 of Mr. Lyall's Memorandum No. 80, it says "to my certain knowledge large numbers of Englishmen have resigned as the only means by which they could bring home to the British Government that they were not prepared to be exposed to such sacrifice when the policy being put into force was a surrender of power to a small and hostile minority of the educated classes." Did these gentlemen not give their reasons to their superior officers?—That I cannot say, but I know men have told me that they could not serve under the new regulations; and, of course, it is patent to everybody that that was so, because an offer was made to the Service in general to resign under special conditions if it was desired to, and that was availed of.

12,346. As Lieut.-General Sir George MacMunn is the first military officer of any rank who has appeared before us, I would like to put to him just one or two questions. Was Sir George MacMunn in India in 1919?—(Sir George MacMunn.) Yes, I was. I was on my way to take over the command of Mesopotamia, and I was up in Delhi and Simla just when the trouble was beginning, but I was not in an official position in India till the beginning of 1920.

12,347. I will not put the question that I was going to ask, but I would like to ask him this as a general question: Would the surrender of the telegraphs and railways to an Indian Government prejudice the provision of the Defence Forces?—I think so. I do not see how you can move your troops if you run the risk of a very severe strike which was threatening in 1919, or, if you have a railway personnel who may be entirely influenced by a movement of hysteria or revolution, which we saw breaking out in 1919. I happen to know that my predecessor, Sir Edward Altham was, by the merest chance, in 1919 down the line when it was brought to his notice that there was an outbreak among all the railway officials, both in force and in strike, to come out a day or two later. The wires were cut. He managed to get an engine to take him 200 or 300 miles before he could get in touch with the Government of India and inform them so. Where there is any possibility of that sort of thing ever happening you

5^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HATTEY, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

cannot move your troops; you cannot assist the civil community; your Government, however it is being run, is paralysed. Therefore, it seems essential that some measures should be preserved to allow both the Provincial Governments and the Central Government to keep sufficient control over this enormous system of railways without which the preservation of law and order would be impossible. What those measures may be I do not pretend to say off-hand, but there are certain obvious things necessary.

12,348. Is it a fact that in 1919 the Punjab Government asked for Anglo-Indians to replace disloyal Indians in the telegraphs?—I am afraid I do not know. I was not actually in charge in 1919 and I do not know what happened. I have only heard by hearsay; but I do know from my general knowledge that the problem was an extremely difficult one. One had to find reliable drivers and guards to get troop trains about when there was a period of excitement.

12,349. Therefore, you think it would be dangerous to hand over the railways and telegraphs?—I think it would be unwise not to keep a certain amount of control which people with power and good-will can obtain. That is to say, I should be very chary of having an entire Indian personnel on the railways who might be affected by local excitement.

12,350. I am going to ask you another kind of question with regard to the Indianised regiments. I have been told by very high military authorities that the Indianised regiments will be regarded only as second line troops. Is that your opinion?—Nobody knows yet. The Indianised regiments as they stand at present are of course only partially Indianised and the officers are only rising up gradually to responsibility. I have just come from India; I have been there all this spring. The Commander-in-Chief told me himself of the wastage in the young Indians, who were very charming boys, when they arrived; they could not be nicer or keener boys. Every year they leave Sandhurst, and, instead of there being an improvement, there is a little bit of deterioration; and the wastage, I think he told me, was 60 per cent, and, possibly from the method of selection; at present the boys drift away to soft jobs. They do not realise that regimental life is a very hard life and a dull one; a nice mess table and a red coat do not compensate unless you are a soldier and can go through with it; so the tendency is to drift away to soft jobs. On the other hand, there are a certain number of Indians who may come to any rank in due course; therefore, in that connection I should say possibly we are not quite striking the right stratum, we have not got far enough with the experiment. What I should like to say is that the British officers of the regiments are taking immense trouble to make it a very great success, and I was charmed with the attitude I saw. I have talked to a good many young Indian officers, I also went down to Woolwich to see the Indian cadets who were there; speaking generally, the helping hand has been very great; and though the wastage is heavy, I think the opinion was that a certain number would come through successfully, always assuming that efficiency is insisted on; there is not going to be any question of keeping on a "rotter", if I may use colloquial language. A certain number of Indians, it may be a very increasing number—are going to come through to efficiency, but what it is going to be when it gets further nobody knows. I happen to have some experience of State troops, and though I was impressed up to a point with their efficiency and their zeal, yet the question of responsibility is always a difficult one, and perhaps more so there than it is here. But, as I say, as an experiment it must go through very slowly and steadily and you are going to get certain results—how good nobody can tell you yet. That was my own view after talking to people.

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.] I am sure we are all very much obliged to you, General, for the interesting statement you have made. I have no further questions to ask.

Earl of Derby.

12,351. I want to ask Colonel Bruce just two questions. You said "if the framework was destroyed", Colonel Bruce?—Yes.

12,352. I do not quite understand what you mean by "framework"?—I should like to elaborate that a good deal if I may, because on that I rather base a very great deal of my argument—the framework of the tribes. Each tribe, whether

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

across the Border or inside the Districts, is divided up rather like an old Highland Clan into clans, tribes, sections and sub-sections. Each have their own tribal clan, leaders, and, in the Districts, each village has its own headman or headmen, varying naturally in importance as to which of the other categories to which I have referred they should be classed in. These headmen form the frameworks of the tribal organisations. These are the natural leaders of the tribes, and they depend for their authority on heredity and the personality of the men themselves. Now, across the Border, in the North-West Frontier, in tribal territory, practically none of the headmen are literate, they cannot sign their names—and in Baluchistan, very very few. Even in the North-West Frontier Province Districts it would be, I think, little exaggeration to say that even up to now this still applies to the great majority. I think that is a very important point, that the natural leaders of the people are illiterate; and also the fact that the natural leaders of the tribal organisation, unfortunately probably, did not look upon education as the only road to success, nor did they see why it should make them better able to control their tribes. That is the reason why, if I may say so, the politically-minded and the natural leaders of the tribe tended to be against each other which I will, if I may, elaborate a little because I think it is very important. Their prejudice against education was unfortunately added to by the fact that the few people who had their sons educated were not very satisfied with the results. "All that your education has done"—I am merely putting the tribal point—"is to make my son despise his father, and his father and the tribe despise the son. You have unfitted him for any other work except a Government job and that you seem unable or unwilling to give him. What then is the good of your very much vaunted education?" I am merely giving what the tribal leaders say. Now, by that, gradually I am afraid there was a natural tendency for the natural leaders of the tribe to be up against the politically-minded party, if I may use the expression. In Baluchistan, the headmen still have, because it was built up from the frameworks of the tribal organisation, a very great deal of power, and they use it on the whole very well, but, in the North-West Frontier, owing to the concessions which were made to the politically-minded who were against the natural tribal leaders—I think it is perfectly natural for them to be so—one was educated and the other was uneducated—they said: "Why should these people who are put in charge of us be better able to look after our tribes than we." Now, their power has been very much increased in different places.

12,353. That quite answers my question as to what you meant by the framework; but you say that these headmen have their position by heredity, but they have no statutory power at all?—They have a great deal of power, depending very often on their personality.

12,354. Quite, personality and heredity, but no statutory power at all?—It was a very distinctly recognised power in the tribe.

12,355. But the effect of education was to make the educated men think politically and then, apparently, despise the headmen and the headmen despised them. I am only saying what I think you told me?—Yes.

12,356. Then, what I understood you to say was that you gave these men no real opening—you gave them no positions at all?—It was very difficult. What they said was, and in some cases I am afraid with reason, that they were up against vested interests and found it almost impossible to get jobs. They complained, for instance, in the North-West Frontier Province, which was originally part of the Punjab, that the old Punjabi element, who, being better educated, had provided many of the officials and police and had remained on after the separation, favoured their own people.

12,357. Are there not then either two alternatives, one is to give up all education or, on the other hand, to give them some opportunities of taking part in the political life of their country?—They are not all against education; I do not think so; but I think that you must go slow, because these men are the natural leaders of the tribes and, if you do not work through them, as quoted by Marshal Lyautey, you will get anarchy. Therefore, before you go forward, you must get them to be with you and, if it is a question of educating them, I am all in favour of it, but,

6th October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

at the present moment, the natural leaders of the tribes cannot even sign their names; therefore, it must be very slow with the tribes.

12,358. There is only one other question that I would like to ask you. You said that the weakness began to be shown with the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms—I think I gathered that was about the sort of date, about 1919?—I came myself into contact with it specially when I came from Baluchistan in 1921 and took over at Kohat; it seemed to me to be roughly due to the concessions which dated from that time.

12,359. The weakness which came from concessions came in 1919 and 1920; it was existing?—Probably. I myself came in contact with it in 1921.

12,360. But you yourself gave some interesting figures of what the state of affairs was in 1919 and 1920 and the great improvement there was in 1920-21; is that not so?—I think those are the dates, yes.

12,361. Those are the dates you gave?—Yes.

12,362. Does not that show that there had been lax administration. It was a tightening up of the administration and not the alteration of any policy that made the difference between 1919 and 1920, and 1920 and 1921?—It was going back, if I may say so, and, to a certain extent, resuscitating, that is, building up the frameworks of the power of the leaders which had been so weakened.

12,363. As between those two years there had been no difference in policy as enunciated by the Government in India?—No, I do not think so.

12,364. And yet there had been this great improvement?—Well, there will always be that, I suppose.

12,365. In other words, it depends more on the administrator than it did actually on the policy of the improvement?—A very great deal will always depend on that.

Lord Hutchison of Montrose.

12,366. Just two questions: Following on the reply given by Sir George MacMunn on the Indianisation of the Army side, I would like to ask Colonel Bruce: In your Memorandum you lay down that it is necessary to have an adequate British element in the other Services. That is in paragraph 10 of your General Memorandum, No. 77?—Yes.

12,367. You think it ought to be laid down in the Constitution Act, the percentage, or the necessity for British elements in those Services?—It is rather hard to say as to laying down a percentage, but it must be adequate. That is a question that has to be taken up really from, we will say, the Judicial side, the Police side—each of them, their leading members—should be able to give roughly what that percentage is. Whether it would be any good laying down an absolute definite percentage, I do not know. Perhaps Mr. Hayter could say with reference to the Police, which is, I think, the most important of those subjects, whether it would be a good thing or not.

12,368. Following on that, is it true to say that the Police in the country districts is the real administrating element?—I think Mr. Hayter will admit with me that the Police depend a tremendous lot for their success in any district on the support of the District Officer; that wherever the District Officer knows his district well, and is able to support the Police, the results in the peace and contentment of the district are very great; that is to say, the co-operation between the two is extraordinarily essential.

12,369. Then, is it true to say that the Government of, we will say, Bombay, is dependent, for the administration in the district, on the Police?—I do not know Bombay at all. I lived hundreds of miles away, but Mr. Hayter may answer you.

12,370. In any province?—(Mr. Hayter.) I think it depends on the "Police" in a general sense, if you take the word widely; not necessarily on just an organised district force itself, but in the whole sense of the Law Courts, the Magistrates and the Police together, and their support among the general public. That is what Government must depend upon for carrying out its orders and preserving the peace.

12,371. If it is the policy to hand over to the Government of the Provinces some form of autonomy, do not you think that it is necessary that whoever is running that administration should have some control over the Police?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) I think it is far too dangerous at the present moment.

6° Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General SIR GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HATTEY, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

12,372. You think it is too dangerous?
—Far too dangerous.

12,373. Then you put your view against, we will say, the Commission under Sir John Simon who went out and examined that problem?—I believe they had misgivings. My misgivings are far more.

12,374. In Sir John Shea's Memorandum (of course he is not one of your Society) he points out that whenever there is trouble the Police always come as a target for all the abuse and the blame for what has occurred. Do you think that if the administration of the Police went under the Provincial Government it would reduce that unpopularity?—I do not, but I should prefer Mr. Hayter, as a representative of the Police, to answer that, if I may be allowed to say so. (Mr. Hayter.) I think that hostility to the Police all over the world is solely on account of the duties that they have to perform, whether in India or any other country. If there is any movement which the Police have to oppose under the orders of Government for the sake of keeping the peace, or preventing the movement from becoming out of hand, they at once naturally arouse the hostility of the people on that account, even although, as men or fellow citizens, the people may be perfectly friendly with the Police. We find it so even in London, and I do not think that the fact of there being a constitutional change in the control of the Police, whether the Minister was responsible to an elected body or not, would make him or his Department or Force any more secure from hostility on those grounds.

Earl Winterton.

12,375. My Lord Chairman, I would like to ask a question or two, first of all, on the General Memorandum. In paragraph 6 of Memorandum No. 77 you deal with what, without offence, may be called questions of high policy, and you state. "The decline commenced from the day when British politicians endeavoured to endow India with democratic government. This policy has to our certain knowledge been imposed from England against the advice of the Services," etc. I gather, therefore, from that that you are opposed to the present system of administration in India, or rather, to the present law in India; to the Government of India Act under which India is governed at the present time you are opposed?—(Mr. Lyall.) I think it is very difficult to understand that contention. I do not think we are opposed to anything except the fact that the introduction of democratic Government and voting has necessarily widened the breach between those who now hold the power and those who are striving against them.

12,376. The effect of the paragraph is an argumentation against the present conditions in India, and those conditions arise under the Government of India Act under which India is governed. I was therefore asking you whether you were, or were not, opposed to the present Government of India Act. I do not want to press the question if you do not want to answer it?—We do not regard it as an improvement on the old Act.

Earl Winterton.] I will leave it at that. In a question which you answered (I think it was Mr. Lyall to Sir Austen Chamberlain) I understood you to say that you were in favour rather of slowing down in India. By "slowing down" I presume you mean that you would therefore go back to the pre-Montagu-Chelmsford conditions.

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.] That is not slowing down. That is going back.

Earl Winterton.

12,377. Did you mean slowing down the pace of advance, or slowing down generally?—Certainly slowing down the pace of advance.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,378. Did you mean no more than slowing down the pace of advance, or did you mean (I think you said to me that you meant) waiting until we had further experience?—I think that is very essential. The proposals to extend the electorate are going to be fraught with enormous expense, and they are going to include in the electorate a vast number of people who, in the opinion of most of us, are as yet entirely unfit to exercise the vote. We also think there is far too rapid construction of a large number of stories of this edifice, the idea of which is to construct them all simultaneously and, in my opinion, we have to be very very certain that each step that is going to be taken ahead is sound before we make any rapid advance to-day. Might I add to that this fact that, in our opinion, there are very

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

hostile (avowedly hostile) activities to the present system of Government in India, and that, in our opinion, we ought to get the strongest proof of co-operation and partnership from those in India who are going to work the scheme before we proceed to give them further powers.

Earl Winterton.

12,379. May I put it in this way. I take it the short answer to the question is that when you use the term "slowing down" you mean slowing down the pace of advance?—Most distinctly, but to what extent is a very difficult thing to say.

12,380. I am not asking you to what extent, I am asking you what the meaning of your answer is?—That is it.

12,381. I turn from that to the first part of the General Memorandum. You say. "While we are in favour of increasingly associating Indians in the administration of the country whenever and wherever possible"—then you make a qualification. Am I to take it from that that you are in favour of continuing to associate Indians as has been done during the last ten years with the administration of the country?—Most certainly as far as it is right and proper.

12,382. But you would not give them responsibility; you would give them power but not responsibility?—They get a very large amount of responsibility within the framework of the Government as it is to-day.

12,383. Yes, exactly. You are not opposed to that responsibility?—Not when it is properly exercised, and it very, very often is.

12,384. Now I turn to Mr. Justice Le Rossignol's Memorandum No. 83. In your last but one paragraph you say, Mr. Justice Le Rossignol. "India is a country of poor men requiring a cheap and simple government; it cannot afford democracy which is notoriously expensive and wasteful." Then you go on to make a reference to France. May I ask you to explain exactly what is the relevance of the reference to France and what you are seeking to prove from it?—(Mr. Justice Le Rossignol.) In France there has been a democratic form of government for very many years and that has not brought about the paradise that is claimed for the system. Therefore, why should we imagine that by giving India democratic rule we are going to effect any improvement in the administration of India?

12,385. Then really in effect your paragraph is a general attack on democracy because otherwise there would be no relevance in the reference to France?—That is correct.

12,386. I might ask you if you are aware of any responsible body of opinion in France that wishes to go back to autocratic government?—Certainly; I think there is a strong body that would like to go back to a royalist form of government.

12,387. I might draw your attention to Nazi Germany, but I will not do so. I would like to ask my friend Mr. Bruce a question. In his Note under the heading "Historical" in his Memorandum No. 78 he says: "Even as far back as 1901 Sir John Rees wrote in his 'Real India,' " etc.?—(Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce.) It should be 1908—that is one of the corrections.

12,388. It would be disingenuous if I did not say that as Mr. Bruce knows from our private friendship I am rather in agreement with him in what he states there, but I think it is fair to ask him (I know what the answer is) if this remark of Sir John Rees did not refer to days long before there was any question of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms?—Certainly.

12,389. It has no relevance, therefore, to the present-day conditions in India?—I should say it has very great relevance. If that has still gone on and is increasing in any way I should say it had very great relevance.

12,390. My point is that it arose not under the present system of government which you and your colleagues are condemning, but it arose under a system of government which you commend?—I think there are very great dangers of it having increased since.

12,391. I had the privilege in 1927 of seeing a good deal of the Frontier under your auspices?—Yes.

12,392. You will agree that in 1927 there had been a very great improvement in conditions on the Frontier?—If I may say so, I considered there were enormous improvements in Waziristan from the adoption of the policy which my father advocated 40 years ago, that is the Sandeman policy. I think there was an enormous improvement especially

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

in what I might call the firebrand of the frontier, namely, Waziristan, from the adoption of the Sandeman policy advocated by my father for Waziristan 40 years ago.

12,393. I quite agree I have a great admiration for that policy. I am pointing out that this particular improvement to which I have referred took place several years after the so-called Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms had come into operation?—Certainly.

Lord Rankeillour.

12,394. May I ask a question arising out of that? Under the Government of India Act the North-West Frontier Province was still reserved to a Chief Commissioner, was it not?—That is what I referred to, if I may say so, at the beginning; it might be said that the Reforms had no effect on the Frontier. My answer to that was that the concessions (which I will not say were due to the reforms, or whether they were the result of the reforms, but they followed the reforms) had an enormous effect on the Frontier.

Earl Winterton.

12,395 One question to Mr. Lyall. You say in the third paragraph of your Memorandum No. 80: "The Secretariat is constantly being affected by the political impulses which are sent out from England, and it soon became patent," etc. What do you mean by "is constantly being affected by the political impulses which are sent out from England"?—(Mr. Lyall) The first beginnings of it was when the Governors of Provinces were desired to start elections in India on a considerable scale and that I think was done from this country in a desire to give India what were believed to be the blessings of electorates and representative government. It is very difficult in my opinion to gauge how far the appetite of India for this democratic government has been from a desire to imitate the institutions of this country and how far they are distasteful to Indians themselves. I can perhaps best illustrate what I meant by giving an example. When the question was first brought up there was a very leading man in my district, the ablest I have ever had dealings with, and I said to him: "Here are these suggestions, how do you think they are going to work in India?" He said: "Sahib, they are entirely unsuitable."

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,396 Which suggestions were those?—For electorates—for representative government.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] He probably knew what your own point of view was on the subject. He said "They are entirely unsuitable. Imagine me going and canvassing, trying to get votes from people of a caste lower than my own. Then, supposing that that was to be done, I know perfectly well that I can buy as many votes as I want". At that time he put the price at 2 annas. I let the matter drop. Very shortly afterwards the Government asked that a written opinion should be obtained from various associations and leaders of society in that district. I got from this gentleman an opinion which was a direct opposite of what he had said to me personally. Then when this happened I said to him, "We have had very cordial relations all this time; would you be kind enough to let me know what is your real opinion"? He said "Sir, my real opinion is what I gave you first. This is my sentimental opinion". I said "Are you prepared to put it in writing"? He did, and I forwarded it to the Governor of my Province and I said "You will find here a key to more than half the laudatory and delighted acceptances that you get of this proposal. I am perfectly certain that a very great deal of trouble has arisen in this way. The representation involves complications which will militate against the peace, happiness and contentment of the people.

Earl Winterton.

12,397. I would like to ask you another question on your Memorandum. In the lower part of that Memorandum you say "Only open to those who could see eye to eye with the policy laid down in England". In other words, it is only open to those who are prepared to carry out the policy that Parliament and the Secretary of State imposed?—Yes.

12,398. Would you expect an official of any Government to carry out work unless he were prepared to carry out the official policy laid down by Parliament

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

and the Secretary of State?—That is inevitable, the policy is laid down and we have to carry it out.

12,399. I have only two more questions. I want to ask Sir George MacMunn two questions. Sir George, you have replied to my noble Friend Lord Hardinge on the subject of strikes. You would not suggest that if the Government had complete control of railways and telegraphs they would be able to prevent strikes in every circumstance?—(Sir George MacMunn.) Not, of course, to prevent strikes; we know that. The British system of strikes and trade control runs into extraordinary exotic growths in India and nobody could undertake to control them; but with this enormous railway system and nothing to take its place you must so organise your railways that you will have a minimum working framework somewhere that will prevent your being entirely paralysed when some queer underground strike or move on some system which you do not understand even, occurs; that is my view.

Earl Winterton.] There is only one other question, Sir George. A question was asked by my noble Friend, Lord Hardinge, as to whether or not the Indianised regiments were not looked on as second line regiments in India. I was not quite clear about your answer. I imagine it would be impossible to judge of the effect of Indianisation until the scheme has been completed—that is to say, the completion of the Indianisation of the 8 units?

Marquess of Reading.

12,400. I understood Sir George to give that answer?—I should say most emphatically that at present you have no sort of ground to say how far it is going to be a success or not. In fact, I have myself always belonged to that school which has said you have made a great mistake by Indianising regiments separately. The young Indian Officers themselves were much happier mixed up with their British officers in the messes than being among themselves. In fact, I still think that the actual form of Indianisation has been a mistake. We should have done very much better to have mixed them up with ourselves where they were very happy, and where that terrible question that is always coming up now and again of race and religious feeling. Mess life is of a very close kind; where you are all mixed up, you always get on together, and it does not arise; but young officers are not always happy where they are. That is only one point. What the success is going to be nobody knows. Nobody knows yet how many Indians we are going to get with a power of command. I myself was present in 1897 with a regiment from one of the States which had two British officers with it; those two British officers were wounded, it was then like sheep to the slaughter; that is to say, that though the Indian officers in command had been trained for a good many years and were of a famous fighting race, yet the regiment was chased like sheep. We do not know whether the training we are giving them is going to bring up enough men of sufficient responsibility and power in times of trouble.

Earl Winterton.

12,401. You are aware that the scheme in question was recommended by the Government of India and also was recommended by the late Lord Rawlinson?—Yes; I know it was. I was one of the Military Council when it was discussed. I heard the suggestion and I think I know the result, but I have always deplored it from a broad point of view.

12,402. But your superior officers were in favour of it?—Yes; certainly; I was one of the Military Council at which it was discussed.

12,403. I have only one more question to ask you. You, like me, Sir George, have had the privilege and advantage of serving actually in action with Indian troops from the States with nothing but one British officer attached to them?—Yes.

12,404. And you would not say that they were of no military value?—Not a bit; I think they are of tremendous military value.

12,405. I should like to place that on record. I have been in action and I consider them of high military value?—I have the greatest regard and respect for them all in that way, but how far Indianisation is going to be successful we have, as yet, no inkling. When we get an Indianised Regiment on our flank most of us will feel a little anxious. It

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

will be an experiment we know nothing about, with all the good will you can think of.

Mr. Cocks.

12,406. You say in the general memorandum of the Society, Colonel Bruce, "We ask the Committee to advise that Parliament shall not divest itself of power," and you explained earlier on that by "power" you mean moral and psychological factors as well as military factors?—Would you tell me which paragraph that is?

12,407. Page 2, second paragraph, line 7?—I am afraid I did not quite catch your question.

12,408. It was explained in answer to a question that by "power" you did not mean purely military power, but moral and psychological factors as well?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) Certainly, and civil.

12,409. Is not one of the strongest of those factors the fact that thousands of Indian administrators, public men, business men, landowners and men of influence are giving large support to the administration at the present time? Is not that a powerful, moral and psychological factor?—Yes, I should say it was, if it is so.

12,410. If those men who are loyally supporting the administration have their hopes of reforms and responsible Government disappointed, do not you think it will greatly weaken the Government?—I do not really think it would, provided that the welfare of the masses, which is our first responsibility, does not suffer.

12,411. But if leading men of influence in India who are now loyally supporting the administration have their legitimate hopes, as they think, disappointed and they withdraw their loyal support, will not that be likely to lead to the landslide which was mentioned?—No; I do not think it would.

12,412. The other point is this. You are specially concerned, Colonel Bruce, with the defence of the North-West Frontier and Baluchistan?—I have had no personal experience of any other part 12,413. Do you approve of the proposals as regards Baluchistan in the White Paper? You know it is to be treated in a different way from the rest of India?—That is to say that it is not going to have reforms?

12,414. Yes?—If I may answer that, I am very glad to hear it, because, as I have quoted in my Memorandum, Major Cadogan pointed out they were very contented, and I think it would be a very bad thing to disturb them from their contentment. But there is another side of that, if I may put it, and that is that some of the leaders of the Baluchi tribes (and in the Baluchistan tribes, remember, there are more Pathan tribes than actually Baluchis) may possibly say to themselves, "Though it has paid our tribes to remain contented, have we scored by it?"—and when they see their opposite numbers in the North-West Frontier Province drawing salaries in Legislative Councils or in any other form, may they not again say that they obtained these (I am not saying whether it is right or whether it is wrong) by agitation. They may say so to themselves: "Though it has paid our tribes to remain quiet and contented, did it pay us," possibly, from a selfish point of view.

12,415 I understand that, but as far as Proposals 57 and 58 of the White Paper are concerned, you agree with those generally, do you?—I am afraid I have not got Proposals 57 and 58. I have read the White Paper twice; it is a very long thing. I have not even a copy. (A copy is handed to the witness.) Proposal 57 is what is happening at the present moment. I should like to go into No. 58 more carefully, but as far as I know, just glancing at it like this, it seems to be roughly what is being done now.

12,416. You have no particular objections to it anyhow?—I should like to go into it more thoroughly, but, just glancing at it, I do not know that there is any great difficulty.

12,417. I understand, of course, that you are opposed to the whole scheme of the White Paper?—I qualify that a little, if I may say so. I am specially opposed to any handing over at the present moment of what I consider the most important services that especially affect the welfare of the people as a whole. I would go very very slow there. That is my main objection.

12,418. What I was going to ask you was this: Presume that this scheme, generally speaking, goes through, have you any special suggestion which you would make of amendment as regards the centre

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

and the North West Frontier? For instance, would you like the North West Frontier Province to be taken out of the scheme? That is what I am driving at?—I should like to go into that question very thoroughly, I could not give you an answer on that point now. I think that one has to remember that the whole history of India has been the history of the Frontier, and that everybody who has served on the Frontier and has been there for years and years should be given a very great opportunity to show how far any scheme will endanger the whole of India, because it is from the Frontier that the history of India has emanated and, I think, the risks are simply enormous.

12,419. I know, but have you any constructive suggestion to make? Supposing the scheme goes through for the rest of India, have you any special amendment that you would propose?—I should like to go through every one of them very, very carefully with other officers who have had the privilege of serving on that Frontier before I gave any answer to that question. It is so important that I consider every word of it has to be gone through.

Lord Snell.

12,420. Colonel Bruce, in your general Memorandum, at the bottom of the first page, you suggest that this idea of reforming India had been imposed on India by British politicians. Are you able to say that if such ideas had not been imposed Indians would have been satisfied with the Government which prevailed prior to 1919?—It depends upon what you call Indians. If you mean the masses of the people who are peaceful and contented, as far as I know they would have been very satisfied?

12,421. I mean the Indian people including those who by education and experience have the right to advise their fellow-countrymen?—I have not quite got the question. I think our main responsibility to India is to give them good Government and peace and contentment to the masses.

12,422. May I very respectfully submit that that is not an answer to my question? If these ideas had not gone from England to India would the Indian people have been satisfied, and if so, for how long, with the kind of Government which they then had?—I have served entirely as I have said on the Frontier. I think they would have been very satisfied; I never saw any signs of dissatisfaction. Perhaps you would like to ask that question of officers who have served in other parts of India.

12,423. I am content to have it on record. In the same paragraph you suggest that British politicians imposed these ideas against the advice of the Services. As a British politician I feel interested in this matter. Is the claim of the Services that British politicians should be bound by their advice?—Certainly not, not bound, but it would be a very good thing to hear their advice.

12,424. And they do not claim that those politicians who are Members of Parliament should decide in accordance with the advice of the Services?—Not necessarily.

12,425. Then what is the point of trying to score against the politician and responsible statesman on the ground that they have not seen fit to accept the advice of the Services of India?—(Mr. Lyall.) That certainly was not the intention behind that paragraph. We do not desire to score against any British politician.

12,426. I venture to ask the witnesses to read the paragraph again and see what it really means. Passing from that, my Lord, it has been said that the only satisfactory guarantee is that of power. Does that mean power exercised at the discretion of the services apart from Parliament?—My own view of that, is that it is very feasible for the Government in India to get the view of leading Indians and to act in the closest co-operation with them and do what is good for the community as a whole.

12,427. Would you agree that if by this reform we could get the complete goodwill of the people of India that in itself would be a psychological safeguard of great value?—If we could I should certainly agree, but I maintain it is not possible to do so by that means.

12,428. Mr. Justice Le Rossignol, you speak of the impossibility of representative government without an informed, honest and interested electorate. Do you know of any land that is fortunate enough to possess an honest, informed and an interested electorate?—(Mr. Justice Le Rossignol.) I should reply to that: If there is no such land, why adopt the system for India? Why

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

should the system be adopted for India if those prerequisites are not existing in India?

12,429. That is not an answer to my question. I am entitled to have an answer. You say it cannot be done without this and without that quality?—Yes.

12,430. I ask in what land does that quality exist?—I hope in this land.

12,431. Would you be satisfied with Great Britain, as Lord Derby suggests?—Yes, I think so; I think England, on the whole.

12,432. And that informed, honest, and interested electorate of Great Britain has elected Members to Parliament who unfortunately do not agree with the Services?—They may do. I understand this Bill has not yet been passed. It is still merely a White Paper.

12,433. One final question. Mr. Lyall in his Memorandum No. 80 suggests that a large number of English officials in India have resigned rather than remain loyal to a government with whose policy they do not happen to agree. Has that statement the support of the Indian Empire Society?—(Mr. Lyall.) Rather than remain loyal? I do not think those words were used.

12,434. No, but what does it mean: rather than take any risks, assumed or otherwise, they resigned in large numbers. I ask. Is that an attitude which the Indian Empire Society suggests is loyal?—I would suggest that so far as that goes, it is the only thing left to an Officer in Government Service in India to resign if he is asked to carry out policies which are not in accordance with his principles and conscience. There is nothing else left.

Mr. Morgan Jones.

12,435. Colonel Bruce, turning to your General Memorandum, I see that you say in the second paragraph that while you are in favour of "increasingly associating Indians in the administration of the country whenever and wherever possible, we hold that the degree to which this can be done must be subordinated (1) to the welfare of the masses; (2) to the conscientious discharge by the British nation of its stewardship of the vast continent of India; and (3) to justice to the commitments undertaken by the British nation." May I suggest that there may be a fourth?—(Lieut.-

Colonel C. E. Bruce.) There may be others, certainly.

12,436. A discharge by the Indians themselves of responsibility for themselves?—But they are being associated every day more and more. All we ask is that in any further advance every step should be taken with tremendous caution and consideration.

12,437. I quite understand that, but would you accept the fourth as an aim to keep before your mind, namely, the discharge by the Indians themselves of responsibility for their own government?—Certainly.

12,438. You would?—In so far as they prove fit for it, most certainly.

12,439. But when you add those words, "in so far as they prove fit for it," it may mean anything or nothing, may it not?—Surely not.

12,440. In the next paragraph you refer to certain pledges which have been given to India and you state they have never been unconditional?—Yes.

12,441. Could you say broadly what the condition of that self-government was to be?—The condition of the pledges?

12,442. Yes?—The first pledge, I take it, was for the welfare of the masses of India and that, provided certain branches of the business, if I may put it in that way, were handed over to the Indians, and provided that they showed that those branches were working to the satisfaction and for the benefit of the poor people in India then on those conditions the whole question was to be gone into and a further advance made or not, as the case may be. It was a question as to how far, in those two branches which had been handed over, which affected very greatly the welfare of the poor people, they had justified their stewardship and how far therefore a further advance should be made or the advance retarded as the case may be. It was a question of proving it.

12,443. You would agree, would you not, that Parliament in the prosecution of those pledges has from time to time enlarged the sphere of self-government for the Indian people?—Yes.

12,444. And the last occasion was the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms?—Yes.

12,445. And I take it that your case is that the Montagu-Chelmsford Reform was in advance of the requirements of the time?—From the realities it seems cer-

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

tainly to have been so; they did not prove extraordinarily satisfactory.

12,446. You likened our presence in India to that of a steward. Who is to determine when the functions of the steward are to be circumscribed—the steward or the owner of the estate?—Who is the owner?

12,447. Surely the Indians?—I do not quite see the question.

12,448. You likened us in India to being stewards—stewards for somebody, certainly?—Stewards for the welfare of the masses.

12,449. The Indian people?—I call the masses the Indian people.

12,450. Do not you think that the Indian people have a right at some time or other to determine when the functions of the steward shall be limited?—It depends on what you call the Indian people. If you refer to the welfare of the masses, certainly, in so far as the proof is that the welfare of the masses is going on and peace and contentment are going to be maintained.

12,451. Do I understand your idea of associating the Indian people with government to be related merely to say selection and promotion by the process of co-option?—Yes. Up to the present moment that has been the most satisfactory. I can see no reason for anything else at the present moment.

12,452. At what moment do you propose to invite the Indian people to declare whether that is in accord with their desire or not?—The masses, when they can give their own opinion.

12,453. You mean when you think they can?—Not at present, most certainly not, as Mr. Lyall has said. I do not think the masses have yet given their opinion.

12,454. You say later on in your Memorandum: "The finances of India are already strained to the utmost by the experiments of the past 10 years". Is that opinion based upon the views of experts?—I should have thought it would have been admitted. Is it not an admitted fact that they have been strained?

12,455. You have read, I daresay, the Report of the Simon Commission, and especially the paper by Sir Walter Layton?—I have read the whole of the Simon Commission Report a long time ago.

12,456. Do you recall that in Sir Walter Layton's paper the expenditure upon defence was 55 as compared with 13 in respect of education?—I do not recall it but I take it from you.

12,457. Would you argue, Colonel Bruce, that a proportion of that sort justifies you saying that the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms which have operated for the last 10 years have occasioned the financial strain in India?—I should think they had contributed. I do not pretend to be a financier, but I should have thought they had contributed.

12,458. Your Memorandum pretends you know?—Yes.

12,459. May I refer now to Mr. Waris Ameer Ali's Memorandum No. 81?—I believe, Sir, you are a District and Sessions Judge?—(Mr. Waris Ameer Ali) I was.

12,460. Now retired?—I am now retired.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] In that Memorandum you advance a very strong indictment of your own people.

Mr. Zafulla Khan.] Did you say "of your own people"?

Mr. Morgan Jones.] I said "of your own people".

Mr. Zafulla Khan.] In paragraph 12 of the General Memorandum (No. 77) Mr. Waris Ameer Ali has said: "The peace, safety and contentment of 350 millions, and the invested lives and capital of our country—investments made on the faith of the British nation—these are at stake." These are his statements. Mr. Ameer Ali has also signed the general memorandum, and he has said that in that.

Mr. Morgan Jones.

12,461. I am afraid we are on different statements. In paragraphs 2 and 3 you suggest under the proposed form of provincial autonomy there will be opportunity for great corruption amongst other things. Is that so?—May I take exception to your remark "indictment of my own people"? There is no one people in India; there are numerous peoples, and I have definitely stated in this Memorandum that I pay tribute to the devoted and conscientious service of many Indian colleagues and subordinates. There is no use in blinking the fact that the level of public opinion in some parts of India is, shall we say, less advanced than here? It is not everybody who will do such a thing, but certain men who are still living in a medieval mentality

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

will pursue medieval methods; and those men are in many cases possessed of some influence or power in the countryside and are of little scruple. If I may venture, with the greatest respect, to say so (it took place a long time ago, you will say, but in the East centuries are very short), if you look at such a work as the Paston Letters you will find exactly similar practices taking place in the administration of this country in the reigns of Henry VI and Edward IV. I am making no general indictment, if I may say so. My Lord Chairman, if I may venture to say one thing about this General Memorandum, it is this: Mr. Zafrrulla Khan very kindly associated me with my British friends and colleagues. I stand by them in a general sense, but I am not prepared to cry over spilt milk in any way. I am here not to offer opinions, save in so far as you ask for them. It is for you, my Lords and Gentlemen, to form your own opinions and your own conclusions as to what the future Constitution of India is to be. I have merely come here to state what facts I know from personal recollection and from family tradition, which goes back in, may we say, official or responsible positions for the past eight generations in India, both before the time of the East India Company's rule and before the time of the Crown.

12,462. I am much obliged, but will you please direct your attention to the paragraph of Memorandum 81 beginning: "What will be the result"?—Yes.

12,463. It goes on: "The majority of conscientious Indian presiding officers of Courts will find serious difficulty in dealing with cases where they realise that someone has gone behind their backs to the Minister, who will not hesitate to accuse them of partiality." I will not trouble to read the whole paragraph; it is there before you. May I ask you whether that paragraph is based upon your own personal experience?—Certainly, in some cases.

12,464. Do I take it from that that you have had experience of people in various ways trying to corrupt the administration of justice?—It depends what you call corrupting; not necessarily corrupting with money, but endeavouring to get in a good word for themselves or for their friends.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

12,465. Were there Ministers in India at the time when you were District Judge?—There were, but they were not concerned with me; I should say, not elected Ministers, but I am referring now to the future in this Memorandum when, as I understand, the proposed Constitution—

12,466. I thought you were speaking from your experience?—May I explain to you? This refers to the future when the proposal is to place Ministers under elected Legislatures and responsible to elected Legislatures and liable to stand or fall with their Cabinets.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] Your words are prophetic.

Mr. Morgan Jones.

12,467. May I continue my cross-examination?—Certainly.

12,468. Do I understand you to imply that your evidence in your memorandum arises from personal acquaintance with this sort of corruption to which you refer?—How do you mean, personal acquaintance? I have had people going behind the backs of myself and of the Chief Court.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] Let me put it bluntly.

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.

12,469. Will you repeat that?—I have had experience in my capacity as a Sessions Judge and as a District Judge (not in every case but in certain cases where powerful people were concerned) of, shall we say, medieval intrigues going on behind my back in the position of what you call a Judge of Assize here and behind the back of my Provincial High Court.

Marquess of Reading.

12,470. I am completely puzzled by the expression, "going behind the back," and nothing more. What does that mean. Would you tell us plainly?—Claiming to state that one has been mistaken in one's judgment, trying to reverse the said judgment, and trying to get contrary orders passed, or something like that.

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,471. By whom?—By the Executive Government.

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Mr. Morgan Jones.

12,472. Were you ever in a position as a Judge to bring those people to book in any way?—There was one case in particular just before I came away. It is very painful to have to refer to it because the gentleman in question was a personal acquaintance. It did not get so far as the Executive Government, it is true. This gentleman was a very large landed proprietor, Chairman of the District Board, and a personal acquaintance. He was the former sitting Member of the neighbouring district, which corresponds to the Chairman of the County Council here. He had a great uncle, the brother of his grandmother, who, with his son, had the misfortune to knock a neighbour on the head in just an ordinary village fight over a boundary. It is an accident that sometimes happens in India. It was very, very unfortunate, but his opponent died. The great uncle and the son were both concerned in this fight, and they were charged eventually with manslaughter, which is the humane provision of the law in India, Section 304. They went straight off, having had this fight, to their powerful relative, and I have no doubt from the evidence that came out afterwards they worried the life out of him. He sent them to a hospital that had just been handed over to him as Chairman of the District Board for complete control as an experiment in local self-government. The Doctor, Babu in charge entered them up as arriving on a certain date, to wit, 24 hours before this alleged fight. The hospital entry was somewhat vague, and he said they were suffering from a stomach complaint, but, in spite of the stomach complaint, after 24 or 48 hours at the hospital they went straight off on a pilgrimage to Bindachal, a famous shrine of the goddess Bhowani, near Mirzapur. It was formerly a resort of Thugs and other people who were devotees of the goddess and of murder and crime generally. It was an unfortunate place to choose; still, they went there. The result was they were committed for trial by my learned brother who was an Indian gentleman of very high repute, judge in the district in which the alleged crime had been committed. They were acquitted on the ground of lack of evidence of manslaughter, but the wretched Doctor Babu was charged with perjury, of false entry in his record of the time that these people had come. The case was transferred to my file because my learned brother at this particular place, of course, had charged the Doctor with perjury and false entry, so he could not try it; it was transferred by order of the Chief Court to my file. I had to try it. I will not call him an unfortunate man, because we found he had done the same sort of thing before in his registers. However, during the course of this procedure, what was my surprise to find that the Prosecution's witnesses complained bitterly on oath that the Chairman of the District Board who was behind the great uncle, who had the misfortune to break his neighbour's head and kill him, was threatening them personally near his own home, and had sent his Government clerk as an honorary magistrate of the First Class to run the defence before me of the Doctor. We did not catch the Clerk. Messengers were sent hot foot out to seize him, but he fled and could not be caught. On the sworn statements of these witnesses I instituted a prima facie case against this gentleman, who was very upset. He came to see me personally. I was very sorry for him, but, on the facts, I had no course but to file a complaint. I merely filed a prima facie complaint before the Magistrate of the next district in which the alleged conflict had taken place. His principal complaint was that he would lose Izzat by being forced to appear as an accused. I said, "I am very sorry, you may or may not have threatened them, but they definitely stated on oath that you had threatened them, and your henchman had threatened them for giving evidence against your protégé." I shortly after retired, and the prosecution of this gentleman was dropped. Before I retired, he had gone off to another District Magistrate, a senior man, and produced a long letter from him and from another officer stating that he had been wholly misused and that I had been wrongly guided. That is an example of the small things that go on now.

12,473. But in general you would not accuse people in India of that kind of thing. These are exceptions, I take it? —Well, remember this: When a man is in a tight place, if I may use a colloquialism, he will turn to any method of getting out of it.

6^o October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

12,474. So he will anywhere?—I do not suggest that of any highly educated gentleman or anyone here

Mr. Zafrrulla Khan.] You may leave us out.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

12,475. Was it such horrid experiences, the experiences of the character you have narrated in great detail, that induced you to retire from India on proportionate pension before your time?—I did get a bit tired of it, I admit

Mr. Morgan Jones.

12,476. May I ask Mr. Justice Le Rossignol this question, my Lord Chairman? He refers to an incident where a candidate told him that an additional outlay of so many rupees would have converted his failure into success at an election. Does the witness not agree that the buying and selling of votes was prevalent in England until comparatively recent times?—(Mr. Justice Le Rossignol.) Comparatively recent times.

12,477. And does he also agree that there was a time when the people of this country were entirely illiterate too?—Yes; that is some time ago.

12,478. And that that time, he will admit, was at periods of great military prowess?—Yes.

12,479. And therefore the fact that people at this moment happen to be illiterate and there happens to be buying and selling of votes is no more a reason for a further advance in India any more than it was in this country?—I think it reduces the whole system to a farce. To whom are the Ministers responsible if they are responsible only to illiterate persons?

12,480. But it was a farce in our own country, was it not?—It may have been.

12,481. Not may have been, surely? In spite of that, we gave votes to people?—Yes; but was the disproportion so great in this country as it is at the present day in India?

12,482. Perhaps not so great, but still there was that disproportion?—I stand only for the poor men in India. If you can make an advance in favour of educated Indians in India without jeopardising the interests of the poor man, I am all in favour of it; but I say up to now in whatever experiment we have made we have found, far from success, only failure.

12,483. But you are in favour of making advances in India just as we have made the same advances in Britain?—Yes, but with great caution. I have many friends among the Indians, and really my opposition is in favour of the poor man in India.

12,484. Do I gather from the last sentence but one in your Memorandum, in which you say "cannot afford democracy which is notoriously wasteful" that your objection to this development in India is not so much to the fact that it is applying Democracy in India as an objection to Democracy?—As an objection to Democracy in general?

12,485. Yes?—Yes. I think that in all matters, if you can go to an expert, it is a great mistake to go to an amateur.

Chairman.] By leave of the Committee and by courtesy of Sir Hubert Carr, I propose to ask the Primate to ask a question now, as unfortunately public business will prevent him from being with us on Monday.

Archbishop of Canterbury.

12,486. I am very grateful to you, my Lord Chairman and the Committee. I only want to ask one or two general questions. I am anxious to know from you who have been kind enough to give evidence to us what alternatives you have in view to the Proposals in the White Paper? I understand that you do not suggest that there should be any actual change in what has already been done through the Montagu-Chelmsford scheme. You do not suggest that in any respect that should be undone?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) No. Simply that any advance, as it is called, should be done with very great caution. So far as the alternative is concerned that is a question which we have not been asked to decide.

12,487. Is there any further movement at all that you would be in favour of?—Every movement to associate selected or tried Indians who have proved their worth?

12,488. That has already been done?—Yes, certainly. I should go on doing it, as it goes on.

12,489. Can you indicate any specific ways in which you would be prepared to make some advance upon the existing system, the Government Act of 1921?—It depends a great deal upon what is called an "advance." It is so difficult

6^o October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

to understand what is meant by the word

12,490. Do you propose to make any change?—(Mr. Lyall.) I think perhaps we may get a guide from what is happening in a lot of other countries, perhaps America (I am not very conversant with the Constitution there) as a case in point. I think it is generally viewed that the administration of justice is extremely difficult in that country owing to the fact that those who are responsible for the administration are at the same time subject to popular vote.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,491. May I interject a question to understand what you are referring to in American practice? Are you referring to the election of Judges by popular vote?—And to the fact that I believe every Head of Police changes with the Administration.

Archbishop of Canterbury.

12,492. Yes, but I am not asking you to give your criticism of the White Paper plans. You have said you do not want to change what has been done, but you are not averse to some further movement. I only want to know precisely what further movement you would be prepared to advocate?—I think our view is that that is a matter which would be dealt with in accordance with criticisms that would be put before the Joint Select Committee and also before the Houses of Parliament when it came to matters of detail; but I think our chief apprehension at the present moment is the Courts and the Police. That is our main point.

12,493. I quite understand that?—If that is met, we are quite content that further results should be judged by experience.

12,494. But they can hardly be judged by experience unless something is done?—I think we have said that very probably, during the last 10 years, if statistics were taken it would be found that there has not been an improvement judged by statistics of serious crime by political dacoities, by assassinations and by terrorism in that period; therefore, we think that the matter should be proceeded with very, very slowly.

12,495. I quite understand that, but that still does not answer my question.

Are there any definite respects in which those whom you represent are prepared to recommend any further advance along the lines which were laid down in the Government Act of 1919?—I think that the Government Act postulated that there should be partnership and good will, and a definite desire on the part of the Indians to remain within the Empire. That, I think, has not been acted up to. In our opinion, it is very desirable that a very great deal of that should be insisted on to-day.

12,496. I will come to that in a moment, Mr. Lyall, if I may, but I still do not get any answer to my specific question whether there are any things at all which you are prepared to do in advance of what has already been done in the Government of India Act of 1919?—I think perhaps our answer to that would be that we have no definite proposals to make, but that during the last 10 years there has been a constant increase of the associations of Indians in the work and that will continue 12,497. I take your answer: There is no proposal?—There is no proposal.

12,498. Then, I take it, that those whom you represent are quite against the main conclusions of the Simon Commission Report?—We certainly think it is a wonderful basis upon which to work; it is a most marvellous presentation of facts.

12,499. But you do not agree to work upon that basis?—My one chief objection to it is that I should have thought the arguments in it were definitely conclusions against a large increase in the electorates. On the other hand, it did definitely recommend a very large increase in the electorate which, I believe is further increased now.

12,500. But substantially you do not recommend any further steps? You disagree with the main conclusions of the Simon Report?—I would not say that. (Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) I do not think Mr. Lyall means that. I think his great objections and our great objection is to the handing over of the Police which the Simon Commission themselves I think viewed with a certain amount of misgiving. It is the Police and the Judiciary; I think we all stand by that.

12,501. May I ask Lieut.-Colonel Bruce a question if he will forgive me? When his attention was called to Pro-

6^o October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

posals 57 of the White Paper he said that though it concerned the Province with which he has been honourably associated on the part of India, Baluchistan, he admitted he had not given very careful consideration to these particular paragraphs dealing with Baluchistan?—I do not think I could be taken to have said that—on the contrary.

12,502. I think you said you would require a good deal of time to give these proposals careful consideration?—No. I said, with reference to paragraph 58 of the White Paper, I should like to go into that question. I certainly associated myself with Baluchistan, and, as far as Baluchistan is concerned, there was very, very little change. I have not read those paragraphs carefully lately. I read them carefully at the time, but I have not studied the magain. The people of Baluchistan were very, very contented.

12,503 Would you forgive me if I suggested on that that you may not have given very careful consideration to all the proposals in the White Paper?—Certainly I have given them very careful consideration.

12,504 Then may I call attention to a very just remark made by Mr. Hayter—“Peace depends on moral and psychological factors for improvement.” But, have you considered the effect of moral and psychological factors on the peace of India, if no considerable effort is made to implement all the promises that of recent years have been made to India in the direction of further Constitutional reforms? I use these words, as good as any others (they happen to be Lord Meston’s), speaking not only of what has been done at the Round Table Conference, and the pronouncements made by the leaders of our political parties, but of the classes which have acquired English education who are united in their demand for greater political freedom. “They form, it is true, a small minority but they have opportunities and the will to disturb the multitude, and they can sound depths of popular emotion to which we have no access.” Does it not seem that these are moral and psychological factors that are to be considered with regard to the keeping of the peace in India?—Mr Hayter says he would like to answer as he spoke those words.

12,505. Yes?—(Mr. Hayter.) I think that any fear of disturbance or loss of confidence in the Government on account of failure or inability to meet with such political demands for advance as your Lordship indicated would be as nothing compared to the great fear of loss of confidence if the Government could not hold the scales equally between the different communities and conflicting sections. I regard that as the great danger in India. It has been so for 600 years, and is still the same, and I do not think that any fear of discontent on account of failure to grant political institutions could be weighed in the balance against the fear of communal disturbance. That is my opinion.

12,506. So far as active opinion in India is concerned it is much more in favour of some implementing of all these promises than of apprehension as to their results?—I can only give my opinion that that is so; that the real fear is from a cessation of confidence in the Government to exercise impartial power to protect minorities and to punish any aggression.

12,507. That may be your inference, but how far have you any evidence in popular India opinion that your apprehensions are shared?—I have had 27 years’ experience as a Police Officer mostly in what you might call backward or up-country districts, and I think the great fear always has been of people ceasing to believe that they had a Government over them who would protect and punish when necessary.

12,508. How far has that apprehension been in any way articulated among the Indian people with whom you have been so long connected?—It was constantly articulated.

12,509. But you would admit that, so far as the peace of India is concerned you have to take into consideration the possible effects of your attitude being adopted, and nothing further being done in the way of implementing all the promises which rightly or wrongly have been made?—I think that it is quite impossible that any scheme proposed would satisfy all the political elements. There would still be a great deal of discontent and people ready to stir up folk, as Lord Meston said, on various grounds; there would still be all these people ready to stir up the people, and you would then be deprived of the impartial effective power in which all the people have confidence. You would have lost the power, but you would still have discontent stirred up.

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued. Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL, C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr. Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

12,510. Then your view is that this Committee may pay very little attention to the apprehensions that have been widely expressed, that if no further movement was made there would be considerable disturbance in India?—I could not possibly say (so much having gone on) that there would not be disturbance, but I do not think that that kind of disturbance would be of anything like the magnitude that the disturbances would come to if an impartial power and the confidence of the people was really lost.

12,511. That would remain to be proved?—Certainly.

12,512. Then may I call your attention, Mr. Lyall, to what you have said in the last paragraph of your Memorandum No. 80, where I gather what you would wish is that "before any further devolution is resorted to the Government should propose to exact proofs of goodwill and co-operation from Indian politicians and break any organisation which openly asserts its intention of breaking all connection with the British Empire." Do you think it is the most hopeful way of securing the goodwill and co-operation of Indian politicians to take your attitude, and to say that nothing that they have desired beyond the present Government Act should be given to them? Has it not occurred to you that that might be rather the way in which you would throw them over upon what I understand you mean here as the Congress Party?—(Mr. Lyall.) My view is that there are just as many people in India to take the place of the Congress Party as there are in the Congress Party?

12,513. Precisely. Therefore would it not be a great advantage that with regard to those who do not associate themselves with the Congress Party we should be able to receive their cordial goodwill and co-operation?—I think it is impossible to buy the cordial goodwill and co-operation of the Congress Party in its left wing—in its most advanced state.

12,514. I am not suggesting for a moment that anything should be done as regards the Congress Party. My point is how shall we secure the goodwill and co-operation of other Indian politicians if we meet them merely with the negative position which, rightly or wrongly, and most naturally, some of you have taken?—I would, first of all, take the position that we have met them already very very largely. That is patent, I think, from facts simply as to the number of Indians in all the Government Services from the day that I first went to India to the day that I retired from India, and I think it is essential in regard to those matters that we should exact that both sides of the bargain should be kept. If you do not it is simply a policy of concession "What do you want?" "Take it."

12,515. What would you mean exactly by exacting proofs?—There are many most unequivocal statements made to-day by the Congress Party that their one idea is to sever all connection with this country.

12,516. I am not speaking of the Congress Party. I am speaking of Indian politicians whom you would wish to detach from the Congress Party. How would you exact proofs from them?—I think one of the first things towards doing that is to show definitely and clearly that a secessionist and anarchical and hostile policy is not going to meet with the reward that is so often given to agitators.

12,517. I cannot pursue that matter further. The Committee will form its own conclusions. But I do wish to call your attention, if I may, to a statement which alarmed me a good deal when I read it in the third paragraph of Mr. Lyall's Memorandum, No. 80. Speaking of the officials in India, particularly the Secretariat: "It soon became patent that Secretariat life with all its amenities of society, comfortable houses and absence of direct responsibility for the maintenance of law and order and the daily drudgery of administration work, were only open to those who could see eye to eye with the policy laid down in England that democratic institutions were to be introduced and developed." Would you tell me how that became patent?—It is very difficult to do that, but it is a matter of a sort of personal knowledge—what other people have said, common knowledge. I have been told an anecdote in regard to it. It may possibly throw a beam of light on the attitude of mind. One man resigned; the other said he was not going to resign; he said, "I agree with your views, but I am a cynic."

6° Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,518. Why was he going to resign? I want to be quite clear?—Because he did not agree with the policy.

12,519. The policy of the White Paper, or what?—Much earlier than this. This democratic policy and the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. He said: "I am a cynic, and I am not a Don Quixote. If I do not take this post somebody else will." He carried on. The border line is very very difficult to define. Always you just go a step further and a step further, and a step further, and you have to carry out the policy that is laid down. That, we all recognise, is essential, but a great many men have been carrying out a policy which, in their heart of hearts, they did not think was going to lead to the prosperity and contentment of India.

Archbishop of Canterbury.

12,520. That is quite natural, but you do not mean to imply from that that you have any evidence, when you speak of things becoming patent, that any attempt was made in regard to the appointment and promotion of officers to find out whether they did or did not agree with questions of policy?—I think that is a matter that very soon becomes obvious to the Secretariat. They have to get reports from officers constantly, and they know exactly those who are prepared to further the policy that is going on to the utmost of their power, and others who have reservations. I do not want to imply moral turpitude to either side, but, on both sides, there is either a desire to carry things further, or a desire to stand back, and when it comes to the point it is the officers who have taken the other line who, a very large number of them, in our opinion, have gone to preferment on policy. I do not grudge it to them. I think it was essential; it was inevitable.

12,521. We have had here a very great deal of evidence (masses of evidence) from the most responsible recent officials in charge of Indian administration, that they do not share your apprehensions; that they are in general favour of some further movement of this kind, and it has been said, countering that, that pressure has been brought to bear on these officers to take the views broadly represented by the White Paper if they are likely to be promoted. It is a very serious allegation, and I want to know whether you imply here that in any way, direct or indirect, whatever opinions officials may have had, any attempt has been made on the part of the Government to find out before making an appointment or a promotion what political opinions an official had?—I would say there had been no kind of inquisition of any kind, but I think I answered that earlier, that the views of an officer are constantly appearing to the Secretariat to the Governors from all the reports that are sent up, and there are a certain number who are in favour of the policy. Naturally they must be chosen; they have got to be the instruments to carry it further. There are a certain number who are opposed to it, and they are rejected as instruments for carrying out that policy. The point I want to make is that there is a very marked cleavage amongst the members of our Service, and a genuine one.

12,522. The Committee are well aware of that. I only want to make it clear that you are not wanting the Committee to understand that any pressure has been brought to bear by the Government?—I can say most frankly it never has in my case.

Sir Hubert Carr.

12,523. There is only one question I wanted to ask particularly with regard to the Frontier Province. Colonel Bruce has pointed out that there are tremendous dangers in introducing reforms on the Frontier. I gather he does not consider that the Frontier and the rest of India can be treated on the same level. Is that correct?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) Having only dealt with the Frontier I should certainly say that it was. By that I mean that you have to have very great caution in India proper. That caution must be excessive on the Frontier.

12,524. Has the Indian Empire Society any special proposals for dealing with the Frontier as a separate Province?—I do not think it has been considered as a separate problem in that way. I do not quite gather the meaning of the question. The minority naturally are the Hindus, and, I think, whatever they may say in public, I have never heard one of them in private view the proposals—I mean such, for instance, as the handing over of the control of the

6^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Police, or the Judiciary, and all those sorts of things—with anything but misgivings but even with horror. "Apprehension" is too small a word.

12,525. I follow that from your Memorandum?—Yes.

12,526. But what was occurring to me was that you have made the point that the Frontier is really the key to India?—I think history bears me out there.

12,527. In that case has the Indian Empire Society any special policy for the special handling of that key, or the special treatment of that key, as opposed to the general treatment of the rest of India?—I do not know that the Indian Empire Society in itself have. I have not heard them discuss that point specially, but I think that, if you agree with me that the Frontier does require very, very great caution, whatever you do down country with reference to the Police or Judiciary you should certainly not do it there.

12,528. I would agree entirely?—Whatever you do I do not think you could possibly do it there.

12,529. I would have hoped that the Indian Empire Society might have given us some help as to the treatment of this important part?—I think it is down in the Memorandum of the Indian Empire Society what their treatment is.

12,530. This points out the dangers of following the White Paper?—We have not been asked to put forward an alternative, or any special measures. If we were asked I have no doubt it would be quite easy to do.

Chairman.] I propose to adjourn now to five o'clock on Monday evening, and to ask these gentlemen to be good enough to return at five o'clock on Monday in order that their examination may continue.

(The Witnesses are directed to withdraw.)

Ordered, That this Committee be adjourned to Monday next at Five o'clock.

DIE LUNAE, 9^o OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Present:

Marquess of Salisbury.
Marquess of Linlithgow.
Marquess of Reading.
Earl of Derby.
Lord Middleton.
Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.
Lord Irwin.
Lord Snell.
Lord Rankeillour.
Lord Hutchison of Montrose.

Mr. Butler.
Sir Austen Chamberlain.
Mr. Cocks.
Sir Reginald Craddock.
Mr. Davidson.
Mr. Isaac Foot.
Mr. Morgan Jones.
Lord Eustace Percy.
Miss Pickford.

The following Indian Delegates were also present:—

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Sir Akbar Hydari.
Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
Sir Hubert Carr.
Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.
Sir Hari Singh Gour.
Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.
Sir Abdur Rahim.
Sir Phiroze Sethna.
Sardar Buta Singh.
Mr. Zafarulla Khan.

The MARQUESS of LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

9^o Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL, C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr. Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL are called in and further examined as follows

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.

12,531. My Lord Chairman, I desire to ask the witnesses a few questions. Sir George MacMunn, you have had a considerable experience in India, and, with that experience, I take it you are very familiar as to what is vitally necessary for the defence of the country?—(Sir George MacMunn.) Yes.

12,532. Do you consider a control of lines of communication to be vitally essential for the effective control of defence?—Most certainly.

12,533. Have you any idea as to how this control would be secured in view of the questions that were asked you by Lord Hardinge and Lord Winterton?—I have always thought that it is essential (anyway for many years to come, however the Government is run, whoever the Ministry are) that you should maintain in your railways a proportion of the domiciled, and certainly the Anglo-Indian community. They are above all local excitements, and that both on the railways and on the telegraphs it is essential as now, apart from any duty we owe to that community, as a mere matter of defence, that the Government should assure themselves of a sufficiency in the communication services of a community like that who are ready to your hand who are purely Indian, but they are absolutely reliable and free from the ordinary excitement which may at any moment move, we will say, the entirely Indianised railways and their employees, and that unreasoning strike-poison which, apart from politics even, sometimes seizes them. I also think that for the last 80 years the safety of the Indian travelling public has been in the hands of that particular community, and we owe it to them both to employ them as matters of gratitude, and also as part of the Indian population and also for reasons of defence. That has always been my view.

12,533a. Sir George, would you agree with me that the Indian Army is a Caste Army—based upon caste?—It is certainly an Army based on many various groups and classes, all of whom supplement each other, and often stimulate each other to more efficiency by contacts.

12,534. Are you aware that for that reason the Anglo-Indian and domiciled community cannot join the rank and file of the Army?—I do not think that is the reason. The difficulty so far as I know it has always been this first, that from status and cost of living they would expect to be paid rates approaching those of the Europeans. They do not live on the foods that the Indian agriculturist lives on, and therefore to use them in the Army as a rank and file has been more expensive than the pure Indian soldier while (I think in many ways wrongly) they have not been considered quite equal in value to the European soldier, and therefore purely on a matter of economies it has rather ruled them out. I myself think it has been one of the smaller tragedies of India that we have never in the last 60 or 70 years made use of them. I have often said so.

12,535. Would you be surprised if I told you that the Government of India and the Army Council there have stated that they could not enlist Anglo-Indians into the Indian Army for fear of interfering with the class homogeneity of the Army?—I do not believe it.

12,536. Well, that was the answer given me by the Government?—It has been misunderstood because there are plenty of ways of arranging it, if you thought it desirable, without hurting any feelings of any sort or kind.

12,537. Considering the closure to-day of other avenues of employment to this community and, considering the good stuff you have in it, would you, as a soldier of vast experience in India be in favour of having Anglo-Indian Units or a regiment or a Battery of artillery?—One of the difficulties is to replace your soldiers back in civil life. The Indian soldier goes back to his agriculture. The British soldier we do manage to absorb, but the ordinary Army service in the past, we have always held, would not give the Anglo-Indian a life career, and it would be difficult to absorb him into civil life. My answer to that has been that you might use them in the technical corps, signallers and sappers, where they would have a useful occupation for helping to be absorbed into civil life afterwards. That is how I have looked on the problem; and anyway, until perhaps days of considerable unemployment, we have always felt there would not be enough lads available perhaps to form so big a unit as a regiment.

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

I have always been in favour of using them in some of the lesser units, and I myself have always thought that it has been a tragedy that we have not been able to do so, and by a little harder thinking it might have been possible.

12,538. Colonel Bruce, do I understand you aright by your General Memorandum, No. 77, that your Society is of opinion that the White Paper has been given as a gesture to the political intelligentsia of India, and with no regard whatever to the masses?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) No. I would not go so far as that, but I think that perhaps too great stress, on the Frontier anyhow, has been put on the political element as against the interests of the masses.

12,539. I am not talking of the Frontier only, but the General Memorandum applies to the whole of India?—Quite.

12,540. Would your Society be in favour of the Reform pendulum being put back?—No, I would not go so far as to say that.

12,541. Would your Society object to it going forward?—Certainly not, provided that by going forward it would not injure the masses.

12,542. In other words, your society does not care whether it goes back, forward, or remains static so long as the reform clock is working properly; in other words, so long as the White Paper gives you sufficient control and adequate safeguards?—All I am putting forward is the welfare of the masses. Provided that the advance also advances the welfare of the masses, the further it goes the better, but it has to have that safeguard.

12,543. Agreeing with you that the masses should be the prime consideration is there any evidence of anything that you can quote in which the masses in India have collectively objected to the White Paper; any body; any Association?—(Mr Justice Le Rossignol.) The Hindu Party in the Punjab.

12,544. You mean the Hindu Maha Sabha?—I believe they are totally opposed to any further advance on the road of representative government.

12,545. You say in paragraph 9 of your General Memorandum No. 77, "the power so retained should not be a bare sufficiency but have an ample reserve". Do you feel or do you not feel that this ample reserve is vested in the special responsibilities of the Governor-General and the Governor as adumbrated in the White Paper?—(Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce.) I am afraid I did not quite catch that question.

12,546. In paragraph 9 of your General Memorandum you use these words, "should not be a bare necessity but have an ample reserve" regarding the safeguards and powers?—Yes.

12,547. Do you or do you not think that that power is given in the special responsibilities of the Governor-General and the Governor?—No.

12,548. You do not think so?—No.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.] I was wondering whether any useful purpose would be served by my asking questions about the details, because I find the views these gentlemen hold are so radically different from the Indian sentiment that there is no common ground between us. That is the feeling I have had on the matter, and I do not think I shall take up the time of the Committee by asking questions about the details. These gentlemen hold that it was a mistake to apply democratic principles to India, and that "the decline commenced from the day when British politicians endeavoured to endow India with democratic government", and that "the only reality is power"; and I know that these sentiments are so radically different from the Indian sentiments that I do not think I shall detain the Committee by asking any detailed questions.

Sir Phiroze Sethna.] I too do not propose to ask these witnesses any questions.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] In view of what Mr. Jayaker has said, I also feel, my Lord, that I should not ask these gentlemen any questions at all.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] I also do not desire to ask any questions, as there is absolutely no common ground between these gentlemen and myself.

Sardar Buta Singh.] I have no questions.

Mr. Zafarulla Khan.] My Lord Chairman, having been told by this batch of witnesses that, since the introduction of the Reforms, or some of them, the administration in India is less efficient, more corrupt and far more expensive, and also that wherever in British India Indians have been interested in self-government the results have been almost invariably disastrous; also that only the brilliant exceptions among Indians

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

achieve success in the higher ranks; also that the better class of Indian does not want democracy, and, finally, that the Indian does not want a vote, that he does not know what to do with it so he sells it, I think I would not be serving any useful purpose by putting any questions to this body of witnesses.

Mr. Y. Thombare.] I have no questions.

Sir Manubhan N. Mehta.] Nor have I.

Miss Pickford.

12,549. I should like to ask Mr. Lyall one question. Mr. Lyall in his replies to Sir Austen Chamberlain on Friday, Question No. 12,321 of the evidence, said that he considered that when the democratic system was introduced into India "it made it inevitable that the point of view put before the electorate should be anti-government". I should like to ask him whether he thinks that that was inevitable in view of the fact that there was an official irremovable Government and a popularly elected legislature which had no responsibility for that Government and no responsibility for forming another Government if they defeated the official government by their votes?—(Mr. Lyall.) I would not say that that was the reason of it. It has to be admitted that there was an alien government, but I remember very well an instance where there was a landholder and a lawyer of very high standing who, when I first knew him, was a most enthusiastic supporter of the Government, and I remember that the first time that I came in contact with him was when an assassination took place in one of the districts in Bihar, and I have never listened to a more patriotic speech or one that showed greater detestation of that Act than came from this gentleman. Thereafter I did everything in my power to try to get him to take an interest and to help him in all public matters and he did do so. After a very short time his attitude completely changed, and I said to him, "What is at the bottom of this"? He said: "Sir, your Government has done this. I am an ambitious man. I want a career. The only way that I can get it is to attack Government". That is a definite fact that was said to me and I think there is a very great deal of that. People have to do it because it is the only way in which they can bring themselves prominently into notice.

12,550. But under a system of responsibility would not those ambitions be directed towards the support of the Government rather than to attacking it?—I do not think that that would be the result as long as the main power rested with the British Government. That, of course, is the crux and the difficulty of the whole situation. If they had only their own Government, possibly that would be so, but at present to introduce the vote when there is the transition stage to be gone through seems to me, as I said in my evidence, to have inevitably brought forward a state of affairs under which there would be, and must be, continuous opposition.

12,551 Arising out of that, you say that action should be taken either to slow down or to change the steps that have been taken. How would this anti-government agitation be lessened by slowing down the pace of democratic reform?—There again is a point in regard to which there may be a very great deal of difference of opinion, but to my way of thinking a great deal of the increase that has taken place in agitation is due to the success that has attended the anti-government policy. The more that is given, the greater is the demand, and the difficulty is ever to prescribe the limit up to which you are prepared to go and to stick to it for the time being.

12,552. But, as you say that you think the steps should be changed, in what direction do you suggest that they should be changed?—That is an exceedingly difficult thing to lay down here. We are asked to advise in regard to the White Paper constitution. I personally very much deplore that my attitude should appear to be so uncompromising on the subject, but that attitude is only adopted because, in my belief, there is a great deal of antagonism between what is desired by the masses and what is desired by the intelligentsia, and it is very difficult indeed at all times to strike the happy mean in regard to the amount of concession that will be acceptable and the difficulty that very often an excess of concession brings about a further appetite in the matter of demands.

Miss Pickford.] I think, my Lord Chairman, as these witnesses said in answer to the Primate that they had

9^o October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General SIR GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

nothing to suggest, I will not ask anything further,

Sir Reginald Craddock.

12,553. I would like to ask Sir George MacMunn one or two questions. Sir George, although you were in the British Army and not in the Indian Army, you have always made a close study of Indian religions, modes of thought, and so on?—(Sir George MacMunn.) Yes, I have. I went out to India in 1888, and I have served a good deal with the Indian Army. The whole of India has a great attraction for me, and my forebears have been there. I have a great many Indian friends of all classes and races. I have taken some trouble to understand them, make friends with them, and learn the languages, for many, many years, so that I understand and am very, very fond of the country and many of the people I have met; they have served me.

12,554. And you very recently renewed your acquaintance with them, did you not?—I went out in the Spring. I happened to be the Colonel-Commandant of the Royal Artillery on duty and the War Office was glad that I should visit the Artillery in India. I was anxious to see and understand the movements of the last few years, so I went out to India and I toured almost the whole of India and went to almost every cantonment. I addressed all the Artillery men all over the place. I made a great many friends, cultivators, farmers, and traders, and I generally got out at the railway stations and chatted with everybody and had a talk with all and sundry, and I saw many old friends. I also attended a very big and unique gathering of Indian veteran Artillery-men at Amballa; the King gave me a special message to give to our Colonel-in-Chief, so I was thus able to renew a lot of my acquaintances, for what they were worth, with a great many people.

12,555. Are any of the impressions that you formed on that visit likely to be helpful to this Committee? If you can think of any, I should be glad if you would give them?—Perhaps I may give the impressions I gathered from talks I had with very many of them. As an officer who was really retired, one heard, perhaps, straighter things than one hears when one is in an official position. I thought the men of standing that I talked to were extraordinarily cognisant of the progress that had been made in the last few years; we had a great deal of talk about it. They had a horror of the British influence entirely going. I met north, south, east and west this idea—especially amongst the trading business classes:—“Whereas we want all the progress that you can give us, and we want to take more and more share in world affairs, we cannot believe that you are going to leave us altogether, that you are not going to help us in the Services by keeping sufficient numbers and that you are going to deprive yourselves of all power.” One old friend said to me: “I do not quite understand what the British are aiming at, after all the money and the years they have spent. Are they going to help us, or are they going to leave us?” That was the great impression that I had—“For God’s sake, do not leave us altogether. Help us; but stay in sufficient power to steady the machine.” I am putting their Indian talk into my own words. They said, “Stay here with sufficient control to steady the machine,” wherever we went. The tone in India at the present moment among the people is this: I saw a great deal of the Zamindars. The Zamindars, of course, as you know, are suffering from bad markets, the result of the great irrigation which has meant an immense production and few markets for the moment. Everyone realised that. I am sorry to say so, but by the Zamindars it seemed to be put down to the Congress. I did not encourage their view, but that is what people said to me. “Agitation and non-co-operation has thrown trade and business back. We want to hear no more of non-co-operation.” I thought the country was in an extraordinary helpful and reasonable frame of mind. I stayed with His Excellency at Delhi for a week and heard of the talk there. I also heard the talk of the junior Civil officers who were going to “hold the baby” for the next few years; they were very anxious (I have never found anybody who was not anxious) that if the mystical control of the Services—not necessarily all European, because I talked to Indians who were Civil Servants—if our power in the

9^o Octobris, 1933] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
 Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
 C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
 Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

districts is to disappear, there is nothing to take its place. Our power is psychological, and the districts were extraordinarily afraid of what would happen if anything is done to upset them. I am talking more of the Punjab and Central India certainly, but that was generally my impression. I thought India full of content and good will for the moment as regards everyday life, I was surprised. It may amuse you if I say that when I had finished I held a durbar at Amballa and talked for some time in Hindustani and Punjabi to these 1,200 veterans. They sent a message to His Majesty; they said: "Please tell His Majesty for us that we will clear Delhi out in a week for him if he likes." I have not had an opportunity of giving the King the message, but I am sure he would laugh. I think that is all that can be of use to you, Sir.

12,556. I would like to ask Mr. Waris Ameer Ali a question or two. Mr. Hayter gave evidence on the subject as to whether, supposing the whole of the White Paper scheme did not go through, for example, the disappointment caused by that degree of disturbance would be anything like as great as the disturbance throughout the country if the judicial system of ministration of law weakened in any way or their confidence in it was shaken. You, Mr. Waris Ameer Ali, are acquainted specially with the United Provinces so far as your service is concerned? Could you confirm anything that Mr. Hayter said with his experience of Bombay by your own experience of the United Provinces? What sort of actions and reactions are likely to take place in such circumstances?—(Mr. Waris Ameer Ali.) The point is, Sir Reginald, that once the twin supports of the social system have collapsed, there would be nothing to restore the social system. As long as the Judiciary, taking it in a wide sense, both the Judges of Assize (the Sessions Judges) and the Magistrates, and, on the other hand, the Police remain in being with undamaged morale, they can, humanly speaking, cope with any disorder. As I sincerely and with great regret believe (it is no pleasure for me to say it), and as I have said in my Memorandum, if with the present standard of civic conscience and of public duty, the Courts and the Police are handed over to the control of what is called a popular assembly which will be elected by 10 per cent. of the country people, I believe that they will rapidly cease to function within a very short period of time, and that the resulting discontent will culminate in one of these appalling crashes of which we have had a foretaste in one or two areas already. We have had a foretaste without fortunately much loss of life but with a great deal of crime and brutality in South Oudh in 1921 in the Agrarian Revolt. We have had a foretaste unfortunately in two Indian States where the population, which is generally very much more patient and amenable than in British India, have at last turned against what they conceive to be the extreme limit of taxation, maladministration, oppression—call it what you may. Once that goes, that affects the Indian Army. What is the peasant soldier going to do when his home is set in flames by his private enemy, or anything like that? How is he going to carry out his duty in aid of the civil power, shall we say at Peshawar when his home in the Meerut Division is on fire, or he thinks it is? That, to my mind, with all respect, is the crux of the thing. It is not a question of Briton or Indian; it is a question of the system which is to control the country and the Police, until the civic culture of India is sufficiently aroused to allow of the same degree of non-interference on the part of the elected minister and of the elected legislator as there is in these islands. With regard to the discontent among the intelligentsia, I should be very sorry if the majority of my intelligentsia friends in the United Provinces were to burst out in riot and fury at the omission or non-omission of certain terms in the White Paper now under reference by this Honourable Committee. I should think it unlikely myself.

12,557. You think there might be efforts made to disturb the peasant and make him dissatisfied?—Efforts made by whom?

12,558. By agitation?—Now, or when?

12,559. Under a future system such as one can imagine with the White Paper constitution in force?—Yes. He will not require efforts; he will do it of his own accord. I have seen him do it.

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HATTEY, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

12,560. Under the White Paper?—I have seen him do it before, long ago—10 years ago.

Sir Reginald Craddock.

12,561. That was in a time of a non-co-operation movement?—It was called a non-co-operation movement, but it actually took the form of agitators going round and preaching that the Kingdom of Heaven was rapidly approaching, to people who suffered in some cases under very real grievances from oppressive treatment on the part of some old-fashioned or oppressive landlords. They did not require much working up. Once the morale had gone in the district as Sir George has said the word was, "Come along; the rich shall be poor and the poor shall be rich. Mr. Gandhi is going to ascend the throne at Delhi on February 14th, and the English are going." That was because the battery in garrison had gone into camp.

12,562. Then you consider that under elected ministers responsible to a Legislative Council, itself responsible to the kind of electorate which is sketched, there will be more danger of demoralisation among the Police or the Courts than there is now?—Infinitely more, as I have stated in my memorandum. I do not see how you can stop it. It is not attributing any moral obliquity to the ministers or to the Legislature.

12,563. You would draw a distinction between an Indian as an Executive Councillor and an Indian who is a Minister who is at the mercy of the Legislative Council?—Every time, because the Executive Councillor has, during the past few years, in two Provinces, so far as I remember, had charge of the Police portfolio, to everybody's satisfaction. I am thinking of one in my own province. On the other hand, if he is responsible to what I may call without offence a very large number of backwoods members, imbued with the feudal habits of an earlier day, the thing will go, collapse—the police will down truncheons. I know what happens now.

12,564. In your experience, would it be likely that some powerful criminals who carry influence in these matters with the Minister would be able to shape the Police and interfere with their carrying out their strict duties?—Most definitely;

we have had it already; we have had attempts made already.

12,565. The information you are now giving us is entirely based upon your own experience, I suppose?—Yes

12,566. I would like to ask Colonel Bruce just one or two questions. Colonel Bruce, you spoke particularly and almost entirely in regard to the frontier, did you not?—(Colonel Bruce.) Yes.

12,567. Of which you have a very long and intimate acquaintance?—35 years myself; and my father, brothers and god-father, Sir Robert Sandeman.

12,568. But I did not quite understand what you meant by certain figures that you read out. As far as I know, you were talking then about Baluchistan and Waziristan and about the Sandeman system having been applied there, and that that was the cause of the reduction in crime as compared with what had taken place just before. Is that a correct account of your meaning?—Yes and no, Sir Reginald. The Sandeman system was in Baluchistan as you say. The Sandeman system, or nearly the Sandeman system, was introduced into Waziristan after 1919, but the figures I dealt with as you rightly say were about the Kohat district. I pointed out, however, that in 1921 there was a great state of lawlessness, due, a good deal, to the power of the headmen of the district having been weakened. Believing that, every effort was made to resuscitate and repair the power and influence of the tribal leaders. At first I may say that practically no assistance whatever either was given or had been given. The excuse given by many of them was that loyalty had not paid. I remember one or two of them saying that in two villages information had been given about some raiding gangs; that later, the man who gave that information had been killed and that they were still looking for redress, that is to say, their relations. I therefore attributed a good deal of the decrease in crime to a rebuilding and repairing of the tribal organisation, which was an absolute essential of the Sandeman system.

12,569. Then I should probably get correctly the general purport of your Memorandum, and of the evidence you have given by saying that what you are afraid of is that large movements in India like the original non-co-operation movement and the Civil Disobedience of 1930—that

9^o Octobris, 1933] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

these large movements over India generally are followed very soon by repercussions and reactions on the Frontier—on the tribes, and so forth?—Most certainly. Sir Reginald, and very very quickly indeed; in fact, the red shirt movement and various other movements, such as the City movement—were, I believe, very greatly due to repercussions from India proper.

12,570. You attribute the red shirt movement to that. I suppose you are very familiar with the red shirt movement?—Actually the red shirt leader belonged to the Charsadda sub-division of the Peshawar district. I was on two separate occasions in charge of the Charsadda sub-division as an Assistant Commissioner. I knew Abdul Ghaffar Khan's father. He was a very minor malik, or headman, of the Utmanzi village. Either during my own time, or certainly six months afterwards, his brother or certainly one of Bahran Khan's sons, was convicted under the jirga system, and imprisoned, I think, for 14 years. Abdul Ghaffar later rose to power, he was educated, I believe, in the Mission school in Peshawar, and failed to pass the matriculation, and later took up politics, or the Red shirt movement. I never was actually in Peshawar while it was still on, but its repercussions I saw while I was in Waziristan.

12,571. Is that movement still going on, do you know, or has it collapsed?—As far as I can hear it has more or less collapsed, but I have no doubt that it might very easily be resuscitated.

12,572. Do you trace a connection between the Red shirt movement and the Civil Disobedience movement of the Congress?—Yes and No. The Red shirt movement and the Congress fraternised, but I think probably that the Red shirts were using the Congress for their own ends, and Congress using them. I do not know that they were really very friendly at heart. That is what I mean.

Sir Reginald Craddock.] That is all I want to ask.

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,573. Colonel Bruce, generally speaking of the witnesses who surround you, you are all recently from India?—I left India on the 23rd March, 1931, and as to all the other officers, Sir George has told you he has just been recently in India, and the others fairly recently.

12,574. It would not be true to say that the information which you are able to give the Committee is out of date at all?—I should be very sorry if it was so.

12,575. You are aware that it has very often been said that gentlemen who have been distinguished in India, and who have left it for some time, ought not to be attended to?—I have certainly heard it.

12,576. But that would not apply to any of you gentlemen, would it?—I hope not.

12,577. And most of you have had the opportunity of knowing what the people of India think about these things, Mr. Hayter, you have been a Police Officer, have you not?—(Mr. Hayter.) Yes.

12,578 Mr. Lyall perhaps will kindly tell the Committee what his career was in India?—(Mr. Lyall.) I have been identified with District Administration practically from the first day I went to India. I only spent about six months in the Secretariat in one instance and I toured India in the Co-operative Credit Department. I have held the posts of Sub-Divisional Officer and District Officer, Commissioner, and, finally, a previous Indian member of the Secretary of State's Council, suggested my name to take over the charge of a very large property in Bengal in regard to which a loan of three-quarters of a million had been raised in the City of London.

12,579. That was outside the official rank?—That was outside my official career. That is to say, I saw the administration of a very big property indeed from a point of view which is practically never given to an Indian civilian to see.

Earl of Derby.

12,580. What year was that?—From 1923 to 1929.

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,581. So it may truly be said that you have seen closely the play of Indian public opinion, in the districts that you know, as much as any Englishman has?—I think that must be so, Sir. It is simply a question of the number of years and days you have been put in working with Indians day and night. They have been some of the happiest years of my life.

9^o Octobris, 1933] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
 Lieut.-General SIR GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
 C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
 Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

12,582. And you have had the opportunity of talking to others, of course?—I have.

12,583. I see you say in your separate Memorandum that you have had the opportunity of discussing with Indian officials who have recently returned from India the state of things?—Yes.

12,584. What view have the ones who have talked to you generally expressed to you?—The general view that they all give me is that if the administration and the promotion and the punishment of officers who have to give Empire Services (the Watchguard Services), are to be in the hands of people who are dependent upon the popular vote it makes a very very unsafe future for themselves.

12,585. I see you suggest there is a little distinction to be drawn between the Civil Servants who work in the districts and the Civil Servants who work in the Secretariat?—May I put it this way: Every Secretariat Officer has his lines cast in the big Presidency towns—headquarters—and day and night he is in touch with all the most educated opinion that there is in India. We who are in districts, on the other hand, are perhaps put in touch with the least educated opinion that there is in India, but I think what is at the back of the minds of all of us who are giving evidence is how are the interests of the most highly educated, and those who are least educated in the country, to be reconciled and safeguarded. We do not think that the past history of India gives a sufficient security, that there is to-day a sufficiently large number, not of educated Indians because there is a very large number of them, but educated Indians who know the point of view of the ryot and are prepared to go to the lengths that the Indian police and the Indian Civil Service have to go in order to safeguard their interests.

12,586. You have, of course, a great respect for the educated Indians as we all have?—I have indeed.

12,587. And you have a great respect for the Civil Servants, British and others, who work in the Secretariat?—I have indeed.

12,588. But you claim to have, as having seen the picture from the point of view of District Officers, and so forth, a closer acquaintance with the mass of the people, their interests and their feelings?—That is what I submit respectfully.

12,589. That is what you wanted to bring before the Committee?—Yes.

12,590. And that is in a measure true of all the witnesses whom we have the honour to see before us to-day?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) I agree most certainly, my Lord, that the districts are the absolute corner stone of the administration, and that the District Officer who knows his district well, knows their languages well and tours his district properly, is bound to know the views and interests of the Zamindars and to sympathise with them. It might be said that for touring a district the motor car should make it much easier for the District Officer to know the people of his district; that should be the case; unfortunately it is not.

12,591. In your view, Colonel Bruce, the great mass, or a very large number of these District Officers view with great apprehension the democratic developments in India?—I think certainly in the districts I know, if their genuine views were taken that would most certainly be the case. Many of them who have been on leave at home have held the same view, unfortunately.

12,592. That is your view?—Yes.

12,593. Mr. Lyall, that is your view?—(Mr. Lyall.) That is my view.

12,594. Mr. Hayter, that is your view?—(Mr. Hayter.) Certainly. It is my individual impression which I have gathered simply from my own acquaintances individually that as far as the Police are concerned and the crucial question of the transfer of Law and Order, there is more opposition to the idea and apprehensions in the minds of Indian officers than there is in the minds of British officers.

12,595. Mr. Justice Le Rossignol, that is your view, too?—(Mr. Justice Le Rossignol.) Yes, my Lord. I think I can add that that apprehension is not confined to the District Officers. I have found it existing also in the minds of Secretariat Officers.

12,596. So that, if anybody were to say to you that the whole, or the great mass, of Indian official opinion was in favour of the findings in the White Paper you would say that was not accurate?—

9^o Octobris, 1933] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

I would say it was untrue. (Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce.) So would I.

12,597 You would say a very large number, perhaps a majority, of the junior officers in the districts were apprehensive of the advance in the White Paper?—I should. (Mr. Lyall) I should.

Mr. R. A. Butler.] Can you remember an instance of a junior officer?

Marquess of Salisbury.] Would not it be fair to let me have my own examination?

Mr. R. A. Butler.] I do not wish to interrupt the noble Marquess, but I want to get a further qualification of this remark with regard to junior members of the Services. I would wish to make it clear that I would be the last person to wish the Services to be quoted in any way, but I have had opportunities recently of meeting many of the junior officers, and this was not what I found to be their opinion. I do not wish to go into detail or to quote any particular officer or to bring the Services into the picture, but I just wish to qualify that statement.

Marquess of Salisbury.] We are very much obliged to Mr. Butler for his opinion.

Mr. R. A. Butler.] I am very sorry to interrupt the noble Lord.

Marquess of Salisbury.] Not at all. I am quite sure Mr. Butler's opinion is of the greatest value, but I was really asking the opinion of these witnesses. In their view, that is so.

Chairman.

12,598. Mr. Lyall, was it the junior officers or the senior officers who in your experience shared your views in these matters?—I think, if the question relates to the majority, I am only competent to give a reply in regard to the senior officers.

Marquess of Salisbury

12,599. In regard to the senior officers?—Yes, because I left India in the last four years. I have spoken to a considerable number who have been back since then, but so far as the junior officers are concerned I am not prepared to make any statement as to the percentages who share one view or hold another, but I do know that both views are held.

12,600. I see, Mr. Lyall, you say that even many Indians you know are afraid that the proposals go rather too far?—Yes, my Lord; that is so.

12,601. So that this opinion of apprehension is not confined to European officials only?—I think not. I had a letter only a week ago from a barrister in Lucknow (it is not in my Province; it happened to be a man whom I had known very well) in which he expressed that opinion very strongly, that they could not understand why there was all this talk of reforms and reforms and reforms.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

12,602. And nothing done?—No. I think he suggested that, if it was desired, he, like Sir George MacMunn's friend, would do his best to get things put back where they were. He had nothing to get out of me.

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,603. The truth, of course, being that, like the inhabitants of every country (but it is especially true of India) the people really look to their own tranquillity and safety and the promotion of their interests. That is the think they care about most. Mr. Ameer Ali, I think you said in your evidence that the rural Indians want protection from oppression and violent criminals: that is the kind of thing they are really interested in?—(Mr. Waris Ameer Ali.) Most definitely, my Lord.

12,604. And if they think that by the strong administration of a well-ordered government they will get less oppression and less attacks upon their interests, they value that immensely?—Most definitely, as long as they respect the rule of law. Once that respect has gone, all manner of individual expectations come into play; the hope of loot; the hope of scoring off a neighbour; the hope of not paying rent—all manner of the baser thoughts of mankind: We have seen it before.

12,605. But we have to reckon with the best motives?—Taking it by and large, I know the peasantry of Oudh and the United Provinces very well; I have had a great many friends among them, and the great majority of them are only too thankful to be left in peace and left alone, and to have protection from venality or oppression and from violence and crime.

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General SIR GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

12,606. Colonel Bruce, might I just ask you a question or two about the Frontier? You say in the evidence you have submitted to us that there has been an impression produced on the Frontier lately of weakness in the British Government?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) Certainly, my Lord.

12,607. And, Sir George, you say that, too, do you?—(Lieut.-Colonel Sir George MacMunn.) Yes, Sir. I happened to be in Peshawar; I was staying with the General commanding and heard a great deal of the astounding collapse of authority which happened when this absurd and very dangerous Red Shirt flare went up. A police officer was practically hung by the people in his own district, and one of the most remarkable districts for the last 80 years went in the wildest, murderous disorder. 7,000 Khuttacks, for generations one of the best-behaved Frontier tribes, were told that the British were going and why should they not come in? In travelling all over Peshawar, I was astounded at the stories I heard both from the British officers and some of the Indian officials that I had known there. I never could have believed it. It just shows how any government in India, whoever it is, can never know what is not going suddenly to make a wild and hysterical flare in this mass of millions of conflicting interests. I would not believe the stories I was told from Peshawar.

12,608. There is a desire for strong government amongst the orderly people of the Frontier?—I think the whole of the Frontier wants a strong government absolutely because it is a country of immense thieving propensities and dacoities, robbery under arms and the robbing of the trader and the carrying off of his wives; these are the ordinary rules of the Frontier unfortunately, directly the strong hand is removed—a very pitiable story. (Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) Might I give one small story to corroborate what Sir George MacMunn said? Perhaps one of the most renowned robber tribes was the Mahsuds and Wazirs. The story is that when a Mahsud child is born, the mother places it through a hole in the wall saying over it: "May you rise to man's estate; may you be a thief and may the Almighty assist you in your unlawful occasions." That is to say, that there the thief and the Almighty are placed together. I am sorry for interrupting you, my Lord.

12,609. Not at all. I was very interested in a passage in your precis of evidence in which you call attention to the importance of the harmonious working of the political officers over the Frontier with the district officers within the Frontier. That is so, is it?—Yes, I think it is most important and difficult to obtain.

12,610. Therefore it would be very important that the attitude of the district officers within the Frontier should be directed to the same ends as those of the political officers outside the Frontier?—It is most important.

12,611. And if they were under different authorities, that might not happen?—Well, I think the best way I can show that, my Lord, is to point out why that co-operation is so essential.

12,612. By all means?—The tribes across the border, I think I might say without certainly much exaggeration, are dependent for the necessities of life on the districts. Therefore, the pressure that can be brought on to the tribes when they misbehave themselves, as they sometimes do, is from inside the districts. Do I make myself clear?

12,613. Yes, quite clear?—Therefore, though the political agent, that is the officer across the border, is in charge of those tribes, he may not know exactly how to bring that pressure to bear unless he himself has been a district officer?

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,614. Just to get clear what Colonel Bruce is speaking of when he speaks of the border, I understand it is not the Frontier but the border between the tribal area and India? You speak of the border—what border-line?—There I am talking of the trans-border on the one side of the border-line and the districts which are on this side of the border-line.

12,615. But what border-line?—The Frontier, that is to say, the North West Frontier Province and Baluchistan.

12,616. When you talk of tribes across the border, do you mean tribesmen in Afghanistan?—No.

Lord Irwin.

12,617. You mean the administrative border?—Yes; one is tribal and the other is administrative.

9^o Octobris, 1933] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
 Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
 C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
 Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] That is what I wanted to get clear.

Marquess of Salisbury.

12,618. But the point of your evidence really is that unless the authorities who control the district officers worked in harmony with the authorities who control the political officers across the border, it would be very unfortunate?—Most unfortunate. Might I give one single story in connection with that? I think it would drive home my point. Certain Kabul Khels, if I may give the name—Wazirs—had committed certain offences in the Kohat district. They were placed under blockade and the blockade was raised. Later on, the blockade was again put on and the tribesmen used to get their food through other sections in another district. Had the two district officers and the political agent not been working together, that fact would not have been known.

12,619. So if hereafter the district officers were under, let us say, a responsible minister, and the political officers across the border were under the Viceroy, and they did not work in harmony—then that would be a change for the worse in the administration of India?—Most certainly—dangerous.

12,620 That was the point. In the same way, Mr. Hayter, you told us that it is very important that the Police and the Army should work together?—(Mr. Hayter.) I think that is of most vital importance, perhaps because one cannot imagine that the Army by itself could ever operate in a country of the size of India without the auxiliary services which the Police can give it and have to give it in respect both of intelligence and keeping guard over points, lines of communication, and, similarly, that without that very close co-operation, the Police might be overwhelmed before military assistance could reach them if it were necessary. That is why I think I referred my memorandum to a paragraph in the Statutory Commission's Report, volume II, paragraph 213, in which it seemed to me that it was suggested that in order that local government should not be too free in asking for military assistance when there is trouble, that they should have to pay for it from the local government resources, and also that the Governor's requisition should be necessary before military forces could be set in motion. It seemed to me in a matter of that kind that the Police might well be overwhelmed or lose their position entirely and chaos might ensue before the Military were set in motion to assist them. It seemed to me that that kind of recommendation must arise from the thought that perhaps the Government of India might not wish to send Military in support of Police action by a local government under the changed constitution without a good deal of consideration. In that case it seems to me to raise a very dangerous issue, possibly it looks as if it means that there would not be sufficient confidence for the Army to move immediately in support of the Police when it is asked to do so as it does at present. At present there is confidence.

12,621. You are anticipating a state of things under which the Police would be under the authority of the responsible government, and the Army, of course, would be under the control of the Viceroy himself. That is what you are thinking of, is it not?—Yes. I of course recognise that they are constitutionally now under different authorities, the Police being under the Governor, and the Army under the Government of India, but for all that, as a matter of fact, everything works together as one body.

12,622. And of course it might do so in any state of things?—It might do so.

12,623. But there is a certain risk that it would not do so?—A certain fear that it would not do so, and that is very dangerous.

12,624. The conclusion to which you gentlemen have come is that, in view of the evidence which you have given so clearly to the Committee, we ought to proceed in these changes with the greatest caution. Is not that so, Colonel Bruce?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) Certainly, my Lord. I think all our views are: Go as far as will not jeopardise the welfare of the masses of the people, but be very careful not to go further.

12,625. It would not be correct to say that you suggested to the Committee that they should go back upon the present state of things?—Most certainly not.

12,626. Nor that they should not go forward to a certain extent?—As far as possible, provided that safeguards are made.

12,627. But they ought to go with great caution forward?—With very great caution.

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Lord Rankeillour.

12,628. Colonel Bruce, I think under the Government of India Act, 1919, both the North-West Frontier and Baluchistan were reserved as Chief Commissioners' Provinces?—Yes

12,629. Are they at present governed under the same procedure?—Not now, but up till lately.

12,630. Till when?—The North-West Frontier Province was last year, I think.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

12,631. 1931?—Yes.

Marquess of Reading.] But each of them was under a Chief Commissioner?

Lord Rankeillour.] I said they were reserved by the 1919 Act under the Chief Commissioner. I asked whether there was any difference now.

Lord Eustace Percy.

12,632. There has been no change in Baluchistan?—None.

Lord Rankeillour.] No, but there is a difference now between the two.

Marquess of Reading.

12,633. Baluchistan is under the Agent to the Governor-General?—He is called, as you know, both Agent to the Governor-General and Chief Commissioner.

12,634. Not constituted as the Chief Commissioner of the North West Frontier is?—He was also the Chief Commissioner and Agent to the Governor-General. It is reversed.

Lord Rankeillour.

12,635. Your attention was called last week to sections 57 and 58, about the Government of Baluchistan?—Yes.

12,636. Would you be satisfied if the same provisions as are in those sections were applied to the North West Frontier Province? Perhaps it is not a fair question to ask without notice?—It is a little hard, do you not think? I should like to go into it more 12,637. Or would you prefer the North West Frontier to remain as it now is? I throw it out; I do not press you on it?—Thank you very much.

12,638. Then I gathered from your Memorandum that you are afraid that in case of a war the military operations of the Indian Army might be to some extent jeopardised by I will not say the disloyalty, but the weakness of a provincial government. Is not that so?—Certainly it would be jeopardised.

12,639. That was the case with the Cape Government at the beginning of the South African War, if you happen to remember?—Yes.

12,640. And you are afraid the same sort of thing might happen in India?—Yes.

12,641. There is only one other question I want to ask. I gather you have not the same degree of objection to the handing over of the Irrigation and Forest Departments to a responsible provincial Government, as you have to the Police or Courts?—Not the same objection.

12,642. But you have an objection?—I think it has to be done very very slowly, because irrigation is so important to the welfare of the people, who are the supreme test.

12,643. And you would reserve for the time being at any rate the senior appointments in those Departments or in Irrigation to Members of the All-India Service?—Yes.

Lord Middleton.

12,644. Colonel Bruce, it has been suggested that there has been deterioration in the services in the last few years: Do you agree that that is the case?—I certainly agree that there has been deterioration.

12,645. How would a dishonest official operate to his own advantage, say, in the Revenue Department?—It is very simple in the Revenue, because under the Revenue, Irrigation and Crops and everything to do with the Zamindar comes specially under that service.

12,646. Have you ever known of such cases personally?—Yes. I certainly have known of them.

Marquess of Reading.

12,647. You say personally: does that mean from your own experience, from what you have seen yourself, or from what you have been told?—Both.

Lord Middleton.

12,648. If bribery and corruption are rampant what would be the effect in rural India upon the revenue, for instance: would it affect the revenue?—It would affect it enormously.

12,649. Then may I take it that if corruption is widespread, the revenue of

9^o October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

a Province might be very seriously diminished?—I should think most certainly.

12,650. And that might mean a budget deficit?—I did not quite catch that.

12,651. It might involve a deficit in the budget?—Certainly.

12,652 Then that would have to be dealt with, I presume, either by retrenchment in the Services or else by increased taxation?—I do not see any other remedy.

12,653 I would like to ask Mr. Lyall this: Would rural India be likely to accept increased taxation with equanimity?—(Mr. Lyall.) I think definitely not.

12,654. There might be serious consequences?—I do not think anybody appreciates increased taxation.

12,655. Does it amount to this, that if too rapid an advance is made in self-government, and if the Services deteriorate, the Government might have to face serious agrarian trouble?—I think that is most distinctly so. I do not think people can have any idea of the difficulty, even with things as they were, and with very great power in the hands of a District Officer, of his finding out where oppression is going on. I have been in districts where I have had complaints of 300 dacoities made before ever a charge was lodged with the thanna at all, and it only came to my notice personally because I was touring and I could not deal with them except under what are called the bad livelihood sections under which a man is convicted upon repute. It is an extraordinary provision of the law of India, but it is one of the most powerful. It put down extortion on a vast scale in that district. Then you would get agrarian trouble and everything that follows in its train.

12,656. It is fair to say that our success, such as we have had in rural India, has depended largely on lightness of taxation. Is not that so?—I would say very distinctly so.

12,657. Then would the agrarian trouble that might follow in certain circumstances be more serious to cope with than any possible disturbance through the disappointment of the intelligentsia if the provisions of the White Paper were very materially modified?—So far as my experience goes it would be, but

I have never had a really strong campaign of the intelligentsia in my districts because I have been very largely in districts which have not had much in the way of newspaper propaganda, but I could tell you of one instance where in one night (this was a very backward district indeed, not at all like the Frontier that Sir George referred to) 7,000 people turned out and tried to set on fire a police station for the sole reason that one man had been arrested, because that man had criminally restrained a woman from drawing water from a well. That man was arrested, taken to the thanna. It was the time of the Non-Co-operation Movement in 1921-22, and we should have had a repetition of the Chauri-Chauri incident where there were 27 police officers and constables lying mutilated and burnt, if it had not been that there was one officer in charge there, an inspector who during the War had been in the military, and with vast presence of mind he himself fired and controlled the crowd. They then went to the courts and the gaol, and there was extreme difficulty in dealing with that case. But that put down the whole of the trouble that was arising then, and that trouble was an attempt to set up a parallel set of Law Courts to the British Law Courts, I had instructed my officers that at the first opportunity that was to be brought to a head. This particular case was due to the fact that a man had sold a bullock and had received the money. A fortnight later the man who had got the bullock wanted to return it. There was not a hope in any of our British Courts because, after all, the deal was complete. He went to the other Courts and they brought social pressure to bear and it was in respect of that social pressure that the whole of the women of that household were not allowed to get water; and that is the kind of pressure that can be brought to bear. I would not have believed that 7,000 people could have turned up in one night like that. My only point in telling that to the Committee here is to bring home to the Committee the extraordinary inflammable material that there is in India.

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HATYER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,658. Am I right in understanding that the attempt in this case was to substitute an illegal court for the courts of the realm?—That is so.

12,659. It was the illegal court which was stirring up trouble, not the British court?—That is so; it was a set of courts that was brought into being by what I believe to have been the propaganda of the National Congress Party at that time.

Lord Middleton.

12,660. In view of what you have said, would you say that the Government is faced by difficulties and appears to be choosing the path which you think is most fraught with danger?—I should think so.

12,661. Colonel Bruce, would you agree with the statement that has been made, that interest in the red shirt movement exemplifies an awakening of political consciousness among the people?—(Lieut.-Colonel C. E. Bruce.) No, I would not agree.

12,662. Did the red shirt movement ever have any high ideals of a nationalist or patriotic nature?—I never had any actual dealings with the red shirts but as I have pointed out, I knew of them and their history intimately and I never heard or believed that it was in any way due to purely political movements.

12,663. In your opinion, would it have been easy to suppress the movement?—Most certainly, under any policy, such as in my Memorandum I call, and I think it is generally called, the Sandeman policy, because no such movement could have come into being under that policy. For it to have done so it would have meant the abrogation of the authority of the tribal leaders on which the Sandeman policy is to a very great extent based.

12,664. Who are the middlemen you refer to in your Memorandum?—I delayed, if I may say so, because it is rather difficult to define, and I have noted, as shortly as I possibly can, my views on that point. Under the close border system, the system in Peshawar as against the Sandeman system in Baluchistan, British political officers were forbidden or certainly discouraged from crossing the border. They had to depend very greatly, therefore, on middlemen or go-betweens, both in their dealings with and in their knowledge of the tribes. It can be imagined what opportunities this system, the close border system, gave the middlemen for intrigues and possibly amassing wealth, and it would have been marvellous if some had not succumbed to such a temptation. On the evils of that system the late Lord Lytton wrote: "I think the employment of middlemen should be discontinued. I believe the North West Frontier presents a spectacle unique in the world. At least, I know of no other spot where, after 25 years of peaceful occupation, a great civilized power has obtained so little influence over its semi-savage neighbours; and again there is some reason to fear that these persons are not altogether incapable of promoting and provoking difficulties on the frontier in the hope of increasing their own importance." That was the late Lord Lytton's description of the middlemen.

12,665. One last question. You refer to the Frontier Crimes Regulations. Have they been restored?—The Frontier Crimes Regulations were in force in both the North West Frontier Province and Baluchistan. In two districts in the North West Frontier Province they were—I do not know whether done away with is the wrong expression, but they were not in force. I am not quite certain whether they are now. I have not heard that they have again been put into force.

Mr. Isaac Foot.

12,666. Colonel Bruce, there was one correction that perhaps might be made, having regard to an answer that was made this afternoon. I understand that Mr. Lyall served up to 1929?—(Mr. Lyall.) I was in India up to 1929.

12,667. The service ended in 1926, but you continued your residence in India up to 1929?—Yes.

12,668. Which of the witnesses, Colonel Bruce, have had experience coincident with or subsequent to the Inquiry of the Statutory Commission? The Statutory Commission made its First Report on the 12th May, 1930. That is the date I have just looked up. You yourself served at that time, and subsequently?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) I left in 1931.

12,669. Yes, I know you yourself did. Did any other of the witnesses have ex-

9^o October, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General SIR GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HATYER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

perience coincident with or subsequent to the Inquiry of the Statutory Commission?—Mr. Waris Ameer Ali.

12,670. When was his retirement?—(Mr. Waris Ameer Ali.) In 1929, but the Statutory Commission was touring the country when I was there.

12,671. Yes, I know, and they made their report on the 12th May, 1930?—Yes.

12,672. It was some time before that that you retired from service in India?—About a year before.

12,673. You have made yourself acquainted with the concluding chapter of the first volume of the Statutory Commission's Report?—(Lieut. - Colonel Bruce.) It is some time ago.

12,674. I will remind you that it deals with the question of public opinion in India, a very valuable sub-chapter dealing with the pace of opinion, the pace of progress and the influence of the politicians of India upon the masses, and perhaps you will recall that there it says: "Although the politically minded Indians may be very few, their power over the masses is very great." You would agree with that?—Here I must speak only of that part of India, the Frontier, which I know. I should say that they were still very few in comparison.

12,675. Yes, but would you also agree that, although they are very few, their power is very great? I will quote the words, if I may, on page 405 at the end of the second paragraph: "The politically-minded in India are only a tiny minority, but they may be able to sway masses of men in the countryside," and they deal there with the power that they have in dealing with the masses. You would agree with that from your knowledge?—No, I would not agree with that as far as the Frontier is concerned.

12,676. Might I put the question to your colleagues as to whether they agree or disagree with the conclusions arrived at by the Inquiry?—(Mr. Waris Ameer Ali.) Hitherto not in the United Provinces. They have considerable influence. There are politicians and politicians. There are many men of substance and weight in the countryside who are politicians. There are many men of substance and weight in the towns who are politicians.

12,677. The questions can be answered. From your knowledge it is not so?—

Even as to the attitude of the educated peasant hitherto to the politician I will quote a Rajput Sergeant Major, a man who had served in the War and could read and write English to a certain extent. That was in 1928. He said: "It is all very fine the Government making us put slips of paper in one of these new-fangled letter boxes, but all it means is that someone comes round once in three years and is very polite to me because he wants my vote, and then I do not see him again."

12,678. Then your answer is that from your knowledge the politically-minded in India have very little influence on the masses?—I would not say "very little influence" but I do not think they have so much as is claimed in some quarters.

12,679. And you would disagree with such a conclusion as was arrived at by the Statutory Commission?—May I look at the Statutory Commission's Report?

12,680. They deal with the matter on page 405?—I have not seen it for a long time.

12,681. It is dealt with generally. Perhaps it would be rather long for you to express an opinion on because it deals from page 404 with public opinion in India, and shows that very considerable changes in recent years have had their effect even upon the village life and the ordinary masses of India. Perhaps you do not recall forming an opinion upon that chapter, do you?—Yes. All I can tell you is that, for my part, I have never seen a vernacular newspaper in any village, except on very rare occasions in the hands of a schoolmaster where there was a village school.

12,682. May I put the question to Mr. Lyall. Mr. Lyall, could you answer that question which I have tried to put very simply for my sake rather than for yours? Would you tell us what your experience is as to the influence of the politically-minded in India and their power over the masses?—(Mr. Lyall.) In my view a much greater weight is attached to it than it really carries. It is very difficult in many of the districts in which I have been to say what it is exactly that has swayed public opinion, but I am confident that a very great deal of it is due to superstition and various tales that are spread, various promises that are put out, and the effect of that, I think, depends very largely upon the

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

method in which a corrective is applied to them by the District Officers when it comes out.

12,683. Whatever may be the influence of the politically-minded in India upon the masses, how would you counteract that influence. What machinery have we, or what methods can be adopted for counteracting the influence of the politically-minded amongst their own people?—Except when it becomes contrary to the law——

12,684. I am not speaking about contrary to the law. I am speaking generally of the politically-minded?—it is difficult to do so, but I was going to add that a very great deal of the effects of that influence is to bring people who listen to it against the law. I do not think myself that I should be very afraid of the effect of the propaganda of the politically-minded only on the people, because there is such a vast (as I believe it) amount of counter opinion which can be advanced by people who hold a contrary view.

12,685. Very well. Will you tell me how that can be exercised? Assuming there is the influence brought to bear by the politically-minded upon the masses how can that be counteracted?—Government counter propaganda might be done. It is a thing that I myself personally may probably be the worst exponent of in the world. On the other hand, I have not had difficulty in finding a very large body of opinion in the masses which was prepared to resist that. Really it comes to a question of where is the propaganda of the politically-minded going to lead? The only possibility of doing that is to reason with these people and let them know where it is going to lead to.

12,686. Who will do the reasoning?—(Mr. Hayter.) Might I supplement the answer?

12,687. Yes, please?—I would like to point out that it is very often the case that—you may say “agitators”, without any evil sense——

12,688. A very honourable term in English history?—derive a very great deal of their influence (they have in past years) through transgressing the law, and what is called in colloquial language “getting away with it”, and I think if sufficient care was taken that no agitator ever transgressed the law and got away with it, you would find that their influence very much decreased, but they have so frequently defied authority that their influence has very much increased.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

12,689. Your quarrel then is with the administration of law and order, say, within the last ten years. You think it has been weak and inefficient?—I think it has been affected very much by the necessity of exercising what is called conciliation.

12,690. The reservation of it then has not been a sufficient security in your view?—I would put it this way, Sir, that the trend of policy has been such that even reservation was not sufficient.

Mr. Isaac Foot.

12,691. You say in your Memorandum, paragraph 12: “Some may talk of taking the ‘risk’ of granting India a full-fledged democratic constitution, but we would ask them to remember that the risk is not theirs.” Would you agree that the risk would fall very heavily upon the existing European business interests in India? I will repeat my question, if it is not clear. Would you agree that the risk will fall primarily, or, at least, very heavily upon the existing European business interests in India?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) Yes, I should think it would; I had not much to do with it.

12,692. Are you aware that the European Association had its representatives here on the 4th July and gave evidence before the Committee? I asked the indulgence of the Committee in putting one question and getting an answer, and I would like you to give me your opinion upon that. The question was: “Supposing that there is no reform embodying provincial autonomy and responsibility with safeguards, do you think that there would be a dangerous expression of opinion in India.” The reply given by Mr. James, a reply which was confirmed by his colleagues, was in these terms—at least the question was a little larger than that, but perhaps I should carry it on. “Supposing the White Paper proposals were wiped out and there was no substantial advance as is suggested by the White Paper proposals, have you formed any opinion as to what is likely to be the reaction in India. The reply was: “Yes, I think that I can say this fairly, that the

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Association would view with grave misgivings the position which would arise in India if reasonable expectations of political advance were now disappointed by the rejection of the White Paper proposals. This would, in our mind, lead to serious consequences, and it would be almost impossible, in our view, to re-establish that co-operation between British Indian leaders which has characterised the Round Table Conferences and has brought the whole question to its present stage. The view of the Association generally is that it is not practicable to go back behind the present Government of India Act. It is not possible to stand still, and the White Paper proposals, subject to such modifications as we are asking the Joint Committee to consider, do offer a reasonable and cautious advance towards the ideal of a federated India. I am glad to make that perfectly clear." That was the opinion of the men who, if there is the landslide that you apprehend, stand to take the main share of the risk, is it not? At present they have come over from India where their businesses are in existence, and they say that unless we make a substantial advance roughly upon the lines of the White Paper proposals, there will be chaos and disaster. Have you formed any opinion upon that?—That is, I think, an urban opinion on which there have been various answers. I personally have not had very much to do with European businesses on the Frontier.

12,693. But why should you say it is only urban, Colonel Bruce?—I think that is admitted.

12,694. Would not the Chairman of the Assam Branch of the European Association have other than an urban experience?—Assam is fairly far from Peshawar.

12,695. I quite agree, but Assam, I suppose, is mainly an agricultural community, is it not? I cannot recall any great industrial centres in Assam as compared with the others?—(Mr. Lyall.) It is a very large tea-planting area.

12,696. But when it is said that the European Association only spoke for an urban population, would it not be true to say that the representatives of the Assam European Association would have, supposedly, a considerable rural experience?—Undoubtedly.

12,697. Has that opinion been considered by the Indian Empire Society?—

(Mr. Hayter.) Might I answer that we have a very large number of the members of the Society who are tea-planters in Assam, and we believe (I do not know whether I am right in saying it—I have no definite warranty for saying it) that we have the support in our opinions of a tremendous majority of the whole of the planters in Assam.

12,698. There were two representatives of Assam who came before us?—I am aware of that, but that I believe to be the case. (Mr. Lyall.) Might I amplify that to a certain extent, if I can? I was in Calcutta for a long time identified with one of the large business firms there, and I know that there is a very great cleavage of opinion there just as there is in the services. I know that the views which you have expressed as having been put before you are held by a certain number, but there is a directly contrary view held by others. So far as Assam is concerned, I think what Mr. Hayter has said is also the fact that there is a certain number who will hold one opinion and another; but I would like to add this, that there has been a very great influence brought to bear by the Congress party in regard to business of large British firms both in Bombay and in Calcutta, very much less in Calcutta than in Bombay, and that influence has not in my opinion been a creditable one; it has been really blackmail and oppression.

12,699. Do I understand, Mr. Lyall, that when we have put before us this answer to an express question, which is regarded as being important at the time, and the answer was given by Mr. James and others, in which they said it was not only their answer, but the considered reply of their Association, we must modify that answer because of the improper pressure brought to bear upon them?—I think that is carrying my answer to a quite different conclusion.

Mr. Foot.] I do not want to do you an injustice.

Chairman.

12,700. Would you repeat it?—That is taking a conclusion from my answer which it does not warrant. So far as this expression of opinion goes in regard to the European Association, I still stand by what I said just now, that there is a very strong contrary view held among business men in Calcutta, and I believe

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

there has been a certain amount of repudiation in the Calcutta Press in regard to the attitude taken by that body. So far as Bombay is concerned, I cannot talk except from having had very great friends who were in business there and who told me of what went on, especially about 1928 and 1929; the pressure that was brought to bear upon them was almost unbelievable, and it did affect their businesses, so much so that many British firms had to accept a position which they resented most bitterly. I think there again it all resolves itself into a question of administration in Bombay. Again forgive me; I am talking of general repute in India, and at that time (I never had personal dealings there) the feeling was that in the administration in Bombay this kind of pressure was tolerated in a way that it ought never to have been. Here, again, gentlemen, we are getting into very, very difficult and controversial subjects, but there was a period in Calcutta when I was there—I should say it was somewhere about 1926 or 1927 when there was no sort of law or order in the whole district of Howrah, on the other side from Calcutta. You had on the one side a strong administration due to the Commissioner of Police; on the other side you had complete chaos, because there was no administration at all.

Marquess of Reading.

12,701. I do not quite follow the distinction. On the one side you say because of the Commissioner of Police, and on the other because of what?—Complete absence of any administration. The district of Howrah there at the time was under an Indian Collector, but I would associate with him for weakness, even more so, a European judge.

Sir Hubert Carr.] Perhaps I might throw a little light upon that for the Committee, with reference to the alleged opinions of the European Association. I was its President for five years, and know the care with which the Association collects the opinions from all its Branches throughout India. At the present moment, as Mr. Lyall has said, there must always be differences of opinion, but those differences of opinion have been so far reduced that the Associated Chambers of Commerce (their standing, I think, is undisputed) have agreed with the European Association in the Memorandum submitted to the Committee, and have endorsed the evidence which has been put before them by those witnesses, so that, although there are differences of opinion, it may I think fairly be taken that they are less to-day than they have been in the past. I only wish to mention that, Mr. Foot.

Mr. Foot.

12,702. There is one further question I will put to Colonel Bruce. Has your Society taken any attitude towards the proposals for a federal system of Government in India? Are you generally in favour of a federal system of Government?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) It has been gone into, and I believe the recommendations were: the States first, and then the Provinces should come in—federation.

12,703. I do not follow the answer. The proposal, of course, is, following upon what took place at the beginning of the Round Table Conference, that the federal system should be set up if arrangements can be made, bringing in the States and the Provinces?—Yes.

12,704. Upon that main proposal have you or your Society come to any conclusion or any opinion? Are you in favour of that proposal?—As I have not myself had much to do with it on the Frontier, I should like Mr. Lyall to answer that question. (Mr. Lyall.) I think perhaps I can best answer the question by quoting what Sir John Simon once said to us at our I.C.S. Dinner. He said that this matter of federation was perhaps the one subject on which he was more entitled to give an opinion than anybody else. He said he had never known of any instance of successful federation being started as a whole from the very beginning. I believe that view has been expressed by him several times.

12,705. Would you mind saying what the time was when Sir John expressed that opinion?—That was in 1929, just after his Report had been issued. He said that all successful federations were the result of concessions, of mutual give and take, among bodies which had been, each of them, independent, and who worked together by common sacrifice and conciliation to arrive at a federated system. I think our view would be that it would be very much wiser to build up each of these separate units first, and give them time to function, and then

9^o October, 1933] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

see how this federation was to be done. Sir John Simon I believe laid down that his views had been changed owing to the fact that the States which theretofore had never been consulted had now given their consent. That is a point in regard to which it is difficult for us as a Society to have any up-to-date knowledge; but we believe there is not the consensus of opinion about the States that there was when the suggestion was first mooted.

12,706. Has the Society taken into consideration the statement of the Princes at the Round Table Conference that a system of federation is only possible upon the basis of Indian self-government?—I do not think I remember that statement, and I do not think we have taken it into consideration at all.

12,707. Of course, I am only paraphrasing, but if you will refer to what was said by all the spokesman at the time, the Nawab of Bhopal, the Maharaja of Bikaner, statements which were repeated by Sir John Simon in the last debate in the House of Commons, you will see that that was the condition of a federated system, that there should be a change involving responsibility at the Centre. Upon that primary question has your Society formed any opinion?—We have no definite guarantee or knowledge that the Princes still adhere to that opinion.

12,708. Have you any reason to think that they have departed from it?—No; far from it; but I do not think that their views in regard to federation to-day are what they were before.

12,709. Do you know of anything that has changed that principle, that federation must have as a condition precedent responsibility at the Centre in India? Do you know of any expression of opinion that has varied that?—I would say that that responsibility at the Centre can only be arrived at by what I have touched on, and that is mutual arrangement and concession among the various units, because it is going to be a very very difficult thing to reconcile the conflicting claims of British India and the Princes.

12,710. I agree that it is most difficult and I do not want to put a question to you about it. The question was whether your Society had formed any opinion upon it. We cannot form an opinion I say without those data. Our opinion is that we ought to get the units working first, before you can arrive at a method of federating them.

12,711. There is only one other question I want to put. I apologise for keeping the Committee so long, but you put a question, my Lord Chairman, at the beginning bearing upon the first part of the Memorandum. "The decline commenced from the day when British politicians endeavoured to endow India with a democratic government." You remember, my Lord Chairman, putting that question, and Colonel Bruce gave the answer that he referred to something like 14 or 15 years ago; that you had in mind the changes that were then effected as being the day when that commenced. I would like to ask Mr. Le Rossignol to answer that question. Are we to assume from your evidence, Mr. Le Rossignol, that you would put that date very much further back than 14 or 15 years; that you have thought that the application of a democratic system to India was wrong from its inception?—(Mr. Le Rossignol.) Yes. I would put it back to the date of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms.

12,712. You would not put it back to Warren Hastings?—No.

12,713. Mr. Le Rossignol is very much better acquainted with the history than I am?—I should doubt that, Sir.

12,714. But is it not clear that from the time of Warren Hastings those who have been our responsible governors and the exponents of British opinion in India have always said that it is the purpose of our association with India to train them in the management of their own affairs?—Yes.

12,715. And that when that day came it would be the proudest day in our history?—Yes. The question is: Has that day arrived?

Mr. Foot.] You would think that the day that is spoken of here would go back very far.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Could Mr. Foot or the witness refer me to the passage in some declaration of Warren Hastings that they have in mind?

Mr. Foot.] The passage about the greatest day, of course, was from Macaulay.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] That, surely, is very different from Warren Hastings.

9^o Octobris, 1933.] Lieut.-Colonel C. E. BRUCE, C.S.I., C.I.E., C.B.E., [Continued.
Lieut.-General Sir GEORGE MACMUNN, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., D.S.O., Mr. F. F. LYALL,
C.I.E., Mr. WARIS AMEER ALI, I.C.S., Mr. O. C. G. HAYTER, and Hon. Mr.
Justice W. A. LE ROSSIGNOL.

Mr. Foot.

12,716. I think it will be found, upon enquiry, that Warren Hastings did himself express the hope that that would be established, and I will be able to get my friend, if I may later on, the express quotation. May I ask Mr. Le Rossignol what is the date on which he thinks we went wrong—how far back? "The decline commenced from the day when British politicians endeavoured to endow India with a democratic government." How far back would you put that day, Mr. Le Rossignol?—The date of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms. (Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) May I say one thing about the 14 or 15 years that have been mentioned? I was asked at what date I came into contact with the decline, and that was my answer to that.

Chairman.] I think you misunderstood the question a little, Colonel Bruce. That was not my intention.

Marquess of Reading.

12,717. Just one question to clear up one matter as it is too late to go into detail at all, and that is with reference to Mr. Waris Ameer Ali's evidence. I think it was you Mr. Ameer Ali who spoke of crime and your fear of crime increasing in India; consequently the safety of Indians and others being endangered in India if the White Paper scheme was carried out. That was what you said, was it not?—(Mr. Waris Ameer Ali.) Yes.

12,718. What I wanted to know from you was, is that because you think the elected Minister would have pressure brought to bear upon him which would cause him to interfere with the promotion, the discipline, the transfer, and so on, of the Police? Is that not part of your reason?—Yes, I think there is very great risk of it, if not, almost a moral certainty.

Lord Eustace Percy.

12,719. I only want to clear up a misunderstanding in this connection. In answer to Lord Middleton's questions about the deterioration of the Services in recent years you did not mean, Colonel Bruce, did you, to imply that there was to-day widespread corruption in the administrative services in the Provinces?—(Lieut.-Colonel Bruce.) It has certainly increased.

12,720. But in what administrative services—particularly in those that have been transferred to the control of Indian administrators?—I would not like to give an opinion exactly upon that.

Sir Akbar Hydari.] Was not the question about responsibility in the Centre and federation and the Indian States this, that whether the Indian States or the Indian Princes enter the federation or not, there may be a certain amount of doubt as to how many Provinces will enter the federation; but all the Indian Princes, without exception, have made it a condition precedent that they cannot agree to enter any federation unless the Federal Government has got responsibility in the Centre?

Mr. Foot.] That is the question, which has been put by Sir Akbar much better than I put it.

Chairman.] We are greatly obliged to you gentlemen for having appeared before us, for having prepared the memoranda, and for having given your evidence. Thank you very much.

(The witnesses are directed to withdraw.)

Ordered, That the Committee be adjourned to to-morrow at half-past Ten o'clock.

DIE MARTIS, 10° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

DIE JOVIS, 12° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Evidence given on these days by the Secretary of State for India and his advisers is printed for convenience in Volume II^B.

DIE MARTIS, 17° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Present:

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.
Lord Chancellor.
Marquess of Salisbury.
Marquess of Zetland.
Marquess of Linlithgow.
Marquess of Reading.
Earl of Derby.
Earl of Lytton.
Earl of Peel.
Lord Middleton.
Lord Ker (Marquess of Lothian).
Lord Hardinge of Penhurst.
Lord Irwin.
Lord Snell.
Lord Rankeillour

Lord Hutchison of Montrose.
Major Attlee.
Mr. Butler.
Major Cadogan.
Sir Austen Chamberlain.
Mr. Cocks.
Sir Reginald Craddock.
Mr. Davidson.
Mr. Isaac Foot.
Sir Samuel Hoare.
Mr. Morgan Jones.
Lord Eustace Percy.
Miss Pickford.
Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.
Earl Winterton.

The following Indian Delegates were also present:—

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Sir Akbar Hydari.
Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

Mr Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
Sir Hubert Carr.
Lt.-Col. Sir H. Gidney.
Sir Hari Singh Gour
Mr. M. R. Jayaker.
Mr. N. M. Joshi.

Sir Abdur Rahim
Sir Phiroze Sethna.
Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.
Sardar Buta Singh.
Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

The MARQUESS OF LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

Evidence given on this day by the Secretary of State for India and his advisers is printed for convenience in Volume II^B.

17^o Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued.]

Miss ELEANOR F. RATHBONE (a Member of the House of Commons) is further examined as follows:

Chairman.

13,549. Miss Rathbone, you were good enough to give us evidence on the 27th June, when it was not found possible to complete your examination, and you have kindly returned to-day. You speak again to Memorandum No. 9 and you have provided us with a Supplementary Memorandum which is numbered 84?—Yes, it is as follows

MEMORANDUM 84 (SUPPLEMENTARY) BY ELEANOR F. RATHBONE.

Note.—These Notes merely supplement my previous Memorandum and are mainly replies to points subsequently made by Witnesses, Members or Delegates. The paragraphs are numbered to follow on from the main Memorandum.

PARLIAMENT'S LAST OPPORTUNITY.

60. It is clear from the Secretary of State's evidence that this is probably the very last opportunity for the British Parliament and people to exercise any effective influence on the future of Indian women. In No. 20 page 817 of the Minutes, he said:—

"I would have thought the wiser course was for us to insert in the Constitution Act a definite period during which no franchise alterations could take place at all. I think that is necessary in the interests of stability. I think after that period those questions are essentially questions for the Federal Government and for the Federal Legislature, and I would rather leave the subsequent period in their hands."

Later he enlarged on this view, referring to franchise as "very much a matter of internal politics."

61. In the subsequent discussion, the very different view taken by the Simon Commission was pointed out. Its Report stated that "This is a matter as to which the British Parliament cannot remain indifferent. If a new Act of Parliament is to confer powers of self-government on the provincial councils, it should at the same time provide means for securing that these councils will in time rest on wider popular support than they can at present, so that the transferred powers may not remain in the hands of an oligarchy." (Vol. II, p. 94, par. 10.)

The Commission had therefore proposed that after 15 years a second Franchise Commission should be appointed to review the progress made and if necessary devise means of accelerating it. The Secretary of State suggested that the two views might be reconciled by retaining the power for Parliament to legislate "if it is satisfied that the Federal legislatures and the provincial legislatures are not carrying out their duties fairly." But it was pointed out that a vague provision of this kind was very different from the definite proposal of the Simon Commission, which recognised the danger that the privileged classes might not be willing to share their powers with the unprivileged, unless there was express provision that they should do so.

62. I suggest that the above danger concerns not only the peasantry of India, but more especially its women. The White Paper proposals condemn them to a severely restricted franchise, on grounds of administrative convenience which admittedly refer mainly to the first election. (See par. 78.) Yet Parliament is asked to divest itself of all responsibility for seeing that the restrictions are removed when the temporary need for them is over. This attitude seems inconsistent with the view widely held in Parliament concerning Great Britain's "trusteeship for the dumb millions" of India. It is true that in most countries extensions of the franchise have been won by the unprivileged classes from the privileged. But this has usually come about, if not by revolution, through long, embittered and sometimes unconstitutional agitation. Is it desirable to expose the women of India to the necessity of treading the same painful path?

63. If however, the above proposal of the Secretary of State is carried out, then that greatly strengthens the considerations set out in the latter part of my main Memorandum. This briefly summarises the cruel conditions under which Indian women suffer and the failure of British rule to remedy these.

17^o Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued.]

We are now asked to hand over these women to new and untried forms of Government, without so much as providing them either with the constitutional means of remedying their own conditions, or even with any security for attaining in the future to the possession of these means. It should be remembered that in future it will not presumably be possible, even for questions to be asked in Parliament concerning the matters of health, education, civil status, etc., which so vitally concern women.

FRANCHISE FOR THE FEDERAL ASSEMBLY

64. I submit respectfully that the case for the White Paper proposals is at its very weakest concerning the Federal franchise. Here no witness has disclosed "administrative difficulties" to justify the retention of the admittedly inadequate ratio of less than one woman to twenty men. On the contrary, Sir John Kerr testified that—

"If the Federal electorate is increased from 8 to 36 millions, very little addition to the present staff would be necessary to manage the Federal elections in addition to the Provincial elections on that scale." (No. 20, p. 799; q. 7074; see also quotation in my para. 74.)

It can scarcely then be urged that serious difficulty would be caused by adding to the Federal roll the two or three million additional voters necessary to make up the women's ratio to the one woman to 4½ men recommended by the Lothian Committee.

65. The two alternative means of making the additions are indicated in my main Memorandum, p. 4, para. 7. They are briefly:—(i) If the literacy test is accepted for Provincial elections, to add the women registered under that test; (ii) If the literacy test is not accepted, to add the wife voters from the Provincial registers, who will themselves be wives of Federal electors.

Both proposals involve nothing more than the transfer in bulk of an already prepared list.

Other possible alternatives are (iii) to make the property qualification for women Federal voters the same as that for Provincial electors; and (iv) to add the wives of Council of State voters. But the last would add an almost negligible number.

PROVINCIAL FRANCHISE.

66. Discussions concerning this have circled round the "administrative difficulties" alleged as reasons (a) for requiring qualified wives to apply for their votes, (b) for substituting various forms of school certificates for the simple literacy test.

As these are the chief means by which the ratio of women voters recommended by the Lothian Committee has been whittled down in the White Paper, they require careful consideration.

Condition that wives must apply for their Votes.

67. The official evidence (No. 20) indicates that the reasons for exacting this condition were three.—(i) to cut down numbers; (ii) to save the labour and expense of sending round officers to enrol the wives; (iii) to avoid the "trouble" anticipated in certain Provinces where village husbands might resent enquiries about wives' names, etc.

68. As to (i) the cutting down of numbers, I suggest that the Committee is on the horns of a dilemma.—If the application condition only reduces the number of registered wives from a potential four million to an actual three million, the saving (as Lord Lothian pointed out, No. 20, p. 829) is not worth it. An additional million spaced over all Provinces cannot possibly overstrain the administration. But if the cut is expected to be larger (and that is far more likely), then it would be disingenuous to continue to represent the White Paper proposals as giving women a voting strength of one-seventh of the electorate (5 millions out of 35).

69. In trying to exhibit the numbers offered to the best advantage several members suggested (No. 20, pp 829-31) that the number of wives who applied to vote might be taken as nearly equivalent to those who actually voted. In Sir Austen Chamberlain's words: "If the voter has applied to be put on the list, you may be pretty certain that he is going to use his vote." I suggest that this is very far from true. Elsewhere (No 21, p. 841), the Secretary of State promised that application by the wife should be made as easy as possible. If that promise is carried out, there should be four alternative methods of application:—

- (i) by the wife personally;
- (ii) by the wife by letter,
- (iii) by the husband personally on her behalf;
- (iv) by the husband by letter.

It does not at all follow that, because a woman manages to apply for her vote

17^o October, 1933.]

[Continued.]

by any of these methods any time within several weeks or months, she will be able when polling day comes to walk five, seven, or ten miles (estimated by Sir John Kerr as common walking distances between villages and the nearest polling station—No. 20, p. 798) to record her vote. How many British village women would do it? A score of valid excuses—a sick child, the family cooking, care of livestock, weather—may prevent. The leakage as between proportion of application and actual voting will be great. If only the first of the above methods is permitted, the proportion of applicants will be much fewer and the leakage when it comes to actual voting still considerable.

70. As to (ii) labour and cost of enrolment, this admittedly would only be great at the first General Election. Does it justify condemning women, perhaps permanently, to inadequate representation? Could it not be met (a) by extending the preparatory period, even at the cost of postponing the first Election for a few weeks or months? Or (b) by employing additional staff? Would the necessary quality of worker be either expensive or difficult to obtain? One has gathered that skilled clerical labour—even of graduates—is both superabundant and ill-paid. Or (c) by employing the paid or unpaid help of educated women already engaged in educational, health and other social work. (See evidence of Indian women witnesses, Sub-Committee C2, p. 49, q. 243.)

71. (iii) The last mentioned suggestion might also help to avoid the "trouble" feared to arise in certain districts from the questioning of husbands as to wives' names, etc. This fear was supported by the experiment in the United Provinces described by Sir Malcolm Hailey, of making up a test electoral roll in certain selected areas. (No. 21, p. 839.) Certain notes and queries arise as to the value of this test.—(a) "In the towns there was no great difficulty," only in the villages. (b) The Agents employed were of "village accountant type"—a type stated elsewhere to receive an average salary of £1 a month (Sub-Committee C2, p. 55, q. 316). Would a higher type of worker have obtained better results? (c) Did these Agents explain the reason for the enquiry; that the Government contemplated conferring a privilege on these households? Did they prepare the ground by enlisting the sympathy of Village Headmen, who could explain the matter beforehand? (d) Could the difficulty about names be met by simply ascertaining that there was an adult wife and inscribing her as "wife of A.B."? (e) Does the difficulty exist in all Provinces and communities? Several Delegates thought not. The Secretary of State spoke of warnings received "from one or two Provinces." (No. 20, p. 830.) (f) Has a similar difficulty been encountered in Census enquiries?

72. Finally, is it conceivable that if Governments (Central and Provincial) really desired to overcome this and similar difficulties, they could not, in the two years or so that must elapse before the first General Election, so utilise the machinery of education, press, co-operative and other welfare agencies, as to familiarise and prepare the minds of the people for their new responsibilities?

73. I suggest, however, that the best proposal for reconciling the application condition with the need for an adequate and intelligent women's vote is that set out in par. 16 (i), page 10, of my main Memorandum, namely, that the wives of all propertied voters should be registered on application, instead of only (as proposed) the wives of men qualified to vote for the Centre. This would enfranchise the more politically awakened wives of a large class, instead of all wives of the more well-to-do (as in the Lothian proposal). It also meets the desire of many witnesses, including representatives of Indian women, for a more democratic franchise. The sole objection to the proposal seems to be that, if applications were more numerous than many of the most experienced observers predict, it might give women several ounces more than the pound of flesh held out to them by the Lothian proposals. If this objection is considered grave, methods of reducing the numbers are indicated on the same page 10, (ii) and (iii), of my main Memorandum.

But the evidence of official witnesses indicates that the size of the electorate to be tackled on polling day is a less formidable consideration than simplicity in preparing the registers.

74. As to this, some very reassuring evidence was offered by Sir John Kerr. In No. 20 of Minutes, p. 799, question 7074, he said:—

"Under the Lothian scheme the Provincial electorate will number 36,000,000. The Lothian Committee was satisfied that the staff existed which could manage an electorate of that size The sort of staff which handles these electorates is a staff which can be increased without any serious difficulty. There will be a certain amount of expense, of course, but no serious expense and no serious difficulty in having an enlarged staff to meet an increased electorate as time goes on."

17° Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued.]

But the electorate under the White Paper proposals is estimated not as 36 but 35 millions, and that only on the highly improbable assumption that out of 4 million wives qualified to apply for registration, 3 million actually do so.

In Minutes No. 20, pp. 835-6, Sir John Kerr gave calculations showing that police protection could be provided for 25 million voters voting on the same day. But a registered electorate of 35 millions certainly would not yield at first an actual vote of 25 millions and on p. 834 the same witness explained that elections for general seats and communal seats usually were, and for several reasons should be, held on different days.

The question here arises (not, I think, discussed in the evidence) as to whether all the elections for general seats need be held on the same day. If there is any doubt as to the adequacy of the available staff, especially the more skilled portions of it, cannot the difficulty be met by spreading the elections over several days, either within the same constituency, or by polling different constituencies on different days, so as to permit transfer of staff? Judged by British experience, a spread-over election has some advantages in tending to correct an excessive "swing of the pendulum."

75. As to the possible difficulty, suggested by some Members, of preventing personation of women voters, Sir John Kerr (No. 20, p. 801) was emphatic that "with regard to the village women, the sort of women who will get the vote for the Provincial elections, there will in most cases be very little practical difficulty in identifying them." (q. 7095.)

Where the woman is veiled,

"you will have to take the husband's word for it, in most cases; but the neighbours, and people of that kind, would be well aware of any attempt to defraud the public. . . . They do not do things in a hurry at these places, it is all done in a very leisurely sort of fashion and there is plenty of time for people to look around." (q. 7096, 7099.)

As to the women in the towns, the witness admitted that women clerks and polling officers could usually be obtained where necessary, and that even veiled women would not hesitate to unveil before these.

Concerning personation and bribery, does not British history show that the best cure for corrupt practices is to make the electorate so numerous that bribery is too expensive and personation not worth the risk?

76. As to whether an illiterate voter, man or woman, would be able to understand the coloured box system and so be able to vote for the candidate of his choice, Sir John Kerr was equally emphatic.—

"There is no difficulty at all in getting the illiterate voters to understand a mechanical method of putting their papers into a box of a particular colour." The plan "has been in force in parts of India for a great many years in municipal elections." (pp. 800-801, q. 7082, 7088.)

He had heard the evidence of District Officers who had themselves worked the scheme and had himself seen it in operation at Municipal elections and later as Deputy Chairman of the Franchise Committee. He found that.—

"it was one of the few things that people were practically unanimous about—the certain success of this coloured box system of polling." (No. 20, p. 812, q. 7181.)

Educational qualification for voters.

77. I suggest that the evidence discloses an exceedingly weak case for the proposal to substitute (except in Madras) various forms of College- or School-certificates for the simple literacy test recommended for women voters by the Lothian Committee.

The arguments for the literacy test are set out in my main Memorandum, par. 7 (ii) (Federal) and pars. 11-12 (General). They are confirmed by the evidence of all the women witnesses, of Sir Philip Hartog, former Chairman of the Education Committee of the Simon Commission, and by opinions expressed by several delegates. All these are convinced that the White Paper proposal will exclude many of the best-educated and most active women workers since they can produce no school certificates. It was admitted by the Secretary of State that the number of women voters it will bring in is almost negligible, "much less than 100,000" in all India. (No. 20, p. 829, q. 7307.)

17^o Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued.]

The reasons for the proposal were explained by the Secretary of State and Sir John Kerr in No. 21, pp. 842-4. They were broadly two:—

(i) Theoretic objections urged in various Provinces against a differential education qualification for women. Yet the theoretic objections of these Provinces to sex differentiation has not prevented them from acting in the spirit described by Sir Philip Hartog as "spend all you reasonably can on the boys and, if there is something over, spend it on the girls," so that in fact only one-seventh of the educational expenditure (and that a decreasing proportion) has been spent on girls (Sub-Committee C 1, p. 9). And it is in deference to the views of the Provinces that the condition of application is being imposed on wives but not on husbands.

(ii) "Administrative objections." The only indication as to the nature of these is that given by the Secretary of State and Sir John Kerr. (No. 21, pp. 842-3.) We gather that owing to the very varying and imperfect way in which school records, especially for girls, are kept in different Provinces, each Province has been allowed to select as educational test the form of school certificate of which registers were most easily available—some Matriculation or School-leaving certificate, others* Upper Primary, etc. But if fairness to electors and uniformity as between Provinces is any object, this seems rather an argument for than against accepting, at least for girls, the literacy test, proposed in the Lothian Report (p. 86), to be applied as follows.—

"The names of all adult women who are recorded as literate in authoritative educational records should be placed on the electoral roll; it would be necessary for other women to satisfy the officer in charge of the roll that they can read and write either by a personal application or by the production of a certificate from an authority appointed by the local Government such as a magistrate or school-teacher, or an inspectress of schools. It may be assumed that only those who are interested and politically conscious will apply."

Under this plan only women whose names were on no school record and who could not easily procure a certificate from one of the authorities named would have to make personal application. Sir Philip Hartog suggested the method of doing this:—

"The test is perfectly easy. I rely not only upon my own opinion, but by questioning some of the most experienced district officers of the past who are now here. It is perfectly easy for a village officer, controlled by a tahsildar as suggested, to dictate a passage to a would-be elector and to listen to that elector read it." (Sub-Committee C1, p. 11.)

The numbers of personal applicants would not be large and it seems questionable whether this form of personal test would not be an easier way of settling disputed claims than one which requires, in every case, references to perhaps imperfectly kept school or college registers. It is at least significant that Madras, with a larger proportion of literates than any other Province, is willing to accept the literacy test for both sexes, an enormously larger proposition than its application to women only. Note also that in Bombay and the Punjab, simple literacy has been accepted as a voting qualification for the depressed classes—in the Punjab only if necessary to make up their voting strength to the desired ratio of the population (White Paper, pp. 105, 108). If administratively practicable for them, why not for women?

Note also the strong opinion expressed by Sir A. P. Patro that in Bombay and Central Provinces, the records exist in such a form that Upper Primary standard might easily have been chosen instead of the much higher certificate demanded by the White Paper. (No. 21, p. 843.)

78. It is significant that all the official witnesses—the Secretary of State, Sir Malcolm Hailey, Sir John Kerr—repeatedly stressed the importance of avoiding administrative difficulties at the first election. For example, the Secretary of State spoke of warnings from Provincial Governments "against straining the machine too severely at the first election" (No. 21, p. 845, q. 7448) and Sir Malcolm Hailey said, concerning objec-

17^o Octobrs, 1933.]

[Continued.]

tions to enrolling wives without application, "I think I am right in saying that our objections apply really to the initial procedure of the First Roll." (No. 21, p. 840, q. 7411) Yet no provision is made for lowering the educational test at any subsequent election and with regard to the condition that educational and wife voters must apply to be registered, this is to hold for the first two elections and thereafter unless the local Government concerned chooses to modify it. (White Paper, p. 94.)

79. Concerning the proposal put forward on behalf of the All-India Women's Conference, the Women's Indian Association and the National Council of Women in India, namely, that as a substitute for the wife's vote, adult franchise might be granted in all urban areas.—As this proposal has the support of this important section of Indian women's opinion, I merely sum up its apparent advantages and disadvantages.—

The main advantages of the proposal are (a) that it would secure a larger proportion of working-class women than the White Paper proposal; (b) that urban women are generally held to be more progressive and politically awakened than rural women and that their further education in politics and social reform through propaganda, canvassing, etc., will be easier, (c) that as many technically urban areas in fact include rural villages, the interests of village women would not go unrepresented; (d) that urban distances being shorter, the voters could more easily get to the poll; (e) that women officers to assist in registration and polling are more easily available in towns, (f) that as the number of potential women voters covered by the proposal is (as estimated by those responsible for it) about five or six million, the condition of application involves less danger of unduly cutting down the numbers than in the case of the potential four million wife voters covered by the White Paper proposal.

The main disadvantages of the proposal are (a) that it would concentrate over three-fifths of the woman's vote in less than 10 per cent. of the constituencies, (b) that the rural women, who would thus be left with almost negligible means of influencing the representatives of their constituencies, are already the most neglected in matters of education and hygiene.

It might be possible to reconcile these conflicting considerations and secure a system combining substantial numbers with administrative simplicity, if the Committee can see its way to combining (a) adult franchise on application in all urban areas, or in large towns only, with (b) the White Paper proposals as they stand for women's franchise in other areas. This would not, as some have suggested, upset the balance of power as between town and rural voters. The balance depends on the number of elected representatives assigned to each. A mere increase in the number of voters in some constituencies is not an injustice to others, provided that all interests within these others are adequately represented. (This proposal is alternative to that contained in my para. 73.)

80. The nature of the responsibility which the Committee will incur if they fail to secure for women really adequate means of self-protection must, I think, have been brought home to them by the evidence given on behalf of bodies representing strictly Orthodox opinion among Hindus and Muslims respectively. The three representatives of the All-India Varnashram Swarajya Sangha, who claim to represent 95 per cent. of Hindus—a claim energetically disputed by several delegates—agreed in demanding a provision in the new Constitution—

"enacting that the future Indian legislatures (whether Federal or Provincial) shall be debarred from passing any measure affecting the personal law or the religious faith, practice, institutions and usages, of any community." (No. 27, p. 1329.)

All three alluded repeatedly to legislation regulating Age of Consent, Age of Marriage, or Widow remarriage as outstanding instances of the kind of legislation they objected to.

As to suttee, Mr. Acharaya explained that, provided the act was voluntary "it is considered the highest ideal of humanity." He would regard a wife who "chooses to die along with her husband and cannot live without him" as "part of divinity." (No. 27, p. 1335.) Evidently he would include as inadmissible legislation prohibiting the practice, provided it was voluntary, as indeed suttees were always asserted to be by their promoters in the days when the practice was common. (See Edward Thompson's book on "Suttee.")

The Committee may regard the risk here indicated as illusory. A year ago

17^o October, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M P.

[Continued.]

they might have thought equally illusory the risk that Germany would revert to the darkest practices of the Middle Ages. All of us in all countries have had a rude lesson in the danger of under-estimating reactionary influences.

Speaking on behalf of the All-India Muslim League, Mr Yusuf Ali opposed any differential voting qualifications for women. Reminded that this objection was inconsistent with his demand for weightage for Muslim minorities, he replied that "there can be no difference of interests and no conflict of interests between men and women. Therefore, the analogy which you want to apply does not apply to the case of men and women. Women have never suffered on account of men in the matter of legislation anywhere in India." (No. 26, p. 1259, q. 9362.)

As a comment on this astonishing assertion, I refer the Committee to the summary of women's social conditions in my Memorandum, p. 11 onwards.

81. The vote may be an inadequate protection against such evils. But it is better than none and its efficacy strengthens with the habit of its use. At least there can be no justification in withholding it from women while granting it to their possible oppressors. Its value would be immensely enhanced if women were given a really strong position in the administration, so that they could exercise effective oversight over the whole field of women's needs.

Without these safeguards, I see no hope for Indian women and for those of us who have their cause at heart except in a prolonged campaign of agitation—extensive, intensive, expensive—calling the attention of the world to their wrongs. Such an agitation would not help the good repute either of British or of Indian administration.

13,550. Do you wish at this stage to add anything to your Supplementary Memorandum?—Yes, my Lord Chairman. As my Memorandum is very detailed, and in some parts technical, I should much like, if the Committee would permit me, to sum up in a very few words what seem to me to be the main considerations. I will not delay the Committee more than three or four minutes. May I do that?

13,551. If you please?—First, the proposals of the White Paper do not only disappoint the hopes of Indian women and disappoint reasonable expectations founded on repeated declarations by the Government and the bodies it has appointed to deal with the constitutional issue, and those bodies have again and again acknowledged the inadequacy of the present ratio of voting strength allotted to women—yet in fact the present proposals would not improve that ratio admittedly for the Federal Assembly, and if the fears expressed by many of the most experienced administrators are verified, owing to the application condition and the change in the educational qualification, the ratio of voting strength for the Provincial Legislature might be little or no better than at present. Secondly, although the whittling down of the voting ratio has admittedly been made in response to administrative difficulties which pertain wholly or mainly to the first election, there is no provision and no security for the increase of the ratio in subsequent elections. Thirdly, I would ask the Committee to consider whether in giving so much consideration to these administrative difficulties they have equally considered the much more permanent and serious administrative difficulties that might arise from disappointed and embittered women who had reason to think that Parliament had let them down and that they had no adequate constitutional means of remedying the grievances from which they suffer. Did the suffrage agitation in this country lead to no administrative difficulties in those pre-war years when you could not approach the House of Commons except through a cordon of police because of the fear of a suffragette outbreak, and when the Home Office was struggling to break hunger strikes of hundreds of women through the "Cat and Mouse Act"? I speak as an old suffragist who never took part in those kinds of tactics, but I know that even we constitutional suffragists went through years of effort and became so obsessed with this question of the franchise that we could think of no other, and although we now feel it was well worth it, yet we feel that we should not have to go through that struggle again. Do you want the same kind of thing to happen in India and is there no danger of that? Have not the Indian women played a considerable part in the Congress agitation? Through these proposals you hope to take away all reasonable excuse for that agitation

17^o Octobris, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

by giving ample scope to Indian men to work in constitutional ways for the reforms that they desire. Is it wise to leave Indian women without equally ample means, and do the White Paper proposals give them some means of constitutional work? I would also ask the Committee to remember that this is not only a question of civic rights; that Indian women suffer under grave social evils which affect their health, their education, their personal liberties, their very lives. I have summarised those in the latter half of my main Memorandum mainly in quotations from official documents. Do you want Indian women to feel there, too, that with regard to that type of reform they have no adequate constitutional means to secure their wishes and that they should be driven back on mass meetings and processions and perhaps fastings and mock funerals? The British in India have not succeeded in doing much to remedy those social conditions. Are we satisfied that Indian administrators will be able to do much better in view of all the religious and social difficulties unless they have the constant co-operation inside the administration and inside the Constitution of their own countrywomen? Lastly, if the proposal of the Secretary of State before the Committee is carried out, that future extensions of the franchise shall be left entirely to Indian Legislatures after a specified period during which no change can be made, this is absolutely the last opportunity that the British Parliament will ever have of influencing the future of Indian women. If we have not succeeded in doing much to improve their conditions, is it not a very grave responsibility to hand the task over to their new rulers without at least putting in the hands of the women the means of self-protection? That is all I want to say, my Lord Chairman.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I would prefer, my Lord, if you would allow me not to begin the examination of Miss Rathbone. I may not require to put any questions, but, at any rate, I would prefer to postpone any that I may have for the moment.

Mr. Butler

13,552. You are aware of the passage on page 94 of the White Paper which draws attention to the practical difficulties to do with the registration of certain qualifications. Are you aware that there is this phrase also, "His Majesty's Government are very anxious to secure that the proportion of women electors should be adequate and further consideration of the above arrangements may be necessary". You are aware that that has been purposely included in the White Paper in order to show the sympathy with which the Government regard the aspirations of the women of India?—Yes; I did not forget that passage and it is upon that that I base my hopes that this Committee will make substantial improvements in the Proposals.

13,553. I only mention it because from some of the evidence which has been given so ably by yourself and others on behalf of the women of India there does not appear to have been a full realisation of the anxieties of His Majesty's Government on this score?—I do not think we have ignored or doubted that anxiety. Our fear is that it may be overborne by considerations which do not appear to us to be as potent as the needs we put forward.

Mr. Butler.] Might I reserve any detailed questions until later?

Chairman.] Please.

Mr. Cocks.

13,554. Miss Rathbone, I do not want to take you over the case for the extension of the suffrage to women which was so fully thrashed out in Sub-Committee C, but I take it you would agree that the awakening of women in India and the representation of women in the future Constitution of India is almost the most important thing that can be done and that it is one of the ways by which the communal differences in future might be solved. A good many Members, I think I can say, are in sympathy with that, but have been impressed by some of the administrative difficulties. Although you deal with that in your supplementary memorandum I would like to ask you this: Do you think on the whole that the administrative difficulties have been exaggerated?—Yes. I do think the administrative difficulties have been exaggerated in the sense that I do not feel that any case has been shown why they should not be got over in the various ways indicated in my two memoranda. Were you alluding to the communal difficulties? I think you mentioned communal difficulties?

13,555. Yes?—I have not touched on the communal question in my memoranda because I rather understood that that was regarded as a chose jugée. I am aware that the Indian women themselves have a very strong objection to the communal electorates, and I think that the fact that the women's organisations have been so successful, as they unquestionably have, in working together on non-communal lines should make them a very valuable factor in the future in overcoming communal difficulties.

17^o October, 1933.]

MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

13,556. What I was referring to was the evidence given by some of the Indian witnesses to Sub-Committee C, in which they said that on the whole the women, especially the younger generation of women, were not affected by communal differences at all, and did not believe in them?—I think that is unquestionably so about the organised women. I do not suppose it would be claimed to be true of all women. Naturally, those within their communities may share the feelings of their communities—I mean those who do not work through outside organisations.

13,557. Your view, Miss Rathbone, is this, is it not, that whatever the administrative difficulties may be, they should be overcome in view of the extreme importance of giving a large extension of the suffrage to Indian women?—Yes; and I think the Government itself, or the White Paper itself, practically admits the case and admits that these administrative difficulties are only temporary. The question is why, if they are only temporary, they are to be allowed to affect the whole future of Indian women with no security even for the removal of the restrictions in future.

13,558. Just a couple of questions on the question of figures. Regarding the franchise in the Provinces, the Franchise Committee recommended certain proposals which would mean that about 6,600,000 women should have the franchise?—Yes.

13,559. Under the White Paper, it has been suggested by witnesses that that would be reduced to 3,000,000—less than half. Do you agree with that?—It is quite impossible to say because it is impossible to say what the effect of the condition of application will be, and the raising of the educational qualifications, but if the forecast that only one woman in three of those who get the wife's vote will actually apply for that vote is carried out—and I find that many administrators consider that quite an optimistic forecast—then the White Paper calculates that they are giving women one-seventh of the voting strength. If only one-third of the largest body of women within that number exercise it, it is clear it pulls it down to something like one in 20, the present proportion. Then the change in the education qualifications: The Lothian Proposals proposed to bulk out the representatives of women by giving them a lower educational qualification, mere literacy. By sweeping that away and giving them the same qualification as men, and that a very high qualification, instead of improving the ratio of women's voting strength, it is admitted by the Lothian Report that the result would be actually to make the ratio less because the proportion of educated women is much smaller than the proportion of educated men. It is only upon considerations like that that one can base any estimate of what the ultimate effect will be.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

13,560. Do you mean it will go below one in 20?—It seems to me it may very well go below one in 20. I do not see how anyone can be certain until you know the effect of those two changes, the change from literacy to a much higher qualification and the application condition.

Mr. Cocks.

13,561. From what you have just said, you think the fair suggestion of what the proportion will be is one in 20?—I think it is the fair suggestion that the proportion may very well be no better than one in 20, and it may be less, and it is admitted in the White Paper itself that it will be no more than one in 20, for the Federal Assembly.

13,562. The Prime Minister has stated that a proportion of one in 20 would be quite unsatisfactory?—Yes. That is why these Proposals are a bitter disappointment.

13,563. The Franchise Committee recommended a proposal which would give the votes to 1,500,000 for the Federal Assembly. Under the White Paper it has been suggested by witnesses that there will be only some 300,000 given the franchise for the Federal Assembly. Do you agree with that?—I forget for the moment the exact figures but the Lothian Committee counted on bulking out the women's vote through the addition to the Federal roll of the women who are qualified under the literacy test. I have always had doubts myself whether that would have given women an adequate proportion, whether it would have raised women to the proportion of one woman to four and a-half men, as estimated by the Lothian Report but now the White Paper by sweeping away the literacy test has swept away the only Proposal which even pretends to improve the women's voting ratio. They are thrown back on nothing but their own property qualification plus this very high educational test which, by general admission, I think, tends to lower the women's proportion rather than to raise it.

17^o October, 1933]

MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M P

[Continued.]

13,564. You think from that that a figure of 300,000 is a very reasonable estimate of the women's votes?—I forget for the moment the absolute figure, so I would rather stick to the ratio. I think that less than one woman to twenty men is a very reasonable estimate.

13,565. Do you know how many adult women there are in India? Would it be about 63,000,000 adult women?—It is more than that.

Marquess of Lothian

13,566. There are 63,000,000 adult women in India?—Is that it?

Mr. Cocks.

13,567. My suggestion to you is that under the White Paper Proposals only 300,000 will have a vote for the Federal Assembly out of the 63,000,000. Would you think that that was a fair suggestion?—As I said, I have been thinking in ratios rather than numbers. Therefore, I cannot for the moment estimate the number, but I see no reason to suppose that the White Paper's own estimate there is wrong. The White Paper itself admits that it is not improving the voting ratio.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

13,568. May I ask one or two questions. In your supplementary memorandum, Miss Rathbone, you are stating that there is no provision for future development in the matter of women's franchise. May I ask you whether you would approve of a proposal that 10 years after the passing of the new Government of India Act or Constitution Act the number of voters, both men and women, should be automatically increased to a certain proportion?—Yes. I should like to see provision made for an automatic increase to a certain proportion. Alternatively, I should like to see the Simon Proposals carried out, that there should be a fresh Commission to go into the matter, but I see no reason why there should not be provision for an automatic increase.

13,569. In any case, you would like some provision for future development?—

13,570. I want to ask you one more question, Miss Rathbone, and that is about adult suffrage in urban areas. You state in your Supplementary Memorandum, No. 84, Paragraph 79, certain disadvantages of the proposal to give adult suffrage to women in urban areas?—Yes.

13,571. One of the disadvantages you mention is "that it would concentrate over three-fifths of the women's vote in less than 10 per cent. of the Constituencies, that the rural women, who would thus be left with almost negligible means of influencing the representatives of their constituencies, are already the most neglected in matters of education and hygiene." Why do you consider those to be a disadvantage to women when the adult suffrage proposed will be in addition to the proposals already made in the White Paper?—I do not think they would be a disadvantage if they are in addition to the Proposals made in the White Paper and I propose in the very following paragraph of my supplementary memorandum, if I might refer you to it, "It might be possible to reconcile these conflicting considerations and secure a system combining substantial numbers with administrative simplicity, if the Committee can see its way to combining (a) adult franchise on application in all urban areas, or in large towns only, with (b) the White Paper Proposals as they stand for women's franchise in other areas." I think that would make a vote that would be both substantial and administratively very simple. It meets nearly all the difficulties that the Government have put up—the administrative difficulties which they have put up—and it grants the wish of a large body of Indian women for adult franchise in urban areas. What I point out the disadvantage of, is adult franchise in urban areas if it were put as a substitute for the wife's vote.

13,572. I do not think anybody proposed that?—I think the suggestion was put forward rather that it might be as a substitute for the wife's vote and that is what I suggest would not be fair for the rural women.

13,573. You mean substitute the wife's vote, not all the other proposals?—I understood the proposal to give adult franchise in the urban areas had been put forward as a substitute for giving the wife's vote all over India, and it is with regard to that idea that I suggest it would have the grave disadvantage that it would leave the rural women

17^o October, 1933.] Miss ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

almost unrepresented because all that would be left to the rural women would be the votes of those who vote on their own property qualification and the votes of those who vote on this proposed very high educational qualification, therefore, the rural women would be left with very little votes at all.

13,574. In any case, you do not consider that the adult suffrage for women would be any disadvantage if this proposal is in addition to the proposals in the White Paper?—No, I wanted to emphasise that fact because I have noticed repeatedly throughout the evidence of several people that the suggestion has been made that if you give an additional advantage to the towns, that is a disadvantage to the rural districts. I want to suggest that if the advantage given to the towns is on top of what is given to the rural districts, it does not hurt the rural districts at all because you do not upset the balance between town and country merely by increasing the number of voters in each town constituency. The balance between town and country depends on the number of elected representatives, not upon the number of voters.

13,575. May I ask why you make your proposal in the fourth sub-paragraph of paragraph 79, namely, adult franchise on application in all urban areas. How do you bring in the question of application?—There again I was simply trying to meet the case of the White Paper. The White Paper demands application because it will get rid of administrative difficulties. I say: "Very well then; we object to application." We do not think it is as necessary as you say it is (and I have given reasons for thinking so), but if you insist on application, then all I say is at least give us back the numbers in another way, and I have suggested various ways of doing that. This fourth paragraph of my main paragraph 79 suggests one of the ways in which you might accept application and get the numbers back which application has taken away.

13,576. Am I right in believing that you yourself do not feel that there will be administrative difficulties in urban areas if adult suffrage is given to women?—No, I think the application difficulty is at its minimum in the urban areas, but it has been suggested that the numbers would be too great if you had adult suffrage without application.

13,577. From your study of the problem, do you think administrative difficulties will be very large?—They will certainly be very much less than in the rural areas, and I think it is admitted that application is not necessary in the rural areas. When I put "on application in the urban areas" there, it was merely to meet the desire of the Government or to meet the objection that giving adult suffrage in the urban areas would result in a very large vote. One of the ways to cut it down is to make it on application, so I suggested we might be willing to accept application coupled with adult suffrage in the urban areas and coupled with the White Paper proposals in the non-urban areas. May I supplement my remarks on that by saying that I myself prefer the proposal set forth in paragraph 73 of my main memorandum which I think is a more satisfactory way in some respects of conceding application and yet getting back large numbers, and that is that if the Government must have application, then let them give the wife's vote to the wives of all provincial voters. There again, you would get a much larger number of potential voters than under the White Paper proposals, but, coupled with the condition of application, you would reduce them to a number which I hope the Committee might consider manageable. These two proposals in paragraph 73 of my main memorandum and in paragraph 79 of my supplementary memorandum, are two alternative proposals which I do hope the Committee would consider very seriously, because I do think that they do provide a really practical way of conceding everything that the administrators have pleaded and would help in meeting the administrative difficulties and yet getting a substantial women's vote.

Mr. Butler.

13,578. May I ask what number would be involved in the suggestion under paragraph 73 of your supplementary memorandum "the wives of all propertied voters should be registered on application." Can you give me the approximate number?—I made certain inquiries and I was given to understand that the number of potential wife voters might be something like 14,000,000, but, if you take the assumption that only one in three exercises the right to apply, then you cut that down to 4½ million, which is the same as the estimated number of wife voters in the Lothian report proposals.

17^o Octobris, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

13,579. Our calculations come out at a figure larger than 14,000,000; somewhere in the nature of 20,000,000, but it is very difficult to calculate accurately. This would add a very large number of women to the rolls?—Yes, but would that be an insuperable obstacle if you couple it with the condition of application? In view of all the evidence which was elicited from Sir John Kerr, Sir Malcolm Hailey and others, as to the impracticability of polling a large vote, I hope that some increase in the women's vote might not be impossible. Large numbers on polling day seem to be generally considered by the experienced administrators as a less serious difficulty than the difficulty of preparing the roll; therefore if you get rid of the difficulty of preparing the roll by conceding the principle of application, you could afford, so to speak, to have larger numbers than were originally contemplated.

13,580. I think experience has shown that there are distinct limits to the number of people who can be polled at a polling station on the day of the election itself?—Is it necessary to assume that there is only one day for the election?

13,581. Even on several days I think it has been brought out in the evidence that there is considerable difficulty?—It has been brought out in the evidence in distinct detail that it was possible to poll 25,000,000 electors in one day. It was also brought out in the evidence that it would be necessary to hold communal elections on separate days, so if you spread the general elections over two or three days, you would obviously get to a much smaller number of electors than 25,000,000. The whole of the electorate contemplated under the present proposals is 35,000,000. Quite obviously you are not going to get a vote of more than 75 per cent. of the registered electorate. At least, nobody is suggesting that. Therefore, if you take 60 or 70 per cent., whatever you think is the likely number of the registered electorate who will be likely to vote, and split that up into the number of days of polling, is that difficulty going to be really insuperable?

13,582. I only wanted to elicit the numbers Miss Rathbone contemplated under this paragraph, and I have ascertained that the numbers are from 14,000,000 to 20,000,000, and it seemed to me to be a very heavy burden to add to the electorate, but I am very glad to have heard her views on the subject?—14,000,000 to 20,000,000, but only assuming that they all apply.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

13,583. May I ask why in paragraph 73 you are restricting your proposal to the wives of all propertied voters and not to the wives of all voters?—Simply because I have tried to be as realistic, and I am afraid, opportunist as possible in these proposals. I am not thinking of ideal proposals. I took it as practically certain that this Committee would not agree to complete adult franchise. If they will not agree to complete adult franchise for men, it seemed to me still less likely that they would agree to complete adult franchise for women, therefore, I was not looking for a proposal which seemed to me ideal, but for a proposal which it seemed to me could be justifiably put before this Committee on the ground that it came within the scope of the kind of thing that they were prepared to consider, that it did meet the administrative difficulties that they laid so much stress on, and did not make the numbers so enormous as to be quite unmanageable.

13,584. May I ask what did you mean by the propertied voter in paragraph 73?—Simply this. you will remember the White Paper proposal at present is that the vote should be given to the wives of all men who are qualified for the Federal Assembly.

13,585. Yes?—That is to say, the wives who are to vote for the Provincial Assembly are to be the wives of Federal Assembly voters. I say that that, coupled with the condition of application, gives far too few. Therefore, I say, extend the vote to the wives of all provincial voters.

13,586. You have not said that. You have said: "All propertied voters"?—I mean by "all propertied voters" those provincial voters who vote on a property qualification. Obviously, you could also extend the vote, and I have also suggested that, in another paragraph, to wives of men who vote on an educational qualification.

13,587. May I put my difficulty to you? A propertied vote may mean several things. Take, for instance, the qualification as a voter given to a man who occupies certain premises as a house?—Yes.

13,588. He may possess the house as the owner, or he may have hired the house on rent. Do you consider a person who occupies a room or rooms for rent as having propertied qualifications, or as a propertied voter?—When I use the term “propertied voter,” I was thinking strictly in the terms of the White Paper, Appendix IV, which lays down the conditions on which people are to vote for the provincial Assemblies.

17^o Octobris, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

13,589. But the vote is given to the man who possesses the house as well as to the man who rents the house?—Yes, but then is it not a property qualification. Surely one is using the word “property” qualification to mean all people who vote in respect of any kind of property, that is to say, all the men voters except the educational voters.

13,590. May I ask you if you are only excluding people who get qualification as voters by their education?—Yes; I only did not include them in that particular paragraph because I thought that would make the numbers still bigger.

13,591. Will it be very much bigger, considering the total number of voters?—We have just heard Mr. Butler say he thinks the numbers are too big, even if you take in all wives of propertied voters.

13,592. Would it be so large that the educational qualification voters must be kept out?—I should be very glad to get them in. If the Committee will consider extending the franchise to all wives of provincial voters, whether by property qualification or educational qualification, so much the better. I was only asking for what I thought I had the best chance of getting.

13,593. I was asking whether your proposal to restrict it to the propertied voters was only to restrict the number, and would you think the propertied voters are more qualified than the educational voters?—No; on the contrary I should very much like to see the wives of the educational voters included, because I think they would be a very useful class of voter, because a wife of an educational voter, if she has not got an educational qualification herself, is likely to belong to the same class as her husband, and to have some measure of culture. Therefore, I think she would make a very good voter.

13,594. Therefore, from your point of view, the wife of an educated man is a little better than the wife of a propertied man?—Yes, I agree, but there are not so many of them, and, therefore, if I had to choose between the wives of the propertied men and the wives of the educated men, I would choose the wives of the propertied men, simply because I would prefer 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 women voters to a few hundred thousand.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

13,595. Miss Rathbone, you gave evidence on the 27th June last?—Yes.

13,596. Since then Indian women representatives have visited this country?—Yes.

13,597. I suppose you have had talks with them in connection with this matter?—Yes, frequently.

13,598. Then may I ask you whether as a result of your conversations with those ladies you have in any way changed, altered or modified the views which you expressed before this Committee on that date?—No, I do not think I have. My talks with the Indian women who gave evidence before the Committee only confirmed my impression that they were very deeply concerned and earnest about getting an adequate women's vote. I recognised—and I have dealt with the matter in my Supplementary Memorandum—that they would, if they had to choose between them, prefer adult franchise in the urban areas to the wife's vote. I have set forward what seem to me both the advantages and disadvantages of their proposal. I have also, as has already been drawn out in previous questions, suggested a way of making the best of both worlds.

13,599. Then can we say that the views which you now put before the Committee in your Supplementary Memorandum are also the result of your conversations with these ladies?—I do not quite know how you mean the result of my conversations. They have been drawn up.

13,600. Can we take it that the views which you have put forward in your Supplementary Memorandum have the approval of the Indian Women's representatives?—No, because this was drawn up after they had returned to India, and I have not had an opportunity of consulting them. As regards a very large part of this Memorandum, I have every reason for supposing that they would agree with what I say. I think the Committee knows that they are most warmly anxious for the literacy test instead of the higher educational test. I am sure they would agree with all I say upon that subject.

13,601. The reason of my asking you is this, that many of the points you have submitted to the Committee in your

17^o October, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

Supplementary Memorandum are also the points which are placed before the Committee by another Memorandum which has come from India on behalf of the women. That is the reason why I ask you whether you have reason to believe that the views you have put forward in your Supplementary Memorandum are the views of the Indian women representatives?—Yes. Speaking generally, I cannot suggest that there is anything in that Supplementary Memorandum with which I do not think and with which I have no reason to think the Indian women would agree, with the one exception of my discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of the urban adult franchise, and that I have summed up in their statement of the advantages, but I have also put my own statement of the disadvantages of that particular proposal.

13,602. You say you travelled in India for some time; you stated that in your evidence before the Committee?—Yes.

13,603. You have read the evidence which was given by the Indian Women's representatives both in the Sub-Committee and in the statement made before the full Committee in London?—Yes.

13,604. Are you in a position to say that the views stated by the Indian representatives, speaking generally, are the views of educated Indian women so far as you could ascertain them during your travels in India?—Broadly speaking, I should say yes. I did not come into contact with any women during the short time I was in India who did not strongly desire an adequate women's vote and who would not have regarded these White Paper proposals as wholly inadequate.

13,605. May I just read to you one or two matters and ask you whether you agree with that view? This has been stated before the Committee: I am not at liberty to mention the name to you because it is supposed to be confidential, but it has been stated before this Committee that "by not accepting literary as an educational qualification an intelligent and most useful electorate of women has been left out. Most of the prominent women workers of to-day do not possess educational certificates of any kind, whether primary or matriculation, as, until very recently, women were educated in their own homes and parents would not allow their daughters to attend any schools". Do you share that view?—Unquestionably.

13,606. Then do you also share the view that if the condition of registration were strictly insisted upon the least you could say would be that one in three or one in four would apply?—That is about my own estimate. I do not think any of us can be dogmatic upon the subject. I do not see how anyone can possibly tell.

13,607. I am asking you, because the Secretary of State in dealing with this question himself was not sure as to how low it would go. Do you share the view that it may go even below one in four?—I think it is extremely probable, especially in some of the Provinces.

13,608. That is a great reason, is it not, for saying that there would be a very few women who would be entitled to apply?—Just so.

13,609. May I just ask you one more question. Have you got a copy of the White Paper with you?—Yes.

13,610. Will you kindly turn to page 93 of the edition which has been supplied to this Committee. You will find there several headings. I am asking your attention to the fifth heading, under (c). It is a list of Provincial Legislative Assemblies?—Yes.

13,611. You will find there as against the Punjab 32 Sikh Members. That is the fifth on the left hand list at page 93?—Yes. I have got that—32 opposite the Punjab.

13,612. Thirty-two under the heading "Sikh"?—Yes.

13,613. Including one woman?—Yes.

13,614. Do you know what that means? That this Communal principle has been applied to the Sikh community. Are you aware of any Sikh representative institution asking for Communal representation for their women?—No.

13,615. Similarly, if you go on further, you will find under the heading "Indian Christian," as against Madras 9 Indian Christian Members including one woman. You see there that this Communal virus has been extended to the Indian Christians by giving one woman a seat on the Communal principle?—Yes.

13,616. Are you aware of any Indian Christian Association making such a claim?—No, I am not, but I ought to say that I have not given very special attention to the whole question of Communal representation, because, as I said before, I gathered that the Government had said its last word on that matter.

13,617. Not as regards women. The Government have said their last word in the matter as regards males in Muslim, Sikh and other communities. I am not aware of the Government having said anything as regards the Communal principle being extended to women's seats?—I gathered that the women were included in the Prime Minister's Award. When the Communal Award first came out, I think the women were there included.

17^o Octobris, 1933] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M P.

[Continued.]

13,618. Are you aware, so far as your knowledge goes, of any Indian Christian, or any Sikh Association, claiming that the women's seats should be held on the Communal principle?—No, I am not aware of any.

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmed Khan.

13,619. May I just put one question? If women had been left out of the Communal Award and seats had been fixed later on after publication of the Communal Award, would it not have disturbed the Communal proportion in the various Provinces?—Yes, I suppose it would. If the women were to be elected on Communal lines I suppose it would disturb the Communal balance, but so far as I know nothing has yet been said, and the Government is not in any way committed to how the reserved seats for women are to be filled, and in that case is there anything to debar this Committee, if it thinks fit, from deciding that the women's seats shall be filled on a non-Communal basis in the sense that they might be filled by a joint electorate?

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

13,620. You would personally favour such a proposal?—May I make my point? I had disregarded the question of whether the women to fill the reserved seats should be Communal women because I understood that that was chose jugee. It is clear that if you take the women out of the Communal Award you would upset the balance of strength of the different communities; but what I suggest is not chose jugee is the question of how those reserved seats for women should be filled, and I have not been able to find anything either in the Communal Award or in the White Paper before this Committee that the women's seats should be filled through a joint electorate.

13,621. Personally you would favour such a proposal?—Yes, I think I would. The women themselves passionately desire to be kept out of the Communal conflict, and I look upon it in this way, that in a sense you may have less Communalism when it is already decided that a woman has to be a Hindu or that she has to be a Muslim as the case may be. If that is decided, that is done with; she has got to be a Hindu or a Muslim. But when it comes to the election, then if you have several Hindus put up to fill that seat and you have a joint electorate, then there would be every chance, I think, that that joint electorate would be influenced by other than Communal considerations in deciding among two or three Hindu candidates, and therefore without disturbing the spirit of the Statutory Communal Award you might get the spirit of non-communalism which is so much desired by women, because the electors might vote in a non-Communal spirit for the best woman. May I make a further suggestion that that might be still more so if you had the women's reserved seats filled by a joint electorate of women only, because these reserved seats are given in order that women may be compensated for their inadequate chance of getting in by ordinary election to some extent. Therefore they are definitely intended to be real representatives. Why, then, should they not be filled through a non-Communal electorate either of men or women, or, I should say preferably, of women only?

13,622. May I ask you a last question with reference to the question which was put to you by Dr. Shafa'at Ahmed Khan? Communal electorates for men have been justified on the basis that questions may come up before the Legislature in which the interests of one community may be opposed to the interests of another. I am asking you from your Parliamentary experience here and also from what you know about India and its Legislatures, can you conceive of any question coming up before the Legislatures in India, Provincial or Central, in which you could say the interests of Muslim women were antagonistic to the interests of Hindu women, and vice versa?—No, I do not think I can qua women. I mean if they were thought of as Muslims and Hindus, then they might be just as much opposed as the interests of Muslim women and Hindu women, but if you are thinking of specifically the women's interests then I cannot see that there could be any clash.

13,623. You say you want a large number of Indian women to get into the electorate because they will be progressive, will support social reform and obtain redress for their many grievances?—Yes.

13,624. Taking these to be the main women's questions upon which the women's vote will be material, and restricting your attention to such questions only on which they could vote, can you conceive any instances in which their interests will be hostile—Hindu women as against Muslim women?—I should need some time to think that out in all its implications and all its detail, but speaking generally, no, I cannot think of any case in which their interests would be opposed.

17^o October, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

13,625. Supposing, for instance, a Bill was before the Legislature supporting the rights of Hindu women to inheritance or making education compulsory amongst women up to a certain age—taking questions of this character, can you conceive of any question on which it would be possible to say, “No, the Mohammedan women’s interests will be one way, Hindu women’s will be another, and Sikh women’s will be a third”? Is it possible to imagine such a conflict of interests?—I do not know of any case in which it would occur. There is a point I should very much like to make upon that, because it was argued by some of the delegates that they did not want a large women’s vote because Muslim women were less encouraged to come out into the open than Hindu women, and therefore Muslim women might be out-voted by Hindu women. I want to point out that that is a quite inapplicable argument as long as you have a separate electorate, because if a larger proportion of Hindu women vote than Muslim women it cannot possibly injure the Muslim women.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

13,626. Miss Rathbone, continuing the last question that was put to you, you are a Member of Parliament. As a Member of Parliament do you only vote on women’s questions or do you take part in the general debates and vote upon all questions?—Of course, I take part in the general debates and vote upon all questions.

13,627. Consequently, when women go into the Indian Legislatures, Provincial or Central, they will not merely vote on women’s questions, but they will vote, like ordinary Members of Parliament, on all questions?—Yes.

13,628. Therefore the question whether they go into the Legislature as men or women is immaterial, because they become Members and are duly qualified to take part in all questions and to vote upon all questions?—I do not think I could quite subscribe to that, the question of whether they are men or women is not immaterial, because although women take part in all questions and not only in women’s questions, they are also specialists on women’s questions.

13,629. Therefore, of course, that is a special point in favour of the Legislatures having a proportion of women in them?—Yes.

13,630. Take, now, the Central Legislature. In the Central Legislature, are you aware that no provision has been made for the representation of women in the Council of State?—Yes; I regret it very much.

13,631. I wish to point out to you that under the proposals of the White Paper the power and authority of the two Houses of the Central Legislature will be more or less equal. If, therefore, there is a representation of women in the Federal Assembly and no representation in the other House, in the Council of State, do you not think that the women’s cause will seriously suffer and do you not think that it is an anomaly that they should be represented in one House and not represented in the other House, each House possessing almost equal jurisdiction?—Yes, I do think so, and I think it might lead to a serious lag in reforms concerning women, if for example reforms of marriage or inheritance or factory laws were passed through the Assembly and thrown out by the Council of State.

13,632. The present Constitution and the future Constitution provide that all legislation must be passed by both Houses?—Yes.

13,633. Just as you have it here in the British Parliament, if a Bill is passed by one House and rejected by the other it cannot become law at all. You have a very small representation of women in the Federal Assembly—only nine—and you have no representation in the Council of State?—That is so.

13,634. Now supposing by some chance a Bill is passed affecting the rights and status of women in the Lower House, who is there to speak for women in the Council of State?—I agree, and I have dealt with that fully in paragraph 6 of my main Memorandum. I have pointed out that the number of things on which there is concurrent legislation included a number of questions in which women are most vitally concerned, namely, marriage, divorce, custody and guardianship of infants, adoption, relations between husband and wife, laws relating to Wills, intestacies and succession, factory regulations, labour welfare and certain educational institutions. For all those matters there is to be concurrent legislation and on all those I have pointed out that there is a grave probability that there will be a preference for dealing with them provincially rather than centrally because of the greater convenience of having All-India legislation in those kinds of subjects. Therefore if you only have women represented in the Lower House there is a grave danger that proposals which are most earnestly desired in the Provinces and which are assented to in the Lower House may be thrown out by the Council of State because the women have no representation there.

17^o Octobris, 1933.] Miss ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

Mr. R. A. Butler.

13,635. May I remind Miss Rathbone that on page 11 of the Introduction to the White Paper it is possible for the Governor-General to make certain nominations to the Council of State, and as far as I remember, the Secretary of State when he gave his evidence said he saw no objection to a Governor-General making a nomination of a woman or more than one woman to the Council of State?—Then would it not be better to make it that he shall not only require it but shall do so? At present there is nothing to prevent women being nominated to the Assembly, but not a single woman has ever been nominated to the Assembly.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

13,636. Further, may I ask you this question in connection with the question of nomination. Do you think that the women of India would prefer to go into one House by election and into the other House by nomination?—I should think they would prefer to go into both Houses by election, but at present I understand it is not contemplated that the Council of State shall be elected, except by the Provincial Legislatures.

13,637. It is to be elective?—I think it is rather an open question as to which would be more satisfactory, if there are to be women, whether those women should be nominated or whether they should be elected by Provincial Assemblies on which there is only a tiny minority of women members.

13,638. But if the reservation of seats is made in favour of women for the Council of State, then women will be elected, whether there is a tiny minority of women in the Council or not, because the only qualified candidate for the Council of State under the Constitution would be a woman in particular constituencies. You might, for example, combine Bengal, Bihar and Bhutan, and three Members will return one woman to the Council of State. The point I am making is that, apart from the detail, the women of India, so far as you are aware, would prefer to go into the Council of State, indeed into all Assemblies, by election and not by nomination?—Yes, I think they have expressed that wish, but I do not know exactly what their view would be if their choice was going in by nomination or going in by election of the Provincial Legislatures. They have not favoured the principle of election by Provincial Legislatures in the case of the reserved seats in the Assembly, I would remind the Committee. They want those reserved seats in the Central Assembly filled by some form of election rather than by Provincial Legislatures. Therefore, they are not particularly favourable to the choice of the Provincial Legislatures. As we are now talking of the Council of State, and if it is agreed that the Council of State is not to have any form of direct election, then I cannot say whether the women of India would prefer nomination or would prefer election by the Provincial Legislatures. In my mind, I think there is something to be said for nomination as against election by Provincial Assemblies because you might have less chance of getting the communal element entering in there. It is possible that the Governor might be more concerned to pick the best women, but I do not feel strongly on the point, and I think it extremely probable that the Indian women's organizations would prefer election, even if it had to be election by the Provincial Assemblies; but the great thing is to get the women into the Council of State at all. I think that is essential and it ought not to be left to the whim of the Governors-General because we have not found them so favourable in the past to the claims of women as to feel that the matter can be entrusted to them with the complete security that it will be looked after.

13,639. The two points made by the women's organizations as voiced by their representatives here—and on those points, of course, the women were divided—were, first that the wife should not get a vote qua wife, and the second was that the women should not be called upon to make an application. As a man is not called upon to make an application to become a qualified voter, a woman should not be placed under the difficulty of having to put in an application before she became qualified to vote.

17th October, 1933.]

MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

These are the main points which were insisted upon. Now what is your view, Miss Rathbone, on these two points upon which the women's representatives have given evidence before this Committee?—I do not share the objection of those large organizations of women to the wife's vote. We have discussed the matter frequently and we have to agree to differ. I think I may claim that at least British women can speak from experience. When the wife's vote was first suggested in this country we had very much the same objections put up against it by the more advanced and progressive women as we have in India. They said they would much rather vote in their own right than on their husband's qualification, but that objection gave way when they found that it was the only way in which they could get a reasonably large women's vote, and I think we found in practice, during the ten years when that was the principal qualification, that it did work satisfactory and that it did to a certain extent improve the status of women in the home by showing us that the State regarded the wife as the co-partner of her husband and not merely as an economic dependent. For that reason, I do not share that particular objection.

13,640. Their point of view is that if they are entitled to vote at all it must be upon their own independent right and not because they are the chattels of their husbands. The next point that they have made is about the differential educational qualifications. You know the White Paper proposes the same educational qualifications in respect of the two sexes?—Yes.

13,641. What the women say—and some of us are of that opinion—is that as the education of women in India has been kept back for a number of decades, there should be a differential educational qualification to let in a larger number of women to vote and that that would mitigate the difficulty which the Government feel as regards the women's qualifications for voting. What is your view on the subject, Miss Rathbone; do you advocate differential educational qualification?—Yes, I advocate it very strongly for the reasons given in paragraph 7 of my main Memorandum and again in paragraph 11, and it is also dealt with further in my Supplementary Memorandum. To put it very shortly, I think the defence of the differential educational qualification is simply this: Those same governments that have put up objections to the differential qualification on theoretical grounds are the Governments that have never given equal opportunities to women for education. Their objection to differential legislation has not prevented them from spending only one-seventh of the money on the girls and six-sevenths on the boys. Therefore, I think that there is a perfect justification for a differential qualification to make up for the unfair opportunities which women have enjoyed. The other practical reason is that it is one of the few practical proposals that have been put forward for increasing the number of women voters even to the one in 4½ proposed by the Lothian Committee. No educational qualification which is the same for both sexes can do other than give women a still more inadequate proportion. Therefore, you must have the differential qualification if it is to be used as a means of adjusting the ratio.

13,642. As regards the test of education, would you regard the passing of the school examination or the reading and writing of an ordinary letter as you have in some of the colonies as a sufficient test?—I prefer the test of simple literacy as proposed and defended in the Lothian Committee, and I have in my supplementary memorandum suggested just how that can be carried out and tried to show that really it would be a simpler test more easy to carry out by the Government's own showing. It is in paragraph 77, sub-paragraph (ii), of my supplementary memorandum. The Lothian Committee suggested exactly how it should be carried out. I have quoted the passage, and Sir Philip Hartog before Sub-Committee C testified that many experienced administrators had told him that it was quite an easy qualification to establish. When the woman was unable to show that she was literate through the production of a school certificate, or, alternatively, through the production of a certificate that she was literate signed by a magistrate, or somebody of that sort, that then she should be obliged to submit to a simple reading and writing test, and I myself have also discussed that with a number of experienced administrators and several of them told me, and particularly one very experienced administrator who took part in the discussion of the subject on the Franchise Committee in the Punjab, that he considered that the literacy test was one of the simplest of all the voting qualifications laid down in the appendix. He thought it a far simpler test to establish than some of the other various forms of voting qualification laid down

17^o Octobris, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

Sir Abdur Rahim.

13,643. Miss Rathbone, I wonder if you have formed any estimate as to the number of Muslim women who are likely to exercise their votes upon, say, franchise B that is suggested, the husband's property qualification supposing you had a qualification like that, how many Muslim women are likely to go to vote?—I can form no estimate. I think the Begum Shah Nawaz expressed an opinion upon that subject. Are you speaking of the application condition?

13,644. No, how many Muslim women are likely to exercise their vote and go to the polling station?—I can form no opinion, but I would like to point out that if the proportion of Muslim women that exercised their vote was small, that would not in the least injure the representation of Muslims.

13,645. I simply wanted to know if you had any estimate of that?—No, but if it did in any way incite the Muslim community to give wider opportunities and better education to their women so that they could compete better with Hindu women, would that not be a valuable effect?

13,646. I want to ask you another question which is this: Are you advised that whatever communal feeling there is in the communities between Hindus and Muhammadans, there is less communal feeling among women than among men?—I am not entitled to say that. I have not the knowledge of India that would enable me to say that. All I can say is that so far as the organised and articulate women go, it is undoubtedly so. The women who belong to the All-India Women's Conference, the National Council of Women in India, and the Women's Indian Association, all those organised women have from the very first set themselves against the communal spirit and are doing their very best to mitigate it.

13,647. You cannot speak about the general body of women?—I cannot speak about the rank and file. I have not any knowledge of it. May I supplement that to this extent? We have always found in this country that there was no greater solvent of class distinctions and religious distinctions than common work for common women's causes. The women's suffrage movement drew together women in this country of all religious communities, of all classes, and of all sections of opinion as nothing else has ever done, and to this day, when it comes to working for a definitely women's reform affecting the welfare of children, or the marriage laws, or anything of that sort, women of all parties and all communities draw together, and we work as one woman, and that I think is one of the advantages.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

13,648. A very remarkable phenomenon?—I think it is a boast that will be found true by members who study their post bags when a women's reform is before the House of Commons. I think they will find that the representations that reach them say very much the same thing, whether they come from the Conservative women or the Labour women or the Temperance women.

Sir Abdur Rahim.] I want to tell you that the Muhammadan women as a whole are extremely orthodox in their ways and views.

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

13,649. Only one question: Miss Rathbone, do you consider the administrative difficulties urged by Government officials to be a little exaggerated? In order to make women apply and, in order not to admit too large a number, they say that the administrative difficulties are insuperable. Do you consider them insuperable?—No, I do not think they are insuperable. Perhaps it would be an impertinence on my part to say that they are exaggerated, because they come from very experienced officials, but I think we all know that administrative officials are rather apt not to be able to see the wood for the trees. They stand under an administrative difficulty as a man stands under a hedge, and he cannot see over it, and other people stand perhaps at a little height and they perhaps see how the hedge can be dug under or flown over, or somehow transcended. It is the business of administrators to put up administrative difficulties. It is the business of Parliament to get over administrative difficulties if they think there is reason for getting over them.

13,650. Have you had experience of census enumeration?—No, but I think it is pretty obvious that the question has to be asked by this Committee. If it is so impossible to register the names of the comparatively few women who will be enfranchised under the wives' qualifications, because you cannot find out their names, how do they carry out the task of finding out the ages and names and all the particulars of every single member of every household in England at census time?

17^o Octobris, 1933.]

MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.] That is what I was driving at. That is all I ask.

Sir Akbar Hydari.

13,651. Miss Rathbone, you have come into contact with a large number of Indian women who are interested in this political question about their rights, and you have found that all those whom you have talked with were quite non-communal. They resented being dragged down to the level of the Indian male who has become such a communal animal. Is not that so?—I put it rather this way. I do not think you could say that all those women were non-communal in the sense that they do not feel communal questions. A good many of the women I saw in India were actually speaking in Purdah parties where they were obviously observing their religious customs very strictly, or they would not be women in Purdah, but when it came to talking of women's questions, it was then that those same women put communal questions aside. They all wanted to work for universal primary education for women, for getting rid of child marriage, for the better training of mid-wives, for a larger proportion of women doctors, and all that kind of thing.

13,652. You mean that they did not cease to be Hindu women or Muslim women, but as soon as it came to political questions or social questions, they felt and thought and would vote as women and not as Hindus or Muslims. Is not that so?—Yes, when it came to social reforms that affected them; and I think that non-communal spirit, that working together for one cause, is a very great solvent of bitterness that arises from other causes. Did not we find it, as I said before, not only between women of different parties in this country but between women of all countries? The fact that women of all countries in the civilised world are working together for the same women's reforms, broadly speaking, has helped to break down international bitterness and to bring women of all nations together. That is one of its values.

13,653. I wanted to ask whether if any special seats for women are on a non-communal basis, both as regards the electors and the elected that would not in any way disturb the Communal Award because the Communal Award is with regard to those people, the Hindu men and the Muslim men who are communal. So far as the women are concerned, they are a category apart. Would you say that was so or not?—I do not think you could say that women were womanised, so to speak, quite as generally as that. They have their communal side to them. But I think what I meant was rather this: If women could have been dealt with and left altogether outside the Communal Award, and we were now discussing with a clean slate how the women's reserved seats were to be distributed, I should say deal with them entirely on a non-communal basis. I merely have not argued that in my memorandum because unfortunately women are in the Communal Award, and, therefore, I did not see any way of getting them out of the Communal Award, except so far as how they are elected to the reserved seats which have not been dealt with.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

13,654. The Communal Award still leaves the question of joint electorates open?—Yes.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] Therefore, to that extent, you advocate joint electorates?

Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.

13,655. If they are elected by joint electorates, it does not always follow that they would not act or vote communally?—No, I suppose not.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.] I want to ask one question on the second page of Miss Rathbone's supplementary memorandum. She speaks of the danger of leaving questions of the extension of the franchise in an indefinite way. Has she considered the possibility of it being laid down by statute that there should be an examination of the question at a fixed time by the Federal Government if the Federal constitution came into being?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] My Lord, may I raise a point of order? I find from pages 367 and 368 of Volume II.A of the report of the evidence that Sir John Wardlaw-Milne had put questions to Miss Rathbone.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.] On this point?

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] I do not know about the point, but you had put some

17^o Octobris, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

questions, and I thought you had exhausted your right.

Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

13,656. In any case, the question I am putting is entirely raised by the supplementary memorandum. I should have been very surprised if I had been clever enough to anticipate everything she would say. I only wanted to know whether you had considered a possibility of anything of that kind?—Do you mean the provision which I quoted from the Simon Commission on the previous page? It was quoted by Major Attlee, I think, in the evidence, but I have the full quotation.

13,657. Yes, except in a more definite form?—Yes, and the latter part of that same quotation goes on to propose that there shall be (not that there may be) a new franchise committee appointed, say, in ten years, I think the expression is, or, say, in 15 years in the Simon Report, which shall go into the question of whether the franchise has been adequately extended and, if not, to make provision for extending it, and I want to suggest to the Committee that that is a very much more satisfactory way of dealing with the matter than simply leaving it to chance that these bodies elected on a particular franchise shall themselves choose to extend the franchise to people outside the pale.

13,658. But what I am asking you, if I may press it, is whether your fears (let me put it this way), supposing you had not got or cannot get what you want in the present constitution which is set up as a result of the deliberations of this Committee, would it in any way satisfy you to have something in the Act which made it essential that the Federal Government should set up an inquiry into these matters after a number of years by the Federal Government of the future. Would that in any way satisfy you?—It would very far from satisfy me. I think that whatever the arrangements arrived at now are, as they are inevitably and certainly going to be a very restricted franchise, I want in any case to have it certain that the matter must be revised within a fixed number of years, but I would like to point out that the chance of getting an adequate franchise ten years hence is going to be no substitute at all for an adequate franchise now. It is when the constitution is first working and when, so to speak, all the new forces are flowing into new channels and forming those new channels; those are going to be the formative and vital years, and if the women are going to lose ground during all those years, it is not only going to be the case that thousands of women will die and go uneducated and go without all these reforms that are necessary, but it is going to be far harder to catch up. The Simon Commission pointed that out.

13,659. I think we understand your point of view, but supposing all you want is not attainable now, are you satisfied that an inquiry in the future, if laid down at a definite date, should be made by the Federal Government of the future?—I think it is most important that such an inquiry should be made, but not only by the Federal Government. The Federal Government will be a Government which has been elected by and is responsible to this very restricted electorate. I cannot see that Parliament, if it is going to hand over India to Legislatures elected on a very restricted franchise, loses its own share of responsibility for the future of the unenfranchised masses.

13,660. That is exactly why I asked you?—In the words of the Simon Commission, "this is a matter as to which the British Parliament cannot remain indifferent. If they are going to hand things over to an oligarchy, it is for them to see that the oligarchy in time becomes something better than an oligarchy."

13,661. That is exactly why I asked you if you would be satisfied if it were laid down that an inquiry should be made by the Federal Government, or would you like to see it reserved as a matter which the British Government has to do?—I should like to see it reserved as a matter which the British Parliament has to do.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

13,662. Does Miss Rathbone extend her answer to the franchise for men?—Yes, certainly. I met some Indian friends who looked upon a proposal like that as though it showed distrust of India, but I would like to point out that it does not show distrust of India. If we were going to hand India over to Legislators elected on adult franchise, then you might say you were giving everybody a chance, and if Indians made a mess of it, that was their own affair, but if you are going to hand over India, not to India, but to a bit of India, then you have every justification for saying that the bit of trust which is now vested in the British Parliament must remain vested in the British Parliament until they see that the oligarchy to which they are going to hand it over is going to do its duty by the Indian masses.

17^o Octobris, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

Sir Har Singh Gour.

13,663. Who created the trust in the British Parliament, Miss Rathbone?—The question is not who created it, but it is an existent fact.

Lord Rankeillour.

13,664. Miss Rathbone, I think you said in your statement to-day that there would be great disappointment, or that there was great disappointment among women in India with the present Government proposals because of certain assurances or declarations made by the Government?—Yes.

13,665. What had you in mind as to these assurances or declarations?—They will be found, or the more important of them will be found, in paragraph 1 of my main memorandum. First there was the report of the Simon Commission recommending a franchise for women that would have given them at least one woman voter to two men voters. That of course was only a recommendation, it was not a promise, but still it created an expectation. Secondly, there was the speech delivered by His Majesty the King Emperor: "I have also in mind the just claims of majorities and minorities of men and women, of town dwellers, and tillers of the soil, of landlords and tenants, of the strong and the weak," etc., etc. Then there was the Round Table Conference which definitely said that "No system of franchise can be considered as satisfactory or as likely to lead to good government where such a great disparity exists between the voting strength of the two sexes." Then there were the Prime Minister's instructions to the Lothian Franchise Committee; they "attach special importance to the question of securing a more adequate enfranchisement of women than the existing system which applies to women the same qualifications as to men, and has produced a women's electorate numbering less than one-twentieth of the total male electorate." Then the Lothian Franchise Committee's proposals and the White Paper's own statement: "His Majesty's Government fully appreciate the importance of a large women's electorate for the Federal Assembly," but does not give it. If I may quote what Sir Samuel Hoare once said to Parliament, he told the story of a man who, I think brought a case against a relative on the ground that the relative had given him a Christmas present for a great many years and that he had created an expectation on the faith of which he had committed himself to certain commitments. I suggest that if body after body and time after time Parliament and its appointed bodies report in favour of a substantial women's franchise, it creates an expectation that almost amounts to a promise, and that if you do not fulfill that expectation you do lay yourselves open to the charge that you really are keeping a promise to the ear and breaking it to the sense.

13,666. You cannot say that the Government, much less Parliament, has broken any promise?—No; I would not call it a promise. I call it a reasonable expectation and when you go on creating a reasonable expectation it almost amounts to a promise.

Mr. Isaac Foot.

13,667. You have been asked, Miss Rathbone, about the women of India being less patient than the men of communal differences; you understood that that was generally their attitude. Were you relying in your answer upon the very clear statements that were made at the First Round Table Conference by the Begum Shah Nawaz and Mrs. Subbarayam one a Mohammedan and the other a Hindu, who themselves stated that the women of India for whom they could speak were impatient of these communal differences. Do you remember those statements?—Yes. I do not remember exactly what those two ladies said, but it has been said again and again. I think it has been said in every single memorandum that the women's bodies have put forward.

13,668. You remember that they sat together in conference, made their joint representations and led the Round Table Conference to believe that their attitude was significant or was indicative of the politically-minded women of India whom they represented?—I think they were perfectly justified. I think it was both significant and indicative of the opinions of the women whom they represented.

Marquess of Lothian.

13,669. Miss Rathbone, I think almost every question has been covered, but one of the witnesses who appeared in connection with women's franchise made a suggestion which I believe is actually the basis of the Ceylon Franchise, namely, that all voters, not only women but men, should be registered on application only?—Yes.

17th October, 1933.]

MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

13,670. The argument being that it indicates that those people are put on the roll who have an active interest in public questions and would to that extent deal with administrative difficulties. What would be your opinion of that proposal?—I very much like that proposal. I must admit that I was rather convinced by the proposal of Lord Lothian's own Committee by the arguments put forward by Lord Lothian's own Committee—that it was very difficult to contemplate complete adult franchise in India at present. I do not think it is a question upon which my opinion is worth very much because it would require going very much more closely into it to see how far you could secure complete adult franchise, but obviously there are very great difficulties in jumping at once from such a very restricted franchise as at present to a complete adult franchise, but you immensely lessened those difficulties if you have application. Therefore, I think I should not only submit to application if you have an adult franchise, but I should welcome it because you not only cut down the numbers but you get the keenest people applying for it. I only dislike it for the women of India, because it is applied in such an unfair way. It is applied only to women and not to men, although the men could much more easily fulfil it and it is applied in such a way that the number of voters would be cut down; but I do not at all dislike application if you bulk out the numbers in such a way that you get back all the numbers that you lose by application.

13,671. Your objection is to its discriminatory character between men and women?—Yes. I have two objections; one is to the discriminatory character between men and women and the fact that you are applying that discrimination to a vote which is already so small that it can ill afford to be cut down by one voter.

13,672. You have made very clear your view about the tremendous importance of securing to women one vote to four and a-half men, partly as a means of redressing the grievances of women and partly to prevent women being driven into unconstitutional agitation. What I think has not been brought out quite so clearly is what is your view as to the best method by which the special representatives of women either in the Provincial Legislature or in the Federal Legislature should be elected. Various witnesses who appeared raised objections to the method of returning women to the Federal Legislature by the Provincial Assembly on the ground that it would produce what was sometimes called tame women, if there are such people, and sometimes called men's women, as opposed to women's women. Would you explain your view as to how you think the special representatives could best be elected so as to secure that they do really represent the special interests of the women in a House which would inevitably predominantly consist of men?—To take the Federal Assembly first, I did not feel dogmatic about it at first. I felt very uncertain, but, on the whole, I agree with the views of the Indian Women's Societies that leaving the choice to the Provincial Assemblies, which have only a very small number of women upon them, will be likely to result in the choice of tame women, and I think it would be better to have some form of election. The question is what form of election. It is quite clear that there are real difficulties because if you are only going to have one or two women—I think two is the most that is suggested—for the Federal Assembly from each Province, it is very difficult to find an electorate that is not impossibly large or expensive. The suggestion I have put forward very tentatively is that it might be best to have them elected by the whole of the capital cities or by selected constituencies in the capital cities of each Province probably having some form of rotation, that you might have one constituency at one election and another constituency at the following election, always bearing in mind that the women to be elected should be able to be chosen from all over the Province. I think that gets over the difficulty of unduly large and expensive constituencies, and it is more educational for the electorate and more likely to result in the choice of women's women rather than tame women. Then comes the question who should the electors be. I have suggested that they might be a joint electorate, that you ought to be able there to get over the communal difficulty and have even the communal representatives chosen by joint electorates, but I am uncertain whether they should be joint electorates of women or of men and women. I think the Indian women themselves rather dislike the idea of a purely women's electorate. With great deference, I am inclined to differ from them, because thinking of the logic of it, if you are having these reserved seats as a definite way of securing better representation of the women's interests, the question is whether it is not quite logical and consistent to have the women chosen for those women's seats by women only. You would still leave the chance to other women to stand as candidates for ordinary constituencies where they would be elected by mixed electorates of men and women. I do not feel very strongly as to whether it should be women's electorates or mixed electorates of both sexes, but I do think it should be a form of election and a form of election through a joint electorate. As to the Provinces, I think much the same kind of considerations do obtain. There, again, there is going to be rather a difficulty in filling the reserved seats. There are more reserved seats and, therefore, the difficulty is not quite so great, but I should suggest that broadly speaking the same observations apply.

17^o Octobris, 1933.] Miss ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

13,673. Would I be correct in thinking that you are opposed to the method of nomination on the ground that the individual nominated loses influence because he or she is not representative? What view would you take of that argument?—I do not think I should like to see nomination, either for the Provincial Assemblies or for the Federal Assembly. I think that the nominated person never feels that he is, or is looked upon by others, as being in quite the same position of authority as the elected person. I think, also, there is a bigger reason than that. I think the process of nomination does lose you the educative effect of the campaign on both the candidate and the electorate. You do not get the ventilation of women's causes and questions that ought to go on when you have women candidates standing and trying to secure the suffrages of the electors.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

13,674. Miss Rathbone, I am a little puzzled by your last answer, because I understood you to say earlier that if the choice of method of election of women to the Federal Council of State was between election by the Provincial Assemblies and nomination, it was at least an open question, in your mind, whether nomination would not be preferable?—I do not think there is an inconsistency between what I said about that and what I have just now said, because where you are dealing with the Council of State, clearly direct election by a wide electorate is out of it, I understand. I mean the Committee has definitely put that aside. They are proposing to fill the Council of State by a method of indirect election. Therefore the choice is a different choice. You are not choosing between a really democratic election and nomination. You are choosing between nomination and election by a Provincial Legislature. Now what I foresee is this, that if you give us anything in the Council of State I am afraid you will give us very few women. You are not likely to recommend at the very most more than one woman. If there is only one woman to be chosen I am not quite certain who would make the best choice—the Provincial Legislature or the Governor-General.

13,675. But is it a question of the number of women to be chosen or of the body by which they are to be chosen? Would you say that it was at least an open question whether nomination was not preferable in any case where the alternative was indirect election? Suppose, for instance, that Parliament should resolve to apply a system of indirect election to the lower House of the Federal Assembly as well as to the Council of State, would you then say that it became an open question whether you would not prefer nomination of the women?—No; I think probably I should be wrong in saying that. From what I know of Indian women, I think they would definitely prefer election.

13,676. Even though it was indirect?—I really could not say. I have not discussed the matter with them, whether they prefer indirect election to nomination.

13,677. I put these questions because Miss Rathbone will see that she cannot assume that the White Paper will leave the Committee exactly as it was presented to the Committee. What changes may be made in it I cannot forecast?—You are foreseeing that the Committee may decide to recommend indirect election for the Federal Assembly as well as for the Council of State?

13,678. It may alter the method of election either of the Council of State or of the Federal Assembly?—Yes. It is rather difficult to pronounce upon a hypothetical proposal without seeing what that proposal is going to be. I should have thought there might be a possibility, even if the present form of election suggested for the Federal Assembly is not approved by the Committee, of some compromise between such a proposal as nomination or even indirect election—something rather more democratic than that.

17^o Octobris, 1933.] MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M.P.

[Continued.]

13,679. But “something more democratic” is a very question-begging phrase²—I mean, there might conceivably be some form of election that was not open to the objections which I see from reading the evidence and yet which did secure a mead of popular approval.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Let us hope we shall find one.

Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

13,680. Supposing the number of representatives in the Lower Federal Legislature were such that each Province would have one or more women representatives in the Federal Lower Legislature, in that case do you think that the women of India would prefer nomination to indirect election?—It is rather difficult to say until we know who are the indirect electors. We do know that the women of India very much dislike the proposal that their reserved seats in the Federal Assembly should be filled in by the Provincial Assemblies. They want a form of election.

13,681. I am talking of indirect election by the Provincial Legislatures?—Yes; and you are asking whether the Indian women would prefer that to nomination.

13,682. In the event of each Province having one or more representative women in the Lower Federal Legislature?—Would the Indian women prefer nomination to indirect election by the Provincial Legislatures?

13,683. That is so?—I have never heard them express an opinion. I rather suspect they would prefer indirect election by the Provincial Legislatures, but they have asked for neither of those things. They have asked for direct election by an electorate.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

13,684. That is just the answer you gave to a question I put to you on the subject?—Yes.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

13,685. Miss Rathbone, may I turn to one other matter in sub-paragraph (d) of paragraph 11 of your main Memorandum. You point to the fact that the adoption of a matriculation test may have unfortunate results upon the direction which the girls' education will take?—Yes.

13,686. Have you anything to add to the reasons, which you have given here? I ask because the passage struck me very much and I wondered whether you would care to amplify it in any way. If you feel your reasons are fully stated here I am satisfied.

13,687. I think the matter is fairly fully set out there, if that paragraph is taken together with all the other paragraphs. To my mind, they together constitute a tremendous case against the educational test proposed. It is bad in almost every way. It secures a very small number of women voters. That is one objection. It increases the disproportion between the number of men and women. That is another objection.

13,688. Pardon me, I quite appreciate that this is only one of your reasons, but what I want to know is this: The argument here is that if you adopt this test it will have a deleterious effect upon the course of women's education. Do you care to amplify that argument at all? I do not want you to repeat all the others which I have read and studied?—Simply to amplify that argument, I can say that, though that is my own argument, it is not drawn directly from anything I have heard Indian women say upon that particular point. It is very much in line with many things that Indian women are saying in connection with Indian women's education. They do feel the need for a wider recognition of the kinds of education that women especially need. It is not only that women's education is neglected but that the right kind of women's education is neglected. They have expressed their view upon it. I think they have taken a rather different line from British women upon that subject. British women have always been terribly afraid of any differential education between men and women. Indian women, as far as I can make out, are perpetually harping upon the need for encouraging the arts, domestic education, and all those questions, because they feel that Indian women so much need that education. How can it be anything but bad to give the seal of the State to the view that if you have passed matriculation, which is the normal entry to a University degree, you are fit to have a vote, but that if you have studied for three years in a domestic science school or if you have made a special study of housewifery and midwifery, and if you have done it perhaps at home, you are not worthy to be a voter? You may have preferred that kind of education because you knew you were going to be married, or if you were an Indian woman you were already married, and you know that your life is going to be the life of a wife and a mother and not that of a teacher or of a doctor. Therefore, you have specialised on domestic questions, and now the State comes in and says: "Because you have specialised on those questions, those subjects are all very well, but they do not fit you to be a voter, but a person who has passed an examination in reading and writing and scratchy geography is to have a vote and you are not to have a vote."

17° Octobris, 1933.]

MISS ELEANOR F. RATHBONE, M P.

[Continued.]

Lord Eustace Percy.

13,689. Miss Rathbone, would you go further than that and agree with me that the educational qualification is likely very badly to divert the education of men as well, discriminating against the man who goes to the vernacular middle school in favour of the man who matriculates from a secondary school?—I have not made the same kind of study of the men's question that I have made of the women's and, therefore, I rather hesitate to express an opinion, but, broadly speaking, I should like to see a lower educational qualification for both sexes, only, as my special charge are the women, one has to remember that if I advocate lowering the educational qualification for men and women I am rather defeating the object of bulking out the women's vote, so I feel rather in a difficulty.

Lord Eustace Percy.] As the question has been raised by Sir Austen, perhaps the Committee will allow me to say that I look at the educational qualifications proposed for voters in the White Paper with the very greatest alarm, because they seem to me to run against everything that education is trying to do in India at the present moment.

(The Witness is directed to withdraw.)

Ordered, That this Committee be adjourned to to-morrow at Five o'clock.

Mr. Butler.

13,690. If the literacy qualification were coupled with application, would not that meet very many of your difficulties and would you make any very great objection?—I do not think I should feel a very serious theoretical objection, but I doubt whether you would be making it easier for yourselves. If you ask every applicant for a literacy qualification to come and prove that he is able to read and write, is not that going to be infinitely more trouble than carrying out the very simple procedure laid down by the Lothian Committee, that there should be three ways of proving literacy, first, to produce your school certificate, secondly, to produce your certificate signed by an inspector or magistrate, or someone of that sort, and if you cannot do either of those things, you appear before an Officer and prove there and then that you can read and write. Would not that make things much easier for yourselves? I do not object to application in the general sense that the onus is thrown on the applicant to prove that he is literate.

Mr. Butler.] That is what I meant.

Chairman.

13,691. Thank you, Miss Rathbone. We are very greatly obliged to you for having prepared these memoranda and for having given evidence?—I would only like to draw the attention of the Committee to a subject which I think has not once been touched upon in dealing with my evidence, and that is I do attach enormous importance to the question of making a better place for women in the administrative services as well as in the franchise. If you get all these amendments in the franchise and reservation of seats for women, they will be comparatively ineffective, unless you can get your women into the administration where they can serve the needs of their sex in education, health, and so forth.

DIE MERCURII, 18° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

DIE JOVIS, 19° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

DIE VENERIS, 20° OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Evidence given on these days by the Secretary of State for India and his advisers is printed for convenience in Vol. II^B.

DIE LUNAE 23^o OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Present.

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.
 Lord Chancellor.
 Marquess of Salisbury.
 Marquess of Zetland.
 Marquess of Linlithgow.
 Marquess of Reading.
 Earl of Derby.
 Earl of Lytton.
 Earl Peel.
 Lord Middleton.
 Lord Ker (Marquess of Lothian).
 Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.
 Lord Irwin.
 Lord Snell.
 Lord Rankeillour.

Lord Hutchison of Montrose.
 Major Attlee.
 Mr. Butler.
 Major Cadogan.
 Sir Austen Chamberlain.
 Mr. Cocks.
 Sir Reginald Craddock.
 Mr. Davidson.
 Mr. Isaac Foot.
 Sir Samuel Hoare.
 Mr. Morgan Jones.
 Sir Joseph Nall.
 Miss Pickford.
 Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.

The following Indian Delegates were also present.—

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Sir Akbar Hydari.
 Sir Manubhai N. Mehta

Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

His Highness The Aga Khan.
 Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
 Sir Hubert Carr.
 Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.
 Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.
 Sir Hari Singh Gour.
 Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.
 Sir Abdur Rahim.
 Sir Phiroze Sethna.
 Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.
 Sardar Buta Singh.
 Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

The MARQUESS OF LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL, C.H. (a Member of the House of Commons), is examined as follows:

Chairman.

14,400. Mr. Winston Churchill, you have held high office under the Crown over a long series of years; you have been good enough to prepare a Memorandum, which is marked No. 87, and which you now hand in?—Yes.

MEMORANDUM 87 BY MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL.

1. My three years service in India was so long ago, and I was so young at the time, that it enabled me only to form a mental picture of the country, and a liking for Indians as companions in peace and comrades in war.

Although in the Government, I was not a member of the War Cabinet which framed the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms; but with this exception I have been for as many years as I care to remember in Cabinet office, and consequently I share responsibility for almost every great step in Indian policy which has been taken. It has been my duty to follow Indian affairs over this long period, to read the confidential papers in India Office circulated to the Cabinet, and to participate in all the discussions and decisions required upon them. It is upon this study and the view thus gradually acquired that I rely at the present time. I judge the new proposals for Indian Constitutional reform in relation to these periodical and prolonged discussions in which the Cabinet was guided successively by Lord Morley, Lord Crewe, Sir Austen Chamberlain, Mr. Montagu, Lord Birkenhead and Lord Peel, with all of whom I have sat in Council.

23^o October, 1933.]

[Continued.]

2 Knowing how thoroughly the Joint Committee is exploring the whole field of Indian policy, I shall certainly not trouble them with any exhaustive survey. I shall only submit a few selected points for their consideration.

3. The term "Dominion Status" has been used so loosely as to cause harmful misunderstandings. Mr. Montagu was wont to impress upon his colleagues how important it was that the "status" of our Indian fellow citizens should not be in any sense inferior to that of any other of His Majesty's subjects. I sympathise and agree with this opinion, and have always tried to further it. During the Great War in which the martial races of India played so gallant a part, and in which we were sustained by the general good-will of the many peoples of India, representation similar in form to that of the Dominions was accorded to India in the main Imperial and Inter-Allied councils. Similar in form, but not in fact; for the Prime Ministers who represented the self-governing Dominions were responsible Ministers at the head of Governments elected on democratic franchises, whereas the distinguished Indian representatives were nominated upon the authority of the Secretary of State. In this sense, therefore, but only in this sense, did India enjoy "Dominion Status" during the war and the peace negotiations, where the special interests of India were ably stated and carefully considered.

4. The phrase "Dominion Status" was thus frequently used in those days by Ministers when speaking about India; but according to my recollection and belief no member of that Cabinet, certainly not the Prime Minister, meant, contemplated or wished to suggest the establishment of a Dominion Constitution for India in any period which human beings ought to take into practical account.

The work of that Government, far reaching as it was, is summed up in the Government of India Act of 1919. The preamble and Clause 41 define effectively the position which had been reached. It in no way involved or implied the grant of a Dominion Constitution.

5. Indeed there is no connection between "Dominion Status" and "Dominion Constitution." Status means rank; constitution means functions. Rank and functions are entirely separate attributes; just as caste is unaffected by earthly fortunes. In the Privy Council for instance, as I reminded the House of Commons some time ago, all the Councillors are of equal status, but most of them are privy to none of His Majesty's secrets, while a few govern the country and are privy to all. In order to clarify the confusion which has arisen around the term "Dominion Status" for India, it is important that the distinction between rank and functions should be kept clearly in mind.

6. Since those days "Dominion Status" has no doubt been increasingly identified in the minds of Indians with "Dominion Constitution." At the same time the character of Dominion Constitutions has been fundamentally altered by the Statute of Westminster. By the Statute of Westminster various rights of the Crown over the dominions were swept away. Several of these had long been a dead letter so far as the self-governing dominions were concerned; but they were valid as regards India, and in fact the main foundation of its government. Under the Statute of Westminster it is open to a dominion to secede from the British Empire and to abrogate in so far as it affects them, any law which has been passed or may be passed by the British Parliament with the Royal Assent. This last power unless restricted at the request of the dominion, would even extend to the constitutional instrument to which the dominion owes its being. A Dominion Constitution also of course carries with it plenary control of the armed forces, of the police, of the courts, and of finance. Nothing of this sort was intended ten years ago, and we are now assured that the "safeguards" provided rule it out of the question now. It seems therefore wrong for the high servants of the Crown, whether Ministers, Viceroys, or Governors, to use this phrase or hold out hopes based upon it, unless they see their way to its practical realization within some period of time to which living men can reasonably look forward. If they have ideas that India may become a self-governing dominion like Canada or Australia within one hundred or two hundred years, and that is all they mean by it, they ought not to use such a phrase without also explaining that it cannot be achieved in any period which men can foresee. Particular responsibility falls upon those who at the present time, when constitutional issues are rife, when the whole of this ground is so well-known, and after the Statute of Westminster has been passed, use this phrase without at the same time disclosing the reservations which they have in their own minds which make it meaningless so far as contemporary politics are concerned.

23^o Octobris, 1933.]

[Continued.]

7. The expression "India" has been even more loosely used. India is not a country or a nation; it is rather a continent inhabited by many nations. The parallel to India is Europe. But Europe is not a political entity. It is a geographical abstraction. No one after centuries of progress can voice the opinion of Europe, or claim to speak in "her" name. But the racial and religious divisions in India are more numerous and far more deep than those which rend Europe. Such unity and sentiment as exists in India arises entirely through the centralised British Government of India as expressed in the only common language of India—English. It seems to me therefore unhelpful to the study of Indian problems although it is very usual, to personify India in this way, or to imagine that any settlement on any subject can be come to by a bargain with India as a whole.

8. The government of India is mainly an administrative problem. Constitutional questions scarcely at all enter the life of the people. When the vast masses are so miserably poor, and when every increase of wealth which science brings, is so swiftly swallowed up by an immediate new increase in the population, the overwhelming duty of the Government is to secure to these masses the ordinary securities and services of civilization. The apparatus of government in India is incomparably more important to the Indian masses than political change. Peace, justice, hygiene and scientific development form the sole foundation whereby not only the well-being and progress, but even the very existence of scores of millions of Indians depends. The British Parliament is responsible at present for the maintenance of these essentials, and it should never endanger any of them seriously for the sake of gratifying the Indian intelligentsia by making political changes. Whatever constitutional progress it is possible to make, must be subordinated to the paramount responsibility of Parliament for internal tranquillity and efficient administration.

9. There are of course differences of opinion about whether an extension of self-government in India will involve a deterioration in the Indian services.

Some say one thing and some the other. I myself fear that there will be a sensible deterioration. But if the deterioration were neither great nor irretrievable, and if the extension of self-government gave a real measure of moral satisfaction, it would be right to balance the one against the other. At any rate let us make an experiment. It is common ground between us all that we should make an experiment. No one can say that to hand over the Provinces to local Indian administration subject to certain controls is not an immense experiment. How any Indian gentleman or notable can suggest that the government of these provinces—great countries almost as large and as populous as France, Spain or Italy—is not a majestic task, cannot be conceived. How can it be pretended that it is derogatory to Indian self-respect or that it is a small thing? Personally I should be unwilling to guarantee its success. I cannot believe that the processes of democratic electioneering now falling into general disrepute in the western world will be found useful or helpful to the daily life of the peoples of India. Nevertheless in all the circumstances, and if it is earnestly desired by the Indian political classes, it should be given a trial.

10. I am therefore prepared to support provincial Home Rule in India subject to certain conditions:

(1) That the powers extended are delegated and revocable by Parliament. (2) That the experiment is given a fair chance over a long period of time without being unhinged by projects of further constitutional change. (3) That the governor of any province appointed by the King on the advice of British ministers should have one or more deputies, similarly appointed, associated with him, to whom he may when and where expedient entrust the control of the Judiciary, and also of the Police, unless it is found possible to organize the Police as an Imperial Service. (4) That an adequate Inspectorate be organised to ensure the faithful and effective expenditure of Indian monies and to discharge the abiding, inalienable responsibility of Parliament for good government.

11. I wish to enlarge upon this fourth condition. The provincial governments when functioning will draw their funds partly from the resources of the province and partly from the Exchequer of the Government of India. The Government of India, collecting taxes with the British army behind it as its ultimate sanction, cannot transfer large grants from the centre to the provinces, except in so far as it is sure they are spent for the purposes designed and with reasonable efficiency. There is nothing derogatory about this. It is no more than the British Exchequer does every year and every time that grants for national funds are made to local institutions. For instance, if the House of Commons decide to pay out of the Exchequer 40 or 50 per cent. of the cost of a Church of England, or a Wesleyan or Roman Catholic or Jewish school, it naturally looks to the inspectors from the Board of Education to make sure that value for money is received by the public. These inspectors check the number of pupils and the quality of education they receive. A similar process rules the relation of central and local government in many other spheres.

23^o Octobris, 1933]

[Continued.]

12. Thus simultaneously with the setting up of provincial Home Rule governments, we should form a Government of India Inspectorate, composed of the best British and Indian officials—the pick of the services—who should tour the provinces of India and report upon the working of all the transferred services. These inspectors would have no power to interfere with the responsible ministers of the provinces or to give any orders whatever to their departments. All they could do would be to recommend to the Government of India the reduction or withholding of Government of India grants in cases where there had been a serious failure. The power of the public purse is potent, subtle and constant, and every local authority yields itself naturally to the desire to win the highest possible grant by attaining the prescribed published standards. Such an Inspectorate would tend to bring the provinces of India together by creating a general and common standard of efficiency. It would strengthen the Central Government without detracting from the status of the provinces. The instrument of a Grant in Aid, accorded or withheld according to needs or performance, is well known throughout the British Empire. Above all such an institution would discharge during the currency of the experiment the responsibilities of the British Parliament for the well-being of the Indian masses and the good government of the provinces. It would meet the odious accusation under which the White Paper scheme now lies, that we have ceased to concern ourselves with the welfare of the Indian peoples, and are only anxious for our own interests and rights.

13. This experiment in the provinces must naturally precede the making of a Federal system for India. First the sticks and then the faggots; first the bricks, then the wall. While this enormous effort of provincial Home Rule was being made, it would be all the more imperative that the Central government should be strong, integral and intact; for otherwise it could not discharge its duty either of helping and guiding the provincial governments or of reassuring the British Parliament that its delegated responsibilities were not being misused. The Inspectorate already mentioned would be a definite addition to its power. It would add a strength and force to the creative and structural side of the Indian administrative system which is vital to progress. Nothing could be more foolish and visionary than to divide power at the Centre during the period when the provincial Home Rule governments are being brought into existence: nor to draw away to the Centre from the provinces, as by a magnet, their ablest men and most capable administrators. As is usual in life some will succeed and some will fail. Those who succeed should be examples and an encouragement, those who fail can be helped. If any one fails hopelessly, the delegated powers can be resumed. If nearly all or the greater part succeed, then after a broad interval in which the fact is proved, the joining of the units together in a Federation might well be a matter of common agreement. Indeed if Indian statesmen and politicians could present to the world the spectacle of a number of great countries competently, efficiently and loyally administered, the binding together of these units, if they desired it, in a Federal form could never be restricted in British public opinion. But the proofs must be facts and not words.

14. It would be ungrateful not to recognise the very great improvement in the tranquillity of India which has been brought about during Lord Willingdon's Vice-royalty. A complete reversal of administrative policy has occurred, the details of which are obvious. This has proved that the existing machinery of government at the Centre of India is fully capable of maintaining law and order, even in very difficult circumstances, without any serious loss of life or use of British troops. There is therefore no case for reconstituting the Central government on the grounds that it cannot discharge its functions. It has shown itself able whenever it wished, to cope with any pressure, and to maintain the authority of the law in a sober, sedate and patient manner. A representative assembly separated like the United States Congress from the executive, may no doubt incline unduly to criticism, but the Central Government has shown itself strong enough to bear this strain, and I trust wise enough to profit by even the most cautious advice.

23^o October, 1933.]

[Continued.]

15. If this great experiment in Home Rule for the Indian provinces is to have a fair chance, it must not be distracted by vague suggestions of larger and greater change. Nothing is more unsettling to any country or continent than to dwell for a long time in suspense about its future form of government. To no community could such an ordeal be more trying or more harmful than to the three hundred and sixty millions, mostly very poor and many quite primitive people, for whom we are now responsible in India. Already the concentration of the limited political classes in India, and of the British officials and governing circles for so long upon constitutional change, has wrought material injury and denied material advancement to the Indian masses. Money, time, and life-energy that might have done much to improve the social, labour and cultural conditions, have flowed to waste in sterile political disputation. It is now six years since Lord Birkenhead procured from Parliament the appointment of the Statutory Commission; and nothing has been settled yet. To call in question in an unthought-out manner the whole foundations of the life and habits of one-sixth of the human race, and leave these matters dangling between earth and Heaven has been a sorry part to play in world affairs for those who have played it. I earnestly trust that whatever course the majority of the Joint Commission may recommend, they will at least provide a rest and a breathing space for the enormous population of India who have to gain their living under the weight of the sun. What you have to give now, give and have done with it. What you cannot give, refuse and use your power, which is ample, to sustain your decision.

16. The worst part of all the mischiefs which have arisen from the Round Table Conference and from the loose sayings of politicians, has been the omnipresent underlying suggestion that whatever is to be done now is but the forerunner, or as it were the earnest, of far more sweeping changes which are impending. Even if the full proposals of the White Paper were carried into effect, their advocates usually say that these do not stand by themselves, they are only an instalment appropriate to a period of transition. I pause to register the responsibility of those who calmly commit themselves to such a progression with the pusillanimous mental reservation that not much will happen for the first few years, and at any rate it will see out their time.

17. Therefore I submit that if it is decided to embark upon the hazardous adventure of provincial Home Rule, it shall be made plain at the same time, that this for a long period is final, so far as the Imperial Government is concerned. And that all questions of what is to happen after the provincial governments have been found to succeed—if they do—shall be reserved till that most important event has passed from surmise into history. I think meanwhile we should rest upon the broad affirmation that no limits can be assigned to the progress of any portion of the King Emperor's dominions, nor to the station which any of His Majesty's subjects may achieve.

18. To sum up. (1) Dominion Status does not imply or involve "dominion constitution" or polity. (2) India is comparable to Europe rather than to any single country in it. (3) The responsibility of Parliament for the well-being of the Indian masses may be delegated, but is inalienable. (3) The existing form of Central government in India though no doubt capable of minor improvements has been equal to all the stresses of the last ten years, and the principle of Dyarchy if introduced would be fatal to its harmonious action. (5) Provincial Home Rule subject to special arrangements about Judiciary and the police is an experiment which should be given a fair trial. (6) It should not be prejudiced by proposals for further and wider change, or represented as a mere transition stage. (7) A high grade Inspectorate must ensure the proper spending of all grants from the Central government to the Provinces. (8) The establishment of successful self-governing provinces must precede all question of their union in a Federal system.

23° Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,401. Do you desire at this stage to add anything to your Memorandum or to make any statement?—No.

Sir Samuel Hoare.

14,402. Mr. Churchill, would it be a fair description of your proposals to say that you have three objects mainly in mind, namely, first of all the fact that Parliament cannot divest itself of its inalienable right to safeguard the interests of the Indian masses; secondly, that any advance that is made must be an advance by stages, judged by results, and in the case of the first stage, the stage would last—to use your own expression—over a long period of years; and thirdly, that the first essential is to get the Provinces working satisfactorily, and during that period to make no changes at the centre?—I think that is an admirable epitome of what I have endeavoured to set forth.

14,403. Then, beginning at the first of your conditions, the inalienable right of Parliament to safeguard the interests of the Indian masses, would you tell the Committee whether that is a condition that covers the whole field, or in what way do you define this right of Parliament to safeguard the interests of the Indian masses?—I think I should use the word “duty” rather than “right.”

14,404. Taking the word “duty” instead of the word “right,” what would you say?—I do not see how Parliament can divest itself of responsibility for the well being of the Indian masses; and although it may delegate its powers it is bound to supervise their exercise and must be sure that no great evil came upon those great masses through a misuse of the delegated powers.

14,405. Are you aware that under the Government of India Act of 1919 there are two fields of administration: the one reserved and the other transferred to popular control in the Provincial administrations?—Yes.

14,406. I do not know whether you have got the Simon Report available with you?—No, I have not.

(A copy of the Report is handed to the Witness.)

14,407. I would refer the Committee to page 149 of the First Volume, where you will see set out in detail the fields of administrative activity that are reserved and those that are transferred. Would you agree that the transferred subjects cover a very wide part of the life of the Provinces?—Oh yes.

14,408. Local Government, Public Health, Education, Public Works, Agriculture and Fisheries, Co-operative Societies, Forests in Bombay and Burma, the Development of Industries and so on. Would you say that the duty of Parliament extends in the same way over that field of administration as it extends over the reserved field?—I regard that as a field where the responsibility has been delegated but I do not accept the view that it has been necessarily irrevocably delegated.

14,409. So that you would arrive at the conclusion that even in that field it would be possible to transfer subjects from the transferred field back to the reserved field?—Certainly, in the event of a grievous breakdown.

14,410. You remember, do you not, the conclusion at which the Statutory Commission arrived upon the subject and which was also confirmed by rulings of the Speaker and I think by rulings in the House of Lords. It is set out on page 181 at the end of the second subparagraph of paragraph 197: “The effect” (that is to say, of this transfer) “is, broadly, that the Secretary of State and Parliament are not concerned with the administration of transferred subjects.” Would you agree with that view?—I say the subjects have been delegated.

14,411. And so long as they are delegated you would agree with the view of the Statutory Commission that Parliament has divested itself of the duty of criticism?—Parliament has divested itself of the duty of administration and has delegated that power, but no one could suggest that if all these important services that you have enumerated were to go into utter chaos and confusion Parliament while retaining its present responsibility could sit by and be content to see all these services so vital to the Indian masses degenerate indefinitely. In that sense I regard the delegation which I trust is a permanent delegation and a transfer which I trust will never be necessary to recall as one which is nevertheless in theory and fundamentally not an irrevocable transfer.

23^o October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,412. Supposing the services did deteriorate in so serious a manner as you have just described, how would Parliament exercise its right of withdrawing a subject from the transferred field? Would it need an Act of Parliament?—I could not say without more consideration of such a very difficult constitutional issue, but I have no doubt whatever that if a complete condition of anarchy and of administrative collapse occurred the resources of the Imperial Government would not be unequal to finding a method by which control could be resumed.

14,413. I really wanted to know rather more precisely what was in your mind whether it was in your mind that Parliament could, of course, pass an Act amending any Constitution Act or whether you proposed to give the Governor-General and the Governor powers at discretion to resume the administration of any of these services?—Well, if the circumstances which you have suggested and which I have elaborated at your suggestion were to come to pass, the question of whether it could be done by an act of the Viceroy and the Secretary of State or whether legislation would be required is purely one of procedure.

14,414. I would have thought not. May I put it to you: There is a considerable distinction between admitting the right of Parliament to pass any Act that it so desires and actually under the Constitution giving the Governor-General and the Governor power to resume the administration of a service if the administration of that service has deteriorated. Would you not think that the second alternative would have left the Provincial administration in a state of great uncertainty in which the Ministers and the Legislature would never know when such and such a service was to be changed from the transferred field to the reserved field?—Well, we are arguing rather upon the theories and the principles which underlie the extension of self-government than on their day to day working. Of course, when powers are transferred and delegated it is intended that they shall be freely used, and even misused within certain limits, but if such a situation occurred of such a grave character as we have for the moment summoned up—one which I am hoping will not occur—if that happened then in my view it is clear that there is a residual inalienable responsibility whether over the transferred or non-transferred services for us to ensure a measure of decent government to the masses of India while we hold our present position.

14,415. You would restrict your contention to cases of really serious emergency? I was not clear from your Memorandum whether you did not intend to cover cases of administrative deterioration—cases less easy to define than the case of a grave emergency?—It would have to be an aggregation of cases of administrative deterioration which in their sum amounted to a breakdown in the Government tantamount to a serious emergency.

14,416. Then coming to the methods by which you suggest that your proposals should be carried into effect, would I be right in saying that two cardinal features of them are, in the first place, a system of grants in aid from the centre, and secondly, agency inspectors to see that a certain standard is maintained?—I presume that the Province has revenues which are raised from the Province and that in addition there are grants from the general revenue raised by the Government of India which are supplied in aid of the revenues of the Province, and in my view an Inspectorate should follow up and supervise, of course at a distance, the administration of those moneys.

14,417. But has not the whole policy of administration over a very long period of years stretching much farther back than the institution of the 1919 reforms been consistently against the system of grants in aid, and in the direction of distinguishing clearly between the financial resources of the centre and the financial resources of the Provinces, and of giving the Provinces a financial independence in their own field? That, Mr. Churchill, you will certainly find was the opinion of the Statutory Commission. If you will look at pages 343 to 347 of Volume I, you will find that there is there set out a history of Indian financial administration, and it all goes to show that what I have just said has been the consistent policy of Indian government for a great number of years?—What is the exact question you are asking me: am I aware of this?

14,418. Are you aware of it?—I would not say that I was aware that that tendency was so pronounced as to be a fundamental part of the British policy towards India, but anyhow I should regard as an open question the allocation of particular Imperial revenues to Provincial purposes or the transfer of special funds from the centre to the Provinces. Which of those two measures it would be the best to adopt I regard as an open question, and my impression would clearly be to have a measure of financial control in order to make sure that there was a reasonable standard of expenditure and efficiency.

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C H, M.P.

[Continued.]

14,419. Are there at present any grants in aid towards transferred subjects in India?—Do you mean at the present time?

14,420. Yes?—I could not tell you.

14,421. I wondered whether you agreed with me when I said there were not. If there were, would you not agree that your proposal cuts across, be it a good plan or a bad plan, the existing plan and also incidentally the plan of the White Paper?—Of course, in making my proposals, Sir Samuel, I was endeavouring to help you.

14,422. I am very much obliged to you?—I have sympathised very much with the charge which the White Paper lies under, that as long as we get our trade interests and our Imperial rights we can wash our hands of any great deterioration in the life of the Indian masses, and it seems to me that by a method of this kind you would have an answer to your critics, of whom you still have some, on that point, and would be able to show that you had not washed your hands of the wellbeing of these hundreds of millions, but on the contrary although you delegated powers you still retained a lively interest in the working of those powers and the welfare of the masses affected by them.

14,423. I am very much obliged to Mr. Winston Churchill for any help he can give me. I must not be taken to admit the charges that he has just made, but anyhow do you contemplate that these grants should be big or small grants? I ask the question for this reason. You take as your analogy the British precedent of grants in aid, and what I wanted to know was whether something like the British grants in aid were in your mind in the case of the Indian administration?—I am waiting with great interest for the plans which you will lay before us for the financing of the Provinces, partly local and partly from the Indian Imperial Exchequer, and you know much more about the exact proportions between the Provincial and the Imperial revenue which will be available for the maintenance of Provincial Government than I do 14,424. Mr. Churchill, you already know everything that is in our minds. We have put our proposals in the White Paper and in the Memoranda; but apart from that fact it is very material to know what kind of grants you have in mind—whether big or small?—Considerable.

14,425. Take a concrete case; take the case of education. Have you in mind something like the British grants in aid that we give to local authorities in education here?—I have not at all attempted to prescribe the percentage of grants, but in so far as there is money devoted from the centre to the Provinces, then on that there should be based an Inspectorate which will see that value for that money is received.

14,426. Would you still say that that was the case if the revenues of the Provinces and the centre were distinguished and if there were no grants of that kind at all?—Of course, if the Provinces were wholly self-supporting and there were no grants from the centre, obviously the claim of the centre to follow up the expenditure would fail, because the money would not be going from the centre to the Provinces, and the foundation of my proposals would be shorn away, and you would then lose the opportunity of making the defence which I have provided for you on this point.

14,427. Would you say, Mr. Churchill, that in the cases where there were no grants made by the Centre to the Provinces, your proposals would not apply?—This particular proposal of an Inspectorate would not have a foundation. That is perfectly true. That, in my opinion, would make it still more difficult to institute provincial autonomy.

14,428. Would you not say that this system of Grants in Aid, particularly if the grants were on anything like the basis of the grants here, would be a serious infringement of the financial responsibility of the autonomous provinces?—No, I do not think so at all. It is not a serious infringement of the responsibility of local governing institutions that they derive revenues from the Exchequer. It is not an infringement of their responsibility. On the contrary, they endeavour to earn the grant by good service.

23^d Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,429. Would Mr. Churchill, though, not say that there is a difference between the Government of an autonomous Province and a local authority in England; a local authority in England being a purely administrative body; a provincial Government being essentially a government whose autonomy, I gather, we all wish to encourage?—There is, of course, a difference, and all analogies arise from the fact that you are comparing things which differ, and you are selecting, out of those things which differ, such points of resemblance as are helpful to the discussion in hand. Of course, there is a difference. That is no reason why we should not have analogies sometimes.

14,430. Would you not say that the vast difficulties of geography and the great variety of conditions in one Province as compared with another, do make an essential difference between grants in aid to a Province and grants in aid to a comparatively small local body in England?—They make a difference, but not a difference which, I think, is relevant to the main point I am submitting.

14,431. You think it would be possible to administer these grants with these great provincial Governments differing very much one from the other, with differences of standard much greater than the difference of standard in the administrative bodies in England?—I do. I think that if you had a body of men British and Indian (the pick of the Civil Service of India) who had served also in the Central Government as well as in the Provinces—I think that their travelling about and following up the working of these transferred services and provincial institutions would be advantageous and easy, and that they would be quite capable of making the necessary allowances for the differences of conditions between one Province and another and that their general working over a period of time would tend to assimilate the standards in various Provinces more and more to one another, so that you would have that unity of standard and that approach in the conditions of life between the different parts of India which, it seems to me, is the prelude to the very large schemes you have in mind.

14,432. How would, in actual practice, this Inspectorate work in the case of these great Provinces at very large distances from the Centre, and with every kind of contrast of administrative problem? Let me put to you, if I may, the contrast between the problem here in which there is a general uniformity of standard, in which there is a centralised Government imposing a uniform policy upon the whole country; whereas in the case of India, you would have none of this uniformity either in the conditions of the Province nor indeed, probably, in the detailed provisions of your administration. Do you not see a great difference between the two problems?—I certainly see differences, but I do not think the differences are relevant to the point I was meeting.

14,433. Would it not actually mean that you would have to have an immense army of inspectors? How otherwise, to take a concrete case, could a central inspector know anything about the standard in a particular school, it may be many days journey from his office, unless you had actually in the Province itself almost a duplicate of the provincial administration?—I should not be prepared, sitting here, to attempt to unfold the detailed machinery for the execution of this proposal, but, if the Joint Committee on thinking it over thought it was worth looking into, I presume a sub-Committee or your own Department, Sir Samuel, could very easily explore the problem in detail and could present the kind of machinery possibly with alternatives which would be necessary to give effect to it.

14,434. Would it not seem, on the face of it, that if the inspection was to be of any value at all, you would have to have a very large number of local inspectors?—No; I do not think so. I was thinking of course of what I may call broad general checks on administrative failure, not the precise supervision which is exercised here, but if it were found that in some Province several important services were very far below the level at which they had been in former times, and far below the level of other Provinces whose conditions were perhaps not markedly dissimilar, in such circumstances, I imagine, that in the course of a year these inspectors would bring this matter to the attention of the Central Government, and that they would make recommendations for diminishing the grant in respect of these services unless there were arrangements made by friendly consultation with the provincial Government for improving the services.

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,435. Would not the provincial Government be likely very much to resent this body of officials from the Centre?—Everybody always resents any form of control, but it does not follow that forms of control are not beneficial to many people.

14,436. Would you agree that here again it would be, rightly or wrongly, a substantial derogation of provincial autonomy?—No, I do not think so at all. Of course, if no money is received except what is really raised in the Province and from provincial revenues, then there is, as you have asked me, and as I have agreed, no locus for the imperial inspectors, but if there is money coming from the centre to the Provinces, there is an obvious right and duty to follow up its spending, and that is never derogatory. Where money is given, the authority which gives the money is entitled to follow up how it is spent. There is nothing derogatory in that. The remedy is not to take the money.

14,437. The conclusion of that would be that you would only have the inspectors in the deficit Provinces to which contributions are made from the Centre. Anyhow, apart from points of that kind, you would leave the existing Centre as it is, I understand?—That is going to another part of the subject?

14,438. No, you will see it is connected with this part of the subject, too, because I wanted to know how the money was coming from the Centre. Was it going to be voted by the Assembly, as grants of that kind presumably would be now, or not?—All these matters, if the Joint Committee liked the general principle of this inspectorate, would be very fit and proper matters to be elaborated by a sub-Committee, which would give a most illuminating report on the subject. I have no doubt, but I should certainly not attempt by answer across this room to elaborate the details of such a plan. I will make an effort, if you like, if you give me time, but I should not attempt to do that here. Obviously, with you, my Lords and Gentlemen, who are so saturated in all the details, I might easily say something which would not add at all to your knowledge of the topic.

14,439. Would you not say that, however good may be your plan, it does at any rate diminish the field of provincial autonomy, and that being so, does it not make the experiment of provincial autonomy less an experiment to depend upon for the future than if the Provinces really were given autonomy, and you could judge them by actual results uncontrolled by the Centre?—I think the experiment of provincial autonomy depends for its success upon the service given to the masses of the people and, I being willing to support that, am most anxious that it should achieve success, and I believe that it would have a better chance of achieving success if provincial autonomy were diminished to the extent I have indicated, and only to the extent I have indicated, by the establishment of such an inspectorate.

14,440. You make it another condition of the experiment that there should not be a change for a long period of years, and that the first change should give moral satisfaction (I think that is the phrase you use) to Indian opinion. Do you think now the change that you have just propounded would give the kind of moral satisfaction that would still criticism for a number of years and allow this experiment to develop without the interference of agitation?—I never said anything about stilling criticism.

14,441. No, but you use a phrase (I have got it somewhere) about “unhinged by projects of further constitutional change”?—Yes.

14,442. Would you say now that these proposals would bring about that effect?—Of course, one would not support a proposal for provincial autonomy unless one meant loyally to try to make a success of it, and I am strongly of opinion that the kind of provincial autonomy which is in view, even though limited by the Inspectorate which I mentioned, would constitute an enormous sphere of Government and of responsibility for Government of these great countries, and, it seems to me, that it should absorb the energies and claim the highest possible interest on the part of the Indian representatives, notable gentlemen who would be called upon to discharge these great functions. They are tremendous functions. Then you say: “Will they have moral satisfaction, if there was, for instance, an Inspectorate?” I think when such a tremendous task is being set on foot as that, the Government of these great countries, as I have said, sometimes almost as large and as populous as France and Italy and Spain, a tremendous task is offered, and then we are told just because there is an Inspectorate just to follow up the expenditure of public money there will be no moral satisfaction. That, I am bound to say, would give me a feeling that all this demand was not really sincere, that it did not really represent such a very deep-seated demand on the part of the masses of the Indian population, but perhaps a superficial demand because I am quite sure that when great and real responsibilities are offered, and tremendous administrative tasks are confided to new hands, those tasks are worthy of acceptance; but, of course, if we were told "No, just because there is to be an inspector who will see whether the central moneys are properly spent, we do not think it is worth doing." I should think that is a most unreasonable attitude. I should not break my heart about it.

23^d Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,443. Is it not much more than whether there should be an Inspectorate, or whether there should not? Is it not really inherent in your scheme that the centre has the controlling voice in large fields of provincial administration, and that the Inspectorate is only the outward and visible sign of that conception of the Government of India?—There is a certain responsibility. There is a certain continuous inalienable responsibility in my view, both from the British Parliament to the Government of India, and from the Government of India to the Provinces. Quite obviously, that is so. You could not allow one Province to fall into a great state of confusion with all its neighbours doing well.

14,444. Would you not agree that there are other ways of ensuring the safeguarding of a position of that kind, for instance, the responsibilities that are given to the Governor-General and the Governors in their field of special responsibilities?—Yes; there may be other ways, certainly, but no method of controlling administration is less derogatory than the method which follows the power of the purse for grants which are given, taken and welcomed.

14,445. But your control admittedly would only be control in the two, three or four Provinces in which there was a deficit in which grants were made from the Centre. How would you meet your point in the other Provinces?—In regard to those other Provinces, I should be unable to relieve you of the reproach which, in my opinion, falls upon your policy.

14,446. I see. Supposing, Mr. Churchill, you could find no body of political opinion in India, Muslim, Hindu, or Sikh, in the Provinces, that was prepared to work a scheme of this kind, would you still go on with it?—I am not called upon to admit such a contingency at all. It might be that there would be a moment when people whose hopes had been excited for so much wider or fuller powers would say "We will not take these poor things", but if on examination it were found that the sphere of action were great and real and majestic, then, in my opinion, after a short time, that resistance would pass away, and people would come in to exercise those real powers, because people always like to take part in exercising real powers.

14,447. Supposing, however, in practice these powers did not appear to be real and majestic, and there was no body of public opinion in the Provinces prepared to work them would you let them drop, or would you go ahead with them?—I am not starting out on the basis that I think the establishment of provincial autonomy is going to confer great blessings and well-being upon the daily life of the Indian peasant. I do not. I am starting out on this basis because there is a great demand among the intelligentsia and political classes of India for an increase in control of their own administration and affairs, and I am anxious to meet that demand; but if the proposals which I think you could safely embark upon were rejected, I should not be drawn to the conclusion that a catastrophe had occurred; quite the contrary.

14,448. You would then feel that you had divested yourself of any responsibility that may be upon our shoulders, and you would let things be as they are?—Not divested ourselves of responsibilities which were upon our shoulders, but we should be acting strictly within the limits of the Act of 1919, Section 41.

14,449. The effect of that would be, would it not, that there could be no experiment made at all?—You mean if the proposals which emerge eventually from Parliament for Provincial autonomy are not accepted by the Indian Political Classes in the different Provinces, there would be no advance at all? But that is your position too; if your proposals are not accepted, that situation would arise.

14,450. I was assuming, you may remember, that you had made a condition that the changes must give moral satisfaction to Indian opinion. Supposing these changes did not give moral satisfaction to any section of Indian opinion, supposing they did not agree with your

23^o October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

view and said, "This is not Provincial autonomy at all, this is really in some ways even the tightening up of the existing centralisation," what would you do then? Would you just leave things as they are?—The view I take is that Parliament has to prescribe what it thinks is right and best. That is the function and responsibility of Parliament at this stage, and if you are going to say that Parliament must not prescribe anything that will not at any given moment be accepted by the representatives of political opinion in different Provinces of India, then I could not accept that. I do not feel that that is a limitation upon the powers of Parliament which I could agree to. I think we have to make the best plan we possibly can and sincerely give effect to it, and if that plan were rejected, then we are entitled to take a new view of the situation.

14,451. I was basing my questions really upon the conditions that you had yourself set out, namely, the condition of a successful working of Provincial autonomy and the condition that the change should give moral satisfaction to Indian opinion. It would appear to me that the changes that you propose would fulfil neither of those conditions?—You assert that.

14,452. I did assert it?—You are not inviting me to accept that?

14,453. That is the point of difference between us?—I do not accept your premise.

14,454. You would agree, would not you, apart from my own views, which may be of no account, that your proposals are diametrically opposite to the Proposals for Provincial autonomy that were made by the Statutory Commission?—Diametrically opposite?

14,455. Yes?—No, certainly not, but obliquely improved.

Sir Samuel Hoare.] That is to say, if I may use the expression used by Sir Boyle Roche, "I have so great an affection for the Irish Constitution that I would gladly sacrifice the whole to preserve the remainder."

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

14,456. Mr. Churchill, I was rather attracted by your proposals, but there are obviously very great difficulties, as indicated by the Secretary of State, in putting it into practice. The first question I would like to ask you, without asking for any names which I do not desire to receive, is whether you have discussed this idea with any Indian administrators, and could say that as a result of that discussion the discussion has not shown you that it was impracticable?—I certainly have discussed it with one or two friends of mine who have experience and whose names I certainly should not mention, but I am putting it forward entirely on my own responsibility and as a suggestion devised to meet the danger that we should appear to disinterest ourselves in the life of the people of India.

14,457. That I understand. What was in my mind was that your personal knowledge, drawn from an experience very similar to my own, of Indian administration was probably, like my own, sketchy, vague and imperfect. I wondered whether you had fortified yourself by discussions with men who had had practical experience of that administration and felt, after talking with them, that it could be put into practice?—Yes. I was told by several people with great knowledge that something on those lines would be very reasonable and very helpful.

14,458. The next question I want to put is: Suppose the principle were accepted by this Committee or by Parliament, would you apply it to those Services which have already been transferred or would you at this stage confine it to those which are proposed to be transferred under the new Statute?—I should like to see it applied to all the important Services.

14,459. Take Education, which has been transferred?—Yes.

14,460. Would you feel it possible, so to speak, to go back on that transfer and apply this system to it?—I should not exclude it. Now that we are making a new arrangement I think that the metals are fluid and may be cast into new and better moulds.

14,461. Then perhaps I should be right in thinking that you would feel much more easy about the transfer of the Service of Irrigation if there were some such guarantee that that vital Service did not deteriorate?—Yes.

14,462. And was fairly and justly administered among the people?—Yes; certainly.

14,463. The Secretary of State put to you that this would require an army of inspectors. You disagree?—I disagree.

14,464. Am I right in assuming (I will take for this purpose the same illustration that he did—Education) it is not your conception that one of these inspectors serving under the Central Government should examine every school in every Province every year, is it?—No. My idea presupposes that perhaps once in the year one or two of these gentlemen from the Centre would come down to one of the Provinces, would spend a week or so with the Provincial Government, look into the different departments, discuss matters with the officials of the departments, and if they wanted to go and see some particular school or if it was reported that there was some great breakdown, naturally they would look at that, but then they would go back to the Centre to Simla or Calcutta and meditate upon the position, but certainly it is not intended that they should do anything more than make occasional periodic inspections with a view to preventing any large block of Indian life falling behind the levels which are proved to be attainable in other parts of India.

23^o October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued]

14,465. If I pass to another Service, should I be right in supposing that in your mind the inspection of the Police would be comparable to that here; it would not be a detailed inspection but an inspection directed only to whether the Force was efficient and sufficient for the duties it had to discharge?—I made special proposals about the Police.

14,466. Yes?—Which, in my opinion, are overriding as compared with this Inspectorate.

14,467. Do you, therefore, exclude the Police from your proposals for Inspectorates?—I do not know what solution you are going to propose for the Police. If, for instance, there was an Imperial Police—an All-India Police—which I have been often told was impossible because of the diversity of conditions, but I do not see why it should be; when an army can be formed among the same diverse conditions, I cannot understand why an Imperial Police Service could not be formed—however you know more about that than I do—but if there was an Imperial Service of Police, obviously there would be the same routine system of Inspectors from the Centre of that Imperial Force with its local branches. If the alternative proposal, which I have made, and which I like less than an Imperial Police Service, were adopted, namely, a proposal founded on some paragraphs of the Simon Report, that the Governor should have one or more deputies and should, wherever and whenever the circumstances may require, entrust the portfolio of Police or Home Affairs to that Deputy, if that course were followed, then, although in theory there might be a following up of the moneys from the Centre handed over to the Province, it is obvious that the work would be mainly done on the spot by an Officer under the Governor of the Province, who would be in a higher relation with the Central Government and with the Viceroy.

Earl Peel.

14,468. Mr. Churchill, we have been told—we know, in fact—that your suggested scheme would be a very great reversal of the whole tendency of Indian administration since the Reforms were instituted. You are going back to a far more centralised system?—No, I do not admit that.

14,469. You do not admit that this system of grants from the Centre and controlled by Inspectors is of a centralised nature?—But other powers are being accorded at the same time, and taking it for all in all it would be, as I should hold, an advance.

14,470. I think it would be very difficult to argue that further powers are being given when you are actually reducing the full authority of the Provinces over those areas of administration which have been made over to them and which were transferred subjects. You can hardly contend that they were having more freedom of action in that specific field, can you?—I do not consider that a helpful inspection from the Centre, accompanying a welcome flow of money, is a derogation upon autonomy.

14,471. I think you have said that your scheme really very largely depends upon the financial scheme—that is to say, on these grants being made from the Centre. That is so, I think?—Yes.

14,472. And you are advocating this financial scheme, not so much as good in itself as it stands, but as enabling the Centre to have the control over the administrative action of the Provinces. Is not that so?—Yes, to have an influence upon what you call the minimum standards of efficiency.

14,473. It is for that purpose. Is it not because you think that the system of grants by the Central Authority in India to the Provinces is necessarily a good system?—I do not say that at all. I think it is a very good system to have some revenues from a higher authority and other revenues from the local authority and to have the external assistance

23^d Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

in maintaining a standard. After all, what are you aiming at? You are aiming at a good standard of life for the people. If you forget that you are forgetting everything.

14,474. You are no doubt aware that at all the Round Table Conferences the feeling of a large measure of Provincial independence was overwhelming and that in order to carry that out it was suggested that there should be a partition of fields of finance between the Centre and the Provinces; that, in fact, certain methods of raising money should go to the Centre and some to the Provinces. Your scheme, of course, would cut across all that, would it not?—I do not see why.

14,475. It would mean that the Centre would not have out of customs and other sources of revenues assigned to it sufficient money in order to make these grants to the Provinces. It would, therefore, mean, would it not, that the Centre would have to have control pretty well over the income tax and perhaps over the land revenue as well in order to get sufficient money for these grants?—You are leading me into detail as to which it would not be profitable for me to try to advise you, but it only complicates the simplicity of the proposal, that if there are certain revenues which are given and contributed to the general revenue of the Province, whatever is the proportion between the two, in that proportion there should be a following up by the supervising staff.

14,476. But it is in your mind I think rather subordinate to the necessity of exercising some control over the Provinces by the Centre through the method of grants. Is not that so?—I suggested that that is one way in which you can avoid being accused of having washed your hands of the well-being of the great mass of the Indian people.

14,477. You have not really considered, have you, how far this system—what I call this reversal of the present system—would be acceptable and readily worked by the different Provincial Councils and Governments?—I have been considering chiefly whether it would be good or not. If it were good, real and sincere, I believe that, with patience, it would be found to be acceptable. If it were not found to be acceptable I should deplore the fact, but I should not necessarily consider, as I said before, that a great disaster had occurred.

14,478. "Good" is rather an ambiguous word in these connections, is it not?—I was not aware of that 14,479. I want to ask you a further question, if I may. You have said that it is one of the conditions under which you would grant this limited scheme of autonomy that it should have a fair chance over a long period of years?—Yes.

14,480. Can you define that period any more closely? Have you any idea as to the period of years over which it would work; I mean, is there anything in your mind about the old system by which under the Act of 1919 a Commission would go out every ten years to see how the administration was getting on, and so on?—Of course, there is always a difficulty in stating an exact number of years. Sir Samuel, for instance, would find a difficulty in stating when he is going to achieve full dominion status. We speak of a period of transition in regard to the White Paper proposals and how long they are to last, but if we were to ask how long is this period of transition to be, I doubt if we should get an answer. My idea was that certainly 10 years was too short a time; I think that is proved by what has occurred. Ten years seems so very long when you project it before you. It passes very quickly. In my experience, I have twice taken part in administrative and Government decisions which were for a 10 years period, and it seemed that we should never have any trouble again, but we lived to see the end of both those periods. They very quickly arrived.

14,481. I think one observation you make is that if the Indian politicians had been more busy with administration than in discussing constitutional changes it would have been much better for everybody in India?—Yes, I say so.

14,482. I have always said so; I entirely agree with you?—Thank you very much.

14,483. But is not this the case, that one of the very reasons why the Statutory Commission advised that there should not be a sort of periodical visitation in order to see how things were getting on and with a view to advising as to whether more power should be transferred, was that it almost necessarily led to this constant constitutional agitation which went on all over India and in the Provinces and diverted people from doing their proper work?—Yes, I

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

take that view, but I am not quite clear whether I understand you. Are you using this in connection with the suggestion of an administrative inspectorate to follow up Government grants or not?

14,484. No, I am on the question of time because you make another very interesting observation, and that is, that nothing is more unsettling to any country or continent than to dwell for a long time in suspense about its future form of government?—Yes.

14,485. I was suggesting to you that as the general position is as laid down, the gradual development of self-government of institutions with a view to progressive realisation of responsible government, would not it be extremely disturbing during this long period for these people to know that possibly changes were to come and they would be living, as you say, in suspense about their future form of government? Would not there be likely to be exactly that form of agitation which was criticised and condemned by the Simon Commission?—Are you still on the topic we were discussing before, or are you on a new topic? I cannot frame my answer until I know that.

14,486. I am on the question of the conditions under which you are prepared to grant a certain degree of Provincial Home Rule in India. I am on paragraph 10?—I can answer you, I think.

14,487. Shall I make my question clear?—I do not think that an administrative inspectorate of the kind I have indicated would have any disturbing effect. On the contrary, by procuring greater efficiency it would give a greater feeling of security, but undoubtedly the whole essence of making a success of the provinces, of Provincial Home Rule will be prejudiced and jeopardized if all the time India is overlaid with the projects of much larger, swiftly impending changes. There I agree with you.

14,488. Do you think that you really could keep that question of the larger changes out of discussion in the Provincial Councils and the Assemblies when you had granted them what I should call so limited a scheme of Provincial autonomy?—I do not think it is a limited scheme; it is a very great sphere of Provincial autonomy.

14,489. And, in your view, that would be sufficient to keep off this constant constitutional agitation for a considerable period of years?—No, I have not said that at all; but, at any rate, Parliament and the Imperial Government would have given what they considered was wise and right to give in accordance with the declarations and principles of the Act of 1919, and I am anxious that having done all that they feel is right and wise to do, they should call a halt for a period, for a stage, in order that people may habituate themselves to those new conditions and may develop them without being all the time disturbed by the fact that they are not to enter into a continuous discussion with the Imperial Government for further changes. It is quite true that they might continue to press for further changes. Everybody has a right to do that under free principles, and every assembly can do so, but as far as it rests with the Imperial Government, in my opinion, they should make it clear that what they have settled is settled for a period of time and that they will not reopen the question within that period of time.

14,490. I will not use an adjective, but you think that that degree of autonomy in the Provinces which you propose would be sufficient so to occupy the political energies of India that they would be much less likely to be discussing and urging fresh constitutional changes?—Well, it ought to be.

14,491. May I just ask you a further question in connection with your description of the Indian intelligentsia? You say: "The British Parliament is responsible at present for the maintenance of these essentials, and it should never endanger"—the essentials of the good government of India—I am interpolating that to make it clear—"for the sake of gratifying the Indian intelligentsia by making political changes." Is it your view, then, that this desire for constitutional change is only the product of what you may call the Indian intelligentsia?—We have not got, unhappily, any exact definition of what the intelligentsia comprises, but a very small minority of the whole population is interested in or concerned with political and constitutional change.

14,492. Is not that so in almost every country?—I do not think it has been so at all in a great many countries. Movements for a great constitutional change have frequently originated from the broad masses.

14,493. But you would say that this intelligentsia comprises the more active and developed political intelligence in

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

India?—I did not use that as a term of reproach in any way.

14,494 No, I gathered that. I wanted to see how widely you were defining it?—I do not know that I can define it.

14,495. If you do not want to define it, let me ask you this. Surely it is the case, is it not, that these political leaders—you may call them the political element in India?—The politically-minded classes.

14,496. Yes. You cannot say that this demand or request is solely confined to them, can you, because then you leave out the very great and growing influence they have over certain sections, shall I call it, of the masses, and even though the masses may not be keenly interested in certain constitutional changes, if they are led by their political leaders, probably they will support their leaders in that demand?—That is one of the difficulties you have to face, but I do not know that I can add anything to what I have put down upon that point. Obviously, a real widespread solid desire should be met as far as it is possible to meet it without bringing evils upon the country.

14,497. Mr. Churchill, might I ask you, in relation to your scheme, exactly what your position about the Central Government is? I understand that you are fairly well satisfied with the Central Government, and you say that it has been quite strong enough under anyhow the present regime to maintain law and order in India. Therefore, you do not want, as I understand, to make any change, do you, in that Centre for the present?—I do not want a great change concomitant upon instituting Provincial Government to be complicated and disturbed by still further greater changes in the Central Government of India taking place at the same time.

14,498. And, therefore, you would like to leave the Central Government as it is at present?—I should leave it as it is for the present, subject, of course, to any minor improvements which your labours may suggest to Parliament.

14,499. Would you support the proposals of the Statutory Commission as to the considerable enlargement of the Assembly which they propose? They suggest, may I remind you, enlarging it from about 145 to between 250 and 280?—That is one of the many points upon which I am most eagerly awaiting your long-expected Report. I have taken the general position of being ready to act within the ambit of the Simon Report. That is a very carefully chosen phrase.

14,500. Therefore, this position that at the present moment obtains, that you should have a Central Executive which is not responsible to the Assembly, and the Assembly in that sense irresponsible, and only in that sense—?—Advisory?

14,501. You are quite content that that system should continue?—Not only content, but I think it indispensable at the present stage that power at the Centre should not be divided at all in any way. While this tremendous experiment in the Provinces is being brought into being it is all the more vital that the Central Government should remain integral and not be vitiated by any principle of dyarchy being introduced there, but the value of an assembly does not depend necessarily upon it being a foundation for the formation of ministries at all. In some countries it does; in others it does not; and there are examples of successful and unsuccessful working under both systems.

14,502. You are very familiar, of course, with the offer of the Princes to come into a federal system and to take their part in the Central Assembly, the Senate, and Government, you are, of course, familiar with that offer?—Yes I greatly regret the circumstances in which it was made and the consequences which flowed from it.

14,503. You mean, you regret that the Princes and States made that offer?—Certainly, I do.

14,504. You regret it?—I regret it.

14,505. Do not you think that it would be a great advantage if the States and Provinces could work together in India instead of going off on their own separate paths?—I am not ready to admit that their paths are separate. Certainly, they are not divergent. On the contrary, any administrative improvements which take place in British India are followed and reflected to a large extent in the administration of the States. I do not wish to see a Federal system established now—Central Government set up at the Centre. I wish to resist that, and therefore I am naturally not enamoured of or delighted with the proposal of the Princes to come into such a system and to facilitate it. If I were to express all my views about that I should get on to ground which would be more dangerous than any I hope I shall have to tread.

14,506. You are no doubt aware, Mr. Churchill, that at the present moment

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

the Princes and the States have a good many grievances against the Central Government. I only take one which certainly no one can object to, and that is that they would like to have their share, for instance, of the Customs. They claim that they pay the Customs, or their nationals do, and they have no control over the method in which this money is spent. For one reason they might like to come into this Federal Government in order that they might have some control over the way in which that money to which they have contributed should be spent—I, of course, am very sceptical about the desire of the Princes for this change and about their desire to come into this system—I am very sceptical about it, and I notice that whereas at the beginning when this proposal was first made it was said, "The Princes wish to come in", now the Secretary of State is resting content with 50 per cent. of them coming in, and, of course, it is very easy for the Imperial Government to form and shape opinion among the great notabilities and authorities in India, but I do not admit the reality of a demand on the part of the Princes for this great change at the centre at all. Nothing that I have heard makes me believe it.

14,507. It is not for me to say what the Secretary of State said, but I think the point was not that he was content with the 50 or 51 per cent. coming in, but that was a sort of minimum under which any Federal scheme could be accepted?—Well, there are degrees in contentment.

14,508. But anyhow I take it that you are yourself opposed to any such Federal scheme in which the Princes are to join and that you would like to leave the Centre for British India in which the Princes and States are not represented; that would be your scheme?—Certainly; until we can see what is the result of the Provincial experiment.

14,509. You would, in fact, I will not say refuse, but you would rather dissuade the Princes from coming into such a scheme at the present time?—I think if the Joint Select Committee felt that they had to drop the Federal proposals for the time being the Princes of India would bear it with stoical fortitude.

14,510. Anyhow, Mr. Churchill, it is quite clear that you would bear their refusal with complete fortitude?—Oh, with lively satisfaction.

Lord Chancellor.

14,511. Mr. Churchill, there is only one question I want to ask you: I am sorry to say it is a hypothetical one, but if you would be good enough to answer it, it would assist me personally at any rate. Would you be good enough to look at your Memorandum? Have you got it before you?—Yes.

14,512. Would you be good enough to look at paragraph 9, the last sentence, which says: "Nevertheless, in all the circumstances and if it is earnestly desired by the Indian political classes, it should be given a trial." The hypothetical question that would assist me very much, if you would kindly answer it, would be this. Supposing you were satisfied that it was the earnest desire of the Indian political classes to have the proposals of the White Paper, would that modify your present position?—No, not at all.

14,513. Why not?—Because I think these proposals would be detrimental to the well-being of the Indian masses, injurious to the rights of Great Britain and destructive of the Parliamentary and Imperial control.

Lord Irwin.

14,514. Mr. Churchill, you have made your position very clear in answer to preceding questions on the points which they have covered, and I only want, if I may, to ask you a question or two about a subject which has not yet been touched upon. You say in paragraph 3 of your Memorandum that in your judgment "the term 'Dominion Status' has been used so loosely as to cause harmful misunderstandings"?—Yes.

14,515. That is no doubt your view. I am afraid that probably you might include me in that specific condemnation?—I am not even sure I would exclude myself.

14,516. No, that is the point to which I was coming?—I thought so.

14,517. I wanted to ask you if you had in mind what seemed to me a most admirable speech, if I may humbly say so, that you delivered in June of the year 1921, I think. I suppose you have not by any chance a copy of the speech before you?—No, I have not.

14,518. Would you allow me to refresh your mind with it?—I should be grateful.

14,519. Because I was not fortunate enough to hear it, but I have no doubt that it produced a great impression upon those who did hear it, and the Committee would be glad to have the opportunity of refreshing their own minds. You were at the time, I think, Secretary of State for the Colonies?—Yes.

23^o Octobris, 1933] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,520. Who was then, was he not, responsible for the Dominions as well as the Colonies?—Yes.

14,521. Therefore, I suppose, it would be fair to conclude that the Secretary of State for the Dominions would hardly have been likely to fall into the use of loose language?—It is impossible to generalise about the holders of political office.

14,522. May I read what you said? It was at a dinner given by the Empire Development Parliamentary Committee to the Prime Ministers of the British Dominion Governments and representatives of India who were then over here for the Imperial Conference?—Yes.

14,523. You said "There was another great part of the Empire represented at that gathering which had not yet become a Dominion, but which moved forward under the Montagu Scheme in the work which began with Lord Morley, and was continued by Lord Chelmsford towards a great Dominion status. (Cheers)". You then went on: "India was now coming into our affairs and councils as a partner, a powerful partner. We well knew how tremendous was the contribution which India made in the War in 1914, how, when there was no other means of filling a portion of the Front by men from any other part of the whole world, there came the two splendid Indian corps, who were almost annihilated in the mud and the shell fire of that terrible winter in Flanders (Cheers). We owed India that deep debt," and these were the words which interested me: "and we looked forward confidently to the days when the Indian Government and people" (I would ask you to note that) "would have assumed fully and completely their Dominion status"?—Yes.

14,524. Would it be fair to you to draw from that speech these conclusions. First of all, that, as you were speaking in 1921, and you were then looking forward confidently to this further development, that you evidently had in mind, something more than a ceremonial Dominion status that it might be argued India had enjoyed through membership of the War Conferences and the like?—Well, with the great development of the Montagu-Chelmsford scheme as regulated by the Act of 1919, of course.

14,525. But that had taken place, had it not, before 1921?—It had taken place but it was in operation and was part of the facts and circumstances of the occasion.

14,526. Therefore, your meaning was that that having taken place, and that being the constitutional structure of the moment, you in 1921, as Secretary of State for the Dominions, were looking forward to the Indian Government and people attaining fully and completely their Dominion status under that?—No, I have set down in my paper in words which I could read again if you like, but I think would be tiresome, the exact view which I take of the use of this term "Dominion status," and I admit that it has been loosely used, and I regret that it should have been loosely used, and I do not except myself from the scope of any censures of that kind; indeed, I reproach myself if, in using this term, although I was only one of the Secretaries of State using this term, that I should have given rise to any misunderstanding and most particularly that I should have led other much more important people in quite different circumstances to make the same mistake on a far larger scale.

14,527. I agree, of course, but you would feel that any of those who might at any subsequent time have used the phrase could fortify themselves by the knowledge that they had been merely following the example set by one who at that time was very eminent?—No, I do not think so at all. I think the use of all these expressions must be judged by the circumstances of the time, the sounding board which makes them audible, the controversies which are in progress at the time, and there is no comparison at all with a statement of that kind (although I think it should have been phrased differently), made in those days immediately after this grant of the Montagu-Chelmsford self-government had been made, and statements on the same subject at a time when the whole of this constitutional field is being narrowly scrutinised, and to say nothing else after the Statute of Westminster, has altered entirely the whole character of what Dominion constitution and Dominion status imply.

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,528. I read naturally with much interest what you had to say about the Statute of Westminster, and more particularly what you say in paragraph 5 about the distinction between "Status" as meaning rank and "constitution" as meaning functions. I suppose you would agree, would you not, that the Statute of Westminster affects functions rather than rank, to use your own phrase?—Both.

14,529. But your argument seemed to me to be that the Statute of Westminster, as you argue it, was mainly concerned with the question of function?—Of course, the concession of functions to a Dominion from the Central Government in the aggregate affects also the rank of that Government, and by the Statute of Westminster immense functions and rights have been conceded from the centre and assumed broadly by the self-governing Dominions, and those self-governing Dominions are, as a result of those increased functions, raised practically to the position of independent States.

Lord Irwin.] I do not want, of course, to lead you into a discussion of the Statute of Westminster.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

14,530. May I put one question? Had not that position already been achieved by the Dominions when they were admitted really as India was (their independence was recognised when they were admitted to the League of Nations) to the Assembly of the League?—That is perfectly true, but the Statute of Westminster was extremely important, and it altered altogether in many respects the character of Dominion status, and, although in practice, that position had been fully recognised in regard to the Dominions beforehand, what had been the custom was now placed in the exact terms of a statute (a law), and has now become the law of the Empire.

Marquess of Reading.

14,531. India in the League of Nations was still subject to the Secretary of State, was it not; the Dominions were not?—I pointed that out.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

14,532. All I meant was that they became separate international units?—Certainly. I do not think the Statute of Westminster altered very much, in fact, but it altered in form so far as the self-governing Dominions were concerned, the whole position, the whole character of Dominion status, and from the point of view of India that became of the utmost consequence because rights of the Crown which were given away (rightly given away perhaps) by the Statute of Westminster, which had long been a dead letter and never used, and never could be used, were in fact vital and operative in regard to the relations between Great Britain and India.

Lord Irwin.

14,533. The only point that I wanted to have your mind about, Mr. Churchill, and I think it is a point on which we should agree, was that you would no doubt feel, as I should, that the special traditions of India to-day made it clearly difficult, if not impossible, to apply full Dominion status in the sense of function as distinct from rank?—I do not see anything to quarrel with in that.

14,534. I am only following out your distinction between functions and rank, and I was anxious to find a point on which you and I should agree, but if we are agreed so far I should have thought that we might have proceeded to the further agreement (this is the last thing I want to put to Mr. Churchill, if I may) which was this, would it be a correct deduction from his argument to conclude that his view might be that it might be quite proper to try and devise what a great many representative Indians have demanded, namely, a constitution, as the phrase went, based upon Dominion status, but adjusted to the special needs and circumstances of India, again pursuing your own distinction between rank and functions. Would you feel able to part with me in agreement on that?—I am not quite certain of the character of the jungle into which you are perhaps seeking to lead me. I would like to have it a little more clearly explored before I begin to plunge in.

14,535. I do not think I must take up the time of the Committee further. Perhaps if Mr. Churchill reflects upon his own distinction between rank and functions, he will come to the conclusion that there may not be very much between us?—Of course, if there were international conferences or if there were a great war, and conferences following upon it, India would be given at least the Dominion status and ceremonial recognition which India received in those days in the period of the War. Of course, that is so, but, in addition to that, there is this proposal to give this immense measure of

22^d October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

Home Rule in the Provinces, and the two together undoubtedly constitute a general advance in the sphere of Indian Government.

Earl of Lytton.

14,536. Mr. Churchill, you were good enough to say that you had come here to try to help us, and I am sure all members of the Committee are grateful, being fully conscious of the difficulties of the problem with which we are confronted, and, in order that we may derive the fullest benefit from your help, may I ask you one or two questions about your objects, because if we get your objects clear we shall be better able to judge of your remedy. Would I be right in saying that you have two objects, firstly, to provide if possible against deterioration of administration beyond a certain point?—Yes.

14,537. And, secondly, to provide for a revocation of the transferred responsibility in the case of complete breakdown?—Yes.

14,538. They are your objects?—I think the second exists at present, unless you do something to take it away.

14,539. I wanted to remind you that of course that, in the existing Act, there are provisions for temporary breakdown. They have, in fact, as you know, been called into operation?—Yes.

14,540. But clearly the permanent revocation of any transferred responsibility would have to be carried out by an Act of Parliament, would it not?—Yes.

14,541. You are suggesting to the Committee, in order to provide against this possible gradual deterioration, a system of inspectors from the Central Government. Am I right?—Yes.

14,542. I want just to try to see how that would work. You have suggested that certain officials should make periodical visits and report on the character of the administration?—Of departmental administration?

14,543. Of departmental administration?—Yes.

14,544. Let us assume for the purpose of argument that those reports disclose some great maladministration?—Yes.

14,545. Or partial breakdown in a particular service?—Yes.

14,546. What would be the remedy?—The remedy would be that when the inspector went back to the Government of India, he would point out the lamentable state of affairs that had arisen, and the Government of India would enter into communication with the local government, and would indicate that unless measures were taken to remedy this, some portion of the grant would be withheld.

14,547. But your remedy, in the first instance, would only apply to such services as were subject to central grants, and, secondly, it would be limited by the withdrawal of the grant?—That is perfectly true. It is not an arbitrary overriding or tyrannous power. It merely withholds a certain sum which most well-conducted departments and well-conducted provinces would be anxious to earn by good administration, and it is quite possible that the mere suggestion of that would lead to the necessary improvements being made and avoid the breakdown; but the power would be there.

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.

14,548. You said, Mr. Churchill, that only if the Provinces received funds from the Central Government, would inspectors have a locus standi. You said that, I think. I understood you to say that?—Yes.

14,549. But, surely, would not the Central Government in any case, in your opinion, whether the provincial Governments received grants or not, have a certain responsibility if in one or more Provinces the administration had seriously deteriorated?—Yes, I certainly think so.

14,550. You do think that?—Yes.

14,551. Then, they would have, in your opinion, a locus standi even in Provinces where no grants were received?—Yes, but they would not have this extremely convenient and flexible instrument of a withholding or a diminution of a grant; they would not have that, but the responsibility I assert is inalienable and general.

Archbishop of Canterbury.

14,552. May I ask this, to be clear, because there has been in my mind a great deal of confusion so far in the discussion: Could Mr. Churchill make it quite clear whether he means his inspectors to inspect merely in the range of the grants in aid that are given, or whether he contemplates these inspectors examining and reporting upon the whole field of provincial administration, transferred subjects, and all? Will you make that quite clear?—In so far as your inspectors succeed in preserving an intimate and sympathetic contact between the Government of India and the administration, to whatever extent they do that, in my opinion the White Paper proposals are relieved from a very serious blot, namely, the ignoring of responsibility, the washing the hands of responsibility, and, of course, I should like to see it applied as widely as possible, but, as I say, no doubt a sub-Committee could elaborate the method in which this could be done, the degree to which it could be applied in particular instances.

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.

14,553. Then I presume, Mr. Churchill, these inspectors would be practically specialists?—Eminent Indian and British Civil Servants

14,554. I mean specialists as regards, we will say, the Woods and Forests or Education; they would be specialists?—Yes, certainly.

14,555. Therefore, there would only be a certain number who would tour India; that is your idea, is it?—Yes, that is my idea.

14,556. I suppose very much like the inspectors of the Imperial Service Troops that visit all the States?—Yes.

14,557. That is what I want to get at?—Yes, certainly.

Earl of Derby.

14,558. I want to ask you one question on No. 10. You speak of deputies. Would those be British or Indian deputies?—Certainly, in my view, they should be British; the Governor should have at his disposal a British colleague at his side, but, of course, that is a matter which lies within the power of the Secretary of State. I should not contemplate putting that in an Act of Parliament. I do not think you ought to draw a line which imposes a barrier against any of His Majesty's subjects rising to any position under the Crown, but, in practice, and while these matters are in their experimental stage, I should think the House of Commons would hold the Secretary of State accountable if he did not give the Governor a British deputy at his side.

14,559. And they would be responsible, not to any Provincial Parliament at all, but simply directly responsible to the Governor?—Yes, certainly. They would sit in the Council with the Governor, but they would not be removable by the vote of the Assembly.

Marquess of Reading.

14,560. Did you say that they would sit in Council with the Governor?—I presume they would take part in the discussion but they would not be removable by the vote of the Assembly.

Earl of Derby.

14,561. And would only be responsible, as you say, to the Governor?—They would be responsible to the Governor, certainly.

Earl of Lytton.

14,562. Do you mean an irremovable Minister and Deputy?—I rather contemplated that. I thought the portfolio which dealt with these matters would be handed to him. I hope he would be friends with his Indian colleagues. In a matter like this, where the whole question of communal differences is so acute it might be desired by everyone that it should be in the hands of someone who did not belong to either one or other of the great creeds of India.

Mr. F. S. Cocks.

14,563. Mr. Churchill, would you agree that England's reputation for keeping her promises is one of the greatest factors in maintaining our prestige in the East?—I think as a general proposition that would claim universal applause.

14,564. You say: "There is no connection between 'Dominion Status' and 'Dominion Constitution'. Status means rank; constitution means functions. Rank and functions are entirely separate attributes." Has that distinction always been made by the Statesmen who have been promising Dominion Status to India?—I think it is a pity that it was not more clearly made.

14,565. Have you always made that distinction and used that term yourself, Mr. Churchill?—I certainly regarded the Dominion phrase when it was used as something which corresponded to what I had seen in the war and the peace of the representation of India, and I was anxious to clothe it with more reality by the steady progress in self-governing institutions in India, but I had not contemplated at any time that is worth while for human beings to foresee India having the Constitution of Australia or Canada or the Irish Free State.

23^d October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,566. But in a speech that you made at Waltham Abbey in July, 1930 you said this "No responsible person supposes for a moment that the forthcoming Round Table Conference can produce Dominion status for India or that Dominion status is likely to be obtained for India in the lifetime of anyone now living." In that passage you are not making the distinction you have referred to?—I ought to have used the phrase "Dominion constitution" there. It is clear that that is what I meant.

14,567. There is another passage which I might quote, Mr. Churchill. You said in the House of Commons: "Now that they had before them the actual legal provisions of Dominion status, was there anyone who did not see the folly and the wrong of declarations that excited the hopes of the Indian political classes that, after a brief period of transition, full Dominion status would be conferred on an Indian Legislature." In that passage are you not attributing functions to status?—Certainly. I, like others, have used that phrase loosely, but I have always drawn the distinction that the Dominion status applies mainly to the kind of representation which India has had in the Imperial War Cabinet and at the Peace Conferences.

14,568. What I mean to say is, has this special distinction which is made in your Memorandum ever been made before?—I made it at great length in the House of Commons two years ago at the beginning of the present Parliament.

14,569. But after those other statements which I have quoted do not you think that if this Committee based its proposals on what I call almost a last minute distinction the Indians would feel that they had been misled by verbal chicanery?—I think that, of course, very great responsibilities rest upon those who have been actually responsible for the government of India who, knowing what questions were rife, made declarations of that character, knowing well the circumstances which raged about them, and especially after the whole character of Dominion status and Dominion Constitution had been permanently changed by the Statute of Westminster.

14,570. Passing from that phrase to the other phrase which is often used, namely, "responsible government," do you agree that the Indians have been promised responsible government?—There is a considerable history around the use of that phrase with which many Members are no doubt familiar, but I certainly mean that great, real, wide functions should be entrusted to the Indian Provinces with a real responsibility.

14,571. Are you familiar with the concluding statement in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms?—I have not it in my mind at the moment.

14,572. If the Committee will allow me, I will just read this passage, because I think it is rather important. It says: "Our conception of the eventual future of India is a sisterhood of States, self-governing in all matters of purely local or provincial interest, in some cases corresponding to existing provinces, in others perhaps modified in area according to the character and economic interests of their people. Over this congeries of States would preside a central Government, increasingly representative of and responsible to the people of all of them; dealing with matters, both internal and external, of common interest to the whole of India; acting as arbiter in inter-state relations, and representing the interests of all India on equal terms with the self-governing units of the British Empire." I do not ask you whether you agree with those sentiments, but do you not think that a Report of this character is likely to give to the Indian people a feeling that they have been promised self-government?—I consider that all that is governed and, as it were, summed up in the Act of 1919, including the Preamble—especially the Preamble—and Section 41.

14,573. You say in your Memorandum that "racial and religious divisions in India are more numerous and far more deep than those which rend Europe". On second thoughts, do not you think that is a little overstating it?—No, I am sure it is not.

14,574. Could you imagine the President of the German Reich having a French Prime Minister, or vice versa? I am asking you that because are you aware that in some Indian States you have a Muhammadan Prince and a Hindu Prime Minister and vice versa?—Well, it is a matter of opinion, of course. You are comparing very large and vague propositions one with the other, but I believe myself from all I have heard from people who have great knowledge that the racial and religious divisions in

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

India are more grievous than those which exist in Europe at the present time, although, happily, owing to the peace which is established and maintained by the British Government they do not lead the different races and religions of India into the same dangers of war and bloody violence as occur in Europe. You have that Central Government, and it is the weakening of that Central Government which will release these racial and religious divisions in India that I deprecate.

Sir Joseph Nall.

14,575. Mr. Churchill will be aware that the English have a Scot for a Prime Minister and have had a Welshman?—It is quite true, I am aware of it.

Mr. F. S. Cocks.

14,576. In spite of these divisions, however, Mr. Churchill, you are willing to allow the Provinces to have their own responsible Government?—Yes, in all circumstances.

14,577. But is not it in the Provincial field, where the disadvantages of all these communal differences are most strongly felt?—I am not underrating the danger of the experiment.

14,578. Would not these differences be less felt at the Centre with the Federal Government which deals with such things as railways, banking, internal waterways, irrigation, tariffs and so on?—I think that, while the Provinces are being placed upon an effective Home Rule basis, it is all the more indispensable that the Centre should be intact in order to repair injury and evils if they break out, or help a Province which gets into great confusion, or, if necessary, arrange for the resumption of the powers which have led to the trouble.

14,579. In paragraph 16 you say that if the Provinces were given Home Rule it should be made clear that this is for a long period?—Yes.

14,580. You also say that: "No limits can be assigned to the progress of any portion of the King-Emperor's Dominions," and in paragraph 13 you say: "Indeed, if Indian statesmen and politicians could present to the world the spectacle of a number of great countries, competently, efficiently and loyally administered, the binding together of these units, if they desired it, in a Federal Authority could never be restricted in British public opinion." Do not you see some slight inconsistency between those two statements?—I see none. In the first place, you have a broad step forward; in the second place, you have a clear time and a substantial time ensured for the wisdom or otherwise of that step to be tested. Thirdly, you preserve the Central machinery which, if there should be a serious miscarriage of our hopes, can intervene and restore the situation. There is nothing inconsistent in it at all.

14,581. But if these Provinces are efficiently administered is it possible to place such a bar as a long period to the march of these Provinces towards responsible government?—Not very long. You must have some time when you wish to create a great Home Rule Government, and they have to grow up and people have to habituate themselves to it and the parties which form themselves under any form of electoral machinery and their organization all begin to associate themselves with the voting masses and people get interested in the management of the great services and their working. Why is there such extraordinary haste needed? Why should not a long period (I say a long period; certainly more than ten years) be allowed to see whether this will work or not; and why is it inconsistent with asking for such a period to say that when it is found, and if it is found, these Provinces are thriving, contented, prosperous and progressive States, well administered and governed as well as they were, or let them if they wish to join together in a Federal system? It would be an entirely different question which would be put before Parliament from that which it is to be confronted with at the present time.

14,582. Do not you think it might lead to another agitation such as took place after the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms were carried out, for further powers?—I am afraid I cannot hear.

14,583. You are aware that when the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms were embodied in the Government of India Act immediately an agitation developed for further powers?—Yes.

14,584. Do not you think the same thing might happen in the case suggested by you?—It will happen in any case, because no body in India that I know of accepts even the extreme proposals of the White Paper, nor, may I say, does.

23rd October, 1933] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H. M.P.

[Continued.]

the Constitutional Parliamentary Opposition accept it.

14,555. Do not you think the support given to British Administration at the present time by the Indian leaders—men of great influence, men of property and influence in business and finance—is of great value to the British Administration?—Certainly of the greatest value. It would have been impossible for us to have remained in India if we had not always enjoyed the ablest assistance and co-operation of a very large number of the best and most capable Indians.

14,556. You think it would be impossible for us to remain without their support?—At the present time there are only a comparatively small number of white officials in the whole place.

14,557. If the hopes of these people were shattered by the refusal of what they considered has been promised them, will not that make our administration in India very difficult if not impossible?—I do not think so. I do not believe that if you give Provincial autonomy now, subject to the reservations I have made, and you withhold a Federal responsible Government at the Centre until you see how it works out in the Provinces, the difference between that and the White Paper Proposals would lead to any general refusal on the part of Indians to take part in the Government of the country.

14,558. You think it is a mistaken idea that they would withdraw their support?—I do not consider that that is a likely contingency to arise.

14,559. Do not you think the bold course in politics is often the wisest one?—That is quite true, but circumstances alter cases. Every case must be judged on its merits.

14,590. Was it not so in South Africa?—There is no sort of analogy between South Africa with its small white population and very large Kaffir proletariat—there is no sort of parallel between giving institutions to that small white population and giving similar institutions to the India of to-day.

14,591. I was only suggesting that as a bold course was successful there, although prophecies were made that it would be a disaster, a similar course might be applied to India with success?—Boldness in one place is rashness in another.

Lord Snell

14,592. Just a few short questions for the purpose of clarification. In paragraph 6, Mr. Churchill, you suggest that an Indian Constitution was not even thought about 10 years ago, it was not contemplated 10 years ago?—It is my belief that none of those who were responsible for the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms contemplated a Constitution like that of Australia or Canada for India in any period which it was necessary to consider.

14,593. You would not agree that during the last 10 years very vital changes have taken place in the outlook of the Indian people?—Very vital changes have taken place in the outlook of every country all over the world, but a great many of those vital changes have not at all taken the form of extensions of democratic electioneering and representative institutions; they have taken exactly the reverse form.

14,594. Considering that those changes have taken place, would it not be wise statesmanship to take account of them at the present time?—Certainly, you should take account of every relevant fact.

14,595. In paragraph 8 you say that the Government of India is mainly an administrative problem?—Yes.

14,596. May I suggest to you that a considerable part of the problem is psychological and religious as well as administrative. Would not you agree?—Yes; certainly, a large part.

14,597. And that therefore the hopes and the expectations of the Indian people have to be taken into account as well as the difficulties of administration?—Certainly, but we must be careful lest in indulging hopes and expectations which would gratify the Indian people we do not lead them into a situation where very great suffering will be brought upon them.

Major Attlee.

14,598. I would like to ask you one or two questions about your proposal for an Inspectorate. I take it there would be a number of inspectors each with his own special technique, education, irrigation, forests, and so forth, whatever they might be?—Obviously there would have to be.

14,599. Each one of them would be interested in maintaining a certain standard?—I will not say maintaining

23^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

but helpfully working towards a certain standard.

14,600. As a former Chancellor of the Exchequer you are aware that Ministers of spending Departments each think their own subject of the greatest possible importance and want money for it?—Yes, that is so, not only the spending Departments.

14,601. And it is the part, is it not, of Government, and especially the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to decide between these rival claims in accordance with the policy of the Government of the day?—Yes.

14,602. Will not your inspectorate take away that power from the local government, because where they may want to spend more on irrigation and less on education, your education expert may be utilising his reports at the Centre to force them to spend more on education?—Of course, there are differences of opinion which arise which are adjustable in discussion. They naturally must be thrashed out in discussion.

14,603. It is the working out that I wanted to get at of these proposals. It is not difficult to set down proposals but it is difficult to make them work. Had you not already in the Provincial Constitution got an instrument of the Central Government to see that things are kept right, in the Governor of the Province?—Of course, there is a great tendency to shuffle off all difficult problems by saying, "The Governor will look after that" or "The Viceroy will look after that," and I am bound to say that I think it would be much better that there should be a lower contact between the Central Government and the Provincial Administrative Departments than the general supervision of the Governor and his contact with the Viceroy.

14,604. You would agree, would you not, that the Governor's task is going to be very difficult and responsible and he would have to have a high status to carry it out?—Tremendously difficult.

14,605. Then you are going to subject him to the reports of peripatetic inspectors which in effect will report that he and his government are not doing their job. Would that enhance his importance?—If there is a great scandal it is better that it should come out even if it added to the difficulties of the Government, because obviously, he is not discharging his duties if his Province has fallen into a great state of administrative disorder.

14,606. I gather you base this need for an inspectorate on canons of financial rectitude in that where money is provided by a grant-in-aid, there should be means taken to see that it is expended properly on behalf of those who provide it?—Yes, I think so. I think that is what you may call the main line on which my argument proceeds.

14,607. Then I take it during the first 5 years of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms in which the Central Government was supported by subventions from the Provinces, you would have given the Provincial Council some right to have some say in the expenditure of the Centre?—I beg your pardon.

14,608. You are aware that during the first five or six years after the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms, the Central Government was supported by grants-in-aid from the Provinces, so I take it by your canons the Provinces should have had some control over the expenditure of the Centre?—I think that is not a point of real substance.

14,609. I was wanting to see whether it was really financial rectitude that impelled you to make the suggestion?—It is to me quite an ingenious point.

14,610. One last point, and that is with regard to the absolute need for an interval between the Provincial Constitution and the Federation. What do you base that on?—I should have thought logic, common sense, prudence, experience of the world, the example of every Federal System that has ever been brought into play, but there may be other reasons too, which have not occurred to me.

14,611. I gather you think that the Central Government is at present very strong?—It ought to be very strong.

14,612. Do you think it is as at present composed?—I am bound to say it seems to me that it works all right. In spite of all this constitutional uncertainty and in spite of what I consider were mistakes which were made, with the best intentions, nevertheless peace and order have been completely restored very largely over India, and that without the shedding of blood, except in communal riots, with which the Central Government was not concerned, and happily, without the use of the British Army, which it is always the prime object to keep out of hostile contact with the Indian people, and that has been done by a Government in a most sober manner without anything violent being done, but of course, with special ordinances and so on. I do not see where there has been a breakdown in the power of the Central Government at all, or in the efficiency of its working. There may be a difference between the Central Government and the Assembly, but the Constitution contemplates that there shall be differences between the Assembly and the Executive, and the Assembly is there to express its criticisms of the Executive, like the American Congress is there to express its criticisms of the President's actions.

23rd October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

Ordered, That this Committee be adjourned to to-morrow at half-past Ten o'clock.

DIE MARTIS, 24th OCTOBRIS, 1933.

Present:

Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.
Lord Chancellor.
Marquess of Salisbury.
Marquess of Zetland.
Marquess of Linlithgow.
Marquess of Reading.
Earl of Derby.
Earl of Lytton.
Earl Peel.
Lord Middleton.
Lord Ker (Marquess of Lothian).
Lord Hardinge of Penshurst.
Lord Irwin.
Lord Snell.
Lord Rankeillour.
Lord Hutchison of Montrose.

Major Attlee.
Mr. Butler.
Major Cadogan.
Sir Austen Chamberlain.
Mr. Cocks.
Sir Reginald Craddock.
Mr. Davidson.
Mr. Isaac Foot.
Sir Samuel Hoare.
Mr. Morgan Jones.
Sir Joseph Nall.
Lord Eustace Percy.
Miss Pickford.
Sir John Wardlaw-Milne.
Earl Winterton.

The following Indian Delegates were also present.—

INDIAN STATES REPRESENTATIVES.

Sir Akbar Hydari.
Sir Manubhai N. Mehta.

Mr. Y. Thombare.

BRITISH INDIAN REPRESENTATIVES.

His Highness The Aga Khan.
Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.
Sir Hubert Carr.
Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi.
Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.
Sir Hari Singh Gour.
Mr. M. R. Jayaker.

Mr. N. M. Joshi.
Sir Abdur Rahim.
Sir Phiroze Sethna.
Dr. Shafa'at Ahmad Khan.
Sardar Buta Singh.
Mr. Zafrulla Khan.

The MARQUESS of LINLITHGOW in the Chair.

24^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL, C.H. (a Member of the House of Commons), is further examined as follows.—

Mr. Morgan Jones.

14,613. Mr. Churchill, yesterday afternoon we discussed with you the first six paragraphs of your memorandum in some detail in which you argue that "Dominion Status" has a different connotation from that of "Dominion Constitution"—Yes.

14,614. When you delivered the speech to which Lord Irwin referred yesterday, may I take it that, speaking for the Government, you were using the words "Dominion Status" in the sense in which you now advance it?—I was not speaking for the Government in the sense of delivering any pronouncement. I was merely making what politicians often have to do, an ageable speech upon a festive occasion, and not in any way laying down a constitutional pronouncement. But I should not say that the distinction between "Dominion Status" and "Dominion Constitution" which I have drawn here, had appeared so clearly in my mind at that date as it has done since I have seen the misunderstandings which have arisen, but at that time I am quite clear that the Government of which I was a member did not contemplate anything like a Dominion Constitution like that of Australia or Canada for India within any time which reasonable men need take into account.

14,615. Mr. Churchill, I am concerned about your speech on that occasion because I have studied it in conjunction with other speeches of distinguished members of the then Cabinet?—Yes.

14,616. You were present when Mr. Lloyd George, who was then Prime Minister, addressed the Imperial Conference. I see from the "Times" that that is so?—Yes.

14,617. Mr. Lloyd George as Prime Minister, then used these words: "Important changes have been effected in India this year and India is making rapid strides," and I ask you to note the next few words, "towards the control of her own affairs." Those are Mr. Lloyd George's own words?—Very well.

14,618. To be perfectly fair, I will read the rest. "She had also proved her right to a new status in our councils. That status she had gained during the war, and she has maintained it during the peace, and I welcome the representatives of India to our great Council of the Empire to-day"?—I think that really bears out very conveniently and clearly the position I adopt.

14,619. Does it?—He says that India is making great strides towards the control of her own affairs; that represented the Act of 1919 or the policy of the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms, and he also says as a separate thing that she has gained Dominion status in the war, which is that ceremonial status which I have described, in accordance with which India was represented at all the international and inter-Imperial conferences. But I may say that, as far as Mr. Lloyd George is concerned, he was the Prime Minister. He knows most about this, and it would be easier I think for you to cross-examine him on his words than me.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.

14,620. I happened to be a member of the same Government?—Yes.

14,621. And I entirely accept your statement of the interpretation that we all put upon these words at that time, except for your use of the word "ceremonial." Surely Mr. Lloyd George meant to convey something more than a mere ceremonial change when he spoke of the new status which India had attained in our Councils by becoming a member of the Imperial War Cabinet, and, after the peace, of the Imperial Conference?—I agree that the word "ceremonial" goes beyond what is actually correct. I was using the word "ceremonial" rather in contradistinction to the idea of a full Australian or Canadian constitution, but it would not be just to the position which India occupied in the Imperial and War Conferences, to assume that it was of a purely honorific character. There was a reality about it.

Mr. Morgan Jones.

14,622. May I, Mr. Churchill, put this point to you? There is the speech of Mr. Lloyd George as Prime Minister. There is your own speech to which Lord Irwin referred yesterday, and may I remind you that in your own speech you spoke pretty specifically in the last sentence in this way. "We owed India that deep debt, and we looked forward confidently to the days when the Indian Government and people would have assumed fully and completely their Dominion Status." Whatever may have been in your mind, Mr. Churchill, and in the mind of Mr. Lloyd George, would not you agree with me that the effect of the use of those words was to create in the mind of Indian people, the intelligentsia like others, that India was committed to following along the path of Dominion self-government?—I was not speaking in vacuo.

24^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,623. No?—I was speaking upon the basis of the Act of 1919 and other circumstances

14,624. Quite so?—We had made a very great advance in the principles of self-government in India, and we had also side by side with that this Dominion Status which India gained in the War, and I was speaking with all those facts present at the same time. Any hopes based upon these remarks by an individual member of a Government, not making a pronouncement of any kind, and not taken as a pronouncement of any kind, must have been and ought to have been adjusted and corrected by reference to the legislation which Parliament had just passed, and the words of clause 41 which were present in everyone's mind, and which were the basis upon which we spoke and acted.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] In addition to the speech which you made and which Mr. Lloyd George made, there was a speech by Sir Austen Chamberlain, then Mr. Austen Chamberlain, in the House of Commons, in which he used these words: "We found the equality of all the Members of the Empire within that gathering fully and absolutely recognised. We found India, the last to reach us, sitting on terms of equality with the other Dominions of the British Crown." There again, Sir Austen will have his own interpretation of that speech. I am concerned with the effect of these cumulative declarations upon the Indian mind.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Mr. Morgan Jones did not give me notice that he was going to refer to my speech.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] I beg your pardon.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I have not had an opportunity of looking it up myself, but from the quotation which he has read, it is clear that I referred to the existing position, and that I was not making any sort of promise or pledge, or holding out any sort of expectation for the future.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] I quite recognise Sir Austen is entitled to say that he had a particular interpretation of his words in his own mind. I quite accept that.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] I do not think that is a fair way of treating it. I say it is plain on the face of it that I referred to something which had already been done and not to something which remained yet to do.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] I accept that.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] Thank you.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] In addition to that, there was the declaration made on behalf of the Government, doubtless in words presented to him by the Government, by the Duke of Connaught in India at the Durbar of that year. I was saying that, in addition to these declarations of Ministers at home, there was the further declaration by the Duke of Connaught himself on behalf of the Government in words doubtless presented to him by the Government at the Durbar. I quote them from a previous page of this report.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] That is the opening day of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] That is right.

Marquess of Reading.] The beginning of 1921.

Mr. Morgan Jones.

14,625. When he opened the Legislative Assembly: "For years, it may be for generations, patriotic and loyal Indians have dreamed of Swaraj for their Mother-land. To-day, you have the beginnings of Swaraj (self-government) within my Empire, and widest scope and ample opportunity for progress to the liberty which my other Dominions enjoy." Mr. Churchill, the point I wish to put to you is this. Is it an unfair suggestion to make that the cumulative effect of all these pronouncements upon the Indian mind was to create the belief that they were entitled to look forward at some future time to the acquisition of Dominion Self-government?—Constitution?

14,626. Yes?—I consider that all these pronouncements of that time were governed by the words of Section 41, Sub-section (2), of the Act of 1919, and particularly by the sentence that after 10 years a Commission ought to be appointed to report "as to whether and to what extent it is desirable to establish the principle of responsible government, or to extend, modify, or restrict, the degree of responsible government then existing therein, including", etc., and it seems to me that the definite words

24^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

of a statute which was actually being carried into operation at that time formed the only solid basis on which expectations could be based.

Lord Irwin.] May I interject: Mr. Churchill refers very often to Section 41, but in my copy of the Government of India Act, Section 41 merely deals with procedure in cases of difference of opinion.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] It is Section 84A of the Government of India Act.

Lord Irwin.

14,627. I understand it was Section 41 in the old Act, but it is now Section 84A?—I am not so sure about that.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] Yes, it is Section 84A.

Marquess of Reading.

14,628. If you have in mind the appointment of the Statutory Commission, within 10 years, it is, under the new enumeration of the Sections, Section 84A as suggested?—Part V, Statutory Commission, Clause 41.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

14,629. No, it is Part VIA. That has been worked into the Government of India Act, and is now numbered as Part VIA?—I think I took it from the statute in Parliament here.

Marquess of Reading.

14,630. It is only a change in the numbers of the Section?—I am referring to the English statute, and you are referring to the Indian statute.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] No, I am referring to the English statute.

Earl of Derby.] It has been renumbered.

Marquess of Reading.] There has been a codification of the various statutes.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] There is no dispute about the words.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.] You are referring to the amending Act?

Marquess of Reading.

14,631. It does mean what you say. I have it before me, and it is Section 84A?—And it is the exact words which I read.

14,632. That is right?—There has been some renumbering.

Sir Hari Singh Gour.

14,633. You are referring to the amending Act, and this is the Consolidating Act?—I am so glad that our differences on this point are only reduced to a matter of numbering.

Mr. Morgan Jones.

14,634. I am sorry to spend time in pursuing this subject. I have not had an answer to the question. Do you agree it would be a fair thing to say that the effect of all these pronouncements upon the Indian mind would be in the direction I indicated?—I do not think so. I think one must admit that the language used was not carefully enough considered by many people who used it at that time, and who spoke around the general policy of the Government as Ministers have to do, and there were, as you say, the Duke of Connaught's words, but it is perfectly clear that in the minds of the Indian political classes, the definite provisions of Section 84A were the ruling factor, and if that had not been so, why would it have been necessary for Lord Irwin when Viceroy to make his declaration (a very much more crucial declaration) on the subject of Dominion Status, and why was that expected to produce such a great effect, if as you are arguing, the whole matter had already been prejudged?

14,635. I am not suggesting that any definite pronouncement in set terms had been made by the Government. I am merely suggesting that the effect of these speeches, using this language—and I gather you agree—tended to give the Indian people a feeling that they were on the high road to the achievement of dominion self-government. Whether they were right or wrong is neither here nor there for the moment. You have referred to Section 84A?—Yes.

14,636. I think you attach a good deal of importance to the word "restrict" which appears in that paragraph. You did so, if I remember rightly, in a speech in the House of Commons on a previous occasion?—Yes; I did.

14,637. But you would not argue, would you, that Section 84 precluded the Simon Commission, as we call it, when it was ultimately appointed, from suggesting enlargements of the scope of self-government?—The Statutory Commission was entitled to propose an arrest at the point which we had reached for the time—a further arrest, or an advance, or a restriction for the time being, though I consider that we are, of course, pledged continually to endeavour to increase self-governing institutions throughout India,

24^o October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

but the time and manner rest at present with the Imperial Parliament.

14,638. Quite. In between the time when you gave up office in 1921 or 1922, as the case may be, until the time when the Conservatives have been out of office in 1929, neither you nor any other leading Member of the Government made any speech, as far as I can find, which might have corrected the impression of the Indian people concerning their ultimate destiny in the matter of Constitutional rights?—I cannot remember all the speeches which I made

14,639. I have been very carefully through your speeches but I cannot find one?—But all that was governed, as I say, by the Statute which provided for a Commission to go out and we were to await the Report of the Commission before any new declaration was made. Unfortunately, that course was not adopted and a prejudicial announcement was made which had disastrous consequences upon the work of the Statutory Commission as you know.

14,640. May I turn from that side of the discussion to another. Might I ask you what is your view of the operation of the Services that have been transferred under the operation of the Montagu-Chelmsford Scheme?—Of course, I speak in the presence of gentlemen and noblemen who are far more capable of judging, and I can only give you the impressions I have received from discussing these matters over the last five or six years with persons who are in the best position to know, but I must say I think it would be going too far to say that it had been a complete failure; but, on the other hand, there has been a sensible deterioration in many of the Services. I remember being particularly struck when a very high authority some years ago was speaking to me of the deterioration in the agricultural sphere; there had been a great deterioration. I believe in forestry I am right in saying that there was some setback there. But still I would not blame the Statutory Commission because there has been some slight deterioration and they did not recommend a definite restriction. I think, as I say, that some deterioration must be accepted if you can on the other side gain those psychological advantages which one of your colleagues referred to yesterday; but it is a question of degree entirely.

14,641. Would you agree, Mr. Churchill, that the deterioration, where it is to be found, is to be found more in the realm of Services that have not been transferred than in that of those that have been?—I beg your pardon.

14,642. Would you agree that the deterioration that is to be found in India, where it is to be found, is more apparent in the Services that have not been transferred than in those that have been?—No; I have not heard that.

14,643. Let us compare it for a moment. Would you suggest that the deterioration in the agricultural sphere is as pronounced as it is said to be in the realm of the Police control?—Of course, it is really a matter where you should call persons who have seen those two Services at work on the spot, but the impression which I have generally derived is that the Police, under extraordinary difficulties, amazing difficulties, have succeeded in maintaining a very high degree of peace and law and order by amazing patience and wonderful discipline, considering all the undermining ideas to them which are going about, without any serious or painful episode occurring, and I have been rather filled with admiration at the conduct of the Police during these trying years. Nothing in the way of terrorism or brutality but patient handling of crowds, often suffering themselves. I certainly have not heard of anything else at all.

14,644. I am not suggesting a criticism of the Police in any way?—No.

14,645. But I am comparing the two spheres of activity?—Yes.

14,646. And I still ask, would not you agree with me that there is a greater measure of deterioration, so far as there is deterioration at all, within the realm of Police administration which is not transferred as compared with the administration of agriculture or forestry which have been transferred?—Well, Mr. Morgan Jones, I am afraid I must leave you to make that assertion on your own authority.

14,647. You have nothing to disprove it?—I am not able to support you.

Sir Austen Chamberlain.] We have heard no evidence to support the charge of deterioration.

Mr. Morgan Jones.] Exactly.

Marquess of Reading.

14,648. I did not think Mr. Churchill had suggested it. I was rather trying

24^o October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

to understand the question for that reason. As far as I understand from Mr. Churchill, he had not said that there was a deterioration of police control?—No. I agree with Lord Reading.

Mr. Morgan Jones.

14649-69. No, my Lord Chairman. in fairness I must put my question again. I am not suggesting that Mr. Churchill is urging deterioration in any sphere. What I am asking is whether Mr. Churchill can show that there has been greater or less deterioration within the realm of the transferred services than in the non-transferred services; I merely gave police and justice as an illustration; that is all. However, there it is. I will not press that point further. Now the next question I want to ask you, Mr. Churchill, is this—Would you not agree that it would be a wise course for the Indian people themselves to be placed in charge of the responsibility of administering the police service rather than that it should be handed over to a Governor or Deputy Governor, as you suggest, upon whom the blame can be put from time to time in a responsible kind of way?—No. I take exactly the opposite view, as I have already made plain. I think that although there might be occasions and Provinces and personalities which would render it possible for a Minister responsible to a Provincial Assembly to be in charge of the police, those occasions and conditions will very rarely occur—perhaps hardly occur at all at the present time—and that having regard to the communal tension, the religious tension, between the great creeds, the handling of all the maintenance of law and order in the Indian cities and districts is enormously facilitated when it is in the hands of an authority, of an individual, to whom both Muslim and Hindu can look with certainty that he is not swayed in the direction of either the one community or the other.

14,670. What do you mean, Mr. Churchill, in paragraph 10 by the phrase, “the control of the Judiciary”?—No control in the sense of biasing their fair judgment on the legal and equitable issues transferred to them; but that sphere, the Courts, have always been linked with the police in all questions of transfer, and I am of opinion that the existing system should be preserved at the present time.

14,671. Will not your Provincial self-government, if realised, seem somewhat an empty thing if the Government of the Province has nothing to do with the appointment of its Judges, the appointment of its police, and those who are responsible for the administration of law and order?—I do not think it would be an empty thing when such vast responsibilities for the life of the people, all their social and cultured conditions and their hygienic wellbeing, are entrusted to Cabinets responsible to elected Assemblies, even if some powers are reserved. If I were to examine the proposals of the White Paper at the centre from the point of view of reservation, it might be possible to make just the same kind of suggestion: what will there be left when you have taken away finance, the Army, foreign affairs and emergencies of all kinds and so forth? It might well be very easy to argue that, but it is much less arguable in the Provinces where an immense sphere is open to Indian gentlemen and politicians of ability.

Sir Hubert Carr.

14,672. Mr. Churchill, may I ask you with reference to paragraph 9 of your Memorandum in which you say: “It is common ground between us all that we should make an experiment,” and in paragraph 10 I gather that the scheme put forward is a concession you would make to the Indian political classes which you refer to at the end of paragraph 9? I was wondering whether if you were recommending what you really thought was the best, would it bear any resemblance to the scheme you have put forward, or have you trimmed your own ideas very carefully to make the concessions to the Indian political classes?—I will put the best construction I can upon that question. I cannot say that I believe this movement into the establishment of the democratic electioneering system in India on the Western model is likely to carry with it any sensible improvements to the life of the Indian people or to the smooth working of the Government. I cannot say that. If that issue stood by itself I should have been glad to see no further step taken at this juncture, but in deference to the strong opinion which has been expressed and the strong desires which are put forward, I have felt it my duty to try to move forward in my mind as far as possible without laying the Indian masses open to

24th October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

very grave evils. But you can hardly call that trimming. It is what you may call taking a just view of all the questions.

14,673. That is, I suppose, what everyone is trying to do, and speaking for our own community in India they do take a very different view from that which you take. I could not go into all the details which have already been raised as to statements in the past which have encouraged the hopes of India?—May I ask whom you represent, Sir Hubert?

14,674. The European community in India?—Do you represent them all?

14,675. I would not say every individual, but as a general "can't get any better" I do?—I am sorry I cannot send you my post bag.

14,676. As I say, I do not want to go into the previous statements made by Ministers, etc., but the statement made by the Prime Minister on the 1st December, 1931, is one which our countrymen in India, even in spite of your post bag, look upon as a very definite indication of what Parliament intends to do for India; and could it be suggested that your scheme put forward here could in any way meet the desires of the political classes taking into consideration the fact that those desires have been affected by this declaration to which I refer?—Of course, I dissented at once from the Prime Minister's statement, but we were assured in Parliament by no less a person than Lord Hailsham leading the House of Lords that the committal was not of an extreme or decisive character; that it was a committal to enquire and examine and to send out Commissions to report, and that the House of Lords would be perfectly free to form its own judgment afterwards without being prejudiced by the vote which they passed then. I have seen it stated, it is true, by Sir John Thomson that statements in the House of Lords which were not repeated in the House of Commons have not got ordinary Parliamentary validity, but that is an entirely new doctrine which I have certainly not been taught to accept.

14,677. I would not wish to follow that; but take the statement which you will find at page 5 of the Proceedings of the Indian Round Table Conference, and recall that that was made by the Prime Minister to the representatives of the Princes and of British Indians. It is a little difficult, I think, for anyone out there to realise that this was only a statement subject to the approval of various individuals in Parliament?—But I have received across the floor of the House of Commons on other occasions from the Secretary of State quite recent statements that we are not committed.

14,678. Supposing you are not committed, even then what I am wanting to know is whether you think your scheme would achieve what you say "Nevertheless in all the circumstances, and if it is earnestly desired by the Indian political classes, it should be given a trial"; would your scheme go any way to stop that agitation which you deplore in paragraph 15 and which all of us living out there deplore?—No one can say what will stop agitation, and I am not sure that agitation is a bad thing. Governments are nearly always agitated by criticism. But having regard to the statement of Lord Hailsham and having regard to the statements of the Secretary of State and the other statements which have been made by Members of the Government who are ardent supporters of this policy, I conceive that a private Member of Parliament is entitled at the present time to apply his mind to the problem on the basis that we are not committed beyond the Act of 1919, and from that point of view the proposals which I have put forward are those which seem to me to be the best and the wisest amid all the difficulties of this problem.

14,679. In fact that seems to me to come to this, that the backward East is living in 1933 and that this country in carrying out its legislation is to live in 1908 or 1918, because as far as India is concerned in the record such as you are referring to I do not believe, and I think none of our countrymen would believe, that can remove the impression which has been given, and that is that Parliament now is going to consider giving a very marked increase in the responsibility of Indians for the government of their Provinces?—I think that the proposals to establish responsible Cabinets, in the Provinces and to set up Provincial government, even if the reservations were made about the police, do constitute a very great advance, but I must take the strongest exception to the argument that we are committed in view of the solemn assurances that we have repeatedly received to the contrary.

14,680. May I pursue that a little further, about this marked increase that

24^o Octobris, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

you are contemplating. Take your Inspectorate, Mr. Churchill. You speak about it, I think, in paragraph 12. You say: "All they could do would be to recommend to the Government of India the reduction or withholding of Government of India grants in cases where there had been a serious failure." Inspectors cannot work as a kind of hydrant service and only whistle when a breakdown occurs. If all these experts who were spoken about yesterday go round looking at the various fields of activity they obviously are going to try to insist upon their standards being kept up long before there is a breakdown. I would suggest to you that such an Inspectorate would lead to continuous and continual interference with the government of the Provinces?—Well, your view on that point is valuable.

Sir Hubert Carr.] I am very content with that. I think I cannot stop at a better place.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

14,681. Mr. Churchill, the White Paper does not propose to establish Dominion Constitution?—No.

14,682 Therefore I do not propose to trouble you with any questions with regard to the logical and metaphysical position, whether one could draw a distinction between Dominion Status as a ceremonial affair and Dominion Status as a Dominion Constitution. I propose to ask you just one or two questions with regard to the White Paper itself without confusing the issue by bringing in anything with regard to the distinction that you propose to make. May I draw your attention, therefore, to the debate that took place in Parliament on December 1st, 1931, when the Prime Minister moved the resolution; it was in these terms: "That this House approves the Indian policy of His Majesty's Government as set out in Command Paper No. 3972—Indian Round Table Conference—presented in Parliament on the 1st December, 1931"?—That is the first White Paper—not the full scheme? You mean the Prime Minister's speech?

14,683. The Prime Minister's speech?—Quite.

14,684. The Constitution 'adumbrated' in the White Paper which was presented to the House included in the main the proposals which are contained in the White Paper as it is presented to the Joint Select Committee. There was to be Provincial responsible government in the Provinces with the transfer of Law and Order, and there was to be a sort of dyarchy at the centre, in which Defence and Foreign Relations were to be reserved subjects. Is that right?—I find no need to interrupt you at this point.

14,685. Then the next point I wish to ask about is this. The Prime Minister made his object clear in moving this resolution in the House of Commons. I am reading his words: "The statement which I made to the Round Table Conference yesterday had the full authority of the Cabinet, and we now wish, having communicated that statement to the House, to ask the House by its vote to associate itself with that policy." That was the object of the Prime Minister in moving this resolution in the House of Commons. Now, as you know, you moved an amendment to that resolution. That amendment was in these terms: "Mr. Churchill: I beg to move in line 3 at end to add the words, 'provided that nothing in the said policy shall commit this House to the establishment in India of Dominion Constitution as defined by the Statute of Westminster, provided also that the same policy shall effectively safeguard the British trade in and with India from adverse or prejudicial discrimination, and provided further that no extensions of self-government in India at this juncture shall impair the ultimate responsibility of Parliament for the peace, order and good government of the Indian Empire.'"

14,686. The impression that I have formed, after reading this debate that took place in the House of Commons on the 3rd December, 1931, was this, that if the Prime Minister had accepted your amendment you were willing to vote with the Government in support of the resolution moved by the Prime Minister. Is that correct?—I think it very difficult to say what would have happened in these hypothetical circumstances, but, undoubtedly, it would have been a very great relief to the great mass of Conservative Members in the House of Commons if the Government had seen eye to eye with those who supported me in that amendment—a very great relief, and an altogether more agreeable atmosphere would have followed immediately and would have been created.

14,687. Fortunately for me, I do not think the matter is really hypothetical, because I find you have taken a very definite attitude with regard to your amendment in the course of that Debate,

24^o October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H.. M.P.

[Continued.]

and I want to call your attention to one or two statements that you made in the course of your speech. I think the one fact, and the fact which has puzzled me, I must admit, is that, first of all, according to the impression of most Members then present in the House, there was really no distinction between what the Government was asserting and what you proposed to state in your amendment. Is not that so? Let me read a passage of yours. The point I want to make is this: A subject which has always puzzled me is this, that, having read the statement of the Prime Minister and the amendment which you proposed to move on that day in the House of Commons, I, at any rate, did not see any distinction, and that, I say, was your position as well, because I propose to read a passage which will make it clear. You say at column 234: "I have finished and I am most grateful to the House for permitting me to intrude for so long upon their attention. What can we do but to persevere with our amendment. It is not a vote of want of confidence in His Majesty's Government," and this is the important point, "On the contrary, it merely asserts the principles which they themselves affirm and which both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State have affirmed." So you yourself really saw no distinction between the proposals as put forth in the statement of the Prime Minister and the substance of your amendment?—Of course, I thought it was unfortunate that the Government did not take your view of the proposal. I should have been very glad to get that amendment on the paper.

14,688. Let me quote another passage of what you said on the same day. You said your second alternative to the Government on that day was that if your amendment was not accepted you would be content to vote with the Government provided the pronouncement of the Prime Minister was accompanied by the speech of the Secretary of State that was made on that day in the House of Commons?—Yes.

14,689. My point is this: If that is your position, namely, that you were content to vote with the Government on that particular Debate, provided the Prime Minister's announcement was accompanied by the speech made by the Secretary of State in the House of Commons, what I wish to understand from you is this: What is the difference between the White Paper as it is presented to this Committee and the statement of the Prime Minister combined with the speech of the Secretary of State? Could you give us any difference that you see between the White Paper as presented to the Committee and the pronouncement of the Prime Minister as interpreted by the Secretary of State in the House of Commons?—In the case of a difference which arises in a Parliament or in a House of Commons between two sides of a debate, it is difficult for outsiders to appreciate what that difference was unless they understand all the circumstances which influence and affect our Debates, but that there was a great and real difference between the amendment which I sought to have put upon the paper and the resolution which the Government passed over our heads is indisputable. There was a sharp difference. Each side naturally presents their case in the manner least likely to deter support, but the difference is there all the same and remains quite clear, and I do suggest to Dr. Ambedkar that, in justice to our Parliamentary institutions, he should remember that we still have a bicameral Parliament, and that the Debates in the House of Lords must be read in conjunction with those in the House of Commons.

14,690. If I may say so respectfully, I wish to understand your position alone, irrespective of the position of the House of Lords or other members of the Party. You stated definitely that you would vote with the Government, provided the Prime Minister's statement was issued in conjunction with the speech made by the Secretary of State. The point which I wish to submit to you respectfully is this: Do you see any difference in the White Paper as presented to the Joint Parliamentary Committee, and the statement of the Prime Minister as interpreted that day by the Secretary of State in the House of Commons. If there is, of course, you have every ground to differ?—I can assure Dr. Ambedkar that I have never been in favour of a federal system being erected at this time at the centre of India nor of transferring law and order in the Provinces, and nothing that I have ever said in this controversy is in conflict with that.

* Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.] I have no more questions to ask.

24th October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

Mr. N. M. Joshi.

14,691. May I ask you a question on paragraph 5. You state, Mr. Churchill, in that paragraph "Constitutional questions scarcely at all enter the life of the people"—Yes.

14,692. Does primary education enter the life of the masses—the spread of the primary education?—Yes; I have no doubt so far as it can reach.

14,693. If the masses are told that during nearly 100 years of British rule in India the literacy has not gained more than 3 per cent., and if politicians tell them that under Indian self-government education would spread more rapidly, are they likely to believe that or not?—I am afraid I cannot form any opinion. You are in a much better position to form an opinion upon that point than I am.

14,694. As an ordinary case, if during 100 years people do not receive education, you will agree with me that people will become discontented with that Government?—No, I would not assent to that as a general proposition. Indeed, there are many instances in history to the contrary, that discontent has arisen after the spread of education.

14,695. Would you not agree with me that, on the whole, people want education? Even the poorest of the poor do not want their children to be without education when they know that the children of other classes have education. Do not the poor people want their children to be educated?—I think I may safely say that among educated people such a desire has often been noticed. I am quite ready to say that, of course, no doubt among educated people there is a desire that their children should be educated and, not only among educated people; but, if the suggestion is that the restricted spread of education in India in the last 100 years is due to the blighting influence of the British Government, such a statement appears to me to be entirely destitute of any connection with truth.

14,696. Suppose it is shown that, after the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms, the rate of progress in education is greater than during the period which passed before, would you agree with me that the transfer of power has done more good to Indians than the British rule?—No, I certainly should not. There has been a very considerable advance in education, and the spreading of literary education, of verbal education (of letters) all over the world in every country, and it is the British Government that has set up the system under the 1919 Act which has had these results which you approve.

14,697. True, but that Act transferred power to Indians, and, as a result of that, education spread more rapidly. Would you not, therefore, agree that the transfer of power has done the people good?—As I say, I am not prepared to say that the transfer of powers has been a complete failure. I think that would be going too far, although I think I did once perhaps express myself too harshly on that point.

14,698. You talk about deterioration in the Indian Services. May I ask you what is your exact meaning of that phrase?—"Deterioration"?

14,699. Yes. Does it mean deterioration in the personnel or in the services rendered?—Primarily in the services rendered.

14,700. So far as the transferred services are concerned, the rate of the spread of education is one of the tests of the services rendered?—Certainly.

14,701. Similarly, legislation passed to protect the agriculturist is another test?—No doubt. If it were effective and wise legislation, no doubt it would be an advantage.

14,701A. If it is found that during the period of the transfer of power after the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms, more legislation is passed to protect the agriculturist against moneylenders, will you agree with me that the services have not deteriorated in one of the transferred departments?—Of course, these are, if I may say so with very great respect, such very vague questions that it is difficult for me to frame an answer. I think there has been a certain deterioration even under the existing 10 years trial, and I would expect a further certain deterioration in the future, but if it were kept within limits, I would face that, and, if by chance I were proved wrong, and an advance and an improvement occurred, then I should rejoice. That is the reason why I am so anxious that proper efficiency should be stimulated and helped from the Centre by an Inspectorate, because if thriving, progressive and peaceful communities are established under a Provincial Government, one of the great obstacles which prevent a further advance would be moved, and we could move forward along what is called the high road again.

24^o October, 1933.] The Right Honourable WINSTON SPENCER
CHURCHILL, C.H., M.P.

[Continued.]

14,702. The point of my question was this. If, after the transfer of power without any Inspectorate the condition of the agriculturist and of the masses has improved, then there is no justification for the Inspectorate which you are proposing?—Of course, I do not take the view that it has improved. I wish I could.

14,703. That is your opinion, notwithstanding the passing of legislation for the protection of the agriculturist, which legislation was not passed previously?—In 10 years over a vast country, a certain number of good things are necessarily done, and I hope many wise things have been done, but, taking it for all in all, I think there has been a slowing down and a decline in the administration of the services that have been transferred. At least, that is what I have been told by those from whom I have been able to learn in this matter.

14,704. May I ask you one question about what you have been told by others: Whether they expected greater progress under purely British administration during these ten years?—I certainly do not want to be drawn into saying anything which would have a discouraging effect upon the efforts of Indian politicians and administrators when charged with responsible duties of administration to improve and develop the services and make a better life for the people. I do not want to be drawn into saying anything discouraging upon that, or to assume that I would regard it with an unsatisfied eye if we saw improvements.

14,705. Mr. Churchill, you have made a statement that the services have deteriorated?—Yes.

14,706. Will you tell us then why you say that the services have deteriorated? Will you give us some particular instance?—I think that is a matter really which the Committee should examine itself. Every member is just as capable of forming an opinion upon that. I give my opinion that there has been a sensible deterioration, but I also readily admit that there has been a great deal of good work done.

14,707. Has the Simon Commission reported that there has been a deterioration?—I do not remember. I do not think they did. But the Statutory Commission had a great many difficult questions to settle, and accusations of deterioration are not calculated to smooth the path of business or the way to an agreement. They may not have stressed that point. However, it is really for the Joint Committee to make up their minds whether things have been better or worse, or whether they would have been better some other way. I have given my opinion. It is only one view.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir H. Gidney.

14,708. Mr. Churchill, you belong to a party that is called by some the Diehard Party, is it not?—No; I am not aware that there is any such party. It is an abusive term which is used by persons who are often found very ignorant of the real foundations of British power and strength.

